

The Writings of
*W. Carl Ketcherside

Volume 1 • Essays

Mission Messenger
1957–1975

Stone-Campbell e-Prints

The Writings of W. Carl Ketcherside

Volume 1 • Essays

Mission Messenger
1957–1975

Stone-Campbell e-Prints

May 2024

PUBLISHER'S PREFACE

Main Menu

As indicated by its subtitle, this volume contains a presentation of the essays of W. Carl Ketcherside published in his journal, Mission Messenger, from 1957 through 1975, and are arranged by volume in chronological order. An alphabetical index of titles and an index of topics, linked to a topical index of essays, has been added.

Although Ketcherside wrote dozens of essays for journals other than his own— most of which are included in Volume 3 of this series— the fundamental ideas of his thinking are all set forth in the contents of this volume.

While this publication has altered nothing of substance in Ketcherside's essays, minor changes have been made to accommodate the electronic version of the text, such as the spacing around em dashes. An occasional footnote has been added to identify sources from which Ketcherside quoted, and long quotations have been set in block format— something Ketcherside did often, but not always.

Neither this publication nor any of the essays it contains are restricted by copyright. They may be republished in any format without further permission.

In closing this brief preface, I wish to acknowledge a personal debt of gratitude to Natalie Murrie, a retired college professor, for her tireless effort in digitizing the entire contents of Mission Messenger for 1957 through 1975. This volume is the beneficiary of her work. It was Professor Murrie's initiative that prompted the creation of the Unity-in-Diversity.org website, over twenty-five years ago, where most of Ketcherside's post-1955 works were posted. That site continues to be accessible at the time of this writing.

Editor, Stone-Campbell e-Prints
May 24, 2024

Table of Contents

Cover

Title Page

Publisher's Preface

Essays From Mission Messenger

- 1957: Thoughts on Fellowship
- 1958: Thoughts on Fellowship
- 1959: Covenants of God
- 1960: Covenants of God
- 1961: The Path of Peace
- 1962: The Path of Peace
- 1963: The Unity of the Spirit
- 1964: The Brotherhood of Faith
- 1965: The Twisted Scriptures
- 1966: Deep Roots
- 1967: Apples of Gold
- 1968: God's Community
- 1969: Christian Commandos
- 1970: Our Living Pattern
- 1971: One Great Chapter
- 1972: The Divine Purpose
- 1973: The Question Box
- 1974: Pure Speech
- 1975: One in Christ

Abstracts

Alphabetical Index

Index of Topics

Topical Index

ESSAYS FROM Mission Messenger

Main Menu

Ketcherside published Mission Messenger for 36 years, from 1940-1975. Below are titles of bound volumes linked to chronological indexes of essays for each year.

- Volume 19, 1957: Thoughts on Fellowship
- Volume 20, 1958: Thoughts on Fellowship
- Volume 21, 1959: Covenants of God
- Volume 22, 1960: Covenants of God
- Volume 23, 1961: The Path of Peace
- Volume 24, 1962: The Path of Peace
- Volume 25, 1963: The Unity of the Spirit
- Volume 26, 1964: The Brotherhood of Faith
- Volume 27, 1965: The Twisted Scriptures
- Volume 28, 1966: Deep Roots
- Volume 29, 1967: Apples of Gold
- Volume 30, 1968: God's Community
- Volume 31, 1969: Christian Commandos
- Volume 32, 1970: Our Living Pattern
- Volume 33, 1971: One Great Chapter
- Volume 34, 1972: The Divine Purpose
- Volume 35, 1973: The Question Box
- Volume 36, 1974: Pure Speech
- Volume 37, 1975: One in Christ

MISSION MESSENGER ESSAYS (1957)

Volume 19

Thoughts on Fellowship

Index to Volumes

- That They All May Be One (1)
- Is the War Over?
- Statement of Fact
- Law and Love
- Freedom in Christ
- Grilling the Editor
- That They All May Be One (2)
- The Sheep on the Hills
- That They All May Be One (3)
- The Spirit and Liberty (1957)
- To My Catholic Friends
- The Clergy and the Church
- That They All May Be One (4)
- The Name of the Bride
- Wild Grapes
- A Sense of Values
- Fear of Love
- That They All May Be One (5)
- The Power of Christianity
- Class Controversy
- That They All May Be One (6)
- Positive and Negative
- Brethren in Slavery

- That They All May Be One (7)
- A Sad Commentary
- That They All May Be One (8)
- Disciples of Yesterday
- Peace Must Be Waged
- The Class Controversy
- That They All May Be One (9)
- Smoking and Cancer
- Must Elders Be Married? (1)
- Drawing the Line
- A Serious Charge
- Making Allowances
- Our Plea
- Must Elders Be Married? (2)
- Report of a Trip
- A Wine Party
- Elders and Children
- What Is Heresy? (1957)

THAT THEY ALL MAY BE ONE (1)

Mission Messenger (January 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

The little congregation of disciples of the Master now numbered thirty-two and it was no longer possible for them to meet in private homes with any degree of comfort. It was decided to try and secure a plain, modest house which was more commodious. While the band of saints was considering purchasing a dwelling and removing the partitions, they learned of a religious organization that was erecting a large brick structure, and consequently had listed for sale the smaller building where they met. After some negotiation the congregation secured an option on it, and after several months of waiting, the building was turned over to them.

All who could do so worked on it day and night, thoroughly renovating it, and making such repairs as were requisite. On Saturday night all assembled in it, and the evangelist suggested that they express their gratitude unto God for the grace which had bestowed upon them the greater responsibility and enlarged opportunities of the new location. The entire group kneeled and one after another the brethren voiced their thanksgivings.

When the prayers were concluded and all were again seated, the evangelist stated that there were practical matters which needed attention. While the building was in no sense the house of God, since God's house was composed of living stones, it would reflect to the community the attitude of those who used it. If the place could be kept neat and attractive, it would have a salutary effect. He said that slovenliness was not simplicity, nor was slouchiness humility.

Since every member would derive equal benefit from use of the property, each should share in the responsibility of upkeep. Accordingly, he suggested that each spring and autumn, on a day appointed, all gather to thoroughly clean the premises. In the meantime, he had prepared a list of the twelve months, and he desired that each one affix his name to one of those months, and during the month selected, he would be responsible for upkeep of the building. He pointed out that since all service was ministry, that all could minister in this regard.

A brother then asked about securing an appropriate sign for the front of the building. The evangelist asked for an expression from the body and a majority indicated that they favored it. A brother then asked what wording should appear upon it. To this, another replied that after hearing the discussion with the Methodist preacher, he had done a lot of thinking, and he was convinced that the word “church” did not correctly represent the original, and he felt that if we were going to try and restore the primitive order of things, we ought to have the courage to break with tradition and not try to perpetuate another sect. He further said he was not convinced we did not sometimes make a sectarian usage out of a scriptural designation.

A brother “who had formerly been a member in a southern state said he thought we ought to put up a sign saying “The Church of Christ” because that was the way they always did it where he came from. The previous speaker said that expression was not in the Bible at all, although in some versions certain congregations were several times called “the churches of Christ,” just as the same congregations were several times called “the churches of God” and once, “the churches of the saints.” In view of this, he felt that to select one designation and copyright it as an exclusive title, would be to sectarianize it, and brand us as just another denomination.

A sister said that if they put “Church of God” on the sign, they would be confused with another organization by the same name. A brother replied that recently two groups had united under the title “United Church of Christ” so if we used the title “Church of Christ” there would be more confusion, and moreover, he did not want to always be answering the question as to whether we were “united” or not.

The evangelist listened quietly while the exchange was going on, until a brother asked him how the early congregations met this problem. He replied that the primitive communities of the saints did not exhibit such signs for several reasons. In the first place, they were looked upon as enemies of the state, to be persecuted and hounded to death. Instead of marking their places of assembly, they did their best to keep them secret, stealing away under cover of darkness, to caves and dens, or to underground catacombs, to worship among the skeletons of the dead.

Moreover, the early Christians had not yet made the error of erecting buildings in which to proclaim the gospel to the world. Their homes and upper rooms were for the edification of the body. They met to worship, and scattered to preach the gospel, so it was not necessary that the public know where they met.

A sister asked how one from a distant nation would locate the meeting place of Christians in such a large city as Rome or Ephesus, where the place must be kept secret through fear of death. The evangelist said that one of the earliest symbols of direction was the figure of a fish. Even before the apostles died, it is apparent that the Christians were chalking the figure of a fish on walls and fences, and by following the direction in which the head of the fish pointed, one might discover the secret place of assembly. He pointed out that the fish was connected with the life of Jesus and the apostles in many ways and upon many occasions, and Christianity was viewed as a life promoted by fishermen who had been made “fishers of men.” Another thing which popularized the fish as a symbol was the fact that “fish” was spelled in the Greek with five letters, and these formed an acrostic with the initial letters of the words “Jesus Christ, Son of God, Saviour.” The sign of the fish can still be seen on the walls of the cavernous catacombs, drawn there by the hands of Christians during the Roman persecutions.

One of the brethren remarked that conditions had certainly changed when the congregation could now meet openly under protection of the government, and discuss putting up a sign to inform the world where Christians met. He felt they might make the most of such an opportunity to let men know that there still existed those who were one in spirit with the saints of the catacombs, and he suggested that the evangelist express his idea of how a sign might be worded. The evangelist said he did not wish to force his ideas upon the brethren. He quoted, “Not that we are masters of your faith, but we are helpers of your joy; for by faith you stand.” The little group unanimously requested him to give his ideas.

The evangelist said that it was what the congregation did when they assembled at the place, which would merit the approval or disapprobation of God, and that God would not look at a sign on the building to determine if the congregation was his or not. However, it would not be right to erect a sign that was misleading. He said that so many are influenced by tradition and sectarian practices about them, it required real courage to break away. Few had that courage, and he was not certain that the congregation there possessed the bravery of the Christians in the catacombs.

He had listened with interest to the discussion, but so far the brethren had missed the whole point. They had been discussing not a designation for the building, but for the congregation. He held that the congregation of the saints had no official name. He asked them to think of these statements:

1. It is scriptural to designate the congregation by any term used in the sacred scriptures.

2. It is unscriptural to designate the congregation by any term not used in the sacred scriptures.

3. It is sectarian in tendency to select one term to the exclusion or derogation of any other term or terms employed in the sacred scriptures.

The congregation of saints, popularly referred to as “the church” is composed of living stones, the members of the body. The congregation is in the city seven days per week. It is just as much the body of the Christ on Wednesday morning, when some of its members are at school, others in offices, shops, homes, or filling stations, as when met together. We do not destroy, disband or divide the body of God’s Son, when we dismiss them from the assembly. They are as much a unit after they are dispersed to their several homes as when sitting together in the meeting place. To put such a term as “Church of Christ” on a meeting house, must mean one of two things: either the building of wood or stone is the “church;” or else the members only constitute the body when in that building, thus Jesus is left without a body most of the time. Either position is grossly misleading.

The evangelist pointed out that it was not our business to select a designation for the congregation. The Holy Spirit had already used all such terms as were divinely authorized, and we should neither add others to them, nor subtract any from them. But we might well select a designation for the building in which the congregation would assemble, and in doing so we ought first to consider what information a sign should convey. He believed it might designate the building so it could be easily located, give its nature, use, and the purpose of those who met there. Under no circumstance should a sign make it appear that any child of God was excluded. It should convey no sense of sectarian bigotry and intolerance.

One of the sisters said that such a sign as suggested would have to be quite large. The evangelist replied that was not required. Insofar as location was concerned, the building was located on Walnut Street. The word “chapel” means “a place of worship, especially Christian worship.” By calling the place “Walnut Street Chapel” it would be easily located. He suggested the words, “A congregation of Christians meet here for worship” would specify the use of the building, and the quotation from Paul, “We are your servants for Jesus’ sake” would indicate the brethren were there to serve and not to be served. The evangelist sketched the sign on the blackboard:

Walnut Street Chapel

A congregation of Christians meets here for worship

“We are your servants for Jesus’ sake.”

The members of the body studied it carefully. One brother said he liked it because it had no sectarian implications at all, and no one could brand those who met as anything except “a congregation of Christians.” This would be no reflection against any person on earth. Another brother said he could see the wisdom of designating the place without trying to name the congregation. You do not direct strangers to the congregation but to the place where they meet. He said he was thinking that the apostle Paul could have put under the sign “School of Tyrannus” the words, “A congregation of Christians meets here for worship.” It was agreed to post a neatly painted sign with this wording.

IS THE WAR OVER?

Mission Messenger (January 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

While the hearts of men fail them for fear, as the shadow of war hovers over the earth, it is a startling phenomenon to notice the unconcern and indifference of those who profess to be soldiers of the cross, toward the mighty conflict in which they are purportedly engaged. It is said that the tyrant, Nero, fiddled while Rome burned. During the last world war, the citizens of Alexandria drank liquor and danced in their night clubs while the reverberations of the big guns shook the city from Cyrenaica. In the midst of the titanic struggle for right today, our brethren have time for the golf links, the bowling alleys, television buffoons and cinematic comics. Thousands are dying all about them and are doomed to hell. The brethren are fiddling while the world burns!

On one side of this war of the ages is the arch-fiend of the universe. Clever, cunning, scheming and sly, Satan plots his attack and plans his blitzkrieg. He is flanked by all the demons of hell, masters of infiltration. These trained spies from Tartarus are conversant with every human weakness. They are fully aware of the love for ease, luxury and popularity, which motivate so many. They can play any tune upon the strings of the heart, which the mood of the minute demands.

This concourse of diabolical geniuses has lulled the opposition into sleep. They have administered a sleeping potion which has produced a state of lethargy. While “Christians” slumber, their armament is being stolen or sabotaged. Most men are lazy. They are spiritual “gold bricks,” passing the buck to others. The result is that a state of uneasy truce exists. A tacit agreement has been made to let the devil alone if he will leave us alone. He is perfectly agreeable to such an arrangement. Any cessation of hostilities is a victory for the forces of evil.

The congregation of saints in these days acts as if a permanent peace pact had been signed. They are conducting themselves as men on leave. But there can be no real truce with Satan. The battle is incessant. It is a gruelling hand-to-hand fight with swords— bloody, dirty, hard! It is not for namby-pamby, coddled, weak-stomached, spoiled babies. It is not a “Children’s Crusade.” It is for soldiers who are grown up, emotionally mature, willing to endure hardships, to suffer and die for a cause. It is for men who can be reviled, maligned, misunderstood, betrayed and hated, yet who will dare to stand with their backs against the rocky ramparts of Jerusalem and swing the sword until death relaxes the grip.

The devil has infiltrated the congregation with his own fifth column. There are too many in it who just “belong.” They didn’t know there was a fight on. They thought they were enrolling for a Sunday School picnic. The devil persuaded them to “join up” at a time of great emotional stress. They were high-pressured in by a professional recruiting agent who enlisted them with promises of how pleasant and sweet life would be. The life in the foxholes is not for them. They want cushioned pews, soft carpets, ice water fountains and air conditioning on the battlefield. They want to loll back and doze in comfort while their hired champion swings a few ineffective blows at an invisible enemy.

How Satan must laugh in his headquarters tent. He never made a bolder stroke nor pulled a slicker coup, than when he convinced the “followers of the Lamb” to move the battle off the field and into the house. And when his demons collected up all the swords, and put little pre-digested pellets of God's revelation in their stead, he rendered the soldiers helpless. You could study the average "class quarterlies" for a quarter of a century, and be just as much of a push over for the devil as when you started. He has taken away our guns and given us cap pistols, he has substituted pea shooters for heavy armament. How it must scare the legion of demons when a company of Christian soldiers line up against them and aim water pistols in their direction.

The army is infested with a horde of people who do not know which side they are on. They vacillate back and forth, hunting a lieutenant who suits them, looking for a preacher to please them. Some who fight for years, grow old and get tired, then sell out and desert to the enemy. Weak as dish water without detergent, they are ever learning and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth. To them principle means nothing. They have no positive convictions. They are impotent, feeble, defenceless and wishy-washy. They want the whole army to stop fighting and baby them. They would turn the elders into nursemaids instead of field directors. They did not enlist to serve but to be served. They built upon a foundation of sand and they cannot stand the roar and shock of battle. They are spectators, mess hall soldiers. They do not intend to face the sulphurous, fiery darts of the wicked.

Many of our brethren are like little boys playing at war with broomsticks for guns and kitchen chairs for fortresses. They expect Satan to fall over and play dead when they yell "Bang!" They do not attend services as those who go to an ammunition depot to load up for combat. They go like those who belong to the country club or a high school fraternity. They have no thought of slogging with wet feet through sleet and snow on the front lines, of standing watch through the dark night at some disputed barricade, of creeping and slithering under the barbed wire of sin with the acrid smell of smoke in the nostrils and the groans of the dying in the ears.

They have sheathed their swords, buried the hatchet and smoked the calumet of peace with the emissaries of hell! The white flag is flying! We've learned how to negotiate with the devil, and outsmart him at his own game. We've placed diplomats in the pulpits and all we need to do is to make ourselves comfortable and let them explain the terms of the compromise. War is now civilized. The devil has been tamed and pacified. Hell isn't hot any longer. There's nothing to get excited about. Anyone who still insists on wielding the sword is a fanatic, a hobbyist and a radical. The fangs of the Old Serpent have been extracted. The teeth of the Dragon have been pulled. It's easy now. The baptistery is ready, the water is warmed, it will only take five minutes and the battle will be over and the victory won! There will be nothing left to do except "go to church" and pay!

Statement of Fact

Mission Messenger (January 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

With this issue we begin our nineteenth year of publication. It is not certain how much longer we can continue. A comparison of printing costs with those of eighteen years ago will show what fantastic price increases have occurred. This paper was originally started to provide news of spiritual activities, especially in Missouri. As the circle of readers increased we were forced to extend our coverage. Contacts made in Great Britain and elsewhere in 1947 and 1951 proved there was even an interest abroad in some of the subjects with which we were occupied.

Work among the congregations gradually convinced us that the significance of the restoration movement was lost. The brethren generally assumed that the efforts of Campbell, Stone and their contemporaries, had taken us all of the way from Babylon to Jerusalem in one magnificent leap. As a result we were fast becoming merely another sect, bigoted, intolerant, narrow and factious. A letter from the aged Gilbert O. Nations stated that if he had his life to live over, he would dedicate it wholly to helping complete the unfinished work of the pioneers of restoration.

Through long prayer and intense study we became convinced that a program of wide diversification would accomplish but little in our remaining years. We decided to concentrate our feeble talents upon the two greatest themes which can challenge the thinking of mortals— the restoration of the ancient order and the unity of all believers in Jesus, the Messiah. Our efforts have not met with unqualified success. Most of the brethren are satisfied to “settle on their lees,” being convinced that they are the special recipients of divine grace, and all others are sectarian except themselves. So long as we write pungent articles about the errors of others, we are hailed as brilliant and courageous defenders of the faith, but when we point out our own frailties and inconsistencies, we are losing our mind and becoming a traitor to the cause. The binding power of traditionalism is seen every day.

If we were content to make this little journal an organ for a faction, we could at least be popular with the constituency of that faction. But we are convinced that the party spirit is a work of the flesh, and in the same category as adultery, fornication and murder. Every faction has its paper; we are resolved that here is one paper which will not have its faction. But the party spirit is so prevalent, that it may be that a paper pleading for restoration and unity cannot have enough friends to survive.

Any paper of this nature must depend upon its friends. Nell and I have been careful not to take one cent from the subscriptions or gifts in the entire eighteen years. In that period, uncounted hours have gone into this work of faith and labor of love. But we have been able to carry on only because of the generosity of those who believe in what we are trying to accomplish.

Few of our preaching brethren ever send in a list of readers. Many of them do not even keep their own subscriptions paid up. We hear from them infrequently, and generally when a successful meeting has been held. We rejoice to report their good work and it thrills our souls when they accomplish something worthwhile for the Christ. We wish that even those who do not bother to read the paper would let us share in both their seasons of sorrow and rejoicing. We love the brethren.

It would amaze you how few congregations ever announce that a subscription list is being made up for the paper, and that those who desire it may give their subscriptions to a certain brother. That is about all it would take to get a list, for many will subscribe if they do not have to exert the energy to mail it in personally. We asked an elder in one congregation in Missouri if he would announce about the paper, and he said he would take it up with the other elders. In a few days I got a letter stating they thought it best not to announce about the paper. In a postscript, he added, "We are enclosing an announcement of our annual all-day meeting, which we would like to have you put in the paper if you have space." We found space, because Nell and I believe in the "golden rule." Not many in his congregation saw the announcement though.

We are now operating each month at a loss. We will not be able to do that much longer. A careful evaluation of our needs indicates that to survive we need to get a thousand new subscriptions this year. The sooner we do so, the easier it will be. We have decided to break the total down so more people can help, if they wish to do so. If ten brethren will each volunteer to get 25 subscriptions; if twenty-five others will get 10 each; and if one hundred will send 5 each— the task will be completed. Of course, every subscription will help!

We would like to have you send a list of names with correct addresses. If you cannot do that, and want to help, we'll add names from our waiting list. Last month alone, Nell and I added 45 names at our own expense. Some of you who get the paper without having subscribed, will know it is because of our interest, or that of a good friend or brother. We hope you'll enjoy reading this little journal. In ten years, we have sent 24,000 copies to lands across the sea, and with few exceptions have borne the full cost. Talmage Weekley has been a faithful helper in this work.

It is not our intention to write congregations about the paper. If brethren, in reading this, are not sufficiently motivated to aid in building up the list, we will continue as long as possible, then conclude that God's will is being done in our cessation, as we feel it was in our publication. We believe in doing the best we can with what we have, and when we can no longer do one thing, we shall not be embittered, but will merely turn our attention to other worthy channels. For several years we have needed a new addressing machine to simplify and ease the burden, and we've prayed that we might see our way clear to getting one. Since we could not, we've merely tightened up the old one and gone ahead.

We do not regret that we cannot compromise our convictions to please any of the various factions among the brethren. We love all men with a deep and abiding affection, and we crave the fellowship and brotherhood of all upon the basis of a covenant relationship with God. We cherish for all the freedom that is in Jesus the Christ, and we shall contend earnestly for the truth as we understand it. If such a program merits your confidence, and commends itself to your heart, we trust you will help provide readers for it.

Law and Love

Mission Messenger (January 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

Man was made in the image of God, but that image in man was polluted, corrupted and shattered by the impact of sin. The restoration of man to his former guiltless state is the whole theme and purpose of divine revelation. Man could no more restore himself than he could make himself in the beginning. It required creation for his advent into the world; it required a new creation to make Him once more worthy to talk with God.

The revelation of God is perfectly adapted to serve that great end. The motives which are held forth in it are the highest and most compelling ever conceived; its precepts are exalting to the human spirit; the rewards which are offered will challenge man to extend the greatest effort and make the greatest sacrifice.

Conformity to the spirit of this revelation will transform man and render him capable of walking with God. It will restore that fellowship which was rudely severed by sin in the primeval garden, and open the gate to the tree of life. The flaming sword of the cherub will be sheathed and the hand which held it will conduct man to the glory from which he was previously debarred.

Nothing else, then, can be so important as the familiarizing of ourselves with the great truths revealed, by which we can again bask in the sunshine of divine favor and find grace to help in time of need. This is not the task of a special group or a special clique. It is the sacred responsibility of every human being. We will not be judged in the final accounting, upon what some uninspired man has written, said or done, but upon what God has spoken in His Word. It is the bread and water of life, and we can no more sustain our spiritual beings by hearing someone talk about it, than we can remain physically alive by listening to one describe the blessings of food and drink. The word must be imbibed, digested and assimilated. It does not merely provide a way of life—it is life!

And it should be remembered that it is the word of God of which we must personally partake. A cookbook may describe methods of preparation, arouse gustatory anticipation and encourage you to try a recipe. But you do not eat the cookbook! So one may read about the Bible, he may devour the contents of numerous books which describe and picture it, but it is only the sacred writings which will produce a healthy personality. All other books are dead or dying because they are written by dying men; the Bible alone is a living word because it is written by the Living God!

The new covenant writings contain the sheet anchor of our liberty. To desert them means to revert to a state of slavery or spiritual peonage. Our hope of a better world and a better life is wrapped up in those pages. It is inconceivable that the Creator who designed the intricate synchronization of the planets, who made the majestic machine called the human body, who devised the life-giving processes called photosynthesis, would give us a revelation calculated to bring us into a state of harmony with the Infinite, and yet allow it to be so casual, haphazard and unsystematic, as to defy human reason to fathom or untangle.

Nor does this demand a legalistic declaration of every minute and microscopic detail. Those who spend their lives in seeking to bind upon their fellows the hair-splitting technicalities woven out of the gossamer thread of imagination and speculation miss the majesty of the design of heaven as far as those who disregard it entirely and invent new approaches to fellowship which heaven never authorized. The first defeats the purpose of fellowship by rigid fences which would debar many whom God accepts; the second by removing all barriers to include those whom God rejects.

More than anything else in these days we need a wholesome, pure and consistent attitude toward God's revelation. It is the constitution of our absent King; by it He exercises authority over human hearts. Let us once be convinced of this fact and many of the schismatic problems of yesterday will disappear. The law of our Lord exercised in reverence for Him and in charity for our fellows, will restore us to Him and to each other that we may "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

Freedom In Christ

Mission Messenger (January 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

No innovation has ever been introduced into the church of God by an avowed enemy of truth. Every digression which has turned the community of saints into a battleground of intestine strife was led by those who thought they were doing God service. The sincerity of man is no guarantee of his spiritual rightness. This solemn fact should give rise to sober judgment. Every man should weigh his own actions in the light of this historical truth and remember that nobler and wiser men than himself have gone astray. Good intentions will not necessarily protect against deviation from and destruction of the faith.

Those who are inclined to follow men because of their manifest abilities, skills, wisdom or humility, should proceed cautiously in view of the wrecks which line the highway of life. We should carefully weigh what men say in the scales of divine revelation. Too often we measure the teaching of the Bible by what a favorite preacher says, instead of measuring what he teaches by what the Bible says! A commentary is good if used as a commentary instead of a yardstick; a paper such as this one is good if used as a medium of stimulating thought instead of as a criterion.

In short, we should not be led to question the motives of all who differ from our position. We should not assume that others are dishonest simply because they disagree with us, or vice versa.

We should not measure them by ourselves, nor should we measure ourselves by them. To do so is to demonstrate a woeful lack of wisdom. But we should be reluctant to follow any person on earth. No man among us is perfect in all matters. All of us lack knowledge in some fields, all of us lack some knowledge in all fields. Preachers may be conscientious, earnest, sincere— and wrong! Religious papers but express the sentiments of their editors and contributors. They are all beset with human failings. They must not become measuring reeds!

No good man will want other men to follow him blindly; anyone who does so is not a good man. Our task is to teach men to read, think and speak for themselves. Each person, regardless of how lowly or uneducated, must formulate his own convictions. The ecclesia of God is in a healthy state when men question, challenge and test their leaders; nothing is so detrimental to spiritual welfare as a supine state of resignation in which we are robots instead of robust men. Exercise your freedom and you will keep it; allow it to die and you will die with it!

Grilling the Editor

Mission Messenger (February 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

(Editor's Note. The following recorded interview may be of some interest to our readers. It represents my reply to questions proposed relative to my views on current topics. We trust that you will give the article a careful reading.)

1. I have noted the repeated usage of the term "restoration" in your writings. What do you mean by this expression?

By the term "restoration" I mean the full and complete return to the ancient order as established by our Lord through his holy apostles; that is, the reinstatement upon this earth of the community of saints as originally planted in conformity with the purpose of heaven.

2. Does this mean that you consider that no existing religious organization has yet achieved that goal?

Exactly! We have not yet arrived at the place where any congregation or group of congregations can assert that they represent the primitive order in its fulness. There remains yet much land to be conquered.

3. Why is a restoration necessary in the first place?

The ancient order began to be corrupted even during the days of the apostles. Paul declared while he was yet alive that “the mystery of iniquity” was already working. The plan of God was obscured, the sun was eclipsed, and the congregation forced to “flee into the wilderness.” The actual bondage in spiritual Babylon lasted for 1260 years, before the first rays of light began once more to penetrate the darkness. We are not yet completely free from the influence of Babylon.

4. Is this attempt at restoration a new thing?

Not at all. It began in England with such men as John Wycliffe in the fifteenth century, and was carried forward by Martin Luther in Germany in the sixteenth century. While these and their contemporaries were actually reformers of the existing order, they laid the ground-work for such men as Thomas Campbell, Alexander Campbell, Walter Scott, Barton W. Stone, et al., who actually sought to go back beyond the Roman and Protestant schisms, and restore the original order as ordained by God. Our efforts are enriched by their discoveries of the last century.

5. Has progress in restoration been as rapid in the last fifty years as before?

Not at all! Those who were the spiritual descendants of the men mentioned made the mistake of thinking that they had taken them all the way back to the original, and thus they have rested on the oars, and spent most of the last half century trying to defend what they already have and wrangling with each other over what it is.

6. What has been the end of all previous reformation and restoration attempts?

Every such attempt has invariably ended up by producing another sect, generally more narrow, intolerant and uncharitable than those which have preceded it.

7. Do you see any tendencies to indicate that the movement for restoration which was launched a century ago may suffer the same fate?

Indeed, the most casual observer can detect such portents upon every side. The aim of Campbell and his fellows was to unite all true believers in Christ in one body. Their descendants are themselves fractured into some twenty-five factions, each one of which proclaims it is the only faithful body on earth today, and designates all of the others as sects.

8. What real contributions to restoration were made by the Campbells?

They contributed much by their discovery that the blessings of God were contingent upon His ordinances. Thus they recaptured from error the place, nature, purpose and design of baptism, as well as the relationship of the Lord's Supper to the community of the saints. They also began a work of rescue for some of the terms used by the Holy Spirit which had been much abused in the sectarian jargon of the day. We can never be too grateful to these pioneers who blazed the trail across the untrammelled wilderness of sectism.

9. Do you have any well defined ideas as to what realms need further examination to effectuate the restoration?

Yes, I do. Of course, I hold that every generation of men is obligated to make a complete and thorough investigation of God's entire system of revelation, so that the faith of each generation will not stand in the wisdom of men but in the power of God. It is too easy to become traditionalists, and most people become such for two reasons— they are by nature hero worshippers and they are mentally lazy. As a stimulation of my personal study I have listed ten categories in which we are yet influenced by sectarianism, and where considerable research will be required before we approach the walls of Jerusalem.

10. It would probably take too long to enumerate all of these, but I wonder if you might mention a few which you deem of greater importance?

They are all important, for all have to do with our approach to God, and nothing is unimportant in that area. But I will mention a few: (1) A candid study of the vocabulary of the Holy Spirit. We need to recapture the original distinctions between such terms as gospel and doctrine, preaching and teaching. We need to batter down unscriptural distinctions in such terms as minister and communion. We need to study diligently such words as fellowship and heresy. I am doing extensive research on these last two now, and hope to publish something regarding them soon. (2) The means of induction into Christ. We have reduced this to a sort of five step, kitchen stepladder method, by which men have become convinced that they can pull themselves up into God's grace and put Him under obligation to save them. The idea of a personal covenant with the Lord, based upon conviction, conversion and consecration, is almost foreign to our thinking. Thus the congregations are filled with many who were converted to water baptism but were never converted to the Lord Jesus Christ. Immersion in water of a penitent believer is essential. But we should be immersed not because we believe in baptism but because we believe in the Christ. (3) The subject of worship and what constitutes it. There is a general and widespread ignorance on this matter at present and the idea of "five items of worship" is no more in the Bible than the expression itself. (4) The subject of the official name of the ecclesia of God. In this matter we are following the lead of the world of sectism about us, without due regard to God's revelation. We are defending our traditional pattern simply because we have always done it that way. These are a few of the ten areas of scriptural thought in which I feel we must make some adjustment if we restore the ancient order.

11. What do you consider the greater hindrances to resumption of the restoration movement?

There are a number of hindrances. One is prejudice. We are generally opposed to anything which cuts across our thinking, and we condemn it without investigation. It seems ridiculous that anything could possibly be right if we haven't known it. Then there is traditionalism. Most of us, like the Chinese, are ancestor worshippers. We want to do things like they do them "down home," although they may be wrong "down home." I suspect pride is our worst foe. We have berated and ridiculed other religionists so long, it goes against the grain to have to break down and admit that we have been wrong on some things. One of the greatest hindrances is the divisive state of those who claim to be "The Church of Christ." In some localities there are as many as five congregations, all claiming to be the one, holy, apostolic, and catholic Church of Christ, not one of which will even be civil to the other, many of the members living in such mortal fear of the "powers that be" they will not even speak to each other on the street. It is difficult for the remainder of the religious world to see how a family can pull the drawstring of unity with one hand while slashing at each other with a meat cleaver in the other hand.

12. Do you think that what is generally referred to as "The Church of Christ" today is co-extensive with the scriptural expression "the body of Christ"?

Of course, I might ask which "Church of Christ"? But I think I know what you mean. The congregation of God spoken of in the new covenant scriptures is identical with the one body mentioned in the same scriptures. It is composed of all the children of God. Not one saved person on earth is outside of it. God adds to it every person who surrenders to the sovereignty of His Son and enters into covenant relationship with Him on the basis of the terms laid down by heaven. Every person on this earth, motivated by faith in Jesus as the Messiah, the Son of God, who has turned away from sin, and submitted to immersion of his body in water on the basis of that belief, is a member of God's family, and is my brother. I'm not sure that when we use the expression “The Church of Christ” that we use it in that sense. It is possible that we use it as a designation for a small and exclusive segment of believers who agree with our position on various points of teaching. Thus, we would imply that thousands of immersed believers in the Christ were not added to the family of God. This is, of course, a sectarian usage of the term.

13. Do you believe that some of God’s children may be in sectarian bodies?

There are many people who belong to sects and yet are not sectarian. When fleshly Israel started out of Babylon they did not all leave at once. A contingent went out under leadership of Zerubbabel, later another went out with Ezra, and still later another under Nehemiah. Those who were in Babylon until the last were as much God’s children as those who had already arrived in Jerusalem. They were just in Babylon for a longer period. Thus it is with spiritual Israel in “Mystery, Babylon the Great.” They may not all go out of Babylon at once, but as they become aware of their state, learn that they are in a foreign place, and have the glory of the city of Jerusalem pictured to them, they are led to evacuate the city of exile and start the trek toward Beulah land.

14. Does this mean that it is possible to be saved in sectarianism?

Let us put it this way! No sectarian can be saved, regardless of where he is. Sectarianism is a personal attitude toward truth. It is the “party spirit” and is condemned just as adultery, fornication, murder, lying, theft and drunkenness. When a man becomes convinced that the party spirit is sinful, he ought to leave it, just as he abandons adultery or lying when he sees the guilt attached to them. You might as well ask if one can be saved if he continues in adultery as to ask if he can be saved while he continues in sectism. If one of God’s children sees he is in a party which separates, segregates and aggravates the remainder of God's children purely out of partisanship, he ought to get out of it and do so at once. Otherwise, he will be lost because of his factious practice.

15. Would this not imply that some might have to get out of "The Church of Christ" in some places?

Certainly, it might be necessary in some areas to leave "The Church of Christ" in order to remain in the church of Christ. If one is a member of a group that is sectarian in its attitudes and practices, he would either have to reform them in harmony with God's revelation, or leave them, regardless of what name they wear. "Passions, intrigues, dissensions and factions" are called works of the flesh and it is said "that those who act this way will not inherit the Kingdom of God."

16. Do you not oppose theological seminaries and the one-man minister system as well as other things which some baptized believers endorse, and if so, does this not make you sectarian according to your definition?

Yes, I oppose both of the things which you mention. I oppose the first because I believe it sets up a plurality of bodies where God has set up only one; and I oppose the second because it sets up one minister where the Lord has set up many. But I am not creating an "anti-college party" or an "anti-ministerial party." I have convictions, very deep ones, upon both of these matters. But I do not deny that those who differ with me on these issues are my brethren. I think they are in grave error upon these matters and I recognize a responsibility to try and teach them out of that error, but they are still my brethren, and I love them, not because of these errors, but in spite of them. I go among them, I talk with them, and although many of them hate me, speak evil of me, and misrepresent my position, I feel no rancor towards any of them. I recognize that God will avenge anything that is out of harmony with His will, and I am too busy to engage in hate.

17. Are there not some who believe that you are allied with a sect because you use more than one container for the fruit of the vine in the Lord's Supper and worship with congregations which have classes for Bible study?

That is true, and we should not forget that there is not a single group on earth that is not branded as a sect by some other group. We should rejoice that we will be judged by the Lord rather than by men, for then no one would ever be saved. Many earnest, conscientious persons believe that for the Lord's Supper to be acceptable, the fruit of the vine must be dispensed in one container. While I do not have that view, and think it is unduly exclusive, I do not disfellowship those who hold it. I am not a leader of a "multiple cup party." Those who hold to the one container are my brethren, and I love them. We have the same spiritual father and mother. I think it is sinful to call them "one-cuppers" and to divide the family of God into "cups groups" and "one-cup groups." Such language is the terminology of narrow sectism, and reflects the party spirit. I am trying to purge myself of it, although it is difficult to do so, because we have always used it as a reflection on those who differ from us. But a realization that they are really my brethren, and the cultivation of a sincere love for them, which rises above partisanship, helps me to eliminate hurtful and hateful phraseology. I trust that some day many of us will actually be able to work together as one in Christ, but I know that I cannot promote unity while defending partisanship.

18. How do you regard the Mission Messenger as relates to the thing you are striving to achieve?

I am firmly resolved that it will not become an "official mouthpiece" for any sect, clique, party or faction. The paper is my own individual enterprise. It is my means of communicating my views to my brethren and friends throughout the world. It is just a loudspeaker tuned in on a world frequency. Nell helps me to mail it out and is my constant stay and strength, God bless her! I know that many papers are recognized as official organs of various factions. The editors can often make or break a man. I feel sorry for brethren who are subservient to such a party spirit, for they are not free men in Christ Jesus. Their lives are miserable. I have asked several brethren to share regularly in this medium of expression and have invited all to do so to the extent of limited space. But MISSION MESSENGER is purely a personal, individual undertaking, and nothing more! Occasionally pressures are applied upon me to eliminate someone from writing with whom some of the brethren disagree. There are many who are anxious to use such a medium to get their views and opinions before the people, but they want to deny other brethren the same privilege, and they become disgruntled if I publish something with which they are out of harmony. But so long as I publish the paper, it will be a free journal and not the organ of a sect or faction.

19. Do all of the regular contributors agree fully with your views?

I have never asked them, but I am almost sure they do not. I am sure that I do not fully agree with any of them upon every matter. It is not necessary that they agree with me upon all things to get their material printed. I do not agree with everything they write for the paper, nor demand that they agree with everything I write. But I do defend their right and freedom to think, speak and act for themselves. If I disagree with something they write, and I think it is important enough, I'll attach a dissenting note; they also have a right to reply to anything I say, and so do any of our readers.

20. What are your personal primary aims for the future?

There are two of them which I think to be of vital importance. I want to help in my weak way to restore the primitive pattern of the ecclesia of God, and also to lift up my feeble voice in behalf of the unity of all believers. I hold that the sheep of God have been neglected and driven out to wander among the hills of sectism. It is my fond hope, that if my life is extended sufficiently, that I may help summon them to the high mountain where salvation and safety await. I would like to put my shoulder to the wheel of the Restoration vehicle and push it out of the mud and mire of neglect and indifference where it has been stalled so long.

21. How do you plan to accomplish these objectives?

I am hoping that lovers of truth everywhere, and in all segments of Christendom can be aroused and enlisted to help. If there are enough people who want to engage in a crusade to free their loved ones from the bondage of sectism, we may be able to use this little paper effectively. At the present time, the future of this little journal is precarious. Nell and I are operating at a loss each month, and we may be forced to discontinue. However, that will neither deter nor discourage me.

I plan to go wherever the Lord opens up a door for me. I have spoken several times in Jewish synagogues. I have visited Roman Catholic classes and talked with the priest in the presence of the students. I have met in personal discussions members of the clergy of the Lutheran and other faiths. Several times recently I've been allowed to speak to groups of the Christian Church. In none of these conferences has anything but a spirit of humility and kindness prevailed. No one became angry or heated, despite our great differences. I shall miss no opportunity to go where I can find a hearing. It is ridiculous to refuse to go to a place where there is no one who sees things as I do. That is the place where I want to go. If the apostles had refused to go to places where there was no congregation, there would be none on earth today. They purposely chose the very places where there were none who agreed with them, and so shall I. Fortunately, I have lost all fear of what men shall do to me, and my whole trust is in God. The vision of many of the preachers is pitiably limited. They refuse to go to a place where there is no “faithful church” and yet there can be no “faithful church” until they go! On that basis, the greater part of humanity would be doomed to hell, unless they accidentally stumbled on to the truth and started a congregation. Then they could get a preacher to come and tell them what was wrong with them. I want to go where people do not see things as I do. I get uncomfortable being around congregations that are all lined up with me. I want to get into virgin fields, or fields where Satan has been working! I do not like to build on another man’s foundation all of the time. I want to go beyond the present regions. If I wait until there is a congregation there, I will never go, and I know that if I never go, there may never be a congregation.

22. Are there any encouraging aspects to be observed at present?

Yes, there are. I do not worry about such things, and the word “discouragement” is not in my spiritual vocabulary. The One whom I serve opened up the Red Sea for His people, and caused the walls of Jericho to fall down before them. He has not lost any of His power. All I need to do is to get my bearings and march forward in faith. He will open up ways before me. It is my task to sow and plant; it is His task to give the increase. All I need to do is to fulfill my part. But there are some good omens. Many people are being shaken, jolted and scared into studying more than ever before. I have spoken several times of late in denominational meeting-houses and been well received. The question periods which always follow my addresses have elicited many pointed and excellent questions. One encouraging feature is the increasing interest among some of my good Jewish friends.

23. Have you always held your present views with reference to restoration?

No, I have not! I came into this fellowship from a Lutheran background. My people on the maternal side were Danes. At first, I labored under the misconception that because we had discovered some truths which had long been hidden that we had found them all. Thus there was a time in my life when no problem was too great for me. I had all of the answers. I accepted without question the orthodox sermon outlines which had been handed down from previous generations, but when I saw that they misapplied many scriptural texts, and violated most of the laws of Biblical interpretation, I began to investigate for myself. I became convinced that we were well on the road toward creation of another sect. I saw the pressure groups manipulated by editors and preacher cliques, and beheld how the bulk of God's sheep were often exploited for the fleece. I learned how little any of us really knew, and how much there was yet to learn. Accordingly, I began to lift up my eyes to look upon the fields. I saw how white they were unto the harvest. My love for truth grew and with it a burning desire to share truth with my brethren and the world of mankind. I have made many mistakes which are saddening to reflect upon. I have wasted much time. However, I trust in God to extend unto me His amazing grace, and to save me through His mercy and love. Without that prospect I am sure that I would be of all men most miserable, but with it, I am lifted up and walk on higher ground.

24. What do you feel is the first great need of the congregations which are restoration minded?

Our greatest need is for godly, qualified men to serve as bishops of the local flocks. This is God's own pastor system. There is a great dearth of qualified men to serve in this office, and many who are called elders are wholly incapable of discharging the grave responsibility adhering thereto, and should resign from it. Many are sectarian in their attitudes and are actually using the office to thwart any real restoration of the primitive order. They know but little of God's great plan for the ages, but refuse to allow those who do to teach. The brotherhood of Christians is dominated too much by preachers. They do the thinking, the writing and the serving. When meetings are held in various areas, the preachers are the prominent ones on the program. Of course, that comes about because they are generally the best informed, but they should not be so. There is little respect for the office of bishop in many areas. This is due to several factors. We have exalted the office of evangelist and urged all young men to train for it. If we had spent as much time, effort and money training brethren to be bishops, we would have been much better off, and they could have trained brethren in their respective flocks to become evangelists. Another thing that has brought this office into disrepute is because of the conduct of some who occupy it. They are sometimes little men trying to do a big job, and they must emphasize the authority without being able to lead. We need to restore dignity to the office and encourage respect for it. We can never have a genuine restoration until we regain the proper status for the office of bishop. I hope to see the day come when bishops will be supported by their flocks until they can carry on a full measure of service for the congregations.

25. Do you think that the holding of public debates will hasten the restoration?

No, they may actually hinder it! I doubt that they will achieve any substantial good, for the simple reason that in modern public debates, two factions each select a champion and throw them into the arena in defense of partisan views. Debaters today are actually representatives of party positions. I know that theoretically their purpose is to examine the evidence, sift it, and determine what is true, but practically it does not work out that way. Debates, as now conducted, do not lend themselves to calm, unbiased appraisal of issues. There is the constant temptation to use any means at hand to gain personal victory. The lust for combat fires the brain and kindles the blood. I would not want to become a professional debater or a recognized Goliath for any company of Philistines.

It is true that I have engaged in some public debates, but not often from choice, and it troubles me that I like debating! I may be forced to debate again rather than see truth stigmatized, but my honest opinion is that in the long run, the cause may suffer in a community where such forensic struggles are waged. A much better approach would be that of the forum. With an unprejudiced chairman, two speakers would sit down at the same table on a public platform. Each in turn would be allowed 15 minutes to state his personal conviction on the issue at stake. Then each would be allowed 15 minutes to question his respondent, and the audience would be permitted to question either or both for an hour. I am losing confidence in hit-and-run speakers who will not permit their position to be examined in free and open questioning. Why should I spend two hours of my precious time listening to a man air his views, when I am not given an opportunity to request clarification, or to examine those views?

Since our time is growing short, I want to thank you for these questions, and assure you that even if you disagree with my answers, I still love and respect you very much indeed. I will pray for you and ask you to pray for me. When this report is published in MISSION MESSENGER, I trust the readers will see fit to question the replies, as I have tried to reply to your questions. Thank you!

That They All May Be One (2)

Mission Messenger (February 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

One Lord's Day, immediately following the regular meeting, a young man sought audience with the evangelist. He had been in attendance for several weeks, since having been transferred to the town, by the implement company with which he was employed.

He expressed a desire to be identified with the congregation of saints and to utilize his talent for the good of the cause, but he was fearful that he would not be acceptable to the brethren, and he did not wish to cause them any embarrassment. He said he had been reared in a community where every religious organization used instrumental music in their praise service unto God, and he observed that the little group in this locality did not. He had been present often enough to know that they opposed it, although it was the first time in his life that he had known of such opposition being made. He felt that they were honest, and were earnestly desirous of planting a congregation based on the primitive pattern, and he said he had never been associated with a band of believers who were as consecrated to God, or as devoted to each other.

His problem was one of trying to formulate convictions without having enough facts as yet to establish his thinking. He could not personally see that the use of the instrument in the praise service was in serious violation of the divine commands, although he expressed a willingness to examine the question thoroughly. In the meantime, he wished to be in the fellowship of the brethren and do what he could to aid them. He agreed that it was not essential to use the instrument, and was willing to regard his present views as mere private opinions and not cause strife or contention over them. He wanted to know if he could be received on that basis.

The evangelist quoted, "Receive the man who is weak in the faith, but not to make decisions on his inward questionings." He said that while this did not specifically apply to the type of problem now confronting them, it at least laid down the principle of receiving those into the fellowship who still entertained honest doubts. He pointed out that we are not all equals in learning, knowledge and experience. All of us are affected by our environments, early training, and previous investigations. We should not think of ourselves as climbing the mountains of faith in clumps. Each of us is striving along the road as best he can, and all are strung out along the way. So long as all are looking unto Jesus, and have hearts filled with love for him and for each other, we should be charitable and patient toward those who have not advanced as far as others.

He told the young brother that it was not the purpose of the congregation to debar any child of God from ministering unto the Father, so long as he loved the Lord and was not possessed of a factious spirit, but had a wholesome attitude toward truth. He assured him that he would be welcome so long as he did not disturb the peace and unity of the brethren by advancing ideas or interpretations with a view to forcing them upon the congregation and disrupting their love and fellowship for each other. The young man said that this was the farthest thing from his mind, and that he knew that even if it proved that it was legitimate to use instrumental music, it was certainly sinful to drive a wedge into the body of believers.

The young man then asked the evangelist what method he should pursue in order to be recognized as a member of that congregation and subject to its oversight. The evangelist replied that he would merely state the desire of the young brother the following Lord's Day, and would welcome him to the fellowship of the congregation and to the table of the Lord. He felt that it might be best to inform the congregation of saints very briefly as to the feelings which had been expressed so that all would understand.

The evangelist then told him that they would study the question of the use of instrumental music in the worship, and do so as brethren. He suggested that the issue itself might be merely a symptom of a greater problem, and that when they began to do research upon it they might find that there were two grave matters involved: one dealing with a recognition of divine authority; the other having to do with what constituted acceptable corporate worship of a congregation of saints. But he said that while they were laboring together to understand more fully the teaching upon these issues, they would strive together in peace for the growth in grace and knowledge so much needed by every child of God.

The Sheep On The Hills

Mission Messenger (March 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

The prophet Ezekiel paints a graphic picture of the flock of God scattered among the hills, a prey to lurking beasts, and filled with fear and distress. He attributes their condition to two sources. First, the shepherds who were to feed the flock, fleeced them and fed themselves. Instead of searching for those who were driven away and seeking for those who were lost, they ruled them with force and cruelty.

As a result, God declares that He is against these shepherds, and will hold them responsible, even requiring his flock at their hand. It is interesting to note that those who are called shepherds by Ezekiel (34), are called pastors by Jeremiah (23:1, 2). He writes, "Woe be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture! saith the Lord . . . Ye have scattered my flock, and driven them away, and have not visited them; behold, I will visit upon you the evil of your doings, saith the Lord." It is apparent that God's sheep have been scattered by the very leaders to whom they looked for guidance and instruction.

Another factor in the production of the condition is the arrogant, proud and boastful attitude of the fattened members of the flock. They are depicted as pushing and thrusting with side and shoulder, and horning the humble and meek aside, until they are scattered abroad. They are charged, not only with eating the best pasture and drinking the pure water, but also with trampling the remainder into muck and mire, and fouling it and defiling it for the rest. This is an apt portrayal of religion in many places today, where the sheep are exploited by an official board, and forced to meet a budget they did not arrange, and subscribe to a program they did not originate. They must knuckle under or get out!

“My sheep wandered through all the mountains, and upon every high hill; yea my flock was scattered upon all the face of the earth, and none did seek or search after them.” That is a picture of the flock today. They are wandering through the mountains and hills of sectarianism. They are separated and scattered because of neglect, abuse and cruelty, to which they have been subjected. This is not the will of God. It is his desire that they be together, that there be but one flock and one shepherd. He does not want them divided by partisanship or factionalism, but united in love and peace. They were scattered in “a cloudy and dark day” but a brighter day is coming.

God has designed that his sheep shall be brought out from the people, gathered from the countries, and restored to their own estate, where they shall be fed in a good pasture, upon the high mountains of faith and truth. There will the flock be safe under the supervision of one shepherd, the prince of David. They shall have a covenant of peace, and will dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods. None shall make them afraid. They shall know that the Lord is with them and they are his people.

Our appeal goes forth to all of the scattered flock wandering over the hills which have been created by men. We would do our humble best to search and seek after every good and honest heart, “scattered upon the face of all the earth.” Every person in the whole wide world who possesses such a heart is my brother— either in prospect or reality! Those who have heard and learned, and come unto Christ, believing in Him, and demonstrating their faith by immersion into His death, are the sons of God. They are His children and my brethren, wherever they may be wandering as the result of the cloudy and dark day. Those who have not yet been immersed into our dear Lord, because of lack of knowledge, environment or teaching, need only to have the truth brought to bear upon their good and honest hearts, and they will also accept it.

We plead with all who believe in Jesus, and yet are divided from one another, to be no longer content with the meager pasturage upon the hills. The hand of God beckons on to the high mountains where is located the good fold. Salvation is not in the hills. It is not the wish of heaven that we should be divided in heart and spirit. Let us heal the breaches in Zion. Let us restore the good way and walk in it. Our dear Lord does not want those who believe in Him to be split into divers sects. Even small communities are often fractured into Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Lutheran and Roman Catholic fraternities. Those who compose these bodies all affirm that Jesus is the Messiah, the Son of God. They do not deny a single fact connected with his personal ministry. They are divided over the interpretation they place upon these facts, or their opinions about them. It is true that God loves every one of them. It is true that Jesus died for every one of them. It is true that God wills that all of them shall be one. It is true that Jesus prayed they might be one. Is it true, then, that they can never answer that prayer? Is there no solution for the problem? Our appeal will never fall with favor upon the ears of those who love the party spirit, regardless of the party to which they are attached. Our appeal is directed to the good and honest hearts in all parties. Let us arise and return in spirit and in fact to Him who died for us all. Then shall we be a blessing as he has promised, "I will make them and the places round about my hill a blessing; and I will cause the shower to come down in his season; there shall be showers of blessings."

God has given us a revelation from heaven. It is a divine love letter to the whole world. If we love its author as we claim to do, let us labor to help fulfill His eternal purpose. Let us seek to unite in Him, and upon the basis He has given. It is later than you think! The world hovers on the brink of despair and destruction. We have but two alternatives. We must convert the world to Jesus, or the world will commit universal suicide. All that is essential to leading the world to believe that God has sent Jesus, is for those in the world who believe in Jesus to become one. This is His own blessed assurance. "Neither pray I for these alone, but for all them also who believe on me through their word; that they may all be one . . . that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

What would be the glorious results of such unity? Wars would cease and the rumble of cannons die away. The shrieks and groans of dying men upon the battle fields of the earth would be heard no more. The mighty energies of the universe would be expended in the betterment of all mankind. We could safely travel any place upon earth. Prejudice and hate would fade out. The desert would blossom like a rose. We would experience a true brotherhood of man under the fatherhood of God.

In the face of such a benign prospect, how pale and insignificant are the doctrines and dogmas of men, the opinions and interpretations which rend and tear the hearts, and set us back into the jungle of passion under the reign of fang and claw. Sectarianism, division, party strife and schism must be dethroned. They cannot be tolerated in a heart in which the Lord God is sanctified. Let us seek the one Lord, the one faith, the one body. Let us come unto Him through the one baptism He has appointed.

What can we do? Those of us who love the Lord more than men, who exalt his revelation above human rationalization, who seek to restore the one body in its primitive perfection, must seek to study together, to investigate, to question that we may know "the Way." Regardless of what party we may now be in, we must seek the ultimate destruction of all parties by merging through mutual acceptance of the truth, into the grand concourse of saints which will compose the one body. We must further our aim in love. "Then they that feared the Lord spoke often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon His name" (Mal. 3:16). To help in my very feeble way, I offer to go personally to any synagogue, cathedral or church building, which I can reach, at home or abroad, and express my views on these issues, and submit to questioning at any length. I will respect those who differ and love their souls. I will listen to their views!

Brighter days are coming. A mighty army of earnest seekers after truth is being raised up all over the earth. Men are beginning to discard the shackles of slavery devised by human agency. The sheep on the hills are lifting their gaze to the high mountain peaks of safety. Men are examining their positions by the Book. The campfires of the pilgrims can be seen flickering all along the road to Jerusalem.

Let us here issue a word of warning. Let not those who are fortunate enough to have discovered the green pastures first, devour and tramp the residue with their feet. Let not those who have been drinking of the deep waters foul the pure stream by jealousy and bigotry. It is no time for those who have found certain great and abiding principles "to thrust with side and shoulder, and push the diseased with your horns, till ye have scattered them abroad." Brethren, make room for them! Let them in! God's sheep are coming home from the hills! There is room on the mountain for every good and honest heart. God has reserved thousands who have not bowed the knee to Baal! Longing eyes are looking upward, hungry hearts are turned heavenward. The sheep are starting to move toward the shepherd, for they have heard his voice again as it echoes amidst the hills! Don't stone them or beat them back with force and with cruelty. Let them come home to the fold of the prince of David. They are his sheep not yours!

That They All May Be One (3)

Mission Messenger (March 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

As the months passed, the little congregation of saints continued to grow in grace and knowledge. The meetings on Lord's Day were stimulating and inspirational. Each brother seemed to be constantly on the alert for material with which to edify the others, and when the presiding brother announced that the time had come for those who desired to speak to the edification of the body, there was no dearth of willing volunteers. Each seemed to take to heart the apostolic admonition, to seek to excel in this department of service.

The season of prayer was always filled with petitions voiced to the Father in behalf of the sick, the distressed and wayward. Often the eyes of the saints were filled with tears as their sympathetic hearts were touched with the fervent appeals. There was an ever increasing consciousness of the inward abiding of the Holy Spirit, and spiritual strength was imparted because of this. The saints were walking with God and the influence of the divine companionship was daily more evident in the peace and tranquillity which were promoted.

It became evident to the evangelist that he should prepare them for the time when they could stand alone, mature and capable. He sought to achieve this by increasing his efforts at development of those who could become capable bishops, as well as by counselling the congregation concerning the day when they must assume their increased responsibilities. He asked them to point out deficiencies which had not yet been corrected, and told them it was his duty to make such adjustments in their congregational life before bishops were appointed.

A young married woman said that several of the sisters of her age had talked to each other, and had expressed a need for teaching relative to the duties devolving upon them as Christian wives and mothers. The evangelist told her that he sympathized with their needs and had already taken steps to correct the lack in that field. An older sister, a home economics teacher in a nearby town, and a member of a sister congregation, had consented to come and meet with the younger wives and mothers, once per month, and to give them the benefit of her training as well as of her Biblical knowledge. The evangelist suggested that these meetings be held in the homes, so that they could be kept on an informal basis.

He again impressed upon the congregation that the work of an evangelist with any group of saints was intended to be temporary, and was ordained only to correct problems, establish orderly procedure, and train the members of the body until the appointment of bishops. The ultimate goal of the congregation is to function independently in every phase of spiritual activity. The evangelist who proclaims the gospel in an area begets those who accept the glad tidings, and sustains the relationship of a father to them. The apostle who took the message to Corinth, wrote: "I am not writing this to shame you, but I am offering you advice as my dearly-loved children. For even if you were to have ten thousand instructors— for all that you could not have several fathers: it is I who in Christ Jesus became your father through the Good News."

For that reason he wrote to the Thessalonians: "You know that we acted towards every one of you as a father does toward his own children, encouraging and cheering you, and imploring you to live lives worthy of fellowship with God, who is inviting you to share his own kingship and glory.” For that same reason he calls Timothy “My own true son in the faith” and says of him, “Like a child working with his father, he served with me in the furtherance of the Good News.” The evangelist said that the real task of every parent was to work himself out of a job. He must train and develop his children until they can carry on in life without the constant supervision of the parent. If he does all the work for the children and never allows them to share in the responsibility, if he pampers and spoils them by always spoon-feeding them, and never teaching them to eat by themselves, he will make them neurotic, unstable and helpless. Children must be reared with such a degree of emotional strength that they will look upon the time when they can cut loose from the parent, as a natural part of life itself. If they are so insecure that a foster parent has to be appointed to continue to rear them when the one who begot them is gone, they reveal their own immaturity.

The evangelist pointed out that a foster father is one who performs the duties of a parent to the child of another. If the evangelist who begets a congregation is their father in Christ, then another evangelist who is later brought on the scene to do the same task is a foster father. He remarked that some congregations which had existed for fifty years were still under foster fathers, and the children were contributing to support the father in that role. He quoted the words of Paul, “I desire not your money, but yourselves; for children ought not to put by for their parents, but the parents for the children.” The modern “located evangelist” system is one of foster fathers. A line of prospective fathers is paraded by an orphaned group, who listen at them demonstrate their wares, and then select a candidate upon the basis of a tryout sermon.

The evangelist showed that this ridiculous procedure was not only without a shred of scriptural authority, but could never produce the system which God had authorized, a system which was designed for the real development of every one of His children. He urged those who could do so to qualify themselves for leadership, and he exhorted the brethren to observe the lives of such, to encourage and strengthen them for the day when they must shoulder the grave responsibility of bishops in the congregation.

He proposed that he would give the brethren a thorough course of instruction in the qualifications and functions of bishops, and in the responsibility of the congregation toward them. He encouraged them to question every step of the discussions so that they would become wholly convinced of the truths to be taught. Children grow into mature thinkers by amassing informative data from which to reason; such data is accumulated by asking questions. God's children should grow by the same method.

The evangelist told them that in the primitive congregations there were bishops to oversee, and deacons to administer unto the needy, and the saints functioning in conjunction with these, constituted a body lacking in none of its parts. He urged them to look forward to that date when they could cut themselves loose from the one who planted them, and exhibit a state of affairs where all of the worship of the Lord was carried on as a regular procedure and without spasmodic periods of revival. The congregation was asked to study as a prelude to the instruction, three chapters: Acts 20, 1 Timothy 3, and Titus 1. This they all agreed to do.

The Spirit and Liberty

Mission Messenger (March 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

Within this tenement of clay called the body, dwells a spirit. God hath “formed the spirit of man within him” (Zech. 12:1). That spirit is the inward man which can be renewed daily, even while the outward man perishes (2 Cor. 4:16). It is strengthened with might by the Holy Spirit (Eph. 3:16). It is the spirit, held captive in the body, which longs and groans for the day of adoption when the body shall have redemption (Rom. 8:23). It is the spirit, confined to an alien realm, which aspires to a higher sphere; which yearns and gropes and reaches out to embrace its creator, and to know again the bliss of perfect union which was so rudely shattered by sin.

The spirit of man can expand and grow only in the atmosphere of freedom. It was never created to be dominated, brutalized or made subservient to men. Our fleshly parents gave us our physical bodies, and they may chastise them for our social good, but they did not give us our spirits, and those spirits are not subject to them. “We have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live?” (Heb. 12:9). Our fathers may set forth principles of religion which they deem to be worthy, and while we are young they may take our bodies to the place where they worship, but in the final analysis we shall be judged, not by what they thought God meant, but by what He said. And here we must reason with God as individuals, for we shall be judged in that manner.

A man and a maid decide to form a union, and in marriage they create a social unit called a home, or family. Over this unit the husband and father is the head. But this gives him no rights or prerogatives in the spiritual realm. “He shall cleave to his wife and they shall be one flesh.” “But he that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit” (1 Cor. 6:17). “The wife hath not power of her own body, but the husband; and likewise also the husband hath not power of his own body, but the wife” (1 Cor. 7:4). To which it may be added that neither one has any jurisdiction over the spirit of the other. “Who art thou that judgest another man’s servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth” (Rom. 14:4).

This should be a source of comfort to all of us. Many are exercised in conscience, because, as they grow older, they find their thought pattern differing from that of their parents. They suffer inner pangs of chastisement because they are torn between loyalty to the belief of the parents and fidelity toward God. But no parent can formulate a code of spiritual conviction for his offspring. He can teach what commends itself to him to be truth, he can exemplify his teaching by his conduct, but he cannot tyrannize the minds and hearts of his children. Wise parents will teach their children to love truth for truth’s sake; they will encourage them as they develop, to seek and search for truth as the chief aim in life. They will make such amendments and adjustments in their own thinking as are necessary to conform to newly discovered truth, and freely admit their past errors to their children. Thus will be produced emotionally mature children who will not hesitate to adopt truth, regardless of the cost.

It is the truth that makes men free. But for truth to accomplish this, it must be free, and not shackled by human dogmatism or political pressure. A veil upon the heart in approaching God’s revelation will shut out the light of truth, as effectively as a window shade while drawn will exclude the light of the sun. This is the problem of our Jewish friends today. Their heart is not turned to God, but to a defence of Judaism. They fear to depart from the traditions of their fathers. "But whenever the heart of the nation shall have returned to the Lord, the veil will be withdrawn. Now by 'the Lord' is meant the Spirit; and where the Spirit of the Lord is, freedom is enjoyed" (2 Cor. 3:16, 17).

Those who are in the Christ have been called unto freedom (Gal. 5:13). They are exhorted to be free men (1 Peter 2:16). Even a slave, whose body was purchased by an earthly master was still free. "For a Christian, if he was a slave when called, is the Lord's freed man" (1 Cor. 7:22). His body still belonged to a master, but his spirit was made free in the Christ. "You have all been redeemed at infinite cost: do not become slaves to men. Where each one stood when he was called, there, brethren, let him still stand— close to God" (1 Cor. 7:24). There is the big problem of the ages! Men are not content to let him stand where he stood when he was called. They must mould, shape and alter him to fit their pattern. If he does not do so, they conclude he does not belong to God, because he will not bow to them. After he is called they will work him over, and make him conform to their pattern Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, Lutheran— or— dare I say it? What is the answer to all of this? It is in the words "Do not become slaves to men— stand close to God."

Ever since the day Christ set men free, there has been a constant struggle to maintain that freedom. In a less enlightened era, the rope, stake, fagots, cross, rack, and whip, were employed to torture the bodies of men to bring their consciences and opinions into line with the orthodox religious views which prevailed. In these days men employ more exquisite means of torture, such as ridicule, malignant whispering, misrepresentation, lying and boycott. The same spirit which lighted the fires of Smithfield, and prompted the Spanish Inquisition, motivated the "powers that be" at Freed-Hardeman College to arrest Leroy Garrett and cast him into a filthy jail cell, because he would not “conform.” He was treated as all dissenters are treated when they cannot be answered. Freed-Hardeman College forfeited its right to the respect of every honest lover of truth when its president moved away from the Christ and joined with the pope in this flagrant attempt to tyrannize thought. “The Church of Christ” in Tennessee is motivated by the same spirit which caused John Calvin to sign the death warrant of Michael Servetus. It is merely another sect, employing the sectarian method of threat, boycott, brain-washing and arrest. Do not be so foolish as to try and palliate the crime by divorcing Freed-Hardeman College from “The Church of Christ” in Tennessee.

We cannot bring the hearts of men into subjection by force or tyranny. Even atheistic communism learned that lesson in Hungary! We are limited in our attempts to change the minds of men, by the very nature of Christianity, to reason and persuasion. Charity and sincerity are characteristics of true religion, and it must utterly disown bitterness and hypocrisy. These are the weapons in the arsenal of false and vain religion, which must deceive where it cannot persuade, and force where it cannot deceive. Of what good are abuse, ranting, cavilling and misrepresentation? Can we adjust the hearts of men with a wrench as we would tighten a resistant lug or bolt?

Is not an error in thinking a species of intellectual lameness? Will such lameness in another hurt me any more than if he had a crooked leg or a deformed arm? Will a wild opinion do me any more injury than a wild look out of his eye? Why should I become enraged or provoked at his internal defects any more than his external ones? Shall I try to force every cripple whom I meet to walk as I do, by twisting his deformed leg, or shall I not rather lead him to the physician and surgeon of my acquaintance who can straighten the twisted member? And how shall I regard him during the straightening process— with sympathy and charity, or as an object of my spite and ridicule?

I must maintain the dignity of every man's spirit. I cannot force another to grovel and kneel before me without first losing my own dignity. I must defend his right to think, reason and act for himself, or establish the principle by which I will lose my own right to do so. If I fail to see in my enemy the image of God, though defiled and shattered, I shall fail to restore myself to that image. One who is egotistic, proud, arrogant, conceited and boastful, and who feels that God belongs exclusively to him, reveals he does not yet belong to God.

These are the sins I fain

Would have Thee take away;

Malice and cold disdain,

Hot anger, sullen hate,

Scorn of the lowly, envy of the great,

And discontent that casts a shadow gray

On all the brightness of the common day.

To My Catholic Friends

Mission Messenger (April 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

This article is addressed to my good friends who are members of the Roman Catholic Church. It is written in love and without rancor. It is sent forth with a fervent prayer that it may be a source of good in advancing the cause of Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of God. I am fully aware of the fact that few of my Roman Catholic friends will read what I write. Most will not dare to do so, having been reared to believe it is a sin to read such an appeal. I must trust that those who are lovers of truth, and there are some, will rise above partisan restraints and exercise their right to freely investigate. I hope that those who do so will pass this humble message to their friends.

It is not my intention to engage in ridicule nor to make sweeping charges, for one does not indulge in such actions with those whom he loves. It is rather my purpose to reason with you as with true friends, so that if we do not remove any of the barriers which now exist between us, we may erect no new ones to bar our further progress toward understanding each other and the will of God.

We hold a great many truths in common. Both of us believe in one God, the Father of all mankind. Both of us believe that Jesus, the Son of God, was born of a virgin in Bethlehem. Both of us believe that human reason unaided is an unreliable guide in religion, and that revelation was required to disclose supernatural truths. Both of us believe that Jesus founded only one church, and both of us believe it is a visible church. Regardless of how widely divergent we may be upon other matters, or even upon our explanation of these matters, it is refreshing to remember that we have some common ground upon which to stand as we reason together.

It is obvious that we are in disagreement as to the nature and identity of the church of God, for you are a member of the Roman Catholic Church and I am not. To be in disagreement does not mean that we must be disagreeable! You are sincere in your conviction that the Roman Catholic Church is the one, holy, apostolic church mentioned in the word of God. I am sincere in my conviction that it cannot be. One of us is in grave error. If the subject was one of mere temporal interest we might both laugh at our disagreement and forget about it and each other. But eternal souls are hanging in the balance and I cannot thus easily dismiss the topic nor forget you and your loved ones. I trust that you will feel a little of the same concern for me.

It strikes me that your first reaction will be to ask me if the Roman Catholic Church is not the one which was founded by Christ, to point out among the myriad Protestant Churches, which one he did found. I quickly reply that he did not found a single one of them. It is a common error to conclude that since the Protestant Reformation all believers in Jesus the Christ, must either be in the Roman Catholic communion or in one of the numerous sects of Protestants. The fallacy of this is realized when one recognizes that before there was even a church in Rome, and hundreds of years before the first Protestant sect was formed, there were thousands of baptized believers in Jesus the Christ. These humble disciples were all saints and priests unto God.

The gospel of God's dear Son was first proclaimed in Jerusalem. This was in accordance with the instruction of the Saviour to his holy apostles "that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem” (Luke 24:47). When the message was first proclaimed, thousands became obedient to the call, and the church was founded unto which the Lord added daily those who were being saved. The church of Jerusalem existed several years prior to the planting of one in Rome. The church in Rome was not the first one at all, and since it was not the first it is impossible for it to be the mother of all churches. If priority of existence is taken as indicative of parenthood, the church in Rome was the daughter of the church in Jerusalem, and not the mother of all churches. And even though it may be proven that the Protestant churches of today are the offspring of the Roman Church, it will forever be true that the church of our Lord existed in Jerusalem prior to the existence of any congregation of believers in Rome or anywhere else. The divine words “beginning at Jerusalem” exclude for all time the idea that any Roman church could be the first.

The church in Jerusalem was founded, flourished, and carried on the work of heaven before the church in Rome had its existence. Now, union with the Church of Rome is either essential to the being and truth of a church, or it is not. If it is essential, then the church in Jerusalem was not a true church, for it could have no union with the church of Rome, which was not in existence. If the church in Jerusalem was not a true church, then all of the “holy apostles” were impostors and charlatans, for they planted it and claimed to do so by the authority of Jesus. Moreover, the Holy Spirit empowered the apostles and inspired them, and would have to be charged with the deception. Even worse, the Lord added to them daily, such as were being saved, and such a conclusion would make the Lord add the saved to a church which was not a true one.

But if you admit that the church in Jerusalem was a true church, then you grant that union with the Church of Rome is not essential, and if you admit this, the entire fabric of the Papal system is swept away, for your admission is that a true church can exist without the hierarchy.

It will do no good to say that Peter was present and was the spokesman at Jerusalem, and later was transferred to Rome, for even if this were proven, which it cannot be, Peter could never testify in truth that the church of Rome was the first church, seeing that he had long before helped plant one in Jerusalem. And is this not the reason why, when the church was threatened with schism, it was determined that “they should go up to Jerusalem unto the apostles and elders about this matter?” (Acts 15:2). Were not the dogmas which were delivered to the churches to keep, ordained at Jerusalem, and not at Rome? (Acts 16:4). Then Rome was not the seat of authority for faith and morals. And even in Europe, a congregation was commended because the brethren became followers of the churches of God, which in Judea, are in Christ Jesus (1 Thess. 2:14).

If you have been willing to read thus far, dear friend, please let me encroach upon your goodness a little longer. I commend you for your spirit of freedom and your sincere desire to know the truth that makes men free. It is possible for us to heal the wounds and repair the breaks in Christendom. We cannot do this by hating and reviling one another. Jesus died for us all, and as he loved us we must also love one another. Wild, reckless assertions, false accusations and flamboyant charges against each other will only widen the gap. We should all be willing to admit all truth, regardless of who holds that truth.

I would not seek to make a Protestant of you. There is no more justification for the existence of Protestant sects than there is for the hierarchy. What all of us should do, if we really love Jesus, is to attempt to restore to this torn and bleeding earth, the faith and order as perfected by the holy apostles, without regard to what we have formerly believed and taught, or of what we have been taught. It is to this great task that we dedicate ourselves. It is to a mutual investigation of that faith and order, as exemplified by the church founded at Jerusalem, that we humbly invite you, as our good neighbors and friends. This design is too great to be approached in a spirit of bigotry and intolerance.

Can we not sit down as friends, in your living room or ours, and converse about these matters of eternal weight? It is not necessary that we try to force our thinking upon each other, or that we try to compel each other. We can surely take the sacred word in our hands and study it together with hearts yearning for that truth which is not sectarian. Even though we depart from each other with the same views as when we met, the value in human relations will be an experiment worthwhile. And though you may not gain the consent of your conscience to allow me the great privilege of conversing with you, please be sure that even your refusal will not quench my love for you, nor lessen the fervency of my prayers for the ultimate salvation of you and yours.

May the God of all grace grant that soon the intellectual mists will be dispelled, barriers be removed, and hearts welded together as members of the One Body for which our Lord shed his precious blood. May that day speedily come when we shall be no longer Roman Catholics or Protestants, but free from all partisan spirit and bias, be humble Christians, servants of our Master and each other. Is this not worthy of our sincerest effort and unremitting labor? If so, will you help to attain it?

The Clergy and the Church

Mission Messenger (April 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

The chief foe of pure Christianity in every age has been the special clergy. The idea that the world can be led to Christ by a select group, trained and polished as front men and professional champions of the lowly Nazarene is as foreign to God's eternal purpose as the idea that the kingdom of heaven is dependent upon the collection of huge sums of money and the erection of huge cathedrals for its perpetuity. The principal hope of religious promoters in these days is what the word of God labels "carnal things." And just as spiritual men put their trust in spiritual things, so carnally minded men trust in carnal things. These become the primary considerations. It is a sign of the degeneracy of our times that men go forth first to raise money before they go to raise the dead in sin, and if the guarantee of the first is not forthcoming, the second is not performed.

The system of "located evangelists" in "The Church of Christ" is simply the clergy system operating under an assumed name. These men are the special clergy of "The Church of Christ" and sustain the same identical relationship to it as the Methodist clergy, the Presbyterian clergy, and the Episcopalian clergy do to their respective denominations. The Methodist sect sends men of promise to a Methodist seminary to teach them to become Methodist ministers; the Presbyterian sect sends men of promise to a Presbyterian seminary to train them as Presbyterian ministers; "The Church of Christ" sect sends men of promise to its theological seminaries to train them to become “Church of Christ” ministers.

The seminaries of all of these denominations have special courses in theology and their diverse doctrines, and each one seeks to turn out men who are “sound” in parroting the party line. It is a mark of distinction to place as many graduates as possible with big churches in the denomination at lucrative salaries. This serves as an advertising inducement to secure more students, as every ministerial student looks forward to the day when he can draw $600 per month, plus car expenses and a parsonage which someone else has to paint and maintain. To assure the prestige of the theological school, other courses of business administration and secular subjects are taught. Graduates of these courses will almost automatically win places on the official boards of churches within the denomination, and will support men for “the pastorate” who are graduates of the “alma mater.” By this means the seminary can exercise thought control over the various units in the denomination.

We do not imply that all of the “local ministers,” as “The Church of Christ” conveniently calls its salaried pastors, are satisfied with this status. Many are well enough informed to know that the office they occupy was no more a part of the primitive ecclesia of the saints than was the pope. Some of them are troubled in mind, uneasy in conscience and disturbed at heart. They try to soothe their inner fears by branding all others in the community as sectarians, on the basis that by decrying the mistakes of others they will lessen the stigma of their own faults. They run out and conduct a couple of “big revivals” during the pastoral vacation provided by their contracts, and take comfort in reporting the four or five immersed in such campaigns as evidence of evangelical zeal!

Many of them honestly believe that the restoration has been completed and that what they designate “The Church of Christ” is identical with the church of God revealed in the new covenant scriptures. Sincere students of the Bible are no more fooled by this claim than they are by the claim of the Baptist sect to be identical with the initial congregation of saints planted at Jerusalem. In both instances the fallacy of the claims can be easily revealed by showing what these modern denominations have which was no part of the primitive ecclesia of God at all. For your benefit, we suggest a few deviations from the congregation revealed in The Book.

1. No group of bishops ever hired a man on contract to preach the gospel of Christ to a congregation of saints.

2. No group of bishops ever advertised for a gospel preacher to fill a vacancy as a “local minister.”

3. No gospel preacher ever exhibited his wares or dangled a trial sermon as bait to secure a salaried position.

4. No gospel preacher ever resigned as “located minister” to go out and do “evangelistic work.”

5. No congregation of saints owned real estate in the form of a manse, rectory, parsonage, or preacher’s home.

6. No gospel preacher ever created any organization in a community to do religious work except a congregation of saints.

7. No gospel preacher ever raised money for any organization as such.

8. No gospel preacher ever promoted an organization or organized scheme for proclaiming the gospel.

9. No congregation of saints ever contributed to anything except the relief of human need.

10. No congregation of saints ever adopted a specific title as the copyrighted and exclusive name for the church.

Almost every error in the history of struggling Christendom has been injected and perpetuated by the clergy. They will twist and wrest the scriptures for the support of their “brain children.” By the use of fair speech they deceive the simple into believing they are indispensable, and once the people are convinced of this they are taught to listen only to the interpretations of the clergy. The rights of the people are soon abrogated and they become helpless pawns, existing only to pay. They are threatened with hell if they do not give, but are allowed no voice in spending the money they contribute. A budget is drawn up by an official board in a back room, providing for expenditure of money not yet on hand, and the membership must accept it or be excommunicated. Theirs is “taxation without representation” but they must supinely submit to such tyranny under threat of eternal damnation.

The clergy system will be the hardest of all innovations to overthrow. Those who are a part of it will fight to the end to retain its prestige, power and pelf. It appeals to the indolent, slothful and indifferent membership. They would rather pay someone to study, preach and teach for them than to do these things. But there can never be a full restoration of God’s plan so long as we retain the one man pastor system. Here is the real test! You can never restore a thing by adding something that was not in the original.

(NOTE: The reader should not confuse those congregations of Christians who do not believe in a hireling one-man ministry system with the modern faction known as “The Church of Christ” which has become involved with human institutionalism and the clergy system which spawns such things).

That They All May Be One (4)

Mission Messenger (January 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

The evangelist began his series of lessons on the eldership by pointing out to the congregation that the God who created the universe is a God of order and arrangement. To maintain order where two or more parts function in relationship, there must be control. God has ordained three organic institutions as a blessing to mankind. These are the family, civil government, and the congregation of the saints. Government is an essential feature of each. In each one there is authority to be respected, and rule to be obeyed, if we merit God's approval. In the home, children must obey their parents (Eph. 6:1). In the political realm we "must be subject, not only for wrath, but for conscience' sake" (Rom. 13:5). In the congregation we are told "Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves" (Heb. 13:17).

God has revealed three great systems of religion, corresponding to the needs of mankind at the time of their revelation. These are the Patriarchal, Mosaic and Christian. In each of these, a proper evaluation has been placed upon the wisdom and experience which comes with age. In every dispensation the rule of elders, or ancients, has been sanctioned as the most appropriate to man in his earthly state.

The patriarchal age recognized the prerogative of the father as the oldest member of the family, and later of the clan, for every nation was first a family, then a clan or tribe, and finally a nation. Abraham was a patriarch (Heb. 7:4). God said, "He will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord" (Gen. 18:19). Melchizedek was a king and priest among the Jebusites who inhabited Salem.

But the patriarchal age involved not only the family of Abraham. So the land of Egypt had elders (Gen. 50:7). It was these senators whom Joseph taught wisdom (Psalm 105:22). The word "senator" is from zagen which means "aged, bearded." It is the word for "elders" in such passages as Exodus 12:21; 17:5; 18:12. Our word "senator" is from the Latin senex, meaning "old." The lands of Moab and Midian had elders (Num. 22:7) and so did Gibeon (Josh. 9:11).

The word patriarch is from a combination of patria, from patro, "father;" and archos, "a leader, chief," from archein, "to lead, rule." More is involved than mere age. Included is a respect for the aged one as a leader, a deference to his judgment and decisions. "In a multitude of counsellors there is safety" (Prov. 24:6). It was a natural step from the leadership of the oldest man in the clan, to that of the aged ones in a body, or presbytery, when the complexities of the social structure increased because of greater numbers. Thus, the children of Israel had elders when residing at Goshen. To these Moses was sent from Midian (Exo. 3:16); they went with him to Pharaoh (3:16); the message of liberation was given to them (4:29); and also instruction relative to the passover (12:21, 28).

In simple primitive times age was probably the only qualification. The import of the word implies as much. But there are varied degrees of experience and competence in any age group, and men of executive ability are required to conduct affairs in any society of diverse temperaments and personalities. This was recognized by Jethro, who suggested to Moses a tribunal of men possessed of four additional qualifications: (1) Ability, (2) Reverence, (3) Integrity, (4) Hatred of covetousness.

This was ratified by the Lord (Exo. 18:23).

During the wilderness journey when Israel became such a burden upon Moses, that he pleaded to die, God proposed the creation of a presbytery of seventy men, whom he would spiritually endow, and of whom he said, “They shall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it not thyself alone” (Num. 11:17). These overseers, or superintendents, formed the basis of the Sanhedrin, the future great court of the Jewish nation.

It has been reasoned that men by necessity would have been forced, in order to protect and perpetuate the social state, to transfer a portion of the right of each individual, to chosen agents, authorized to act in behalf of the group. No organized body can function as a body except through agents. Affairs can best be administered by those who possess the greatest experience. In the simple eras of social development, experience could only come with age, no code of precedents having yet been established. It was fortunate and providential that in such ages men were allowed to attain unto many more years than at present, when such is not essential to administration of government, seeing that we have all the chronicled experience of the past upon which to draw. But there can be no substitute for the sobering influence of age and personal experience.

God authorized and recognized the responsibility of elders chosen by the body of people, and under the Mosaic economy, these were considered as spokesmen of the assembly (Deut. 5:22-24). When the whole congregation sinned, the congregation was required to offer a young bullock for sin. But “the elders of the congregation shall lay their hands upon the head of the bullock before the Lord” (Read Lev. 4:13-15). This did not mean that each individual did not have to offer a sacrifice when he was personally guilty of transgression, but in any organized community, the members have both a personal and related responsibility. Each acts personally in matters affecting his person, but in a corporate action, the organization must perform through chosen agents, else there is no organization at all.

The expression “elders of the congregation” (Lev. 4:5) is the exact equivalent in the Hebrew of the expression “elders of the congregation” (James 5:14) in the Greek. In every age, the wisdom of God has seen fit to endorse a senate or presbytery to lead, guide, feed and superintend his people. This was as true in “the church in the wilderness” (Acts 7:38) as in “all the churches of the saints” (1 Cor. 14:32).

No congregation of disciples has developed to the degree of spiritual maturity which God expects it to attain until of its own number it can select godly, capable, qualified men as overseers or superintendents. This does not mean that a congregation should place in office incompetent, stupid, inefficient men, just to comply with the form of the law. Nothing is a greater detriment to the cause of the absent King than to place the affairs of his congregations under the control of arrogant, rash, indiscreet or thoughtless men.

The evangelist urged the brethren who loved the Lord to seek to qualify for the office of bishop. He urged the congregation of saints to encourage, edify and stimulate each other in the Spirit, so that brethren would have the desire to serve in this capacity. At this juncture several hands were raised in question and it was agreed that the next session would be given over to those questions. It will be our privilege to report those questions and the answers of the evangelist in our next issue.

The Name of the Bride

Mission Messenger (March 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

The community of saints planted by the Messiah has no official name or title. It is called the church of God because it originated in the mind of the Father; it is called the church of the firstborn ones, because it is composed of the heirs of heaven. The congregations are called churches of the saints because they are composed of holy men and women; they are called churches of Christ because they belong to the Messiah. Other terms such as house of God, body of Christ, and temple of God, are employed, but not one of these is an exclusive title.

The title “Church of Christ” as used by a large segment of believers today is employed in a denominational sense, just as the terms Baptist Church, Methodist Church, Christian Church, etc. This is very difficult for many to see, for they have been taught that their salvation depends upon the name “The Church of Christ” although that expression is not once found in the sacred scriptures. Such a thought must have motivated a brother who wrote me as follows:

I do not agree with your idea about the name of the church. The church is the bride of Christ, and the bride ought to wear the name of the husband. I would not want my wife to wear some other name than mine.

I can sympathize with one who uses such loose reasoning, for I used to engage in it before I learned better. There are two things wrong with my brother's views. In the first place, they are unscriptural; in the second place he doesn't practice what he preaches. I can prove both charges.

The idea that a wife should wear her husband's name, as he means it, is not a scriptural one. No married woman in Bible times was ever called by her husband's name. That practice is a fairly modern one and by no means universal even now. In both the old and new covenant scriptures, married women wore their own names, as "Sarai, Abram's wife" (Gen. 16:1); "Zacharias, and his wife, Elisabeth" (Luke 1:13). The word "church" is not a name at all. It is a common noun like "house" or "wife."

But my brother doesn't believe what he argues, and to prove it, I will put him to the test. He believes the expression "The Church of Christ" is the bride wearing the name of her husband. He wants to see that "name" over the door where he worships. I have sad news for him! The word "Christ" is not a name for our Lord at all. It is his office.

The name of the "groom" is Jesus. The angel said "Thou shalt call his name Jesus" (Matt. 1:21). "And he called his name Jesus" (Matt. 1:25). "God also hath highly exalted him, and gave him a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus, every knee should bow" (Phil. 2:10). His name was Jesus, and that is what he was called at birth, but "God hath made that same Jesus . . . both Lord and Christ" (Acts 2:36). Christ is no more his name than is the word "Lord." The word "Christ" is merely the Greek form of the Hebrew "Messiah." It isn't a name at all; it is an office which God made him to occupy.

The brother who wrote is a janitor for a school. He says "I would not want my wife wearing another name than mine." Well, he would not want her to be called "Mrs. S. Janitor." Now, if he is consistent he will demand that they repaint the sign on their building to read "Church of Jesus." He must either do that or admit that his argument is worthless. I predict he will do neither. When we have engaged in a practice without scriptural warrant so long that it becomes one of our traditions, we'll stick by it if we make void the word of God. We dare not admit that we have been wrong about anything. The expression "church of Christ" is no more out of place than the expression "church of God" or "church of the firstborn." It is the denominational usage of it that is wrong. The community of saints for which our Lord died has no official distinctive and exclusive name or title. Why should it? It includes every saved person on the face of the earth, and it is without competition as a spiritual body.

Wild Grapes

Mission Messenger (May 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

Have you ever read the song of the vineyard by Isaiah (5:1-7)? It is a portrayal of God's disappointment with his people. It demonstrates how little esteemed are the blessings which heaven bestows. The Lord planted his vineyard in a fertile hillside. He fenced it for protection; gathered out the stones, thus removing obstacles and impediments; planted it with the choicest vines; constructed a tower for guarding it; and made a winepress in anticipation of the fruit. But when the time of vintage arrived it consisted of bitter, acrid wild grapes. The vineyard was the house of Israel, the men of Judah were the pleasant plants. From them God expected to glean a harvest of justice and righteousness. Instead he received only oppression and strife. The lament of the husbandman is thus recorded: "What could have been done more to my vineyard, that I have not done in it? wherefore, when I looked that it should bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes?"

After the congregation of God was given two great wings like an eagle, and fled into the wilderness, to be nourished of God in the secret recesses of the human heart for more than twelve centuries, the time came when under the intrepid leadership of Wycliffe, Luther, and other noble souls, the veil which had eclipsed the face of truth was slowly lifted. As the word of God began to have free circulation, however, men followed leaders and thinkers of great ability, who sought to codify their interpretations and make them the basis of fellowship and salvation. Thus the work of the reformers crystallized in the formation of a group of intolerant, schismatic sects, the adherents of which battled against each other with a fury unsurpassed by even the papal dogmatists.

Then, about the commencement of the nineteenth century, began a movement which seemed destined to sweep the world for Christ. It was launched by men of deep conviction who were affiliated with various sects. It did not begin in America. The fire first burned in the bosoms of honest individuals in Ireland and Scotland. But it was in this new land where there was no establishment of religion, where men were reaching, grasping, seeking, searching for new homes, new fortunes and liberty, that a fertile hillside was created for planting the restoration vineyard. Here where men were free to think, free to speak, free to act, to question, challenge and dispute, it seemed that providence had combined her talents to provide the proper setting to present a great drama of the ages.

The choicest vines were planted. Persons of noble character, high ideals and brilliant intellects, abandoning the parties of which they were members, resolved to be no longer partisan defenders, but to use their talents and fortunes to advance the cause of the King to whom they declared allegiance. They did not seek to unChristianize others. They recognized all truth, regardless of who held it; they rejoiced that Christ was preached regardless of who proclaimed him. They opposed error but loved all men; they sought to maintain even the human dignity of an opponent. They did not “stoop to conquer.”

Seldom did two of them agree in all points. They held widely divergent views as to the work of the Spirit, the functions of grace, the nature of man, the subject of future judgment and the problem of eternal punishment. But they conceived that Christ was greater than their personal views, and they tolerated the divergencies of opinion, believing that to make of an opinion a test of fellowship, would only create two diverse parties, and they had but too recently fled from partisan division to the city of refuge. The sound of their plea fell like welcome rain upon a parched earth. The religious world was jaded and jaundiced. The petty bickerings and fierce antagonisms of the sectarian world had driven many to skepticism and infidelity. The plea that all who recognized the sovereignty of Jesus could be one in him, and no one surrender any truth he ever held, was one to rally the thinking hearts. It appeared that simple Christianity would sweep the universe. Some believed it was a millennial harbinger.

What happened to the powerful movement to restore the ancient order and to unite all believers in the Christ? As it was in the days of Isaiah, it has come to pass again. In spite of all that heaven did in behalf of the vineyard, it is producing wild grapes, bitter, acrid, poisonous with venom and hate. The noble effort of the giants of yesteryear has been diverted by men of pygmy spiritual stature into an excuse for civil and fratricidal strife which makes it a laughingstock to the world. The restoration movement which proposed to unite all in Christ is now shattered into more than two dozen warring factions, each of which proclaims itself to be the bride of the Messiah, and all of which are contesting the provisions of his will before the court of human opinion.

That you may savor just how wild are the grapes, we mention but a case or two by way of illustration. The Son of God left the community of saints a feast of fellowship by which the citizens are to proclaim His death until he has returned. All who are sealed unto God are to participate in unity of purpose. "We are all one bread and one body, for we are all partakers of that one bread." But the children have fallen out with each other, and because the Lord has delayed his coming, they have taken to smiting each other. The very expression of unity and fellowship of the one body has been made one of the most fruitful causes of division and disfellowship.

Think of it! Men have divided over whether the bread which represents his body should be leavened or unleavened; whether it should be prepared with oil or some other ingredient; whether it should be broken or passed whole; whether it should be made of wheat or some other grain. Congregations of believers have actually been divided over whether the fruit of the vine should be fermented or not; whether it should be passed in one container, several, or in many. Here is the spirit of intolerance and the love for factionism gone to seed! And when factionism exists in the hearts of the members, it does not make any difference how they partake of the elements— it is not the Lord's Supper! When a congregation is filled with party spirit, until the members eye each other with disdain and suspicion, they need not be concerned about how they prepare or pass the emblems, for they are an abomination unto God when they pretend to communion with him and hate their brethren.

The one who died in agony for my sins has bound upon me to eat the bread and drink the cup in memory of him until he comes. When I sit down at the table with the saints, I shall not scrutinize or examine the bread to see if it is leavened or unleavened, or made with oil or not. I am not told to examine the bread. I am told to examine myself that my motive in participating be without reproach. I shall not concern myself with how it is broken or how it is passed. I am told to eat the bread and thus share in his death. Regardless of the grain from which the flour was made, whether there is yeast in it or not, it is bread, sanctified by the giving of thanks to its purpose and I shall seek to discern the Lord's body, rather than trying to discern what my brethren are thinking.

I know that factionism is sinful! It is a work of the flesh. To build a party around a type of bread, or a manner of presenting it, is a sin! A man may have scruples as to the type of bread. I should recognize them in the community of saints, and out of love should seek to keep from offense to my brother. It is a sin for either of us to build a party so that the body will be rent into a “leavened party” and an “unleavened party.” And that goes for the cup of the Lord. There is no such thing in Christ as “cups churches” and “one cuppers.” These terms represent divisions created by men. These designations are the vernacular of narrow, intolerant, factional spirits. They are disgraceful and sinful. Those who love the Lord should purify their hearts of the attitude which creates such unscriptural verbiage so that they may purge their tongues and pens of such language. We are disappointing God with our wild grapes of hate, bitterness and the party spirit. God help us to rise above the schisms which men have created!

A Sense of Values

Mission Messenger (May 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

The true Christian is one who evaluates things in harmony with the perspective of Jesus. Having fully surrendered himself to the Christ, he sublimates his will to that of the Master. He sees the world about him through the eyes of Jesus. Needless to say, his vision is greatly altered. Things which once seemed important become matters of no consequence; the things he once disregarded become momentous. There is no finer example of this than Saul of Tarsus. After he faced Jesus on the Damascus highway he was never again the same man. He expressed the transformation in these words, “What things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. . . . I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung. . . .”

The greatest work of Jesus was the changing of values. To this task his earthly sojourn was primarily dedicated. To it he devoted most of his teaching; to enforce it his life was a constant example. Many of us who profess to be his followers are sadly deficient in following his precepts or pattern. I shall illustrate with one specific instance— our exaggerated regard for human life. This is a distinctive feature of our age in contrast with previous eras. We are liable to think of it as an expression of Christian feeling. It is not!

To many people there is nothing worse than physical death. They feel that life must be harbored, nurtured and sustained at all cost. When one dies, his friends give way to uncontrollable fits of grief. Often they render their own lives useless and futile by their emotional attitudes. Much of such grief is purely selfish. It demonstrates not so much a love for the departed as a lack of faith in God. We want our loved ones to remain for our benefit, regardless of the pain and torture to them, and when they must leave us, we summon a mortician to rouge their cheeks and to use artificial means to make it appear they are still alive. We try to fool ourselves by calling their temporary resting place “a slumber room” and labeling the cemetery a “garden of memories.”

We speak of death as a grim reaper, we talk of it as a demon or monster. We think of it as a dragon relentlessly stalking one to deprive him of every blessing. We allow ourselves to be cowed into thinking that when a man is killed the greatest tragedy imaginable has come to him, taking from him all that possesses real value. It is true that we do not always act upon that basis, for men forfeit their lives for scores of causes and we call them heroes. We admire the man in the research laboratory who fights to subdue cancer, and when he succumbs to the radium he used, we laud him as a courageous example of all that is best in humanity.

Our present philosophy is not at all that of our primitive brethren. It is virtually the opposite. They were taught to respect the present life very lightly as contrasted with the eternal. Jesus said, “Fear not them which kill the body.” The average disciple of this age greatly fears and shrinks from any form of violent death. But Jesus also said, “He that findeth his life shall lose it: and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it.” This ought to give concern to those who are always writing to one who is zealous, urging him to slow down, husband his strength, and save his life, when the cause he loves demands that he “be poured out as a sacrifice.” They may, by their senseless dread and unchristian fears, deprive him of that which is worth far more than life.

Why is it that our sense of values has swung so far from that of the Christ? No doubt our thinking is a product of our age and environment. It is the composite result of many factors. Let me suggest a few of them. We live in a world of earthly security. In spite of the abuses of political agents, our governments and police powers have protected us against much violence. We are not accustomed to seeing men killed, unless it be in highway accidents. The age span has been extended, and we have come to think of violent death as a much more dreadful thing than our forefathers thought it. We shrink from physical wounds and faint at the sight of blood. We recoil from death. It is no longer a travel agent arranging a vacation from vexing surroundings; it is now a masked robber stealing that which is precious and giving nothing in return.

Too, it has been many centuries since our Lord left the earth. He has delayed his coming and the faith of his servants in immortality wanes and becomes dim. In spite of pious platitudes spoken in sympathetic tones at funeral services, we bear our dead to their resting places under the turf, as those who have suffered loss rather than gain. The Christian is carried away to the sound of the dirge and lament, rather than in a fierce sense of triumph as the fallen soldier borne on his shield from the thick of the battle. As the faith in the immortal vanishes our hold upon that which is mortal tightens.

Perhaps the most serious thing of all is the loss of faith in spiritual things as opposed to material. We are creatures of comfort. In our lives of luxury we have come to trust in the things that are seen. It is the things which are not seen that are eternal. We look upon this earth as home. We conceive of a Christian who dies as leaving home, rather than going home. To the extent that we believe we have an abiding city, we cease to seek for one to come. We would be content to stop looking and settle down here. This false sense of values operates in many fields. Religion begins to trust in the material for strength. Church edifices increase in size and worth, and in proportion as the financial outlay for these externals increases, the moral standard of worshipers decreases. A preacher who planned a huge edifice died recently, just before the “dedication service,” whatever that is. The whole theme of the speakers at his funeral was one of sorrow that he could not live to see the completion of this huge pile of brick and cement. These considerations combine to give a false sense to the value of human life at the expense of the soul. We cease to fear him who can destroy both body and soul, and become increasingly afraid of him who can only destroy the body. As faith in Christ goes up, a love for this present life goes down. There are many things worse than death, and violent death may be visualized as a much more terrible experience than it really is. To depart and be with Christ is better than to be present in the body and absent from him. The true value of life is not in retaining it, at whatever cost, but in using it, and even losing it, in the service of the Lord. Many a man who seeks to save his life will only lose it. You may lose your life and thus gain it!

Fear of Love

Mission Messenger (May 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

We live in an age of frustration, disappointment, and discouragement. In a land of plenty men are not satisfied; living in luxury and physical comfort they are not at ease. Our educational institutions are filled to overflowing, but so are our courts for juvenile criminals. In spite of the numerous organizations dedicated to mental hygiene and social welfare, there are more neurotics and insane than at any time in our history. A symptom of our times is found in the tremendous upsurge of publications dealing with how to attain peace of mind, and the variety of suggestions is so great, and often so contradictory, as to upset the minds of some who were relatively at peace. The manufacturers of sedatives, tranquilizing drugs and barbiturates, are having a field day. America has one big headache and hangover. She is paying the price for it!

In this state of crisis, what contributions are being made to the welfare of humanity by believers in the Messiah? When he came personally into the world, it was in much the same state as now, except that wars had been ended by the sway of a universal empire. The very extremity of man was an opportunity for God. The sun of righteousness beamed brighter because of the darkness of slavery, corruption, degradation, immorality and suicide of the world. If ever Christianity should be able to exhibit itself to the greatest advantage, it is under such conditions as presently obtain. Instead, the nominal disciples of the Master, seem actually to be enlarging the problem rather than providing a solution. The moral defections of those reared under Christian influence, the nervous and mental breakdowns suffered, constitute an alarming barometer of unhealthful attitudes.

It is high time that we awake out of sleep! The expenditure of effort to promote factionism and hate will take its toll of wrecked minds and sick bodies as certainly as we now live. Hate and fear are toxic poisons! They will kill as certainly as arsenic or strychnine! Many of my own brethren are the most unhappy people on earth today. They are gloomy, morose and despondent. They are fearful and unbelieving! They are worried and scared! They are spiritually sick! Many who put on an outward show of gay spirits are troubled with worries, jealousy and envy. They cannot save the world, because they have nothing real to offer it. What would be the gain for men to leave the world where they have been fighting their enemies to come in to the church and start fighting their brethren?

Why is it that Christianity does not arouse the vibrant passions, kindle and enflame the spirit, and surcharge men with the thrill and joy that the first believers experienced? It is because men persevere in right actions and service to others, merely through force of habit, or because of social consciousness, or to escape from the brooding thoughts engendered by an imperious conscience. It is the lack of a guiding principle which poisons the springs of happiness in action, and makes life dull and spiritless.

The guiding principle of Christianity is love! But it is not love for a particular race, nationality, faction, congregation, segment or group. It is a love for mankind, not for a certain kind of man. To be children of God implies more than entering into a relationship with God; it entails the responsibility of growing Godlike in character. But "God is love." The expression of that love was universal. "God so loved the world." His was a divine philanthropy. He loved men because they were men, made in his image. “But after that the kindness and love of God our Saviour toward man appeared.”

It is an amazing thing that under the guise of religion we are being taught today to not love men! The human heart was made to love. But it cannot retain a vacuum. If love is educated out of it, hate will rush in to fill it. Love is the most powerful, active, vital force in the universe. It is world-shaking and revolutionary. Nothing can stand before the application of its full potential. But a universal love for mankind is designated sentimentality, it is ridiculed, scoffed at, belittled even by those who profess to be children of that God who is love.

We are urged to love our group, our race, our church, our nationality, our sect. We are afraid to love all men. To do so will upset our “little world” of security. We will be turned out of the little nest we have woven about ourselves. The churches of our land are employed to foster prejudice and animosity “in the name of Christ.” We are taught to have nothing to do with Catholics, Presbyterians, Baptists, Jews, Moslems, Buddhists, Negroes, etc. But God loves everyone of these. He sent his Son to die for them. That Son came among those who hated him. He ate with publicans and sinners. He visited in the homes of Pharisees. But we are told to not visit them, to keep away from them. They are not “faithful.” We are! So our physicians are administering to the well. We have no sick among us. We do not love the spiritually sick. If you want our love and service you’ll have to get well!

Have you ever heard our brethren explain Matthew 5:43-48? Then, have you ever watched them try to put it into practice?

“Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you; love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitely use you and persecute you, that you may be the children of your Father which is in heaven.” Love! Bless! Do good! Only by this means can we be children of God. The world of mankind is divided into friend and foe as respects relationship to each of us. But both are men and if we love mankind as such, we will have no problem of loving the various categories within the human realm. God made us men, we have made various things of ourselves. We should love men because God made them, and in spite of what they have made of themselves.

If I am a true child of my Father, I shall desire and yearn for every man to be my brother. Man was created in God’s image, and in whatever respect he has lost that image I must help him repair or regain it. He did not shatter that image because he was a Jew, a Negro, or a Japanese. Sin antedated the advent of racial differences. In the attempt to help one regain the spiritual image of God, I am not to see him as a Jew, Japanese, or Negro, but as a man. “For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him.”

“For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? Do not even the publicans the same? And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? Do not even the publicans so? Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.” To restrict our love to those who agree with us on some points of religion, is to deny at once the very basic element of Christianity, the equal and infinite value of every human soul. To love all men is actually looked upon as a sign of weakness. The truth is that it takes a strong man to really love his enemies. Weak men hate, despise, and feel envy. Cowards are jealous, embittered and distrustful. When Jesus said, “Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do” he was meek, but not weak!

Those who are afraid to love all, may actually love no one.

It is observable that those who cannot love all men, end up by disliking most men. Those who would restrict their love to their own brethren, do not even love those brethren, and will backbite, undermine and seek to destroy them. It is amazing that through the years those who have not learned to love, and who censure a deep affection for others than those with whom they associate, will divide those associates, and soon will not love a great part of them.

Our problem is not so much of having love dwell in us, as it is of our dwelling in love, as a state. God, who made all men, cannot live in a heart that hates any man! “God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him.” No man can say he is like God, whose love is partisan, national or racial. “Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment: because as he is, so are we in this world.” Many bold, blatant race-haters will be snivelling cowards in the day of judgment.

The lever which will move the world to Christ is love! Regardless of how pure your doctrine may be, it will repel, instead of compel, when set forth in bigotry, intolerance and animosity. The real test of faith in the Christ is the reformation worked in your own life. “For we ourselves also were one time foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another.” Now we are associates of the Father and the Son, purveyors of love unlimited!

That They All May Be One (5)

Mission Messenger (January 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

(NOTE: Our daughter, Sharon Sue, thinks that we ought to tell our new readers that this series of articles relates the story of a congregation planted by an evangelist, and his attempts to bring that congregation to spiritual maturity. At present he is assisting in the development of men qualified to serve as bishops, and as we drop in on their meeting today, he has just finished giving them a preliminary dissertation on the subject of elders, and is now receiving and answering questions of the brethren).

1. How old should a man be to qualify for the office of bishop?

I think the term “elder” contemplates more than mere calendar age. While its primary significance has to do with age, we have learned that it came, in an official sense, to apply to those possessed of certain executive abilities. I would not set an arbitrary age limit, but certainly one should be old enough to be sober in his thinking and possessed of sufficient experience to enable him to administer spiritual affairs acceptably. There could hardly be a “young elder” any more than there could be an “old youngster.”

2. Can a man be appointed a bishop against his will?

No! A man cannot be appointed over his own opposition.

The scriptures are very specific in stating that one should take the oversight “not by constraint, but willingly.” Every Christian man who can qualify ought to be willing, if chosen to serve as a bishop, for if he can fulfill the responsibility, and refuses to do so, he may have to answer to God for his reluctance and refusal. But if a man feels that because of his temperament he cannot qualify, he should not accept the office, and his brethren should not try to force him into it.

3. Can a man resign from the office of bishop?

Certainly so. Any office, the acceptance of which is contingent upon the willingness of the individual, must be retained upon the same basis. It would be just as wrong for one to keep an office unwillingly as to take it that way. If a bishop becomes convinced that he is disqualified, or if he deems it essential to the peace and welfare of the congregation, he should resign. On the same basis, if the community of saints becomes convinced that a mistake was made in selecting a man, and if they conclude that he is disqualified, they should ask him to resign. God has made no arrangement for the perpetuity of a situation intolerable to an individual or the congregation which he serves.

4. Why is there no scripture for a man resigning?

None is needed. The word of God specifies that a man must serve “willingly” and “of a ready mind.” When he can no longer gain consent of his will, and his mind tells him that he cannot serve the best interests of the congregation, he should return the office to the congregation which entrusted him with it. The office belongs to the congregation and not to the individual, else they could not bestow it. You cannot bestow upon another that which you do not have. If the office belonged to the individual he could give it to another, or will it to one of his heirs. It is a trust held in behalf of the community of saints.

5. Is it possible for a bishop to get too old to serve?

There is no calendar age minimum and no maximum. But just as one may be so young that his judgment is not adequate to the task, so he may become so old that his judgment is impaired, and the infirmities of age may render him incapable of tending the flock. A bishop is a shepherd. A shepherd can get too old to go out and endure the rigors of watching a flock. So it is with a shepherd of the Lord's flock. He may become senile and childish and hold back the work of the Lord by his petulance. Under such circumstances, he should be asked to relinquish his office. This is no reflection against him, but he may reflect against the congregation if he remains in office. Unfortunately, it is a mark of childishness that a person resolves to hang on when he has served out his usefulness in a given sphere. He considers himself indispensable. This is an admission that he has not done his duty in training successors.

6. Can a congregation be scriptural without having elders?

Yes and no! If a congregation does not have men who are qualified, it cannot be counted unscriptural. However, when men are qualified, if the brethren refuse to have them appointed, they are acting in violation of God's will. The divine program is that elders be ordained in every congregation (Acts 14:23). Until such men are qualified the congregation should continue under the guidance of an evangelist whose duty it is to develop men for the office (Titus 1:5). It is not God's will that a congregation continue interminably without bishops, and if there are men who could qualify and will not, they will be judged for failure to meet the full degree of responsibility.

7. Do you consider that a plurality of elders must be appointed in each congregation?

I believe the divine plan embraces a plurality of bishops in each congregation. It is not for each place to have a presbyter, but a presbytery, i.e., a body of elders (1 Tim. 4:14). The apostle and his evangelistic companion ordained elders in every congregation (Acts 14:23), and consistent with this we find a plurality of elders in Jerusalem (Acts 11:30), Ephesus (Acts 20:17), Philippi (Phil. 1:1).

The plurality of overseers appears evident from undesigned and casual statements of apostolic admonition. “Obey them that have the rule over you” (Heb. 13:7). “Know them which labor among you and are over you in the Lord” (1 Thess. 5:12). Peter wrote: “The elders which are among you I exhort” (1 Peter 5:1, 2). Paul said: “Take heed unto yourselves and the flock over which the Holy Spirit has made you overseers” (Acts 20:28). It would have been impossible to obey the injunction “Is any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the church” (James 5:14) on any other ground than a plurality of bishops in the local congregation.

(At this juncture, no more questions of a preliminary nature being asked, the evangelist announced that he would continue his instruction of the congregation on the subject by an analysis of the different terms used in reference to the office. It will be our privilege to visit the congregation again next month and share in the interesting instruction and discussion).

The Power of Christianity

Mission Messenger (June 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

The impact of Christianity upon the world is greatly underestimated and seriously misjudged by the age in which we exist. Most of us suffer from such limited vision, smug conceit, and restricted experience, that we cannot conceive of the dynamic force unleashed upon an alien world by the cross. We are hindered, too, by our confusion of Christianity with creedalism, and our equally reprehensible error of identifying the universal Kingdom of the Messiah with narrow partisan prejudice.

Christianity is a world-shaking revolutionary force. It has not failed, and it is not failing, to achieve its objectives. The fact that it marshals no mighty armies, and employs no thundering armament, is no indication that it is ineffective. That it has been advanced by the poor of this world, rich in faith, is but proof of the inherent power of principle to triumph over the externals such as wealth and wisdom. The proof of its conquests lies all about us. Every social gain that has been made has been won as a tribute to it. The provision for care of the aged and infirm, the interest in the welfare of the handicapped and retarded, the elimination of sweat shops and improved status of the working classes, the council tables at which representatives of belligerent nations sit down to forge the links of peace— these are the trophies which Christianity has won in its battle against selfishness and greed. The gains would have been inestimably greater except for the fact that most professed Christians view their religion as static rather than dynamic.

The monastic idea which teaches men to withdraw from social contact in order to preserve what they have, is diametrically opposed to the spirit of Jesus. It is this attitude which makes the church appear as an exclusive club, and causes the poor and humble to conclude that it is not for them. Even the administration of charity is done as an irksome duty, and with a patronizing air, which robs the recipient of dignity and self-respect, while filling his belly or clothing his body. Every scriptural example of application of power is upon the basis of personal contact. We are the salt of the earth. As long as salt remains in the shaker it is useless to purify, preserve or perpetuate. It must come in contact with the substance it is to affect. The revolutionary force of leaven can never be seen until it is placed in contact with the dough. The apostles were told to go into the world, the modern disciples retire into a church building. And the salt has lost its strength!

Jesus was not a social reformer, in the sense in which the world uses that term. He did not grapple directly with the social, political or industrial problems of the time, while he was upon earth. He accepted government as it was, whether Roman or Jewish. He did not give specific laws and statutes to regulate economic conditions. The sheriff, the tax collector, the magistrate, the emperor, the master, the slave— all were accepted as integral units of an existing order. To Jesus they were not vicious and divergent types, but each was merely a human soul. And it is in this concept that Christianity found its strength. It came with no organized program advertised as a panacea to reform the world with a united effort or corporate action. But the individual was awakened to love his neighbor as himself, and by the reformation of the individual from within, this reformation of self, the purpose of heaven was accomplished.

Jesus did not inveigh long and loudly about the spectator sports of his day, although some of them were brutal spectacles. He did not condone men going, or recommend that they refrain from going. He did not mention them. But from the moment that the ferment of Christianity began to work, gladiatorial combat in the Roman arena was doomed. It would have been so, even if the Christian, Telemachus, had not jumped into the arena to thrust himself between the two gladiators, and remonstrate with them saying, "Why seek to kill one another, seeing ye are brethren?" And it was not the death of the aged Christian, cut down by the angered gladiators, which eventually caused such to be outlawed. It was the death of Christ on the cross, with all of its implications of unselfish love.

It has long been a puzzle to sociologists as to why Jesus did not lead a crusade against the human slavery which was such a blight upon the world of his day. The mistake is in thinking that because the methods of the Nazarene do not coincide with the modern theories of reform that he did nothing effectively. We live in an age of organization. Men can see no way of achieving an objective except by first creating an organization. Are there those in society who libel others? We form an Anti-Defamation League! Do some drink to excess and become a menace to society? We form a Temperance Society! Do some poison their bodies and weaken their offspring by the constant inhalation of nicotine fumes? We form an Anti-Cigarette Union! And what happens? The Anti-Defamation League meets to combat radical hate propaganda and many of its members fog the room with cigarette smoke, and some may get drunk.

Jesus created no organization, as such, to reform the world. This does not mean that he had no intention of reforming it. But the mistaken idea that this is the purpose of the church of God, as an organization, has been the greatest hindrance and the most serious obstacle to effecting the divine purpose. The success achieved by Christianity, has been in spite of, and not because of, this alien philosophy. So long as it prevails, the church will try to save the world by organized campaigns, crusades and conventions. It will seek to bring the dough to the leaven, and the meat to the salt. It will practice the super-speed injection method of the ten day inoculation, and it will fail. It will fill its buildings to overflowing with those whose spirits are deformed, instead of with those whose lives are reformed. And real reformers will be subjected to brutality, and driven out, as they have always been. In every age, those who are chiefly concerned with maintaining things as they are, have looked upon real Christianity, not as pure and peaceful, but as dangerous and subversive. Every reformer whom we now fulsomely praise was regarded as a divisive heretic by his contemporaries! The monuments we erect to the reformers are made up of the stones hurled at them by their brethren!

The churches of God in Christ Jesus, did not organize to combat slavery in the days of the apostles. Instead, they were often composed of masters and slaves. But where is slavery today? It has virtually been banished from the civilized earth. The traffic in human chattels is repugnant to the enlightened social conscience. And although, in our own nation, men felt so deeply about the matter, that they met upon battlefields in civil strife, there is not one state in the union today which would dare to secede and set up a pattern of human slavery, even if it were legally possible. This is a victory for Christianity.

And Christianity is not a dead or dying force. Its revolutionizing power is still working quietly, but in undeniable fashion. It is affecting areas and avenues of human relationships of which we have not dreamed. It is for this reason social inequality and racial discrimination is doomed. Segregation in the public schools is a lost cause. I say this without fear of the repercussions it will raise. Integration of all of our citizenry at the fount of public learning will come. It will not be the result of court decisions or human legislation, although the Judge of all the earth can make use of those to His glory. But you cannot legislate goodness into hearts. That day will come because of the power of Christianity, for the same influence which can make the wolf and the lamb dwell together, and the leopard and kid lie down together, can make white and colored children sit together in the same classroom. And then we may say, “This is the Lord’s work, and it is marvelous in our eyes.”

Class Controversy

Mission Messenger (June 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

The disciple brotherhood has been rent and torn by strife until it presents a spectacle of disgrace to every candid observer. The movement started to unite the shattered forces of Christendom has degenerated into a melee of factionism and civil war. Prejudiced partisans, under the guise of “preaching the gospel” assail the ears of their auditors with creedal statements, and sow discord on the basis of arbitrary interpretations and uninspired opinions, actually holding up some factional view as the key to heaven, while excommunicating and disfellowshipping every person who cannot repeat the party shibboleth, or whose enlightened heart will not allow him to be made a servile slave to a paper hierarchy.

Every factionist proclaims his faction to be the one holy, apostolic and catholic church of God, the body of Christ, and the Kingdom of heaven. He regards it as “the faithful church” but judges its fidelity upon its adherence to the party line rather than upon its espousal to Christ, so that it is not unusual to find as many as five “faithful” churches in the same town, no two of which will regard each other with charity, and with all the partisans of each, regarding the members of the other congregations as pagans, unbelievers or heathen. One group is “the faithful church” because it does not have Bible classes for study; another because it does not have individual containers for the fruit of the vine; another because it does not use unfermented grape juice in the Lord's Supper; another because the members always kneel in prayer. In every one of these a man may be guilty of moral dereliction, suffer from gross ignorance of the nature of God's revelation, and present an example of worldly conformity indicative of an unregenerate heart, but he is a welcome member of the fraternity, if he can pluck the one string on the party harp, and repeat the sacred password.

If a godly, consecrated saint from another group comes into a meeting, he is shunned as a leper. The leader will call upon some person to lead in prayer whose reputation for morality is questionable, but he dare not step across the legal unwritten creedal barrier and recognize one who is "not our kind." Thus, the closeness of the personal walk with Jesus is esteemed as nothing compared to goose-stepping to the party tune. And much of the division exists over matters of opinion and indifference. The opinion crystallizes into law, the law is enforced against unwilling subjects, a rent is made in the body, and two groups are formed of those who sat at the same table of fellowship for years. Prominent men stir up emotional feeling, sides are chosen, Christ is forgotten, love is crucified, hate is enthroned, and sectarianism reigns supreme.

Of all the multitude of divisions among God's people, none seems to me to be more useless or senseless than the schism over teaching the word of the Lord in classes. I do not wish to impugn the motives nor impeach the sincerity of all who have made this a test of fellowship, but I feel that the cleavage into partisan factions over this issue will certainly spell the doom of some in the day of final accounting. I have examined every point made by those who oppose teaching God's word by this method, and to this present moment I have not found a single sound or rational argument which will assay as genuine when tested in the crucible of logical interpretation. I have seen more scriptures taken out of context, and wrested, twisted and distorted on this issue, than on any other. I cannot see one semblance of excuse for two conflicting parties, one a “class party” and the other a “no class party.” Such factionalism is caused by unscriptural agitation and injudicious attitudes.

It is too much to expect that one who has created any human test of loyalty to God will so far forget his idol as to sit down and study the issue objectively. Most factional leaders who rate high with frenzied supporters would go unrecognized in the great stream of Christian thought. Deficient in real scholarship, lacking in constructive ability, their only hope is to remain in the limelight by controlling an exclusive segment of the brotherhood of disciples. But in every sect there are those who are bigger than sectarian surroundings, those who possess good and honest hearts. All such will sigh for unity of the Spirit and for healing the breaches in the walls of Zion. It is only with such persons that this appeal will register, and they must be prepared for vicious attacks from their former associates who will loose against them the venom and pent up hate which lie at the core of every factional movement. No one who lacks courage should enter the arena to contend for unity of God’s scattered sheep unless he is prepared to pay the price of crucifixion by the party with which he has been affiliated. Yet we know there are those in every party who have courage unmarred by pride and false bravado.

It is time to cease agitation on this question and to close our ranks. This division ought never to have occurred and should not be perpetuated. Those responsible for driving the knife into the body of God’s Son must answer to Him for that; those who cling to the hilt and continue twisting it cannot escape responsibility. There are scores of congregations of humble saints where the Bible is taught in classes, and where the brethren are definitely opposed to a separate organization to carry on this function. To accuse them of creating another body when they merely function systematically as the one body of Christ, is indicative of an unfair approach to the issue.

The community of saints should miss no opportunity of teaching the word of the Lord. The method of doing so can well be left to the discretion of the community, seeing that God has not legislated on this feature. There is a difference between an organization and a method. If an organization is created, it must still employ a method. It is sinful to divide God's people into warring factions over the method of doing a thing, unless that method is in contravention to God's holy revelation, properly understood and correctly interpreted. Of course, it is here that the point of controversy lies, and it can never be resolved until we apply the rules of interpretation to the sacred scriptures on this issue. It is a lack of knowledge of those rules, or a misapplication of them, that has caused every religious division on earth among those who sincerely respect the Bible as the word of God.

The first appeal generally made by our brethren who oppose the class method of study is to 1 Corinthians 14:31, "For you can all prophesy, one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted." It is affirmed that this is a sacred dogma regulating the teaching program of the community of the saints. But this is a fallacy in inductive reasoning, the fallacy of generalization from a specific. In the first place, the gathering of saints in this chapter, was not for the purpose of a systematic study of the new covenant scriptures and an attempt to arrive at knowledge of the truth by an exchange of ideas as to what is meant by such scriptures. The congregation at Corinth had no such scriptures at this time, and the verse cited has to do with revelation of the divine will and not with investigation of it at all. To infer that because only one person at a time was allowed to orally reveal God's word to an assembly, that the members of such an assembly could never from henceforth, separately and severally, discuss the import and application of the revelation, when committed to writing, is a species of logic of which a student ought not to be guilty.

Is 1 Corinthians 14 not a pattern for procedure today?

Certainly it is! Beginning with chapter 11:1 the apostle regulates the public gathering of saints for commemoration of the royal feast and the mutual edification attendant upon that meeting. And, say what you will, this is the only assembly which the Lord has made incumbent upon the community. He has arranged it, and in correcting the abuses of it by the Corinthians, he has legislated as to its conduct and procedure. Other meetings can be arranged by the community of saints at their discretion, to take care of emergencies, transact business, investigate the sacred scriptures, and do any other thing that is legitimate in itself and falls within the domain of community activity. Such gatherings are subject only to principles of decorum which should govern our social intercourse with each other.

It would be sinful for the saints assembled about the table for the corporate worship regulated in chapters 11-14 of 1 Corinthians to divide into groups or segments, for such would be contrary to the purpose of the gathering, but to conclude that the community may not, of its own volition, arrange other meetings for the study of the scriptures, and do so in smaller groups, where such is not contrary to the purpose, is illogical indeed. God has not designated the method or course to be pursued and we are, therefore, at liberty to employ any method not in violation of the tenor and principles of the Christian profession.

The context shows that the expression, “You can all prophesy one by one” was to avoid disorder in the assembly, which would be created by two or more persons speaking simultaneously to the same group. Yet, our brethren who oppose the class method of conveying instruction, are not consistent in their practice, for in their “song service” they urge all to speak at the same time, and at the top of their voices. And they, of all people, seem in many places, to favor part songs of the after-beat, rock and roll variety, so that a visitor may be treated to the sight of a whole congregation standing up, all teaching and admonishing one another at the same time, with the tenor and soprano shouting one thing, the alto and bass shouting something else, and all exhorted by a leader frantically waving his arms to beat out the catchy melody. They, like the rest of us, are a long way from the primitive pattern of solemn corporate worship.

Many of the arguments made by our brethren who oppose the class method have to do with abuses that have crept in. There is nothing good that a man cannot corrupt. But the abuse of a thing does not constitute a legitimate objection to its right to exist. We should be forever aware of the frailty of man and his tendency to corrupt whatever he touches, and we should profit by all just criticism, correcting abuses in a spirit of dedication to the Master, and of love for our critics.

Those who preserve inviolate the regulations of God for the assembly He has ordained, and who summon all and sundry for periods of study, investigation and exchange of views, should not seek to bind their method of procedure upon other communities of the saints. If I am privileged to worship with a congregation of the saints where the members have agreed not to have classes, I will not be guilty of disrupting their peace and harmony. In such a congregation I will hold my opinion and not thrust it upon others as a dogmatic rule. I will love and respect those who are my brothers and sisters even though they entertain opinions diverse from mine, as to the advisability of certain methods. Instead of pitting them in conflict against each other, I will “follow after things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another.” I do not propose to allow anyone to make me a leader of a “no class party” or of a “multiple class party.” I want nothing to do with the party spirit. I do not intend to allow this little paper, which is my individual method of reaching my brethren, to degenerate into a recognized mouthpiece or journalistic oracle for any faction. I serve notice that I will not be a party lackey or stooge, nor will I clear what I believe and think with some headquarters on earth. I do not think the test of allegiance to my absent King is an attitude toward Bible classes. I have never believed that, and my conviction upon this matter is stronger than ever. believe a congregation can be faithful to the Christ and teach the word in Bible classes; I believe a congregation can be without classes and be unfaithful to the Lord. The first is not faithful because it has classes; the second is not unfaithful because it does not have them. This is not the divine test of approbation, and should not become our test. Let each community of saints determine the method it will employ in those realms where God has not legislated, and when its means do not contravene the word of God let us walk together in love, joy and peace in the Holy Spirit. There are enough real giants in the land, and it is foolish to act like a modern Don Quixote and joust at windmills.

That They All May Be One (6)

Mission Messenger (June 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

This is the story of a little congregation banded together by an evangelist who is now laboring to complete his task by training men for the office of bishop. As we visit them today the evangelist is teaching the group relative to the distinctive terms applied to the office. There are six words in the new covenant scriptures used to designate the officers who oversee the local churches of God. A proper understanding of these in their relationship to each other will help in understanding the nature and purpose of the office.

1. Elders and presbyters. The word “elder” is a translation of the Greek presbuteros, which occurs 67 times, and 62 times is translated by the English word “elder.” In its simplest form it means “an aged person.” It is used in both a general and a specific sense. In 1 Timothy 5:1 it refers to an older man in contrast with younger men. In this sense age is the only consideration. In Acts 20:17 the term applies to overseers in contrast with the flock which they superintend. In this sense the aged person must possess certain special qualifications.

The office of elder cannot be bestowed upon a youth, nor even upon an old man who is young in the faith. Since experience is essential as well as years, an elder may not be a novice. This word is from neophutos, “a new plant, i.e., a recent convert to the faith.” The word of God does not specify the calendar age at which one may qualify, for wisdom and ability are not always to be determined by birthday anniversaries. A man can know when he is no longer youthful, for David said, “I have been young, and now I am old” (Psa. 37:5). Likewise society recognizes when one has become settled and sedate. Of David’s father it was said, “The man went among men for an old man in the days of Saul” (1 Sam. 17:12).

The term “presbyter” was well known to the Jews, and is used primarily in congregations of Jewish extraction. Every synagogue had its elders and deacons, and the qualifications were much the same as those specified for officers in the Christian church. The synagogue was closely allied to the church in the beginning and the term was applied to the churches for more than a century (James 2:2). If the Holy Spirit had not legislated a form of government for the congregations of the Messiah, it is almost certain that those composed of Jews would have selected a presbytery for each local unit. Indeed the primitive Jewish converts to the Nazarene had no idea of organizing a separate body outside the pale of Judaism, but expected to constitute a synagogue composed of Jews and proselytes who recognized Jesus as the fulfillment of the Messianic prophecies. Consequently, if an entire synagogue became convinced that the Nazarene was the Messiah, there was required no particular change in government, officers, procedure or corporate worship. The introduction of the Lord’s Supper as a memorial of the Messiah’s death would be the only essential addition.

2. Bishops and overseers. The word “bishop” occurs five times in the King James Version. Once it refers to Christ (1 Peter 2:25), the other times to the elders or overseers (Cp. 1 Tim. 3:1; Titus 1:7; Phil. 1:1). It is from episkopos, from epi “over,” and skopos, “to inspect, view.” It thus refers to an overseer, supervisor, inspector or superintendent. It is rendered “overseers” (Act 20:28). The word presbuteros has to do with the type of man for the office; while episkopos has to do with the governmental responsibility involved in the office. “Any man who aspires to be a superintendent aspires to a noble task” (1 Tim. 3:1).

As the Jews were familiar with the rule of elders in their synagogues, so the Greeks were accustomed to the oversight of bishops in their civil affairs. The word episkopos is not of ecclesiastical origin. It was a military term. In the Greek Version (LXX) of the old covenant scriptures, it is used to translate the word which appears in the King James Version as “captains” (Num. 13:14). It is also the translation of the word for “officer” (Judges 9:28). Robinson’s Lexicon says, “Among the Athenians it was the title of magistrates sent out to tributary cities to organize and govern them.”

The original term is translated “looking diligently” (Heb. 12:15) and “taking the oversight” (1 Peter 5:2). Oversight involves two things, expressed by the words “over” and “sight.” The first implies superintending and directing; the second implies association and inspection. One cannot be a bishop by proxy, long distance, or remote control. He cannot govern upon hearsay or secondhand reports. He cannot remedy defects unless he first inspects.

The elders are to rule or govern. The congregation is to submit and obey. The elders demonstrate their fitness to rule God’s household by ruling their own (1 Tim. 3:4). They are to rule well (1 Tim. 5:17). The word “overseer” signifies that someone is under supervision. No one can be over those who are not willing to be under him. There is no provision for despotic or arbitrary rule. All government must be by and with the consent of the governed.

3. Shepherds and pastors. The term “shepherd” is not directly applied, but implied, in the King James Version. After Peter told the elders to “Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight” (1 Pet. 5:2), he adds, “And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.” The word “feed” is from poimaino, “To tend as a shepherd.” Thus the apostle recognizes Jesus as the chief Shepherd over the under-shepherds, or elders.

The word “pastors” occurs once in the New Testament (Eph. 4:11). It is from poimen “a shepherd or feeder.” The Hebrew equivalent is eight times translated “pastors” in Jeremiah. It is translated “herdsman” 7 times, and “shepherd” 62 times in other portions of the old covenant scriptures. The pastors in the New Testament congregations are to be the elders or bishops. The word “pastors” (Eph. 4:11) is from the same word as “feed” which means to “tend as a shepherd” (Acts 20:28; 1 Peter 5:2). This is the duty laid upon the bishops. To hire a man to feed a flock is to make him a pastor, a hireling pastor. The etymology will allow no dispute about this fact.

It is a common error in this degenerate age for men to reason that the duty of elders is to oversee and supervise the work, but they may hire another to do the work. They are willingly ignorant of the fact that their relationship to the flock in a governmental sense is expressed by the term bishop; but their relationship to the flock in a developmental sense is expressed by the term pastor. Now they would refuse to hire a man for the first, and claim to hire him only for the second. But it is the second which makes him a pastor, and not the first.

Ask a hireling minister or “located evangelist” the difference between his position and that of the other sectarian pastors about him. His sole glib reply will be that he does not run or manage the church, but is under the elders. This has nothing to do with “pastorating.” The overseeing or superintending is covered by the term bishop. The question is not about hiring bishops, but pastors! If a rancher hires a man to prepare feed and dispense it to his sheep, to visit the flock and lead it, has he not hired a shepherd? And if the work becomes too arduous and an associate is hired to assist, is he not an associate shepherd? Could these argue that they were not shepherds because they worked under supervision of the rancher to whom the sheep belonged, and were subject to him as an overseer? Supervising is the work of bishops, feeding the flock is the work of pastors. Just because one is not hired to supervise or govern is no sign he is not hired to pastorate. The whole truth is that the very argument of the hireling ministers is a candid admission that they are “pastors” and “associate pastors.”

The word pastor applies to a feeder or shepherd. When Laban hired Jacob he did not relinquish the control of his flock. He could hire, fire and change his wages! Jacob worked under his supervision, but this in no sense lessened the fact that he was Laban’s hired pastor. Indeed their negotiations were much like those in the modern sectarian body known as “The Church of Christ.” Jacob tried out for a month without salary, then Laban said, “Tell me, what shall your wages be.” Jacob stipulated his wage and they drew up a seven year contract, although there was a rider in “the fine print” which Jacob did not detect. At the completion of his term of service, Jacob offered his resignation. “Let me go, for you know the service I have given you.” Laban was reluctant, because under the pastorate of Jacob, the congregation had been blessed with considerable increase of members. He said, “If you will allow me to say so the Lord has blessed me because of you, name your wages and I will give it.” Jacob remained six more years with the flock and then took off without waiting for a big farewell party. Now, who will deny that Jacob was a shepherd, a hired pastor, merely because he did not boss the whole ranch? The “Church of Christ” today has an unscriptural hireling pastor system exactly like the sectarian world about it, and all the twisting, agonizing, writhing, and wresting of scripture will not change the fact! These brethren have sold the church down the river with their professional clergy and the incubators which hatch them. Stop bidding on the chickens and the hatchery will shut down!

Positive and Negative

Mission Messenger (June 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

While awaiting my train at the station in Nashville, Tennessee, I looked over the array of religious literature displayed in racks by the various denominations in that city. I selected some reading material from each section as I like to know what others are thinking, and I can learn from all. The “Church of Christ” rack yielded up a booklet bearing the title “A Church that is neither Catholic, Protestant, or Jewish.” As I read, I thought how typical it was of the negative attitude which is so characteristic of my brethren. Most of their time, money and effort is utilized in telling the world what they are not. Perhaps they have more to boast about in that department.

“Faithfulness” in these days is judged almost solely upon what men disclaim in doctrine or practice. A congregation is deemed “faithful” because it does not support colleges, have a hired minister, contribute to orphan homes, teach in Bible classes, use individual cups, use unfermented wine, or expect the Lord Jesus to return before the millennium. It just depends upon what section of the country you may be in, what segment of believers you may be among, or what the latest fight is about. Whatever the current criterion, it will not particularly concern what you believe, but what you do not believe.

A congregation may thus be “faithful” if it is in the doldrums, composed of lazy, indolent, indifferent members who will not talk to a neighbor, distribute a tract, or contribute a cent to support an evangelist in the field, just so long as it does not have a “regular preacher.” Its leaders may talk about the Lord’s system of mutual ministry, but frequently that is neither “mutual” nor “ministry” and the members have to be punched, prodded and programmed before they reluctantly agree to do anything. Yet the church is “faithful” because of what it does not have.

Another congregation may be “faithful” whose members have never supported one aged widow or cared for a single helpless orphan. The members may spend their Lord’s Day afternoons driving about in luxurious limousines, attired in the latest fashions, while there are those who languish in hospitals to whom a visit would be like a cool refreshing draught to the spirit. The aged members are neglected, forgotten, and condemned to eke out their days in tiny little cubicles which their old age assistance will cover. No one thinks of taking them for a drive in the country. But the congregation is “faithful” because it does not support orphan homes or homes for the aged.

Now we could run the entire gamut of factions and fractions and the story would be the same. It is not the life of surrender, consecration and closeness to God which is the mark of faithfulness in these days. It is not what you are, but what you are not, that counts. We do not minimize the necessity of opposition to all evil in faith or practice. It is essential that we stand against what we conceive of as detrimental to the rule of our King, but real Christianity is a positive force. There is a danger that we shall conceive of it as wholly negative and thus live helpless, powerless lives.

I trust that I may be allowed to live until I can see my brethren who love the Christ gain a sufficient degree of courage that they may go anywhere, meet anyone, and contend for the truth under all circumstances. I would like to see them have a knowledge of God’s word and the English language, so that they would unhesitatingly pass out a tract bearing the title: “A church that is catholic, and composed of protestants and Jews.”

The Church is catholic

The church of God is the only truly catholic church in the world. The word catholic means: “1. Universal or general; affecting mankind as a whole, or affecting what is universal in human interest. 2. Comprehensive in sympathies or understanding; liberal. 3. Of or pertaining to the church universal, specifically, designating or pertaining to the ancient undivided Christian church or a church claiming historical continuity from it.” There cannot be two “catholic” churches in the same realm at the same time. The church for which our Lord paid with his blood embraces within its fold every saved person on the face of this material globe. There is not one such being outside of it. That church is catholic as pertains to:

1. Scope. Its ambassadors were told to “Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature” (Mark 16:15).

2. Nationality. “In every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness is accepted with him” (Acts 10:35).

3. Social classes. “There is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free” (Col. 3:11).

4. Sex. “There is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus” (Gal. 3:28).

5. Languages. “Thou hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation” (Rev. 5:9).

6. Membership. “And the Lord added to their number daily such as were being saved” (Acts 2:47).

One who claims to be a Christian must either be a member of the catholic church of God, or of a sect. The Roman Catholic Church is not the church of God. It is a sect; indeed, the mother of many sects. It is Roman, but it is not catholic. Any person who contends for the church with which he is affiliated, yet admits that it is possible for people to be saved outside of the circle of communion which he recognizes, is a member of a sect. The church of God is not a sect. It contains every redeemed person from every kindred, tongue, people and nation.

Composed of protestants

A protestant is one who makes or enters a protest. The verb form “protest” is from the Latin “pro” and “testare” to be a witness. It is a mistake to think that to protest one has to be against something. Indeed, the first definition of protest is “to assert; affirm; aver.” One makes a protestation of faith in the Messiah when he publicly acknowledges him, for the word means the “act of protesting, or solemnly declaring true, existent, or the like; a public avowal.” Any person who makes an affirmation or declares a truth is a protestant. One who is not a protestant in any sense would be in a sad condition.

Of course, a protest is also “an expostulation; complaint; objection or remonstrance.” One who objects to being designated a protestant proves the designation is correct by his objection. It is not an uncommon thing to see a man protesting that he is not a protestant. One thing wrong with the members of the church of God in these days is that not enough of them are protestants. They accept anything that comes along, submit to being robbed of their rights, privileges, and prerogatives without ever raising a protest. No man can be a true follower of the Christ without being protestant. One reason why our Lord was killed was because he was such a strong protestant.

Composed of Jews

Every member of the church of God is a real Jew; every real Jew is a member of the church of God. This is clearly taught in the New Testament, which also teaches that no one can be a Christian without being circumcised. “In him also you were circumcised with a circumcision made without hands, by putting off the body of flesh in the circumcision of Christ; and you were buried with him in baptism, in which you were also raised with him through faith in the working of God, who raised him from the dead” (Col. 2:11, 12). Only those who are thus circumcised are real Jews and in covenant relationship with God.

There are those who claim to be Jews outside the church of God, just as there are those who contend they are catholic or protestant outside of it, but the first are not real Jews any more than the others are really catholic or truly protestant. “For he is not a real Jew who is one outwardly, nor is true circumcision something external and physical. He is a Jew who is one inwardly, and real circumcision is a matter of the heart, spiritual, and not literal” (Rom. 2:28, 29).

Instead of delivering talks on why we are not catholic, protestants, or Jews, why not let the world know we are? I will be happy to see the day come when my brethren will not, through ignorance, surrender perfectly good words to a group who will capitalize and misuse them, but will have the courage to take a positive attitude toward the new covenant religion. I want to see them bold and brave enough to flood the communities with a non-sectarian tract about the church that is catholic, and composed of protestants and real Jews!

Brethren in Slavery

Mission Messenger (July 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

Thousands of professed followers of the Messiah are ensnared in an evil bondage of their own making and are helpless victims of an insidious habit which may doom them to a premature death. Like a modern demon, their bodies are possessed of a cruel unnatural desire which drives them relentlessly on regardless of cost in health or money. Even worse, their sense of reason becomes so twisted and warped that they actually seek to defend and protect the killer which fastens its fangs in their vitals, and become angry and vicious when their slavery is mentioned. Many, for example, will pass on to their innocent children the same fetters, and will see them locked in the same handcuffs of despair.

Cigarette smoking is catering to a physical craving or lust. It satisfies no real hunger, furnishes no necessary element, and offers no genuine satisfaction. Nicotine is a narcotic and the habitual user is a drug addict who becomes weak, trembling, and even nauseated when deprived of it. It drives men to despair when they do not have it, and to extreme lengths to obtain it. A man who is too tired to visit a next door neighbor who is ill will walk three blocks in a blizzard to secure a pack of cigarettes. Some will take their last cent to buy tobacco even though there is no milk in the house for their babies. They will allow their debts to run on interminably while they blow their money out through their nostrils!

Tobacco users frequently lose their sense of respect or modesty. Their insatiable craving forces them to forget or ignore a sense of decency. Not long ago, in a southern state, I visited a congregation, the members of which thought they constituted “the faithful church.” They were arrogant, hateful and haughty in their denunciation of congregations which taught little children the word of the Lord in Bible classes. Before we had talked very long every man in the group had lighted a cigarette in the meeting house, and was sucking and puffing away, in between quoting the scriptures and making sarcastic remarks about the brethren. They claimed to be the last vestige of hope to deliver the rest of the religious world from error, but “While they promise them liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption: for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage” (2 Peter 2:19).

Nicotine is a poison, a deadly poison! Only the ignorant or prejudiced will argue otherwise in the face of facts. Men will hide rat poison and put other deadly potions out of reach of their little children, but they will leave cigarettes lying about the house, and blow smoke into the faces of their babies. This insensate unconcern by those who are gullible stooges for the propaganda of huge tobacco trusts is bad enough on the part of those who are worldly and indifferent to the Christ, but it is the height of folly for those who claim that the Spirit of God dwells in them. Who can visualize the Son of God with a “Lucky Strike” hanging out of the corner of his mouth?

It is not to be expected that what we say here will register seriously with the average member of the congregation of God who is enslaved. I am not so naive as to suppose that many will be influenced by what I write when the cravings of lust tug and twitch at every fiber of their flesh. But I want to be free from their blood, and I will not see them commit a slow and painful suicide without speaking my sentiments. They will not be made free because they do not will to be free! They will deny this but it is true. It has long ago been proven that a man will be what he wills to be. Those who possess the character and will power can climb to any height!

We are past that time when weak men can argue that use of tobacco does no harm. Recently I was in a hospital all day. I saw them wheel three shrouded figures into surgery. With their agonized families I awaited their return. I saw doctors and nurses fight to keep the spark of life glowing after the shock sustained when their bodies were cut almost half across. I saw wives and children weeping, and looked into the frightened faces of little grandchildren who were awed by the strange surroundings. Every one of the three men had a lung cut out because a cancer was gnawing away at the vital organ. The surgeon said they were three more of a fast growing multitude of human sacrifices at the shrine of the great god, Nicotine. The next day one died with a bloody froth bubbling out of his nostrils. The other two were more fortunate.

Two months ago a group of seven scientists published a report that "Scientific evidence establishes beyond reasonable doubt that cigarette smoking is a causative factor in the rapidly increasing incidence of lung cancer." These men are not fanatics, killjoys, or moralists. The group was appointed last June at the suggestion of the American Cancer Society, the American Heart Association, the National Cancer Institute and the National Heart Institute to review the effects of tobacco smoking on health.

Here is a statement from their report. "Lung cancer occurs much more frequently (5 to 15 times) among cigarette smokers than among nonsmokers, and there is a direct relationship between the incidence of lung cancer and the amount smoked. . . . It is estimated that on a lifetime basis, one of every 10 men who smoke over two packs a day will die of lung cancer. The comparable risk among nonsmokers is estimated at one out of 275."

I am a grandfather. I have three little grandchildren. They are everything to me in this world. Nothing has ever meant more to me than to have their baby arms about my neck, and to hear the word “Granddaddy” from their lips. I have never smoked but if I had done so in the past, I would quit immediately. I would not want one of these sweet innocent little ones to take up smoking because I smoked, for if the time came when one of them was wheeled into the hospital room to have a lung slit out because of cancer, and I knew that I was responsible, I would never breathe an easy breath again. They may smoke cigarettes when they grow up— God forbid!— but they will never point an accusing finger at their grandfather as their excuse for doing so.

It is for that reason I would not appoint a man as bishop or elder who was a slave to tobacco and a drug addict. We are told to “abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul” (1 Peter 2:11). No man can “watch for your souls, as they that must give account” (Heb. 13:17) who indulges in a habit that wars against his own soul. A bishop must first take heed unto himself and then to the flock. He is to be an example to the flock (1 Peter 5:3). I do not want a man as an example to my children or grandchildren who is so weak he cannot control his appetite. If a man know not how to rule his own body, how shall he take care of the body of Christ?

All the reasons assigned for smoking are puerile, silly and futile when measured by the standard of the Nazarene. At the root of the trouble is the fact that modern “Christianity” is weak, saturated, and watered down, filled with compromise and worldliness. Our brethren could no longer face lions in the Roman arena. They can’t even whip a “Camel.” They are afraid to be thought different. They do not set a standard for the world, they follow the one set by the world. They cannot endure the ridicule, sarcasm and derision of their associates. The salt has lost its strength; the leaven has forfeited its power. Men will damn their souls to have others think well of them.

Men can quit the tobacco habit! Thousands have gained a victory over the weed. We can do all things through Christ who strengthens us. But one must be fully convinced of the evil effects accruing from the habit. He must recognize that it will be in the interest of health, happiness and spiritual influence to stop it. It is not a task for moral cowards or spiritual weaklings. It cannot be done by “cutting down” or “tapering off.” That is like cutting off a dog’s tail an inch at a time to make it easier on the dog. Doctors who advise their patients to “cut down” want to coddle them and keep their good will— and get their money!

There is just one way to get the job done! Pray to God for strength, rely on the Holy Spirit for inner fortitude, and make a vow to God never to inhale another “coffin nail.” Your mind will become clearer, your breath sweeter, your taste purer and your appreciation of life much keener. We pray for all of the victims of this slavery. We want to see them gain deliverance. It can be done through the help of Jesus. “If the Son shall set you free, then are you free indeed.”

That They All May Be One (7)

Mission Messenger (July 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

The elders of the congregation are shepherds and bishops. Jesus is the “Shepherd and Bishop of our souls” (1 Peter 2:25). He is that “great Shepherd of the sheep” (Heb. 13:19). He is the good Shepherd who has created one flock of those who hear his voice and follow him (John 10). The elders are to sustain the same relationship in these respects to the local flock as Jesus does to the universal flock. They are told to “shepherd the flock of God over which the Holy Spirit has made you the bishops” (Acts 20:28). Again they are instructed to “shepherd the flock of God which is among you, exercising the office of bishop” (1 Peter 5:2). They are informed that “when the chief Shepherd shall appear, you shall receive a crown of glory.” Nothing is clearer than the fact that while Jesus is the “Shepherd and Bishop of our souls” in a universal sense, the elders are shepherds and bishops in a local sense, and as such are to “watch for your souls, as they that must give account” (Heb. 13:17).

The office of elder carries with it a grave and serious responsibility. It must not be given to men because they are popular, good business managers, or happen to be the best material available. The Holy Spirit has detailed specific qualifications which one must have to enter this office. For a man to assume the responsibilities of this sacred office when he is not capable of fulfilling the divine requirements is to put him in a position where he may damn his soul. God not only holds us responsible for what we can do and will not, but for what we pretend and profess to know. Some who accept the eldership because they consider it an honor will be eternally dishonored because they did not discharge the sacred office in a manner acceptable unto God. To take on a responsibility through pride or conceit which one cannot meet is a sure road to the flames of an eternal condemnation.

What is the relationship of an elder to the congregation? It is that of a shepherd to his flock. Unless we understand this figure of speech and its implications we will never be able to grasp its spiritual import. In the primitive age of the world men were all farmers or herdsman. The first two persons born into the world illustrate this fact. Cain was a cultivator of the soil. His brother was a keeper of flocks. Since men can only use as similes those things with which they are familiar, the members of the human family came to be looked upon as sheep at a remote date in history.

Men are gregarious creatures. This word is from grex, meaning “a flock.” Men tend to flock together, to live in proximity to each other, and to establish communities. The herd instinct actually militated against the divine command to “fill the earth” and the city and the tower of Babel were started “lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the earth.” Our word “congregation” is from grex, and means “to collect into a crowd or mass; to flock together.”

Men in a mass or group require direction or leadership. Without such they are “scattered like sheep without a shepherd” (Matt. 9:36; Mark 6:34). A community of men can function as a social unit only through recognized leaders or agents. Destroy the leadership and the community will disintegrate. Jesus recognized this fact in his repetition of the axiomatic proverb, “Smite the shepherd, and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered abroad” (Matt. 26:31). It is observable that the shepherd is to provide a unifying and integrating influence, to weld the flock into a compact unit for its own strength, protection and safety. Political rulers in the state as well as captains in the army are designated as shepherds, because they are to gather, lead, protect, and provide for the welfare of their subjects. Thus, Cyrus, king of Persia is called a shepherd (Isa. 44:28); and so are the Assyrian army captains.

Just as men are referred to as “the sheep of God’s pasture” (Psa. 79:13; 95:7; 100:3) because they possess the nature, temperament, and characteristics of sheep, so the elders are called shepherds because they are to perform the same offices and functions to the flock of God which shepherds do to their sheep. If we can determine the work and responsibility of shepherds, we will then know what God expects of elders of the congregation. The Holy Spirit never employed a figure that was inappropriate or intended to confuse. Fortunately we do not need to go outside the holy scriptures to learn the work of shepherds. We have the examples of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, David, and many others, who tended sheep. A word of warning is essential. The deductions we draw must be based upon the life and work of eastern shepherds, that is, those who led and fed their flocks in the lands of the Bible and in the time when it was being written.

The shepherd was motivated by a deep love for his sheep. This is repeatedly portrayed by Jesus. He alludes to it when he refers to the man who has one sheep which falls into a pit and is rescued on the sabbath day (Matt. 12:11); and also in the story of the man who had a hundred sheep, and left the ninety and nine in the wilderness, while he searched for the lost one and found it (Luke 15:4). The extent of that love is expressed in the statement, “The good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep” (John 10:11). It is interesting that Jesus immediately introduces another type of character, “But he that is an hireling.” Both shepherds and hirelings watch sheep and feed them. One does it for love of sheep, the other for love of money. Bishops are told to “Feed the flock . . . not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind” (1 Pet. 5:2). Any one who cannot make up his mind until he knows how much money is in it, is a hireling, and that cannot be denied.

The elder must lead the sheep, not drive them. “When he puts forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him” (John 10:4). David said of the shepherd, “He leadeth me beside the still waters . . . he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness” (Psalm 23). There is no way to coerce or force the flock of God. They cannot be made to do that which they are unwilling to do. Instruction, reason, and persuasion are the tools of spiritual pastors. It is true that elders are to rule (1 Tim. 5:17), but they must rule through love and the power of example. Shepherds are distinctly forbidden to rule “by force and cruelty” (Ezek. 34:4). After instruction, if reason and persuasion will not gain the cooperation of the congregation in a given project, the elders are left with one of two alternatives—they must either abandon it, or resign so they will not be answerable for the dereliction. They cannot club or bulldoze the sheep into submission by threats or force. The subject of ruling or governing will be handled at greater length in a subsequent study of the qualifications.

We can learn much about the work of elders by a study of Ezekiel 34, which deals with the functions of shepherds. Let us consider that chapter.

1. Feed the flock (verses 2, 3). This necessitates the ability to dispense knowledge. “I will give you pastors according to mine heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding” (Jer. 3:15). It is the duty of elders to present the correct food in proper amounts at the right time to assure the full growth of every member. They are to be able to provide what is lacking in spiritual development. “And I will set up shepherds over them which shall feed them: and they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed, neither shall they be lacking, saith the Lord” (Jer. 23:4). It is for this reason the bishops must be “apt to teach.” They are not required to be apt to preach, which, in the New Testament sense, has to do with announcing of the Good News to aliens. Teaching is instruction in systematic fashion. It has nothing to do with acquiring knowledge, but of conveying it to others. Regardless of how much a man may know about the Bible, if he does not have the ability to instruct others, he cannot qualify as a bishop. The shepherds should be able to supply every intellectual need of the flock in the spiritual realm.

2. Strengthen the diseased (verse 4). The diseased are those who are ravaged by protracted maladies or who suffer from a chronic condition which weakens them. The shepherd must be skilled in diagnosis. He must recognize symptoms and correctly interpret them. Spiritual diseases, like physical ones, are multitudinous, and a correct understanding of the nature of a difficulty before prescribing for it, is essential. The elders should know the members of the flock so intimately that they recognize the individual frailties, weaknesses and susceptibilities. The sheep of God’s pasture may suffer from spiritual blindness, heart trouble, nervous prostration, and a hundred other conditions of the soul. These require strengthening if they endure at all.

3. Heal the sick (verse 4). This refers to those who become ill from exposure, improper diet, or some other cause. Many of God’s sheep risk their spiritual health by exposure to worldliness, and gradually grow cold and indifferent. It can be said of many places, as of Corinth, “Many are weak and sickly among you.” Others become ill from eating poisonous weeds which are often concealed in pastures which appear wholesome. Some who are proud, become sick about questions and strifes of words (1 Tim. 6:4). The proper treatment in each instance should be known to the bishops. How foolish it would be for the medical profession to hire their most fluent speaker to assemble the citizens in a community for thirty minutes each week to prescribe the same treatment for all regardless of need or nature of illness. Yet that is exactly the basis upon which the flock of God is treated in these days.

4. Bind up the broken (verse 4). The eastern shepherd carried in his scrip a vial of ointment and a horn of oil, as well as a roll of bandages. If a sheep sustained an injury it was given immediate attention. Frequently a head wound was sustained. In such a case, oil was poured into the wound to cleanse, soothe and hasten the healing process. It was this practice which prompted the statement, "Thou anointest my head with oil" (Psalm 23:5). Sometimes, in descending into a valley of shadows, a sheep would slip and fall on a sharp declivity, or stumble over a precipice. Occasionally, a broken bone resulted. In such cases, the compassionate shepherd bound up the break, and carried the sheep upon his shoulders, that it be not left to become a prey to the lurking wolves. Often the other sheep stood about bleating in sympathy with the stricken member of the flock. When one member suffered, the others suffered with it.

The sheep of God today are subjected to many pitfalls and stumblingstones. The way is not always easy or smooth. There are steep hills to climb and deep valleys to cross. Many times a sheep will stumble and fall. While it is the duty of all to restore such a one (Gal. 6:1) it is the special responsibility of the elders to see that he has the break bound up, and they should support and carry him until he is again able to walk alone. They should administer the balm of Gilead and not the gall and wormwood of criticism.

5. Recover those driven away (verse 4). Sheep are driven away as the result of the actions of others. There are those which "thrust with side and with shoulder, and push all the diseased with their horns, until they have scattered them abroad" (Ezek. 34:21). There are always some who are self willed, stubborn, arrogant and persistent. They must have their way without regard to the feelings of others. They have no respect for age, length of service, lack of knowledge, or anything else. They must rule or ruin, boss or bust! Frequently they have a good knowledge of the Bible, and feel that this entitles them to a position of superiority. While pretending to be humble they are saturated with conceit. Men must kowtow to their whims or be forced to undergo their public scathing and venom. This is always administered for “the good of the church.” They never make a mistake and are never guilty of an error. This kind of conduct will drive the sensitive and weak from the fold, and leave them out in the wilderness to perish.

Great indeed is the responsibility of the elders under such circumstances. If they do not agree in every detail with the position and tactics of those who are ambitious for leadership their influence will be undermined secretly; if they show compassion for the weak they are accused of favoritism and compromise. It is because of such conditions that God’s elders must be strong men. It should be remembered that they are the overseers and superintendents. It is their business to know the spiritual needs of the flock and to govern it. They are not under the dictation of any member, clique or faction. They must consider the welfare of all. If one persists in agitating and teaching that which is detrimental because of the attitude or spirit manifested they should restrict him from teaching until he learns to cooperate for the good of all.

They should not allow the weak and helpless to be browbeaten, buffeted or bullyragged, but should protect them. They should never lose interest in a soul that has been driven away, but should love, visit, teach, and persuade, with the hope that some day that one might be reclaimed. Never should they cease to pray for such a person. They should strive to keep in contact, be ready to help in time of need, and confirm their love for the unfortunate soul. In no case should elders be guilty of driving one away by their coldness, formality, or insistence upon rigid procedures, when kindness, forbearance and love would bring all safely home. Too many bishops think of themselves as a supreme court created to try criminals, or as policemen guarding against legal infractions. This impersonal and aloof spirit has driven many from the fold to seek warmth and understanding elsewhere.

When Jacob met Esau, he demonstrated the true quality of a shepherd, priority of concern for his flock. Against the urgent insistence of his brethren, he said, "My lord knows that the children are frail, and that the flocks and herds giving suck are a care to me; and if they are overdriven for one day, all the flocks will die" (Gen. 33:13). Many a flock has been killed by being overdriven. We need to learn the value of the words of Jacob, "I will lead on slowly according to the pace of the cattle . . . and according to the pace of the children." With shepherds such as those described in Isaiah 40:11, few sheep would ever be driven out. "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd: he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young."

6. Seek that which is lost (verse 4). While men are driven away by others, they wander away of their own volition. The clump of grass on a remote hillside looks greener than that close at hand, and the sheep is enticed by its own craving to stray from the flock. The allurements of sin promise much but give little. Once a person has gone so far, he may continue in sheer desperation, or be filled with a sense of shame which keeps him from returning. The loving shepherd can never forget his sheep. The one that means most to him is the one that is in greatest need. The lost sheep occupies the mind more than all of the ninety and nine in the safety of the fold. We believe that hundreds who have strayed could have been saved if only someone would have shown understanding and compassion at the right time. In a fit of sudden anger, in a spasm of revolt, or in the throes of a great temptation, one deserts the flock. He becomes at once the target of barbed arrows. There is only one problem that concerns many elders under such circumstances, and that is how to maintain their own dignity, prestige and command. There may be little real concern for the feeling of the lost sheep, except to force him to come cowering and dragging back to the fold. We dare not minimize the danger of rebellion against rule, but often it is the symptom of a sick personality caused by the frustrations, inhibitions and discouragements which reach back into a childhood that was devoid of the warmth and understanding so essential to the proper growth of wholesome character.

Elders, as shepherds, should seek that which is lost. They should never despair of reclamation so long as one lives. They should look eagerly, search diligently, and enlist the help of others. Nothing is a greater source of real pleasure than to hoist a lost sheep upon the shoulders and bring him back in rejoicing to the safety of the fold. Ezekiel makes it clear that those shepherds who do not seek the lost will give account unto God. The sheep belong unto God. The shepherd who loses one through neglect or carelessness that could have been saved must answer to God. The shepherds watch for your souls as they that must give account.

We are prompted to ask what there is for an imported hireling to do in a flock that has scriptural shepherds or bishops? He must either serve as a sheep or a shepherd! Will any person be so foolish as to say that we can hire one to be a sheep? What does the modern hired clergyman use as the basis for his existence in the congregation with qualified elders? What does he need to be paid to do as a sheep which is not the duty of every other sheep that is qualified? What does he need to be paid to do as a pastor which was not the duty of the true pastors before he was hired and imported? We are bold enough to affirm that the presence of “the located evangelist” in a congregation with elders is a living proof of an unconverted membership, an unqualified presbytery— or both! We challenge those who champion this hireling clergy system to put a finger on one thing that the “local minister” is to do in a properly organized congregation. He is a functionary without a function, a parasite and a fungus growth upon the body of the Christ!

The greatest need in this age is to develop godly, qualified bishops in the congregations of the saints. We have spent precious time trying to make preachers and evangelists, when we should have been concentrating upon the training of shepherds for the flocks. The result is that those men who are appointed to office to meet the “form of godliness” are helpless and powerless to do the things that the office demands. In desperation they turn to a substitute, and a man is hired as a specialist in organization and congregational management to come in and keep the thing going. The very existence of the “located evangelist” system is a monument to our tragic failure, and a proof of our willingness to adopt the sectarian methods in emergency, rather than to admit our weakness and start from the ground to build congregations after the original faith and order. The congregations are plagued by an unconverted membership brought in under high pressure evangelism, who exist, not to serve but to be served, and who clamor for good and entertaining speakers. The elders, unqualified to meet the demand, feel forced to hire a professional and turn over to him their work with the flock, retaining only the privilege of hiring and firing. Once embarked upon this course, the congregation is doomed to continue in it through sheer helplessness.

A Sad Commentary

Mission Messenger (July 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

Derrel Starling is the local minister of Westside Church in Phoenix, Arizona. As such, he is the publisher of the bulletin which is titled “The Perk-Up.” In the May 12 issue is a quotation from John T. Lewis, on the topic “The Modern Pastor System.” It is good, and we want you to read it.

It does not take a Solomon to see that the “modern pastor system” is fastening itself upon the churches today. And when the system is fully developed, the preacher will look upon the pulpit as his personal property, and he will talk to other preachers about trading pulpits as they would talk about trading any other chattel, and all the elders will be expected to do, will be to ratify the deal, and if they should hesitate, the chances are they would be voted out, and new elders appointed. And the elders themselves will be responsible for this unscriptural and unfortunate condition.

The most glaring evidence of this evil today, is when the ‘local preacher’ goes out for meetings through the summer months, he has to procure, or help the elders procure, some young preacher from one of ‘our’ Bible colleges, to take over and carry on, in his absence. If this is not an admission upon the part of the elders that they cannot ‘feed the church of the Lord which he purchased with his own blood’ even for a short time, then I do not know what it is. And where this is practiced, what idea can the rank and file of the membership have other than the preacher is ‘the pastor’? It is a sad commentary upon the work of preachers and elders, when they labor together and cannot build up a congregation strong enough spiritually to stand alone without the help of a preacher.

Read that again! That is “Ketcherside doctrine”! It is for this that I have been branded a hobbyist in Birmingham where Bro. Lewis lives. Now he has joined the ranks of the “hobbyists” on the relationship of the evangelist and elders to the congregation of saints! What will the Gospel Guardian do? Bro. Lewis is their chief prosecutor of Guy N. Woods at present. Will they repudiate him on this? I want you to note some of the things in the published statement.

1. “The modern pastor system” is fastening itself upon the churches today! Will Bro. Lewis name the congregations where such is happening? He might not dare to do so, but we will name every congregation he has planted in Birmingham! When I was in his home and made this charge personally, he informed me that it was none of my business and none of his! Apparently he has changed his mind! I asked him why he did not oppose the system among the churches which he had planted and he said that was the business of the elders. I asked if he would say anything if those elders wheeled a piano in for worship. He answered in the affirmative. I asked what difference there was in corrupting the worship of the body and its government; and if it was any more sinful to add something to the worship than to add another officer to the ones the Lord ordained. He did not reply. But I deny that the elders are to blame for the “modern pastor system.” The preachers, like Bro. Lewis, are the ones to blame! They developed and appointed these men to the eldership, and they played along with the “modern pastor system” while doing it. The elders deserve pity, not censure! They are not qualified for the task of feeding the flock, and never were. They have turned to the unscriptural method out of sheer desperation!

2. Bro. Lewis labels this an “evil.” The most glaring evidence to his mind is that when the local preacher leaves for a meeting he has to get a substitute to take his place. That isn’t the most glaring evidence! It is the presence of “the local preacher” in the first place. If the elders are to feed the flock through the summer months, why not through the fall and winter months? Has Bro. Lewis been developing “summer elders”? His idea is that the time when the elders should feed is when the “local preacher” goes out for meetings through the summer months. We had the idea that being an elder was kind of a year around job! If it is all right for the elders to have a substitute for eleven months in the year, why cannot the local preacher have one for four weeks?

3. Bro. Lewis thinks it is a sad commentary upon the work of preachers and elders when they cannot build a congregation strong enough to stand alone without the help of a preacher. Well, he has written a sad commentary in Birmingham, for every congregation he has started and worked with has a hireling to feed, and “the modern pastor system” has fastened itself upon the churches he has built. We hope that Derrel will publish some more sad commentaries. Perhaps brethren will listen to them if not to us.

That They All May Be One (8)

Mission Messenger (August 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

This is the account of the work of an evangelist in planting a congregation of saints and training them for service. At the present time he is conducting a study of the qualifications of elders, looking forward to the selection and appointment of men to this sacred office.

1. Is there general agreement as to the qualifications?

No! On the contrary, they have formed a fruitful source of conflict and dispute, almost since apostolic days. It is not to be expected that we will be able to bring about harmony amidst the diversity of opinions. Instead, we shall merely state our humble views and trust that brethren will weigh them objectively.

2. Is there danger of interpreting the qualifications too rigidly?

Yes, although the other extreme is usually followed. Some explain them so loosely that anyone can qualify; others so rigidly that no one can. These are qualifications for men— not angels. “If a man desire the office of a bishop.” No man is sinlessly perfect. Elders will make mistakes as do other men. No one who meets the requirements of God should be kept out of office on the basis that he may not remain qualified.

3. Must a man have all of the qualifications?

Yes. The list in 1 Timothy 3 begins and closes with the word “must.” Verse 2 says, “A bishop must . . .” and verse 7 says, “He must have . . .” It is not a question of what he might be, could be, or ought to be. He must have the character delineated in these verses.

4. Would this not require a state of perfection?

No. The degree of the qualifications is not expressed, with one exception. Inasmuch as the word of God does not specify that they must be in the superlative degree we have no right to require it. It is expected that an elder possess the qualifications in an exemplary degree (1 Peter 5:3) but this is a relative term. Certainly a man in office will grow in these various departments as he grows in knowledge of the truth.

5. If no man has the qualifications, but several men taken together have them, can they be appointed?

Certainly not! The qualifications are for individuals, not for a group. They are for presbyters, not a presbytery. The record does not say, “If a group desires the office” but “If a man desires the office.” In Titus 1:7 we read that “A bishop must be” the type of character specified. Any other conclusion would destroy the government of the church of God.

6. Should a man who shows promise be appointed in anticipation of his developing the qualifications?

No. The qualifications must be had prior to the office, and not vice versa. A man must not be given the office to qualify him, but he must qualify himself before he can be given the office. The book says, regarding the deacons, “Let these also first be proved; then let them use the office.” This principle will apply to the office of bishop in the same way.

7. Should one be appointed who might be offended if left out of the office?

Indeed not! In some places when two men are qualified and appointed, a third may also be put in because he would become angry and quit if he did not get the appointment. This is a flagrant disregard of the divine constitution. Such a character is not qualified to shepherd the flock of God. He is too little for the responsibility and the fact that he has to be pampered and petted to keep him in the congregation shows he was never really converted to our Lord. The sacred office is not a sop of appeasement to be thrown to a perpetual pouter. We should not play politics with the arrangements of the King.

8. Should a man be appointed as a reward for his faithful attendance and service?

No person should be appointed on any other basis than his possession of the qualities enumerated in the book. The office is not to be passed out like an award to a scholar for good attendance. The fate of the congregation rests with its leadership. A congregation cannot rise above its leaders!

9. Do the qualifications come under various categories?

For convenience we can classify them as moral, domestic, intellectual and executive. The first deals with behavior and conduct; the second with the marital and home status; the third with the attainments in aptitude and knowledge; and the last with the ability to govern or rule. It should be stated that these are our own classifications, as the word of God merely sets forth the qualifications with no particular regard as to sequence or relationship.

10. Which classification will be discussed first?

We will begin an exploration of the moral qualifications in our next study, and will seek to determine the meaning of the terms employed by the Holy Spirit.

Disciples of Yesterday

Mission Messenger (August 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

The modern religious organization known as “The Church of Christ” in many places has degenerated into merely another narrow and intolerant sect. It is no longer inviting all to retain the truth they possess and join in a search for more enlightenment. Instead, the membership arrogantly assumes that it possesses all of the truth there is, and everyone else is treated as a pagan or unbeliever. This was not true of the pioneers of the restoration.

A. S. Hayden in “History of the Disciples on the Western Reserve” tells that in Mentor, Ohio, in 1826, there was a Baptist Church, of which Sidney Rigdon was minister. He read Christian Baptist, and adopted its restoration teaching. In the spring of 1828, he visited Walter Scott at Warren. Upon his return nearly the whole church accepted cordially the doctrine of the Lord, exchanged their “articles” for the new covenant as the only divine basis for Christ’s church, and abandoned unscriptural titles and church names, choosing to be known simply as disciples of Christ.

Alanson Wilcox in “A History of the Disciples of Christ in Ohio” relates that in 1804, Barton W. Stone made a trip to Meigs County, Ohio, for the purpose of immersing a Presbyterian minister named William Caldwell. While there, he preached on its invitation to the Separate Baptist Association.

He says: “The result was that they agreed to cast away their formularies and creeds, and take the Bible alone for their rule of faith and practice; to throw away their name ‘Baptist’ and take the name ‘Christian,’ and to bury their Association, and to become one with us in the great work of Christian union. Then they marched to the stand where we were preaching, shouting the praises of God and proclaiming aloud what they had done. We met them, and embraced each other in Christian love.”

The modern inheritors of the restoration movement would not receive such as brethren. They would insist on all of them being re-baptized by a “Church of Christ” preacher. The Gospel Guardian has carried recent articles trying to show that even those who are immersed by preachers of the Christian Church must be baptized by one of our “loyal” group. We wish it known that we will act exactly as did Walter Scott and Barton W. Stone under the same circumstances as related above.

Peace Must Be Waged

Mission Messenger (September 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

The religious world is in turmoil. Believers in the Lord Jesus are fractured into hundreds of warring camps. The partisans in these splinter groups are often filled with bitterness and hatred. This is contrary to the will of the Father. It is opposed to the prayer of Jesus. But the condition exists and it is useless to deny it. What should be the attitude of one who deeply loves the Christ and his fellowmen, as respects the problem of disunity and strife?

It would seem that his course is clearly outlined in the new covenant scriptures. First, he must recognize the party spirit for what it is. It is a work of the flesh. It will debar one from inheritance in the kingdom of God (Gal. 5:19). This will eliminate the possibility of mistaking a desire for unity for mere ambition to build up a party. Secondly, he must actively engage in the attempt to promote peace. He must be a peacemaker if he would be called a son of God (Matt. 5:9). He cannot be indifferent, unconcerned or unmoved by the rents in the body of the Christ. He dare not withdraw into his castle and snap and snarl at those who are trying to do something. He must be actively engaged in promoting harmony or forfeit his right to be called a son of God.

In the third place, he must recognize that peace is not an accident. Unity is not a chance happening. Peace must be sought and pursued (1 Peter 3:11). It is a fruit of the Spirit which is reaped by those who sow the seed. "The harvest of righteousness is sown in peace by those who make peace" (James 3:18). It must be aimed at. It cannot be hit upon by those who wave their weapon aimlessly and pull the trigger. "Aim at righteousness, faith, love, and peace, along with those who call upon the Lord from a pure heart" (2 Tim. 2:22). A state of division exists. It is contrary to God's will. We are charged with bringing about unity. Unity is the result of purposeful planning. It is not accidental. It follows then that true children of God must have a definite, positive approach to this problem, and they must be working on it!

We must not think we can be saved by maintaining the status quo. If a man is struck by an automobile in front of my house, I cannot shrug it off by saying that none of my immediate family are hurt, therefore, it is no concern of mine; nor can I be justified by criticizing the methods of help used by my neighbors. So it is while the body of Christ lies bleeding and broken. I cannot excuse myself by saying it does not affect my congregation or group, nor will I be justified by sitting in an ivory tower complaining that the bandages and remedies applied by others are inadequate and useless. What am I doing to bring peace to this troubled world? I must face this question some day! I want to face it now!

Peace must be waged! Some men wage war and endure untold hardship, privation and suffering to attain their objectives. What am I willing to sacrifice as a soldier for peace, with a part of my uniform the footgear of the preparation of the gospel of peace (Eph. 6:15)? Can I continue the campaign if others misunderstand my motives, seek to undermine the strategy of peace, misrepresent what I say, and hate me for not hating others? Can I endure the long hours of study, the absence from loved ones, and the constant pressures? That all depends upon whether the Cause in which I have enlisted is a passing fancy, a shimmering delusion, or a real and all-consuming passion. If I am dedicated to the Christ, crucified to the world and sanctified by the Spirit, then “none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself.” The disunity, bitterness, party spirit and division which exist today have come from the seeds of hatred and animosity, planted in fertile soil by our forefathers. Shall we continue to walk in the same weary rut like a blind horse on a treadmill? Will we bequeath to our children and grandchildren a granary stored with the seed of distrust and malice? If peace is a fruit, it cannot be gathered until men prepare the soil and sow the seed!

How can peace be waged? Perhaps we have practiced disunity so long we do not know how to plead for unity. I will venture to state a few convictions which I feel must be a part of a strategy for peace. Peace must be waged in love. “If there is . . . any incentive of love . . . complete my joy by being of the same mind, having the same love, being in full accord and of one mind” (Phil. 2:1, 2). Love is the incentive to unity, not vice versa. We do not love each other because we are of the same mind; we come to be of the same mind because we love each other. It is not unity which promotes love, but love which promotes unity. “If you love those who love you, what reward have you?” (Matt. 5:46). I must begin, continue, and finish in love.

It is inconceivable that I would mistreat, abuse, or take unfair advantage of one whom I love. Therefore, if one differs with me upon matters relating to the service of God, I must make a difference between the person and what he advocates. Jesus died for him. He may not have died for what he argues. In love for the person, I must listen to what he says, weigh it carefully and dispassionately, always acceding to what is truth, and then, in kindness, reasoning with him upon points of disagreement. “Do nothing from selfishness or conceit, but in humility count others better than yourselves.”

Under no circumstances must I sacrifice principle in order to have the goodwill of men. However, I must distinguish between those things that are basic and essential to a relationship unto God, and those matters which are incidental. "It is my prayer that your love may be more and more accompanied by clear knowledge and keen perception, for testing things that differ, so that you may be men of transparent character" (Phil. 1:9, 10. Weymouth). Love accompanied by clear knowledge and keen perception. What a trio of excellencies! To be willing to talk together, to exchange views in love, to treat each other as equals, does not imply an acceptance of all the varied viewpoints at once— or ever!

We do not shoot men full of peace nor bombard them with unity! Peace and unity come as the result of patient striving in love, of long years of fruitful discussion and contact, of mutual understanding arrived at through long periods of prayer and study together. Unity can never be secured by two persons or groups who draw their rigid battle lines, and seek only to replenish their own supply of ammunition from God's arsenal so that they may blast each other into subjection. Such a course makes for wresting the scriptures, creating arguments where God made none, public debates with their rabid partisan followings, and the drawing away in sadness of those hungry souls who ask for a fish and are given a serpent!

Fair treatment of those who differ with us, a recognition of brotherhood in Jesus of all immersed penitent believers— these do not mean endorsement of error, compromise with false concepts, nor acceptance of interpretations that we believe to be wrong. They rather constitute only the foundation upon which we may explore our major problems, and from such contacts as are established build a better and brighter prospect for tomorrow. It is only those who have an inner fear that they lack truth, who shrink back from contact and withdraw into the confines of partisan citadels. Let us feel a sense of compassion for those who dare not face the battle, but let those who possess the vision and courage not be daunted, but press the battle for peace. "For God hath called us to peace."

The Class Controversy

Mission Messenger (September 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

I was born and reared in a Lutheran environment. At an early age I was immersed into the Christ. It was my good fortune to find my lot cast among those brethren who seek to further the restoration of the community of saints to its primitive faith and order, as set forth by the envoys of the Master. As an associate in a movement launched to bring about the unity of all believers in the Christ, I have long been disturbed by the fact that the effort has broken up into more than two dozen rabid, partisan factions, each with its own tests of fellowship and unwritten creeds.

Because I am not of the temperament to sit idly by and raise no hand to alleviate a condition so harmful to the propagation of the Good News, and so foreign to the intent of the Messiah, I have dedicated my writings in this little journal to exploring avenues of peace and tranquillity. I have not sought to bind my views upon others, nor to offer them as a panacea which must be adopted. I have been ever aware of the frailties and weaknesses to which I am subject, and have sought to avoid a dogmatic and arbitrary approach to our existing problems. I do not feel toward those who disagree with me, that they are enemies. I know they must be judged upon the basis of their personal conviction before God.

Recently I penned an article entitled “Class Controversy.”

It was devoted primarily to a discussion of the difference of opinion which has arisen among brethren in the United States, as to the obligation and method of teaching the word of the Lord, which difference has resulted in an actual severance of all fellowship, and the creation of two factions in some localities, each of which claims to be the body of the Christ, to the exclusion of the other. In all of my career, I have never before been bombarded with such a barrage of letters, as I have received from those who hold that it is a sin for a congregation of saints to dispense the bread of life simultaneously to a multitude sitting in different rooms. Every one of these letters is from the southland, and with few exceptions every one is from a preacher. That point may be significant!

The tragic thing is, that even now as I write, there are four letters lying before me. No two of the writers will fellowship each other. Each is a member of a different segment of the disciple brotherhood. Each writes for a different paper. Neither would dare call upon the others to pray. I have been able to do for them what Jesus could not. I have succeeded in uniting them in opposition to me, but they cannot unite in service to Him. It is enough to make angels weep and strong men bow themselves in sorrow.

Every letter contains long lists of questions. These have been hammered out by years of frantic public debate, when the party spirit ran high, and the lust for party victory made men cruel and insensible to compassion for each other. It is easy to see from the questions that these brethren do not agree with each other on the subject of teaching. The tone of the letters, in some cases, is saddening. I am accused of trying to arouse prejudice and party feeling by my plea for unity. I am accused of being "bitterly opposed to the No Class method of teaching" despite the fact that I wrote, "Let each community of saints determine the method it will employ, in those realms where God has not legislated, and when its means do not contravene the word of God, let us walk together in love, joy and peace in the Holy Spirit.”

I am challenged to debate in person or in writing, and if I will not, to get a man to represent my belief in the matter to debate it. Brethren, I do not propose to debate the matter with you. All that can be said by you on the subject is no doubt in print, and those who are interested can get it and read it. I doubt that such a debate as you suggest would advance the Cause of Him who did not strive nor cry, and the sound of whose voice was not heard in the streets. Modern debates are too often gladiatorial combats, in which each side chooses a champion to represent a party. Victory, and not truth, is too frequently the object. This is one time I am brave enough not to debate; you may goad a coward into doing so if you tantalize him long enough. But I just happen to love all of you enough that I do not care to be pitted in the arena as your foe. As to getting a man to represent my belief, I do not know who I would get. My views are my own. I do not know if any one else shares them. I’m not attached to a “class party” or “no class party.” This is not my test of fellowship!

What is this all about? Hundreds of our readers will be surprised to learn, but because these issues are so indicative of those things which have shattered the ideal of unity into fragments, it might be well to examine them, not so much for their own merits or demerits, but as a barometer of the false concepts held today on the subject of what constitutes fellowship and heresy. In my statement of the position I wish to be very careful and objective so as not to mislead you. There are few men on earth today who can be trusted to state the position of one with whom they differ. In this instance, the situation is somewhat complicated because the brethren are not fully joined together in the same mind on the issue.

Basically, the contention is that it is sinful for a congregation of the saints to call the brethren together to study the word of the Lord, and to divide them into classes for such study.

I think that we are agreed that the creation of any human organization to do the work of the community of saints is wrong, but there is a difference between organizing the work of the divine organism, and creating another organization through which to do it. The congregation is a social unit, and no such unit can function effectively without organizing or systematizing its work.

In my previous treatise I did not once mention “Sunday School.” I dealt solely with the right to teach the word of the Lord simultaneously to various groups. I said nothing about when it might be done. Without fail, those who have replied have injected “the Sunday School.” I am not a defender of such an organization, nor am I concerned with it in these articles. However, it is due our readers to state that the use of the term by our brethren may be misleading. They are opposed to brethren coming together on Monday, Wednesday or Friday to study the word of God in classes. They are just as opposed to a “Monday School” as a “Sunday School.”

Here is the issue exactly as stated by one of the brethren: “The church cannot scripturally call a plurality of groups into separate rooms for simultaneous instruction under different teachers.” I do not say the congregation must instruct in this fashion or by this method. I do believe that it is an infringement upon the freedom and liberty of God’s people, for men, regardless of intention, to set up laws and issue dogmas, in realms where God has not legislated. What is the basic problem in the above statement? Is it not the right and prerogative of the body of saints to do a certain thing? Is this not a law curtailing that right? Where is that law found in the New Testament? The church cannot do a certain thing! Here is a negative law. Who is the lawgiver?

Upon what reasoning do our brethren thus legislate? As I pointed out in my previous article, this negative law is based upon a conclusion drawn from 1 Corinthians 14:31, "For you can all prophesy one by one, so that all may learn and all be encouraged." Our brethren have been guilty of a fallacy here, the fallacy of generalization from a specific. The conclusion is, that since God legislated, that in the absence of new covenant scriptures, all members of the community of saints must assemble together to listen to the revelation of His will, once such revelation has been completed and committed to writing, and a copy placed in the hands of each member, the community may never henceforth separately and severally meet to discuss in various groups, the import of those writings possessed by each.

Certainly there were no classes for the discussion of the various portions of the new covenant scriptures in the meeting considered in 1 Corinthians 14. What was there to study? The brethren had no new covenant scriptures at Corinth. They learned by impartation of God's will through men speaking directly under divine impulse. And when we meet around the table of the Lord today to perform a public and communal service, whatever we do should be done in harmony with the nature of that assembly as arranged by the Lord. But to conclude from this that the community of saints may not arrange other gatherings for its investigation, research and discussion of the sacred scriptures, in various groups, when the nature of the gathering is not such as the one ordained by the Lord, is a fallacy in reasoning. To base a law upon such a fallacy, and then to proscribe and drive out humble brethren who cannot recognize any other lawmaker than God's Messiah is a tragedy of deepest concern.

If the body of our Lord is composed of five congregations in one city, and these may meet at their five places of assembly at the same hour to study the word of God, and still compose the one body; it would appear that each of them could meet in five classrooms to study and still not destroy the unity of the Spirit. The division condemned in the living oracles is not physical or geographical, but spiritual.

Brethren, let us end this division, contention and controversy, over the method of studying the word of the Lord. Let each community of the saints study the word of the Lord diligently; let each determine the method it will pursue, and so long as that method does not violate the law of the King, let us, as His subjects labor together in peace. Let us not compose a “class faction” or a “no class faction.” Let us be brethren! Surely the cementing power of the blood of the Lamb is greater than the divisive power of human opinion! Surely the cross is a better rallying place than our own shibboleths and creeds! Let us walk together in love! Let us seek peace and pursue it. Let us demonstrate to this generation that our faith in Jesus is greater than our opinions; that our love for each other is a greater force than partisan selfishness. We do not need a debate, we need a prayer meeting! We do not need to get in the stand to defend our views, but to get on our knees to confess to God! Time is running out! It is later than you think! Tomorrow may be too late!

That They All May Be One (9)

Mission Messenger (September 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

We are now to consider the qualifications which a man must have to be a bishop in the flock of God. As we study those within the moral realm, let us not forget that every child of God should possess these characteristics.

1. BLAMELESS. (1 Tim. 3:2). This is from anepileptos. It literally means, “not laid hold on.” It will help to remember that it is the word for “unrebukable” in 1 Timothy 6:14. It does not refer to “sinless perfection” as that term is used in the religious creeds. Elders are men, and are liable to err in judgment and behavior. But no man can be appointed to this office who is guilty of wrong, or subject to censure at the time. One who is without blame, is one against whom no charge of misconduct can be brought and sustained by credible testimony. It is obvious that if a man is guilty of any charge of dishonesty or unchastity, he cannot hold this sacred office. His life must be above reproach, his behavior undeserving of reproof.

2. VIGILANT. This is from naphaleon. Primarily, it means “sober, temperate, or abstinent, especially in respect to wine.” Our word “temperate” is a good translation. The implication is of one who keeps a cool, clear head at all times. It relates to a trusted guard. Such a person must not becloud his mind, either by drink or any other means. His task requires him to be alert, watchful, and observant. One who is a ranter, and not sober-minded, is a cause of danger, rather than a shield from it. Bishops must be alert to detect error creeping in from without, or arising from within. They need to have all of their mental faculties at all times.

3. SOBER. This is from sophrona, which means “wise, rational, discreet.” The R.S.V. translation is “sensible.” Albert Barnes suggests that the word “prudent” would come nearer to conveying the meaning of the apostle than any other single word. If this be correct, the statement of Chaucer is in order: “Prudence is goodly wisdom in all things.” We know the expression forbids undue levity and folly. If a man is flighty in judgment, undignified in behavior, and indiscreet in conduct, he cannot meet this divine requirement. A bishop must have a proper sense of values and be able to deliberate and weigh all matters seriously and carefully.

4. OF GOOD BEHAVIOR. This is from kosmion. The literal meaning is “orderly, systematic.” Thayer defines it as “well-arranged, seemly, modest.” His explanation in this place is “of a man living with decorum, a well-ordered life.” This qualification deals with outward deportment. The preceding one referred to the internal function of judgment. In plain terms, this specification means a bishop must be a gentleman. He must not be sloppy, slouchy or careless. In dress he must be neat, in manners refined, in appearance respectable. The congregation of saints will often be judged by the appearance of its public functionaries. We should not be proud, but we need to be neat. There is a difference between being humble and being a slouch; between meekness and slovenliness. One does not advance the Cause of the King by personal carelessness. He demonstrates neither talent, learning, or religion by a haphazard, unsystematic, disordered life. It might be difficult for one who cannot find a shirt at home to find one of the Lord’s sheep if it was lost.

5. NOT GIVEN TO WINE. It will be observed that the Marginal rendering is, "Not ready to quarrel and offer wrong, as one in wine." The Bible does not condemn the drinking of wine as such. It was a common item of diet in Palestine. It is true that Nazirite did not drink it (Num. 6:1-4) nor did the Rechabites (Jer. 35:6). John, the Immerser, being a Nazirite, did not use it (Luke 1:15) and Jesus said, "For John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, He hath a devil. The Son of man came eating and drinking, and they say, Behold a man gluttonous, and a winebibber" (Matt. 11:18, 19). The drinking of wine is placed in the same category as eating of meats (Rom. 14:21), neither of which could be indulged if a brother was thereby caused to stumble.

In view of the general tenor of this teaching, we are constrained to feel that the R. S. V. rendering, "no drunkard," is a fair representation of the apostolic prohibition. The Greek is paroinos, a combined form, which Thayer says refers to "one who sits long at his wine." He defines the term, "given to wine, drunken" and mentions a secondary sense, "quarrelsome over wine." A drunkard cannot be retained in the fellowship of the saints (1 Cor. 5:11) and cannot inherit the kingdom of God (1 Cor. 6:10). No man can become drunk who never takes a drink, and the temptation to go to excess is ever present with one who indulges. In the sense in which the apostle here introduces the matter, it is obvious that he is not commending the use of wine as a beverage, although he does recommend it medicinally (1 Tim. 5:23). An elder will do no harm by abstaining entirely; he may seriously injure the congregation and himself if he does not.

6. NO STRIKER. A striker is one who uses physical force to attain his ends, that is, one who smites with the fist. This is used in conjunction with the previous qualification, because one who is under the influence of intoxicants is ever more liable to be quarrelsome and contentious. A fist fight never proves the right or wrong of a thing. It may demonstrate which one of two opponents has the greatest brute strength, but that can better be determined by more peaceable and gentle means. Brain power is not measured by biceps; knowledge is not found in knuckles. A man who “flies off the handle” under pressure is like a hammer which does the same thing— he loses his head! Shepherds are to lead the sheep beside the still waters, and not agitate the waters by violence and disturbance!

7. NOT GREEDY OF FILTHY LUCRE. The Greek, literally rendered, would be, “Not desirous of sordid gain.” A person who was thus avaricious would prostitute the sacred office for money. We believe that the elders who devoted full time to their spiritual service were supported as to their needs by the congregations in which they served. Peter instructs the elders to “tend the flock of God . . . not for shameful gain but eagerly” (1 Peter 5:2). It would not be necessary to warn bishops against tending the flock for shameful gain, if there was no gain connected with such service. Moreover, 1 Tim. 5:17, 18 indicates that elders who labor in preaching and teaching, should be supported on the basis that “The laborer deserves his wages.” “Let him who is taught the word share all good things with him who teaches” (Gal. 5:6). But there is a difference between accepting a living for service in the word, and choosing to serve in the word for a living; just as there is a difference between making the Christian profession, and making a profession out of being a Christian. Although the needs of the elders were provided, this should not be the motive for desiring the office.

8. PATIENT. The original is translated “gentle” in Titus 3:2 and James 3:17. An elder must be longsuffering and forbearing, meek and mild. Rash, impulsive and boorish conduct will hinder one from qualifying for service.

9. NOT A BRAWLER. The Greek amachon, means “not contentious.” Ill-temper makes a man ill-fitted for a position of responsibility. One who is quarrelsome and belligerent in attitude will create problems rather than settle them. “It is an honor for a man to keep aloof from strife; but every fool will be quarreling” (Prov. 20:3). “Good sense makes a man slow to anger, and it is his glory to overlook an offense” (Prov. 19:11). “A fool takes no pleasure in understanding, but only in expressing his opinion” (Prov. 18:2).

10. NOT COVETOUS. The original is aphilarguron, literally, “Not a silver lover.” The R. S. V. translates it, “not a lover of money.” It should be remarked that it is not earning or having money which is here condemned, but loving it and trusting it. Some men accumulate money without loving it; others love it but are never able to accumulate it. Money is a convenient medium of exchange. It is those who desire to be rich who “fall into temptation, into a snare, into many senseless and hurtful desires that plunge men into ruin and destruction. For the love of money is the root of all evils; it is through this craving that some have wandered away from the faith and pierced their hearts with many pangs” (1 Tim. 6:9, 10).

11. A GOOD REPORT OF THOSE WITHOUT. This has to do with reputation among those who are not members of the congregation of saints. An elder must have a clear record and a good standing in the community. If he has been guilty of shady business dealings, or if he is known as one whose life is inconsistent with the Christian walk, he will reproach the Cause. Placing one in a position of responsibility serves to focus attention upon him. The congregation will be judged by the type of men chosen to lead it. The record says he must have a good report of them which are without “lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the devil.”

Often, when a man has had a poor reputation, he may be inclined to despair and conclude he cannot improve his lot. He may persuade himself that it will avail nothing if he does live right, since his past will always be held against him. In such a state of despondency, he may be ensnared by Satan, who would like to convince men that there is no use to live righteously and godly. To place such a man in a prominent position in the congregation will only serve to increase the shafts of accusation hurled against him. If allowed to remain quietly in the background, he may live down his past, and the world may cease to blame him for that of which he repented.

12. NOT SELF-WILLED. Some men are wholly unfitted for elders because they have an exalted view of their own opinions. They must have their way in arrogant disregard for the rights of others. They refuse to listen to pleas and reason. When they speak, others must jump. They issue edicts and ultimatums like royalty— the king can do no wrong! Such highhanded display of power will drive men from the faith, and some communities exhibit a trail of factions and splinter parties which eloquently testify to the rule or ruin spirit. Stubborn insistence on having one's own way, regardless of consequences, is not a commendable attribute for any, and certainly is a poor recommendation for an elder.

13. NOT SOON ANGRY. This relates to control of the emotions. Our word "anger" is from the Latin angorem, "compression of the neck," from angere, "to choke." The Greek term also means "to press tightly." Anger affects one adversely in a physical, mental and moral sphere. The digestive processes are stopped, the excess sugar in the body stagnates, and one takes the first steps toward dyspepsia when he becomes angry. It was found through actual tests on patients with stomach disorders, that the physician could increase the hydrochloric acid in the patient's stomach 300 per cent, by merely talking about a subject that made him angry.

A man who is violently angry is temporarily insane. He is deprived of the power to reason. He will say things which he would not think of saying or doing in calmer moments. Moreover, intense anger may actually make one a criminal in thought.

14. A LOVER OF GOOD MEN. The original philagathos, means a "lover of good" and may refer to good men or good things. The translation does no violence unless it places an undue limitation upon the intent of the apostle. All good men and all good things should appeal to a bishop and share in his respect and affection.

15. JUST. This means “fair, equitable, honorable.” It has to do with our relationship to others. We must be considerate and maintain the rights and dignity of those with whom we have dealings. Men in the eldership sometimes have two standards, one for self, and a second standard for others. If members of their own families are guilty of unbecoming conduct, it is hushed up or minimized; if others do the same thing they are made to publicly confess their errors. Such partiality is unfair and dishonorable. We must be honorable and equitable in all of our conduct and behavior. The “Golden Rule” has not been revoked or repealed.

(NOTE: In our next issue we shall deal with the question of domestic qualifications, and will answer the question, “Must an elder be a married man?”).

Smoking and Cancer

Mission Messenger (September 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

On July 19, the Associated Press released a statement from Dr. Ernest L. Wynder, of the Sloan-Kettering Institute for Cancer Research, to the effect that about 25,000 persons will die of lung cancer this year, and at least 80 per cent of the deaths could have been prevented if the patients had not smoked. In plain terms, this means that 20,000 persons will go to their graves this year as the result of lethal poison administered by their own hands. That is suicide!

In the face of this, the editor of “The Gospel Guardian” also released a statement about the same time to the effect that he had never been much concerned about the moral aspects of smoking, although he was becoming increasingly disturbed about the reports of the physical aspects as relates to tobacco as a causative factor in cancer. Is there no “moral aspect” about self-murder in gratification of physical lust? If it be argued that out of the millions of smokers, only 20,000 will thus die at their own hands, does that eliminate the moral aspect? If some foreign agent were to plant germs in the food of millions of our citizens would we exonerate him from guilt if only 20,000 suffered death?

Of the 20,000 who die this year from the habit of smoking, the great majority will be husbands and fathers. They will leave behind a vast retinue of weeping wives and crying children.

Many of these will follow in the pattern of the life of the deceased, so that they will continue to inhale the same noxious fumes which deprived them of their loved ones. Even before some depart from the cemetery they will light up their cigarettes and inhale the toxic tars which deprived them of a husband or father, and may eventually spell their own doom. Is there no “moral aspect” in this?

Beloved brethren in the Lord, do not permit your conscience to be soothed by smooth editorials or by pussyfooting preachers. While puffing away on your “Lucky Strike” look at your sweet little children or grandchildren playing about your feet. The day may come when you will weep scalding tears if one of them is taken into surgery and his body slashed open to have a bloody, cancerous lung cut from its moorings in the chest. If lung cancer strikes your family as a result of your folly, it will not be a “lucky strike.” Why don’t you quit today? Now is the accepted time! Throw off the chains of slavery. Be a man!

Must Elders Be Married? (1)

Mission Messenger (October 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

“Mias gunaikos andra.” These are words of Paul. They were written to both Timothy and Titus. They constitute one qualification for an elder. What do they mean? The King James Version translates them “the husband of one wife.” The Revised Standard Version says “married only once.” Does the expression mean that marriage is essential to being a bishop? Almost before the last apostle died this was a matter of controversy. It has continued to be so in every generation since. This question bothered the reformers of the nineteenth century, both here and abroad.

On Wednesday, August 4, 1880, the annual conference of Churches of Christ in Great Britain met at Huddersfield. Brother G. Y. Tickle presented a paper on “The Eldership.” Later, he published it in The Christian Advocate, of which he was editor. Here is an excerpt from the printed version:

I respectfully submit that there is nothing in the directions given to either Timothy or Titus to make it imperative that they should be married men, and that they should have children. . . . The one, as opposed to plurality, is evidently the emphatic word. But it may be asked, Does it not even in that case include the injunction that he must be a married man? Most assuredly not. If the apostle has before him a man with a plurality of wives and intends to exclude him from the eldership on that ground, you have no right to say that is equal to having a single man before him who is to be excluded simply on the ground of his being unmarried or a widower— for to be consistent the language must exclude both.

At the same time, Bro. David King was editor of the Ecclesiastical Observer. He took exception to the speech made at the conference. This provoked Bro. Tickle to write in the next edition of his paper as follows:

When we presented our paper on ‘The Eldership’ to the Annual Meeting we did not expect, and had no desire that it should escape the sifting of a full and fair criticism. We know that it is only by such means that the question can be lifted out of the ruts which a superficial exegesis has sunk for it, and be made to move forward on broad apostolic lines. That the Editor of the Ecclesiastical Observer should allow the whole of our positions, some of them so widely divergent from those he has accepted so many years as unassailable, to pass unchallenged, was not at all to be expected. We have felt, therefore, no surprise either as to the points of his attack, or to the manner in which the attack has been made, but we are bound to say we have never known the Editor so rash and heedless as he has shown himself in this critique on our paper.

After another rebuttal by Bro. King, the controversy was suspended by Bro. Tickle in these words:

We do not think it would be profitable to enter into further controversy on this subject. D. K. intimates that he is not satisfied with the reply in our last issue. We were not altogether satisfied with his attack and are not at all satisfied with his rejoinder. If we answered in the same vein, we are sure dissatisfaction would be increased on both sides. So we prefer to let the matter rest where it is, in the hope that the brethren may be enabled to look away from the men and their little contention to the question in its different phases and on its merits, carefully weighing all that has been advanced in the way of argument in the balances of truth and right reason.

Interest in the issue has been heightened in some sections of the disciple brotherhood in this country in the last two years. A Pennsylvania reader posed the following question to a fellow editor:

If a man has all the qualifications to be an elder except that he has no children, his wife being childless and thus he has no children through no fault of his own, would that in itself bar him forever to serve as elder?

The reply as published went far beyond the original question, for it would appear that the querist assumed that an elder must be married. But the editor responded in these words:

If brethren generally will be gracious enough not to hang me on Haman's gallows, I would like to say that I think we have stretched the domestic qualifications for bishops out of proportions. Paul's stipulations to Timothy and Titus deal with a 'normal' situation, and normally men old enough to be bishops are married and have children. But does Paul draw the line on bachelors or childless married men? I think not. Our straight-laced interpretations would bar even Paul himself from being an elder. The 'husband of one wife' qualification literally means a 'one-woman man,' which is likely a moral restriction against polygamy. Most all scholars take this view, if that means anything. The 'Church of Christ' stands almost alone in its idea that bishops must be married men, an interpretation that is linguistically weak. With such a liberal view I would, of course, say No to the above question. I am always amazed at brethren who think a man must be a husband and father in order to oversee a church, and yet believe that an evangelist who sets the church in order and trains men to be bishops can be either single or childless.

I was not disturbed by this reply. But I must admit that I was amazed at the reaction of many. They actually became emotionally upset and agitated. Instead of bringing forward proof to sustain their position and to show any fallacy in the reasoning of the editor, they began to whisper that he was unsound and unsafe. Some quit taking his paper on the ground that they did not want to read anything which disagreed with their position. My attitude is just the opposite of that. I have long ago determined that I do not learn by reading after those in perfect agreement with me. Those who are not, present things to challenge my thinking. They force me to re-evaluate my convictions. I am thus made to test all things so that I may retain what is good. Accordingly, when I read such an article I invariably follow a three-point program. First, I read it over very carefully to ascertain just what the author intends to convey; secondly, I examine such proofs as he presents by the proper criterion; thirdly, I formulate my own convictions in the light of my personal investigation.

For several months in MISSION MESSENGER I have been conducting a survey of the eldership. Having considered the moral qualifications of the presbyters, I have arrived at the place where I must deal with the domestic requirements. The first question is whether or not a man must be married to qualify. Strictly speaking, the question is what Paul intended to convey in the expression "mias gunaikos andra." That is what should concern us. We ought not to be interested primarily, in whether these words confirm a qualification we have set up. We must seek to find what qualification they set up. Since I am dealing at such length with an issue which may appear to my readers to be of minor importance, I offer as justification the fact that I am of the sober opinion that we can never restore the church of God to its ancient order without restoring the polity ordained by the holy apostles. Any matter related to the government of the congregation of saints is important. This particular one has taken on added importance at this time.

I am deeply indebted to, and appreciative of, the great scholars who have done so much in clearing the ground for those of us possessed of humbler intellects. I doubt that any person now living has a more profound respect for scholarship than the writer. Yet, I recognize that the mere fact that the “Church of Christ” stands almost alone in its idea that bishops must be married men, is not in itself, proof of either correctness or error in thinking. I shall seek to be objective and not concerned with the idea of any “church.” What did the inspired envoy of the Lord say, and what did he mean?

“Mias gunaikos andra.” In generations past men of great learning have held conflicting views. These words have been said to have the following connotations:

1. To forbid concubinage.
2. To forbid polygamy.
3. To forbid remarriage after divorce.
4. To forbid digamy, or deuterogamy (a second marriage after the death of the mate).
5. To demand that elders be married men.

At the outset, it must be admitted that most all scholars positively reject the last as being a proper interpretation. There are some notable exceptions to which we will later call attention. But it is likewise true that a careful poll of the same scholars may prove that a majority of them reject the idea that Paul was opposing polygamy by his statement. They believe rather that he was opposing deuterogamy, that is, a second marriage after death of a companion.

Goodspeed translates: “Only once married.” James Moffatt: “He must be married only once.” The Berkeley Version: “One wife’s husband,” with an added footnote: “If married at all.” The New Testament in Plain English has “Married only once.” The Revised Standard Version reads:

“Married only once,” with the footnote: “Greek the husband of one wife.”

On the original language itself, Kenneth S. Wuest, in his book on The Pastoral Epistles has this to say:

The two nouns are without the definite article, which construction indicates character or nature. The entire context is one in which the character of the bishop is being discussed. Thus one can translate ‘a one-wife sort of husband’ or ‘a one-woman sort of man.’ We speak of the Airedale as a one-man dog. We mean, by that, that it is his nature to become attached to only one man, his master. Since character is emphasized by the Greek construction, the bishop should be a man who loves only one woman as his wife. It should be his nature to thus isolate and centralize his love.

Edmund J. Wolff, D.D., Professor of Church History and New Testament Exegesis in the Theological Seminary, Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, says:

Public sentiment at the time looked with disfavor upon the contraction of marriage after the death of one’s consort. It was held to be unseemly, if not immoral. To forego a second wedlock was regarded as a mark of high moral strictness. Even the heathen deemed it unbecoming for a widow. It, therefore, behooved one about to step on the high pedestal of pastoral oversight to conform to public sentiment— as long as it was not sinful, and to set an example of self-restraint.

Henry Alford, D.D., one time Dean of Canterbury, concurs in this view as shown by his statement:

The view then which must I think be adopted is that . . . St. Paul forbids second marriage. He requires of them pre-eminent chastity, and abstinence from licence which is allowed to other Christians. How far such a prohibition is to be considered binding on us, now that the Christian life has entered into another and totally different phase, is of course an open question for the present Christian church at any time to deal with. It must be as a matter of course understood that regulations, in all lawful things, depend, even when made by an Apostle, on circumstances: and the superstitious observance of the letter in such cases is often pregnant with mischief to the people and the cause of Christ.

The reader is no doubt familiar with Vincent's Word Studies in the New Testament. In espousing the above position, the author says:

The opposition to second marriage became very strong in the latter part of the second century. It was elevated into an article of faith by the Montanists, and was emphasized by Tertullian, and by Athenagoras, who called second marriage 'a spurious adultery.'

Among the commentators who believe that the apostle was forbidding second marriages are Bloomfield, Wiesinger, Van Oosterzee, Huther, Ellicott, Wordsworth, and Faussett. There are a number of others who dissent from this view, among them H. H. Harvey, D.D., of Hamilton Theological Seminary, who declares:

It seems clear, therefore, that the disqualification here intended is not remarriage after the death of a wife, but polygamy, or the having at the same time more than one living wife.

To complicate this explanation, Alfred Plummer, M.A., D.D., affirms that:

Polygamy in the Roman Empire must have been very rare. It was forbidden by Roman law, which did not allow a man to have more than one lawful wife at a time, and treated every simultaneous marriage, not only as null and void, but infamous. When it was practiced, it must have been practiced secretly. It is possible that when St.

Paul wrote to Timothy and Titus, not a single polygamist had been converted to the Christian faith. Polygamists were exceedingly rare inside the Empire, and the Church had not yet spread beyond it.

As to the rarity of polygamy in the days of the apostles we have the testimony of E. F. Scott, Professor of Biblical Theology, Union Theological Seminary, New York.

This has sometimes been taken to imply that only married men were eligible, but a rule of this kind would be contrary to the whole passage, which deals with character rather than status. Neither can it be polygamy which is forbidden, for this was never practiced in the civilized regions of Asia Minor. Perhaps Moffatt is right in translating he must be married only once. . . . But perhaps the meaning is simply that a bishop must show an example of strict morality. As a man of mature years he would presumably be married, and in the married relation, above all others, he must be above reproach.

Edward Hayes Plumptre, D.D., Professor in King's College, London, suggests another alternative:

A third explanation is, perhaps, more satisfactory. The most prominent fact in the social life of both Jews and Greeks at this period was the frequency of divorce. This, as we know, Jewish teachers, for the most part, sanctioned on even trifling grounds (Matt. 5:31, 32; 19:3-9). The apostle, taking up the law which Christ had laid down, infers that any breach of that law (even in the case which made marriage after divorce just permissible) would at least so far diminish a man's claim to respect as to disqualify him for office.

Walter Lock, D.D., in The International Critical Commentary, reaches about the same conclusion:

To be unmarried would incur no reproach: such a requirement (marriage) would be scarcely consistent with the teaching of our Lord (Matt. 19:12) and of St. Paul (1 Cor. 7:7, 8); so the writer is only thinking of the character of a bishop, if married; as in verse 4 he deals only with his children, if he has children. . . . It also implies, and was probably meant to imply, not divorcing one wife and marrying another.

Paul E. Kretzmann, Ph.D., D.D., in Popular Commentary of the Bible, offers the following:

That a pastor lead a chaste and decent life, confining his attentions to his wife if he have one, as he normally will, not living in concubinage or bigamy, or rejecting a woman to whom he is lawfully betrothed for another.

N. J. D. White, D.D., in The Expositor's Greek Testament sets forth the view:

It does not mean that the episcopus must be, or have been married. What is here forbidden is digamy under any circumstances.

Nothing is more apparent to the researchist than the wide area of disagreement among the scholars. They are not agreed upon what the apostle meant. They are not even agreed upon what he did not mean. It is true that a majority take the position that Paul did not intend to set up the married state as requisite to office. On this point, we quote from R. C. H. Lenski, who says:

The emphasis is on one wife's husband, and the sense is that he have nothing to do with any other woman. He must be a man who cannot be taken hold of on the score of sexual promiscuity or laxity. It is plain that Paul does not say here that none but married men may enter the ministry, that every pastor must be married.

John Peter Lange, in his comments upon the passages under consideration, says:

The view that Paul speaks here only of the married state, as a conditio sine qua non for the episcopoi, or that he merely discourages anything unusual, immoral, or illegal in the married life of such officers, does not fully explain his language.

Scott's Bible agrees with the thought expressed by Lange and others, with the words:

Some have inferred from this text, that stated pastors ought to be married, as a prerequisite to their office; but this seems to be a mistake of a general permission, connected with a restriction, for an express command.

A. S. Peake, M.A., D.D., lends the weight of his opinion to the same view, saying of the passages:

Sometimes wrongly interpreted as alluding to polygamy or adultery, or of forbidding celibacy.

Professor T. Croskery, D.D., in The Pulpit Commentary, also declares:

It does not necessarily compel pastors to marry, like the Greek church. . . . It seems to mean that the pastor was to be 'the husband of one wife,' avoiding the polygamy that was then common among the Jews, and the system of divorce still so common in that age, and remaining faithful to the wife of his choice.

We need to be careful, lest we leave the impression that all of the commentators and historians are united in the view that Paul did not set up marriage as a qualification. Carlstadt, the illustrious contemporary of Luther, and the fiery reformer, who advocated that a destructive process was the only method of reform, was a notable exception. This man, who was anxious to introduce into ecclesiastical and civil affairs an unconditional adherence to the obvious and literal construction of the Scriptures, steadfastly contended that the bishops should be married men.

Thomas M. Lindsay, D.D., Principal of Glasgow College, in his book, “The Church and The Ministry in the Early Centuries,” says:

Titus is told that a presbyter or elder must be a man who is above suspicion, who is a faithful husband, and whose children are Christians of well-regulated lives.

In a footnote on the same page is contained the following explanation:

‘A faithful husband’ appears to be the best translation of mias gunaikos andre, one who acts on the principles of Christian morality and is not led astray by the licentious usages of the surrounding heathenism.

But Macknight in his work on “The Epistles” dissents from this view, in this language:

The direction I have been considering does not make it necessary, to one’s being a bishop, that he be a married person. . . . But the apostle’s meaning is, that if such a person be married, he must, as was observed above, have only one wife at a time

Albert Barnes concludes that the apostle intended to prohibit polygamy, but writes:

This need not be understood as requiring that a bishop should be a married man.

In the face of all of this contradictory material what is the honest student to do? What did the apostle actually mean by the terms he used? It is possible we may not be able, at this late date, to definitely determine, in the absence of more complete testimony. Certainly we should not be arbitrary or dogmatic in our personal views. We need to proceed with caution and becoming humility, lest we advance an interpretation, then make of it a creed, and proceed to disfellowship others because they will not bow to our will. There is a difference between what the apostle said and what men think that he meant.

It is an easy matter for us to ignore the results of research and investigation and cling to a traditional view without regard to its validity. But this is not an honest approach to the revealed word of heaven. One of our greatest difficulties is that, having taught a thing for so long, we become lifted up with pride. We feel that we cannot change for this would be an admission of error! Or, perhaps, we learn better, but conclude that silence is the better part of valor. If we remain still and say nothing on the issues that are raised, we can retain the plaudits of the masses; whereas, if we speak out boldly we may be hated and hounded as troublers of Israel.

The writer does not feel that he should suppress his honest views in order to please men. In the next issue those views will be clearly set forth and the reasons given for them. Those reasons may not satisfy all of our readers. They may be deemed as insufficient to justify the conclusion reached, but they will be presented in kindness and love, and those who differ will not be castigated nor driven out by the editor. It is our very fervent prayer that you shall read this review again very carefully and save this issue until the next appears. In the meantime, we believe that there is one thing of which all may be certain, and that is that the enforced celibacy of the Roman Church is contrary to the word of God.

Drawing the Line

Mission Messenger (October 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

In Old Paths Advocate, for September 1, 1957 occurs an article under the above heading, written by one of the editors, Bro. Homer L. King, and we reproduce it here because of its implications.

Now and then, a brother or even a few brethren will in haste, impatience, and impulsiveness decide that they want to disfellowship the brotherhood, all because the brotherhood does not see an issue, or more than probably, an imaginary issue or opinion just as they see it, or just because the brotherhood will not go along in the radical view and action, which has, as a rule, become a ‘hobby,’ the only important thing in the world— the one important thing above all others that needs to be preached and talked — dreamed of by night, thought of, and talked of by day. Remember, brethren, that just as long as we have different degrees of knowledge, there will of necessity be differences arise among brethren; but they should not, and need not, cause open division and disfellowshipping among brethren. My brother, think seriously, study much the word of God, and pray much and earnestly before you take such radical steps. You may be the one who is in the wrong. There are a few brethren and a church or two who disfellowship me, but they fellowship good brethren and churches who do fellowship me, and they use my fellow-preachers who fellowship me— what of consistency?

Bro. King is one of the leaders in a faction composed of brethren who make a test of fellowship out of sundry matters pertaining to the Lord's Supper and the grouping of brethren for the purpose of instructing them in the words of life. It is not our purpose to impugn the motives of these brethren. We are not questioning the fact that they are sincere, but we are convinced they are wrong in their concept of the body of Christ and the fellowship of the saints. We feel that a legalistic attitude toward the revelation of God's grace has caused them to erect walls where our Lord has made none, and thus, in spite of their honesty, they are thwarting the purpose of heaven.

There are two terms used by our brother in his thesis which are employed in a sense in which they are never used by the Holy Spirit. One is "brotherhood" and the other is "fellowship." To Bro. King "the brotherhood" consists of those who subscribe to the policies and programs of the editors of Old Paths Advocate. "The brotherhood" of the new covenant scriptures embraces every person on this earth who has acknowledged the divine Sonship of Jesus of Nazareth and who has been immersed in His name on the basis of that faith. Much of the brotherhood has not even heard of some of the issues over which Brother King would "disfellowship" them, and they are wholly unaware that a few brethren have impulsively decided to "disfellowship the brotherhood." We need to face up to the fact that those who claim to represent the body of our Lord have created a whole bunch of "brotherhoods" and the title brother is not bestowed because of our relationship to the same Father, but because we subscribe to the same "hobby."

Bro. King should not too severely criticize those who decide "they want to disfellowship the brotherhood" for he made the same decision, but actually the whole problem relates to what constitutes fellowship as God regards the word. Once the scriptural connotation is understood, no one will ever again use the expression "disfellowship the brotherhood."

Our brother needs to be commended for a recognition of the fact that so long as there are various degrees of knowledge, there will be differences among brethren, but these need not cause division “and disfellowshipping.” His prescription for serious thought, copious study and earnest prayer, is certainly excellent and needs to be heeded by all of us. In view of this expressed attitude and recognizing that differences need not cause division, I make the proposal to the brethren who compose “the brotherhood” of which Bro. King writes that we meet for three days of earnest prayer, serious study, and sincere meditation, with a view to begin a healing of the breaches which have troubled the restoration movement. I will recognize and treat them as brethren, and will manifest a love for them in Christ, so that if we cannot come closer together I will certainly not widen the gap between us. Perhaps we have been held apart over an attitude that is wholly without justification. Let us explore means of working together. I await their proposal for implementation of such a meeting for prayer, study and meditation with a view to coming closer together.

A Serious Charge

Mission Messenger (October 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

A brother in the southland has become seriously upset by my reference to “The Church of Christ” of which he is a “Minister” as a sect. He bitterly reproaches me for branding the New Testament church for which Jesus died, as a sect. Of course, I did not do that. I am fully aware that the church of God is not, and cannot be a sect. The trouble with my brother is, that like the Roman Catholic priest, he confuses his sect with the church of God mentioned in the Word.

I unhesitatingly charge that the church with which my brother is affiliated, is no different in practice, than the other modern sects about us. I can demonstrate the following and present the proof when it is demanded.

1. “The Church of Christ” has a specially trained clergy and that clergy constitutes the policy making body in every major center of the nation.

2. “The Church of Christ” has its theological seminaries.

3. “The Church of Christ” has its boards for property control, and these hold titles and deeds to property used by congregations even in foreign countries.

4. “The Church of Christ” has annual conventions under guise of lectureships, and at these conventions foreign and domestic missionaries make their reports, dinners are given in honor of the clergymen, band and orchestra concerts are provided, special choirs are featured, churches present exhibits of their handiwork, and pressure groups operate to control matters of faith and doctrine.

5. “The Church of Christ” has its missionary societies functioning regularly with funds pooled from numerous congregations which have mailed them to the headquarters.

6. “The Church of Christ” has its central bureau for national and international propaganda by radio and television.

7. “The Church of Christ” has its centralized charitable and eleemosynary boards for administration of its funds to the needy and destitute.

8. “The Church of Christ” has its parochial school system patterned in principle after those of the Roman Catholic and Lutheran bodies.

9. “The Church of Christ” has its district headquarters, with the editors of its journals in those headquarters serving as an ex officio board of censorship in matters of faith and doctrine.

10. “The Church of Christ” employs the boycott and various subversive means to keep its sectarian position from being exposed to its shame and disgrace.

These are but a few things which come to mind at once, which demonstrate that “The Church of Christ” is not a restoration of the primitive congregation of saints, but has degenerated into a twentieth century sect, employing all the means and methods of any other sect. We sympathize with the thousands of our humble brethren who are exploited for gain in this great institution, and we recognize that there are many congregations of saints who designate themselves as “Churches of Christ” and are not sectarian in concept or practice.

It takes more than a belief in water baptism and opposition to instrumental music in worship to constitute a church of God of the new covenant pattern. We ask you to remember the things listed above when you hear a clergyman of “The Church of Christ” (generally presented as a “local preacher” or “located evangelist”) assault the members of the religious community in a radio speech, and abuse them because they do not subscribe to “Church of Christism.” It brings our hearts no joy to report the state of this body of “New Digressives.” But truth is truth, and we can prove what we have here written. It should never be forgotten that Rome exists today as proof of what happens to a church of Christ when it starts to apostatize.

What will be the result? Will “The Church of Christ” repent and return to the original pattern? All history testifies to the contrary! She is now in the grasp of big business men, great promoters, and mercenaries. She will continue to digress farther and farther from the pattern, growing ever more sectarian in concept, developing an attitude of exclusiveness and bigotry, until God’s people will have to come out of her that they be not partaker of her sins. We are sorry our brother is offended at us for telling the truth about his position, but we love the church of Christ too much to allow a substitute to go unchallenged!

Making Allowances

Mission Messenger (October 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

“Accept life with humility and patience, making allowances for each other because you love each other. Make it your aim to be at one in the Spirit, and you will inevitably be at peace with one another. You will belong to one Body of which there is one Spirit, just as you all experienced one calling to one hope.”

That is the rendering of the first few verses of Ephesians 4, in “Letters to Young Churches,” by J. B. Phillips. I think that these paragraphs need to be in our hearts a great deal in these days when some few are laboring to “restore the restoration.” I thought of them when I read a little paper It Is Written, edited by Brother J. W. Bedingfield, at Carlsbad, New Mexico. A couple of brethren, Spurlin and Weakley, had recently presented some views in opposition to the setting of the Lord’s Table twice on the same day. A Brother J. S. Bedingfield felt called upon to reply, which caused the editor to state his policy with reference to the publication of articles so contradictory in nature. In summation he said:

As in this case, I have spent many happy hours talking with both Bro. J. S. and Bro. Weakley, on the scriptures and I am sure both know that we do not agree 100% on all points, yet we continue to study and work and pray together.

In the same issue, a Bro. W. E. Daniels asks and answers the question, "Is it all right to meet with Cups and Sunday School and Individual Bread Breakers, if there is no loyal church in reach?" He proceeds then to show that to do so would be the equivalent of accepting sprinkling for baptism if there was not enough water near in which to be buried. Several things are apparent in this. (1) Our brethren make a test of fellowship out of the manner of serving the Lord's Supper, the grouping of students for investigation of the sacred oracles, and whatever the last implies. I do not know if I am an "Individual Bread Breaker" or not, for I do not know what the brother is talking about. (2) The loyalty of a congregation is determined by its subscription to several items of an unwritten creed, and not by its relationship to God through the blood of His dear Son. Unless a congregation of saints would be willing to un-Christianize every group of saints on earth who did not agree with them 100% on these matters, regardless of the wide divergencies on a thousand other things, they would not even be recognized as children of God.

I have previously charged that the espousal of a factional and party spirit results in a twisting and wresting of the revealed will of God to sustain the partisan position, and in sorrow, I record that the same is true in this case. To prove that it is wrong to meet with brethren such as are designated, the writer cites 1 Cor. 2:12-13; 1 Cor. 3:3-5; and Galatians 2:11-14, which have no connection near or remote to the question of meeting with brethren who employ individual cups to distribute the drink element to the saints, classes in which to teach students, or some form of breaking the loaf. But the second one does condemn the brother who writes, in stirring words: "For ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men?" The holding of the views which are his, does not bring my brother under condemnation, but the creating of a party around those views does, and that is exactly what he has done, for his article is written to espouse the party spirit.

But the apparent thing about all of our modern factionism, and all of us have been tainted with it, is the fact that it creates inconsistency. Not a single one of the factions in the disciple brotherhood has perfect agreement among its constituents. The brethren in every one of them disagree about many things, but so long as they are agreed on the one thing which is the test of loyalty, that is all that is required. They can disagree about our relation to civil government, about going to war, about marriage and divorce— and a hundred other things— but if they adhere to the party line they will not be purged. Let one get weak on that and he is soon mustered out.

Bro. Bedingfield admits there is a three way division among three brethren as relates to the Lord's Supper. Bro. Weakley does not agree with Bro. J. S. and Bro. J. W. does not agree with either. "Yet we continue to study and work and pray together." Why can we not do the same on other phases of difference about the Supper? Which is greatest, the memorial of our Lord and the fellowship of his body and blood, or our own little cavillings about the manner of passing it? Is it not time that we measure up to the greatness, majesty, dignity and nobility which befits the citizens of the kingdom?

Our Plea

Mission Messenger (October 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

We plead for the following things in these days of departure and dissension.

1. The new covenant scriptures as a revelation of the will of the absent King, and as an all-sufficient rule of faith and practice.

2. A restoration of the primitive order as set forth by the apostles of Jesus the Messiah, in its fulness and simplicity, as essential to the maintenance of a proper relationship with God the Father.

3. The one body of our Lord, composed of every immersed penitent believer in the world, as opposed to human religious parties which segregate, separate and divide the people of God.

4. The priesthood of all believers, in practice as well as theory, and the rights and prerogatives accruing to all from such a priesthood.

5. The mutual ministry of the community of saints, utilizing every talent of every member, to the glory of God and the extension of His kingdom.

This plea, by its very nature, places us under obligation to oppose the following things which are in opposition to that plea.

1. Every human creed, written or unwritten, which seeks to bind upon the hearts of men that which God has not legislated, or to set up any opinion, doctrine or dogma of man as a basis for, or a test of, fellowship.

2. Every modern institution or device created by human wisdom to do the work which God has legislated as in the realm of the divine organism, and which, by its very existence, infringes upon the functions of that organism.

3. Every sect, denomination, faction or party which exalts any theory or opinion, to the division of the body of Christ, regardless of its name, prestige, power or influence.

4. Any semblance of special clergy, whether manifested in a hierarchy of prelates, or in a system of “located ministers” who are accorded special rights, encomiums, and privileges, denied to other faithful servants of the Lord.

5. The creation of a system in which an evangelist is called in from the gospel field, and hired as “the Minister” of a congregation, and thus becomes the pastor, employed to edify, train and exhort the saints, in a congregation having bishops or elders.

Our contention and our plea is based upon a positive conviction that it will avail us nothing to propose, devise, construct or establish any organization in the realm of the spirit, which is without warrant from God, and not authorized in His revelation. Here we stand!

Must Elders Be Married? (2)

Mission Messenger (November 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

In our first article on this subject, published in MISSION MESSENGER last month, we reviewed the positions taken by various scholars. We urge you to read it as a preparation for this second article. It will demonstrate the great differences that exist as to the meaning of the language used by the apostle. It will also show that only a small minority of scholars entertain the view that marriage is a requisite for the eldership.

Those of us who have always contended that a bishop must be married should face up courageously to the difficulties which must be met in the defence of that position. Let me cite but a few. Jesus speaks with commendation of those who “have made themselves eunuchs for the sake of the kingdom of heaven” (Matt. 19:12). I understand this to refer to those who desist from marriage to advance the kingdom. Is it logical that one who deprives himself of marriage for the sake of the kingdom, should be deprived of an office or function in that kingdom, on the basis that he is not married? Again, we learn from the scriptures that continency is a gift (Matt. 19:11) and that it is a special gift from God (1 Cor. 7:7). Shall a man be barred from the eldership because he exercises this gift, or, if he desires the office of bishop, must he deny the gift of God?

The expression “husband of one wife” as relates to the bishop, is on par with the expression “wife of one husband” as pertains to the widow in 1 Timothy 5:9. It is generally conceded, we believe, that the latter expression means that a widow is not to have married again after the death of her husband. In view of this, is it not implied that Paul, instead of setting up marriage as a qualification, was simply stating that no twice married man could qualify? If it be agreed that “husband of one wife” is a correct rendering, is the emphasis to be placed upon “husband” or “one.” If we were laying down a qualification of marriage for a position, would we say that a man had to be the husband of one wife? If Paul intended to establish marriage as a requisite to office, why did he not use the word for “married” since he was familiar with it and employed it frequently?

On the other hand, we should not feel that this is the only position beset with problems. Those who settle upon other meanings also have difficulties which they must meet. Certainly the language employed by the apostle meant something, and it meant just one thing when written. It is not a fair or wise approach to say that it could have included a number of various things, for this spirit would do despite to all interpretation, and it is the resort of shallow thinkers and surface reasoners who do not handle the word skillfully.

In presenting my own view as to the question in our heading, I must admit that I do so with some reluctance which I did not feel five years ago. Always before, when writing upon this topic, I have been bold, forward and positive. I merely stated my position derived from years of traditional teaching. It never occurred to me that any person would be so rash as to question it. I admit that I did not strive to find out what the apostle meant, for I thought I already knew. Now that I am again faced with the necessity of declaring my thoughts I find myself both humbled and hesitant. Yet I cannot be true to my readers without expressing my feelings.

My conclusion is that a bishop should be a married man. This is in opposition to the world’s scholarship. It may seem presumptuous to array myself against the battery of great reasoners whose opinions I have cited. Surely I must present the bases for arriving at such a conclusion. I know these will be attacked and sifted, and they should be. It may be proven that they are inadequate and insufficient to justify my position. I submit them in all honesty and sincerity. They are my own. I have not consulted with others on the matter. No one else need be charged with them. My only justification in disagreeing with the scholars is that “God hath chosen the foolish to confound the wise.” Here are the reasons which lead me to believe that bishops should be married.

1. The primitive community of saints, being Jewish, was patterned after the synagogue in government. It is my personal feeling that the synagogue, which was a spontaneous production of the Babylonian exile, was used of God to cushion the shock of transition from Judaism to Christianity. This theme I hope to develop in a future book if God spares my life. At the present, it is sufficient to say that all scholars of note agree that the congregation in Jerusalem was a Messianic synagogue, with its permanent form of government developing along the lines with which the people were familiar. Out of the great bulk of material before me, I present statements from two writers of note.

The first quotation is from Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, D.D., Dean of Westminster, in his “Lectures on the History of the Jewish Church,” Vol. 3, Page 409:

And thus, inasmuch as the synagogue existed where the Temple was unknown, and remained when the Temple fell, it followed that from its order and worship, and not from that of the Temple, were copied, if not in all their details, yet in the general features, the government, the institutions, and the devotions of those Christian communities, which springing directly from the Jewish, were in the first instance known as ‘synagogues’ and afterward by the adoption of an almost identical word ‘Ecclesia,’ assembly house.

The second quotation will be found in “The Temple Dictionary of the Bible” by W. Ewing, M.A., and J. E. H. Thomson, D.D., under the article “Synagogue.”

It is not difficult to trace the foundation and practice of the Apostolic Church to the Synagogue system, and to see that we have nothing to do with the Temple worship, which was meant to be unique and to be devoted to the sacrificial ritual. . . . Every detail of the Primitive Church organization is synagoga— the equality of elders and rulers (Acts 20:17, 28), the episcopal power vested in the presbyters, the daily ministration (Acts 6:1), the matter of collections, the use of the word angel (Rev. 2:1) for the presiding elder, and the general order of Christian worship: all are synagoga and presbyterian.

It should not be necessary to tell the serious student that the last word in the quotation has no reference to a denomination in the Protestant world, but to a form of government.

The Jewish disciples were familiar with the rule of elders in the synagogue. (See MISSION MESSENGER, June 1957, page 8). It is conceivable that when the apostles visited a synagogue and reasoned from the Jewish Scriptures, proving that Jesus of Nazareth was the Messiah, the entire synagogue might be converted, in which case there would be no necessity of a change of government, worship or procedure, except the addition of the Lord's Supper. But the Jews had a high regard for the married state and the home. For that reason they taught that a priest should be neither unmarried or childless, lest he be unmerciful.

Dr. Alfred Edersheim, D.D., Ph.D., in an article on “Marriage Among the Hebrews,” says:

Thus viewed, marriage was considered almost a religious duty, that is, not from lust, nor for beauty, nor yet merely for wealth. For whatever woman was, either for good or bad, she was always superlatively. Stringing together several portions of Scripture, it was argued that an unmarried man was without any good (Gen. 2:18), without joy (Deut. 14:26), without blessing (Ezek. 44:30); without protection (Jer. 31:22), without peace (Job 5:24); indeed, could not properly be called a man (Gen. 5:22).

The same writer in his “Jewish Social Life in the Days of Christ” has this to say:

We can understand how, before the coming of the Messiah, marriage should have been looked upon as of religious obligation. Many passages of Scripture were at least quoted in support of this idea. Ordinarily, a young man was expected to enter the wedded state (according to Maimonides) at the age of sixteen or seventeen, while the age of twenty may be regarded as the utmost limit conceded, unless study so absorbed time and attention as to leave no leisure for the duties of married life. Still it was thought better even to neglect study than to remain single.

In the same book, the author, himself a Jew who came to believe in the Messiah, has this to say about those who had charge of the conduct of public worship, as well as of the government and discipline of the synagogues:

They were men learned in the law and of good repute, whom the popular voice designated, but who were regularly set apart by ‘the laying on of hands,’ or the ‘Semichah,’ which was done by at least three, who had themselves received ordination. . . . The special qualifications for the office of Sanhedrist, mentioned in the Rabbinical writings, are such as to remind us of the directions of St. Paul to Timothy (1 Tim. 3:1-10).

Our next authority is C. D. Ginsburg, LL.D., who writes in “Early Attendance at the Sanctuary” as follows:

It was deemed most desirable that he who acts as the mouthpiece of the people should be able to sympathize with the wants of the people, and should possess those moral and mental qualifications which became so holy a mission. The canon law, therefore, laid it down that ‘even if an elder or sage is present in the congregation, he is not to be asked to officiate before the ark; but that man is to be delegated to officiate who has children, whose family are free from vice, who has a proper beard, whose garments are decent, who is acceptable to the people, and who has a good and amiable voice, who understands to read properly the Law, the Prophets, and the Hagiographa, and who knows all the benedictions of the service’ (Mishna Taanith, 2:2). How strikingly this illustrates the apostolic injunction, ‘A bishop must be blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of good behavior, and modest . . . one that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity, . . . not a novice, . . . he must have a good report of them that are without’ (1 Tim. 3:1-7, with Titus 1:1-9).

It would not have been necessary to set forth marriage as one of the qualifications for the presbyters who were selected by the congregation at Jerusalem and appointed to administer the affairs of the community of saints. The brethren who constituted that community were all Jews. They regarded themselves as a synagogue of disciples of the Nazarene. Their superintendents and administrators selected by popular voice would be married men. And we believe that this pattern would be followed in other congregations, even those remote from Palestine. “For ye, brethren, became followers of the churches of God which in Judea are in Christ Jesus” (1 Thess. 2:14).

2. The whole tenor of the teaching seems to indicate that a presbyter will be a married man. It may be argued that a definite rule of marriage based upon the mere statement “mias gunaikos andros” is linguistically weak, but we do not think it will be seriously disputed that the context relates to one who is domestically situated as the head of a household. And just as a gem loses part of its luster out of the setting designed for it, so it is sometimes difficult to appreciate fully a passage isolated from the general frame in which it is placed.

Edward Hayes Plumptre, D.D., Professor in King's College, London, has this to say:

Both this verse and verse 4 appear to take marriage for granted. It is obvious that in a community much exposed to the suspicions or the slanders of the heathen, this would be a safeguard against many of the perils to which a celibate clergy have always been exposed.

Much along the same vein is the statement of J. R. Dummelow, M.A., Queen's College, Oxford, who says the expression probably means that a presbyter must be faithful to his wife, "a man of one woman." He adds, "In any case the presbyter or bishop is contemplated as a married man."

3. The Holy Spirit presents an analogy in which the home, or household, sustains a relation to the congregation of God, and it is in ruling the first that one demonstrates his ability to govern the second. A presbyter must "rule well his own house." He must have "his children in subjection with all gravity." The purpose of this qualification is not to determine his ability to beget offspring but to afford a demonstration of his ability to govern them. The argument is that "If he know not how to rule his own house how shall he take care of the church of God?" The word for house is oikos "the inmates of a house, all the persons forming one family, a household." A part of this family are children. In ruling them, the candidate for the eldership shows his ability to govern. If he is not married and has no children how can he demonstrate this ability? How can the congregation know he will be able to take care of the church of God if they have never seen a demonstration of his ability in a household? Can a congregation select a man to govern the church of God who has not demonstrated ability to rule his own house, including his children?

But what about the argument that by setting up marriage as a qualification, Paul would render himself, Barnabas, and Timothy, disqualified for the office? We propose to allow David King to answer this.

We consider that either polygamy or celibacy disqualifies for the eldership. It has been urged that celibacy cannot do so, as, in that case, Paul and Timothy would have been disqualified; certainly they would, and there is no evidence they were not. No one can produce proof that they were qualified for the elder's office, and nowhere are we taught that the qualifications for an apostle, an evangelist, and an elder are the same. On the point now immediately under notice, nothing could be more fitting than that apostles and evangelists, whose work largely required them to move from place to place, and generally rendered impossible a settled home, should be unmarried; while on the other hand, nothing is more seemly and desirable than that overseers in one church, whose duties require settled residence and involve frequent interposition between husband and wife, parents and children, should themselves be married men, who have given evidence that they understand and rightfully deport themselves in that relationship. No one can fail to see that such, other circumstances being equal, could not but present a fitness for the office which the unmarried are without. This is our conclusion after years of thoughtful investigation, and after reading, perhaps, all that can be said on either side.

What should be our attitude toward brethren who honestly differ from us and who think that we make a rigid interpretation without proper justification? Here is how Brother King resolved that issue.

Still the fact remains, that thoughtful, learned, pious brethren conclude that it is not certain that the intention is wider than the exclusion of the polygamist, and, therefore, they decline to reject an unmarried man who is, in all other respects, qualified. Now, we are not prepared to say that these brethren must of necessity be wrong. That they are wrong we have little or no doubt, but the impossibility of their being right is not here affirmed. How then shall the difficulty be met? Each church must meet it for itself, and the understanding of the majority must prevail. Not that the church shall decree what the interpretation shall be; but that each member determine for himself, whether the person, or persons, named has, or have, the required qualifications; each to determine this according to his own understanding of the terms, and the declared will of the majority must be taken as the church-recognition or non-recognition of the fitness of the men submitted for their judgment. But just here comes in an important consideration, which to some extent should influence the decision. There is perfectly safe and certain ground. If only those are ordained who possess the other qualifications and who also are married, everyone will know that the requirements are fully met. Thus perfectly safe and reliable ground invites to occupation.

What course shall I pursue personally? Since starting this series I have learned of a group of brethren in another part of the world who do not consider marriage as a necessary qualification. They will not reject a man who is otherwise qualified but has never married. Suppose I should visit them and labor among them, as I have been invited to do. Would I seek to divide them over this issue? Indeed I would not! If asked to explain my position I would offer my interpretation in meekness and humility. I would avoid becoming dogmatic or arbitrary. I would not tell them that I could not worship with them, nor serve under an eldership, with one or more constituents unmarried. I could not conscientiously appoint such a brother to office with my present attitude, but I would not make an unwritten creed of my interpretation and divide brethren into “a married elder faction,” and “an unmarried elder faction.” If I have not grown much in knowledge in recent years I trust that I have at least grown in grace.

To any of my brethren, at home or abroad; to those who fellowship me and those who do not; I would like to say that I will be pleased to read anything you have to say on this issue which may help to throw additional light on the matter. I do not solicit your personal opinions, for I have more of my own than I know what to do with. But if there is some scripture I have overlooked, or some point of logic or reasoning I have failed to see, you will be my friend if you point out my shortcoming, and call my mistakes to my attention. I want to be right above all things else. I am willing to learn from any person who can teach me.

God willing, I shall deal with the questions concerning the children of bishops in my next issue. I trust that you will look forward to that, and that God may bless us all with a deeper insight into His revelation of truth.

Report of a Trip

Mission Messenger (November 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

In Charleston, West Virginia, a congregation meets at the corner of Boulevard W., at Vine Street. It bears the name "Boulevard Church of Christ." Clinton Looney is the minister. The advertisement in the church column of the Sunday newspapers bears the caption, "An Undenominational Body of Christians." On the bulletin board inside the auditorium is a list of "Loyal Churches of Christ in Florida." All of these use instrumental music in public worship. They are "loyal" because they do not support the United Christian Missionary Society.

A few blocks away, in easy walking distance, is another "Church of Christ" at the corner of Park Avenue and Main Street. Vestal Chaffin is their minister. The advertisement in the telephone directory carries the caption "No Instrumental Music." Bro. Chaffin will also list for you the "loyal churches." They are the ones that do not endorse instrumental music.

In the same locality are other "Churches of Christ" and they will provide you a list of "loyal" churches in any locality. They are the ones who do not use individual containers in distributing the Lord's Supper, and where students are not grouped for instruction in the sacred oracles. In short, here are three groups in one community which will give you a list of "loyal" churches of Christ, and no two lists will contain even one of the same congregations. To what are they "loyal"? In passing, it needs to be remarked that I would not be recognized as “loyal” by either group, whatever that means!

Bro. Chaffin does not regard the members of the Boulevard Church of Christ as his brethren. He is concerned as to whether he ought to “accept their baptism” if they become convinced that instrumental music is wrong and want to join his congregation. He thinks they ought to allow him to re-baptize them, because they were born in Babylon, and therefore, are not really the children of God. In this he is joined by a fellow-clergyman in the area, Charles Garner, the minister of the Belle, West Virginia, “Church of Christ.” Charles doubts that those who were immersed by a Christian Church preacher should be considered as brethren. They were baptized into a sect. The truth is that all three of these abortive groups resulting from the restoration movement look upon each other as sects and they are all correct, in the fair meaning of the term.

I talked at length with Bros. Garner and Chaffin, while in Charleston recently, and went over to see Brother Looney, although without success. However, I did go down to Bluefield, Virginia, to attend a session of the Mountain States Christian Convention. I had several objectives in mind. I wanted to hear my former grade school teacher and good friend, Lee Carter Maynard, who was one of the scheduled speakers. I wanted to observe first-hand the use made of musical instruments, and I wanted to see a convention in progress for comparison with some of the college lectureships. All of my objectives were accomplished.

The convention hardly compared with those held annually under auspices of David Lipscomb College. In an attempt to achieve informality by indulging in levity, some of the participants hardly maintained the dignity associated with messengers of the King. The first speech had to do with “The Problem of Stewardship” and as usual the speaker limited the term to money. He held forth tithing, thus demonstrating that the Judaistic party has not wholly died out.

There has been a great change wrought in the arguments used to defend the use of instrumental music in public worship since the day of its introduction. The instruments were brought in on one basis; their present proponents seek to keep them in on a wholly different one. The modern argument is that the instrument is not used in the worship, but is merely an aid in keeping the pitch. It is argued that if you can use a tuning fork to get the pitch, you can use a piano to keep it, and that it is only an aid, as a songbook is an aid. The practice does not coincide with the argument.

In addition to “aiding the singers” it was also used to “maintain the pitch” in the collection. After a spirited talk in which the dangers of torment were held out to those who did not give that night, several men started out with collection plates and the pianist started out with “It Pays to Serve Jesus.” The music was also started again at the close of the benediction to “aid” in emptying the auditorium.

As an unbiased observer I can testify that the singing was not as well rendered as that at Freed-Hardeman College when I debated Bro. G. C. Brewer on the right of that institution to exist. It is possible that the brethren have used the instrument as an “aid” until it has become “a crutch.” I noted that the one who played had to watch the song leader to keep up with his tempo. I feel that some of the good sincere brethren wish the instrument had never been introduced but since it has, they have to defend it or be tagged as “non-instrument,” a term which, among them, is next to slander. It is like an unwanted baby, which since its birth, has to be nourished and cared for! The brethren have to alter their defense for it like “The Church of Christ” has to alter the charters of their Bible Colleges, not to harmonize with the word of God, but to enable them to debate the other side.

The theme of the convention was “The New Testament Church; the Answer to Every Problem.” The program stated “It’s high time the 20th century church began taking advantage of the divinely inspired answers to the questions that plague the church today.” I am convinced that the last thing the brethren want is to see a real restoration of the New Testament church. That is true of all three groups or factions in Charleston. They all have what they want and they will defend it regardless of consequences. I met Edsil Dale at the convention. He is the minister of Fairview Christian Church at Carthage, Missouri. He handed me a couple of his bulletins. In one there was a list of twelve men nominated in a primary election. The members were to vote on eight for elders to serve the coming year. So long as such practices are tolerated and condoned the brethren will continue closer to Babylon than Jerusalem. It is time that honest seekers after truth, arise in all of these factions, and “restore the restoration.”

A Wine Party

Mission Messenger (November 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

A recent exchange carries a plaintive letter which indicates how rife is the party spirit and how factious men may become under the guise of loyalty. A California subscriber wrote to the editor:

I have been running references on the Communion for a long time, and I honestly believe Wine is what should be used in the Communion Service. Since I've decided Wine should be used, for a long time I've not been going anywhere to Church. I wish I had somewhere to worship, where they use Wine. But everybody here uses grape juice. Maybe some day I can go where they use Wine.

With the spirit and attitude expressed, it will make little difference if the writer goes anywhere or not, for he indicates that he is walking after the flesh and not after the Spirit. Among the works of the flesh which are said to be plain are mentioned "selfishness, dissension, and the party spirit." He has built a party around the state or condition of the liquid served at the royal feast, and now seeks to un-Christianize every child of God who does not bow to his regulation. His problem is not over using grape juice. It is over the processing of it, or how long it has been left uncovered. Wine is grape juice! To rend and tear, to cut and slash the blessed body of God's dear Son, over such matters is almost unthinkable. What will men not do when driven by selfishness and a factious spirit?

The brother has not learned his divisive way by “running references on the Communion,” for the Lord’s Supper is, nowhere called “the communion.” It is a part of the communion or fellowship of the saints, but every act we do in joint service is part of the communion. The Lord’s Supper is the communion of the body and blood of the Lord, but to call it “the communion” is as misleading as to talk about “going to church.” It is the church which does the going!

It is sinful to split the body of Christ into wrangling parties over the very Supper which the Son of God ordained as an expression of corporate fellowship. The word of God does not say if the grape juice shall be fermented or unfermented, if the bread shall be leavened or unleavened. I shall not refuse to eat or drink with my brethren over the state of the bread or grape juice, or over some manner of breaking the loaf or distributing the drink element. We need to rise above these partisan divisions and look unto Jesus!

Elders and Children

Mission Messenger (December 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

The question of whether or not elders must have children in order to qualify has long been discussed. The editor humbly submits his views on this issue in the form of questions and answers.

1. Is it your position that a man must be married to qualify as an elder?

Yes, and I gave my reasons for so thinking in the November edition of this paper. I admit there are difficulties presented by this position, but it seems to fulfill the requirements better than any other. Those who desire to study the opposite view, and all should do so, may see it set forth by Bro. Ralph Graham, in Bible Talk.

2. Do you think that an elder must have children?

Yes, I do, because he is contemplated as the head of a family, or household, and he must demonstrate his ability to take care of the church of God by ruling his own family well (1 Tim. 3:5). In connection therewith, it is said he must have his children in subjection with all gravity.

3. Does the term children imply a plurality, or could a man with one child serve, if he possesses the other qualifications?

The word “children” does not necessitate a plurality. It is used in its common application, and neither legally, naturally, or in the Old and New Testaments does it convey the idea of a compulsory plurality.

4. Can you illustrate what you mean by “legally” and “naturally”?

Yes. In this state, there is a law which stipulates that “All parents having children under the age of sixteen years must enroll them in school.” Could parents having only one child evade that law? Indeed not!

In normal conversation we use the term “children” in the same fashion. If the Parent-Teachers Association invites to a meeting all parents who have children enrolled in the school, it certainly would not be limited to those who had two or more in school.

5. Give us examples in the Old and New Testaments to illustrate your view.

A good case in point is that of Sarah, at the birth of Isaac. “And she said, Who would have said unto Abraham, that Sarah should have given children suck? for I have born him a son in his old age” (Gen. 21:7). Here the term “children” is certainly equivalent to “a son.”

In 1 Timothy 5:4 “any widow who has children” is to be supported by them. This certainly would not eliminate one son or daughter from any obligation, for that would contradict verses 8 and 16 where the singular is employed. Such examples could be multiplied far beyond our space to accommodate them.

6. If a couple having no children of their own, adopt children, would this satisfy the requirements?

Certainly it would. The qualification is not based upon a man's physical ability to beget offspring, but upon his ability to rule or govern the family circle. A wife might be sterile even though her husband was not. If a couple adopts children and they demonstrate ability to rear them in subjection, the qualification is met.

7. Then why could not a man qualify by teaching public school and governing children?

Because the relationship sustained in a school is different than that in a home, and the government of a congregation is analogous to that of a home. There is more to "ruling a household" than maintaining youngsters in subjection. That is but one phase of it. An elder will be called upon to counsel and advise in domestic difficulties involving husbands and wives, parents and children, employers and employees, etc. It is to qualify him to deal objectively with all such cases that he must be the head of a household so he may know "how to care for the church of God."

8. Do the scriptures teach that an elder's children must be members of the church, in order for him to qualify?

I do not think so. I believe that the statement "having faithful children" in Titus 1:6, is misunderstood by a lot of people. Of course, I may be in error about it myself, but I merely give my view of it, after making very careful and earnest study, as objectively as I know how to do so.

9. Do not most of the modern translations imply that the expression means "children who are Christians"?

Yes. Some of them even use the expression. For instance, The Twentieth Century New Testament says, "Whose children are Christians." But this is not a translation. It is a commentary. It expresses what the translators thought the apostle meant, not what he said. There is no word for "Christian" in the text, and it is not a translation to use this word for the term that does appear.

10. Does not Thayer in his lexicon say the term means one who has become convinced that Jesus is the Messiah and the author of salvation?

Actually, Thayer does not say that. He merely translates the words of Prof. Grimm to that effect. Strictly speaking, belief in Jesus is not included in this word at all. It simply means “trustworthy, of good fidelity,” and relates to one who can be relied upon. There is not one thing in the term itself to indicate belief in any specific person, proposition or thing.

11. Then why did the lexicographers assign it a specific application?

That is easily understood. The term pistos appears in a New Testament framework or background. In many cases, it has to do with a state of conviction relative to Jesus as the Messiah. The lexicographers of New Testament usage would obviously slant their thinking in that direction in any case of question. I think they have done so here. They thought the contextual usage justified it; I do not think so. The term is applied to God, Christ, servants, stewards, and the word, as well as to children.

12. Do you have some justifiable basis for disagreeing with these authorities?

That all depends upon who is to be the judge of what constitutes a justifiable basis. The Bible says “Every way of a man is right in his own eyes,” but it also says, “The way of a fool is right in his own eyes.” I think that I am correct in my conviction that a man may be appointed to the eldership before his children are old enough to accept the gospel and assume the responsibility of the Christian life.

13. On what ground do you reach that conclusion?

First, let it be remembered that the strict meaning of the term pistos is “trustworthy, reliable.” Qualifications relating to the children were written by the apostle to Timothy at Ephesus, and Titus at Crete. I do not think they differ. Whatever was required of children in one place would be required in both. If an expression used in writing to Titus is obscure or ambiguous, it may be explained in the language to Timothy, or vice versa. The statement to Titus is “having faithful children,” and to Timothy, it is, “having his children in subjection.” I conclude, then, that faithful children are children in subjection to the will or rule of the father. Faithful children are those who are trustworthy and reliable because they are in subjection to paternal government. Paul defines what he means when he says “Faithful children not accused of riot or unruly.” This is the negative attribute, while trustworthy is the positive.

14. Is it not to be presumed that children who are reared by Christian parents will obey the Lord when they get old enough?

That does not necessarily follow. God said, “I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me” (Isaiah 1:2) and I do not think that earthly parents are any better than God. The fact that God’s children rebelled against him is no reflection against the way in which he nourished and brought them up. We need to be careful in assuming that a profligate child is always a reflection against the parents, lest we reflect against the fatherhood of God.

15. If a man had one or more children, under subjection, yet none were old enough to become Christians, I take it you would ordain him as elder.

Of course, that is not the only qualification. But if a man was fully qualified otherwise, and his children were under subjection and obedient to his discipline, I would appoint him as elder, if the congregation selected him. The qualification is not the ability to get your children into the church, as desirable as that may be, but to govern and control the family circle. I know a man who reared his family in a denominational influence, and they were always very close as a family. All became members of the denomination. When the father was somewhat advanced in years, he and his wife became convinced that denominationalism was wrong, and obeyed the pure gospel. The children, all being married, would not leave the denomination in which they were reared. But this faithful, godly man could qualify as a bishop over the flock of God.

(NOTE: This will conclude for the time being, discussions on the eldership. The series on “Fellowship” will begin in the next issue, and to it will be given the space previously allotted to the discussion we now close.)

What Is Heresy?

Mission Messenger (December 1957)

Volume 19

[Abstract]

I have a letter which I want to share with my readers, mainly because it affords me an opportunity for voicing certain convictions which I feel need to be stated.

We have been awaiting arrival of your book on “The Kingdom” in the hope that it may help us in our situation. We have a man in the congregation who holds the premillennial doctrine. He has discussed his views with a number of us, but has never caused any trouble in the church. He is a fine person and has a good family, all having the respect of outsiders. But the preacher who held our meeting last year found out that this man was a pre-millennialist, and he preached three nights on the subject, and warned us to get rid of this man because he held a dangerous heresy. The church is quite disturbed about the matter.

My book “The Kingdom of the Messiah” will probably not help. It is not intended to be a disciplinary manual for congregations. Only the word of God can occupy that position, and it has been here all of the time. My treatise will simply set forth what I think God’s word teaches. It will be my humble effort to explain what I understand the Holy Spirit to advocate relative to numerous issues. In regard to the millennium, it will establish that I do not hold the view that our Lord will return to earth and reign here a thousand years. I give the reasoning by which I reach that conclusion.

But this book is not a handbook for a post-millennial party among God's children. It is not intended to urge brethren to take the criminal action of driving out into the cold those who hold a divergent view. I have worked in close harmony all my life with those who are of pre-millennial persuasion. They never forced their views upon me, and I never set up my own as a test of fellowship. We realized that Jesus was greater than any of our theories about His coming, and we were content to allow Him to show in His own good time which view was right, and we believed that He would gather us both into whatever state He had prepared for us.

Most of the problems relating to fellowship are created by preachers who get out of their place and become lawmakers and creed designers. The spirit of the clergy is to rule, dominate and domineer. That spirit can brook no interference; and tolerate no trifling with its edicts. The seminaries of "The Church of Christ" are grinding out a professional clergy and these men must hold their exalted position by forcing others to conform. Woe to the independent thinker who will not bow the knee, or who calls for evidence beyond the authoritarian dogma of the preacher. He will be hounded out into the cold, misrepresented, mistreated and maligned.

In the case mentioned in this letter, the brother who holds the pre-millennial view is not the heretic at all! I think he is wrong in his concept, and his interpretation of the scriptural teaching is all askew. But it is the preacher who is the heretic! Heresy, as that term is used in the New Testament, is not the holding of an opinion, either true or false. Neither is it the mere advocacy or expression of such an opinion. A man can be in error and not be a heretic; he can be a heretic in conjunction with the truth. The general idea as to heresy, held by most of my brethren, originated with Rome in her attempt to subjugate the world to papal tyranny. She planted the seed that heresy consists of an opinion held in opposition to the orthodox view, and upon the basis of this false definition shed the blood of thousands of dissenters. Moreover, the acceptance of this theory by Protestants has caused the innumerable divisions that exist, and has even fractured and splintered the glorious restoration movement into bitter, wrangling partisans, whose attitude belies the expression of their noble ideals.

I have long known that the Holy Spirit gives no sanction to this distorted view which was enforced by the stake, rack and strangling cord in days gone by; but in these more refined days is enforced by the “gentler” methods of boycott, false propaganda, malicious whispering, malignant rumor, and downright lying. Heresy is the party spirit! A heretic is one who seeks to build a party around his view to the division of the children of God. A post-millennial party is as sinful as a pre-millennial party. I want nothing to do with either! I do not accept a man as a brother on the basis that he agrees with my interpretation of Revelation 20, but because we both have the same Father. Then I shall not reject him as a brother because he disagrees with my interpretation of Revelation 20. That is not my creed!

Mind you, I think the pre-millennial theory of interpretation is wrong. I believe that it is a warped and twisted view. But I do not encourage putting people “out of the fellowship” who have a physical deformity— a crooked foot, a twisted arm, or a slanted eye. Then why should I want to “disfellowship” those whose mental image may be slanted, or whose ideas may be out of line with mine? I would as soon think of casting out a brother for physical astigmatism as for mental. Do you say he cannot help the first? What makes you think, in view of his past training, environment, culture, prejudice and influence, that he can escape the second, without help? If I see a brother whose foot turns out at an angle and who cannot follow exactly in my tracks, shall I jump on him, pummel and berate him, or shall I put his foot in an iron vise and get others to help me twist and pull in order to force him to walk like I do? Would it not be better for me to lead him to a specialist and help him secure proper treatment? For the same reason, I will not drive out my brethren, but will try to lead them to the Great Physician and Surgeon of the soul. It may be while I am there he can straighten me out also. Most of us could stand some adjustment!

MISSION MESSENGER ESSAYS (1958)

Volume 20

Thoughts on Fellowship

Index to Volumes

- Thoughts on Fellowship (1)
- Church Autonomy
- Big Preachers
- Religion of Fact
- Thoughts on Fellowship (2)
- The Thing That Counts
- Is It New Doctrine?
- Our Attitude
- The Party Spirit (1958)
- Thoughts on Fellowship (3)
- The Road to Ruin
- Restoration
- Not Many Fathers
- Thoughts on Fellowship (4)
- The Power of Prayer
- Instrumental Music (1)
- Thoughts on Fellowship (5)
- Thoughts on Fellowship (6)
- Instrumental Music (2)
- Thoughts on Fellowship (7)
- Instrumental Music (3)
- A Sound Mind (1)
- Thoughts on Fellowship (8)

- Reply to brother Zerr
- Thoughts on Fellowship (9)
- A Sound Mind (2)
- Christian Church Baptism
- A Sound Mind (3)
- Thoughts on Fellowship (10)
- Thoughts on Fellowship (11)
- Thoughts on Fellowship (12)
- A Sound Mind (4)
- A New Conservation Corps
- Are You Loyal?

Thoughts on Fellowship (1)

Mission Messenger (January 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

“God is faithful, by whom ye were called unto the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord” (1 Cor. 1:9).

The church of God at Corinth consisted of called saints, those who were sanctified in Christ Jesus (1:2). The state or condition to which they were called by God, is expressed by the term “the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ.” To this state they attained through the “grace of God which is given by Jesus Christ” (1:4). Because they were called into such a state they were to avoid all schisms among themselves (1:10). Being bound by a common tie, they were to avoid those things which would disrupt the community. They were to “endeavor to guard the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace” (Eph. 4:3). By this means they would “walk worthy of the calling wherewith they were called.”

What is involved in “the fellowship of Jesus Christ our Lord”? How do we attain unto it? Who are participants in it? How do they remain in it? What action will separate them from this state? Surely these are matters of grave importance, and should challenge the thinking of every person on earth who believes that there is a God, and that Jesus Christ is his Son, and our Savior. The state of fellowship represents a complete change of relationship. The prior condition is described as “being alienated from the life of God.” The new state is described as one of sonship, in which the participant is “an heir of God through Christ” (Gal. 4:7). From a state in which there was no sharing of the blessings of God, a transformation takes place in which the one who is called becomes a sharer of the divine bounty as a son.

It is our conviction that the community of saints in Christ Jesus is the earthly culmination of that eternal purpose which is described as “a plan for the ages to gather together in one all things in Christ” (Eph. 1:10). The mystery of fellowship was hidden in God from the beginning of the world (Eph. 3:9). In other ages it was not made known unto the sons of men, but in this final age on earth, it was revealed unto the holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit. The purpose of this revelation was “to make all men see” (Eph. 3:9). If, then, we are to see the truth upon this wonderful subject we must go to the revelation contained in the Christian scriptures. Our ideas, opinions and notions relative to fellowship mean nothing unless they coincide with God’s revelation. Our task is to ascertain from the new covenant scriptures what significance and meaning is attached to the term by the Holy Spirit.

The concept of fellowship with the Father, and with the Son, belongs to mankind only since that Son came in the flesh. This is abundantly clear to the student of the first epistle of John. Judaism provided an elaborate system of rules and ceremonies by which its adherents were kept apart from God, each other, and the world about them. The keynote was struck at the foot of Sinai, when their constitution was to be announced. Bounds were placed about the mountain so that the people might not come near. The threat of death was held over the Israelites. They were literally fenced off from God. The ritualism of the law maintained barriers between the people and God. The Almighty communed with them from the thick darkness of the most holy place. He was separated from them by a thick veil.

The temple had its court of Gentiles, and across its barrier no Gentile dared step to mingle with “the chosen race.” There was the court of women with its partition enclosing it, and there were separate precincts for Levites, priests and high priest. Much instruction was given to enable the people to keep in their proper places, separated and segregated. They dare not study how they might come together; they had rather to exercise diligence to keep apart.

The death of the Messiah marked the end of this state by a startling symbol. As he expired, "the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom" (Mark 15:38). The significance of this is graphically depicted by the writer of the Hebrew letter. "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh; and having an high priest over the house of God; let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith" (Heb. 10:19-22). The boldness and full assurance which is ours should be contrasted with the excessive fear and trembling at Sinai (Heb. 12:21). Then the command was "Draw not nigh!" Now the invitation is "Let us draw near!"

The death of Jesus not only established a nearness of the people to God expressed by his language, "I will receive you, and be a Father unto you" (2 Cor. 6:17, 18), but it also removed barriers which separated men from their fellows. "For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us . . . that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby" (Eph. 2:14, 16). It is worthy of note that the work of achieving unity is not credited to man. That is the work of Jesus. He made both one. He broke down the barrier of separation. He abolished in his flesh the enmity. He made in himself of two one new man. He reconciled both unto God in one body. He came and preached peace. It is through him we all have access by one Spirit unto the Father. "Therefore . . . ye are fellow citizens with the saints" (Eph. 2:19). Not because of what we have done, but because of what He has done. The unity is achieved by the Spirit.

It is called “the fellowship of the Spirit” (Phil 2:2). All we can do is to guard and maintain that “unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.” Any person who erects a wall of partition to divide, separate and segregate brethren, regardless of what that wall may be, thereby opposes the work of God’s Son and does despite to the Spirit of grace!

The temple with its sacerdotal orders and its ritual pageantry is gone. It “stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation” (Heb. 9:10). What has taken the place of these things since Jesus has entered “into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us” (Heb. 9:24)? My answer is that the koinonia, the fellowship of God, through the Spirit, has displaced the ceremonies and rules of the Mosaic dispensation. These things “could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience” (Heb. 9:9). There was an impenetrable barrier between the person and his God, for “the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest.”

What a change has been wrought by grace! The veil has been rent! We have access unto the Father by one Spirit. I need not climb a sacred mountain nor make a pilgrimage to Jerusalem to feel a closeness with God. “Neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, shall ye worship the Father . . . the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth.” My body is a temple. My heart is a most holy place. God dwells in me, even as I dwell in Him. We mutually come closer together. “Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you” (James 4:8). “Ye are the temple of the living God, as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people” (2 Cor. 6:16). This fragile structure of clay houses the Deity. The symbol of God’s presence in the tabernacle was the Shekinah, visible as a cloud or pillar of fire. The Holy Spirit rests upon us as the cloud did upon the tabernacle in the wilderness.

“In whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord, in whom we also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit” (Eph. 2:21, 22). A holy temple! A habitation for God! “Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Spirit which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own” (1 Cor. 6:19)? “Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you” (1 Cor. 3:16)? What a transformation! In other days men had to go up to God. “Three times in the year all thy males shall appear before the Lord God” (Exo. 23:17). Now God has appeared unto us. He dwells in us and walks in us, not at stated seasons, but every hour of every day. How foolish, therefore, for men to talk about sacred seasons and holy days. There are no special sacred places and no special sacred days. Under the old regime nothing was counted sacred unless it was fenced off from the profane on every side; under the new order all that God has made is sacred, and nothing is profane except for one who defiles it by his sinful attitude. “For the earth is the Lord’s, and the fulness thereof” (1 Cor. 10:26).

Fellowship has to do with sharing. It can never be divorced from this idea. Through grace Jesus shared our lot. “Forasmuch as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same” (Heb. 2:14). “He emptied himself, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men” (Phil. 2:7). “For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich” (2 Cor. 8:9). The Christian life is a shared response to God called forth by the gift of God of which we have been made partakers. We are made partakers of Christ through the gospel. Our obedience to the demands of the gospel, introduces us into that state or condition called fellowship with God. We are in fellowship with each other only because we sustain the same relationship to Him. We cannot create that state, nor is it left to us to invent the terms by which we enter it. We are called unto it by the Father.

1. Fellowship with God is not contingent upon a perfect knowledge of the divine revelation.

2. It is not contingent upon attainment to a life of sinless perfection.

3. It is not contingent upon an ability to explain or expound every point of doctrine.

It is contingent upon a complete surrender of self to the Christ, and a willingness to follow as he leads. On the divine side, fellowship is a union with and a participation in the life of Christ through the Spirit; on the human side it is a communion with brethren whose mutual relations were transformed by the Spirit.

(This is the first of a series of essays on the subject of fellowship which will be presented each month through this year. The editor humbly requests your careful consideration of these articles and will welcome criticism and correction in harmony with the divine revelation.)

Church Autonomy

Mission Messenger (January 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

The divine wisdom in making each congregation of saints autonomous, that is, self-governing, is apparent to every student of history. In the plan of heaven there is no provision for a super-organization, nor sanction for diocesan control. The language used in describing the responsibility of the church indicates that such responsibility is laid upon every congregation according to its ability. The only officers appointed are those over local units (Acts 14:23; Titus 1:5). One congregation cannot discipline or direct another; one cannot regulate or intrude upon the affairs of another. There is no organization larger than a local congregation under its chosen bishops empowered to discharge the work of the king.

An understanding of this great principle will effectively forbid a surrender of rights and privileges on the one hand, and operate to offset wholesale apostasy upon the other. No man is justified in relegating a divinely given obligation to another man, no congregation can be justified in delegating its obligation to another congregation. Both such transfers may find the work accomplished by proxy, but both will incur the wrath of God. It is not enough that good is being done in the world, but it must be done by those upon whom God has laid the burden of the task.

One of the attributes of usurped power is that it always seeks to increase the area of its dominance. It will not remain static when wrongly acquired. The elders who surrender their work and authority even in a minute degree to a hired pulpiteer will soon find themselves displaced altogether. The congregation which assigns its legitimate functions to another congregation, or to a coalition of congregations, will soon find itself in the intolerable state of "taxation without representation." The organization which assumes the prerogatives belonging to another, and the congregation which divests itself of its proper rights, are both guilty of violating the constitution of heaven. Unlawful seizure and usurpation are no more reprehensible than abandonment and renunciation of heaven-ordained work.

Men are never satisfied with simplicity in government. They must tamper, meddle and experiment with it until it becomes complex and top-heavy and eventually crushes that which it was designed to preserve and protect. The Church of Rome with its hierarchy cracking the whip of despotism over the personal and intimate relationships of its helpless and supine subjects is an example of what happens when congregations barter away their functions. It is for that reason we should regard with concern every infringement upon congregational autonomy, regardless of how innocent it may be in its inception. The hole in the dike may be the portent of an inundation which will destroy all we hold dear.

In many sections of the southland "preacher's meetings" are a regular feature. The clergymen of "The Church of Christ" meet for luncheon one day per week at some hotel. In such meetings current problems of "the brotherhood" are frequently discussed. It may be argued that it is a harmless thing for brethren to meet and talk about matters which trouble Zion. But when it is recalled that those present are the official mouthpieces of congregations, that they have a direct pipeline to the minds of the membership through their control of the pulpits, and that they operate as political pressure groups to enforce conformity, and that any person who dares to cross them is castigated and driven out of the synagogue, it can readily be seen what a threat is posed by those whose livelihood depends upon their staying in office. In national political conventions, the party choice is often made in a smoke-filled hotel room behind the scenes, and the rest of the delegates become stooges whose only service is to ratify that choice during the roll-call. Who will deny that in many places today the course of procedure is decided in a hotel dining room, and the congregation must endorse it without question or be brow-beaten into submission.

In these days of rapid transportation it has become popular to arrange for large gatherings at some central location when holidays make it possible for many to attend. Such occasions provide unexcelled opportunity for fellowship, mutual teaching and discussion, and spiritual sharing. But there is always a grave danger when there is a great accumulation of talent, wealth or power in any place. There is ever a tendency upon the part of those present to feel that they “represent” the brotherhood of disciples. Those who speak may do so dogmatically, telling others what position they must take on current issues, and those who attend may return home and try to bind upon those who were not present, the ideas they received. This is sectarianism. God has provided for no delegate conventions to regulate his church.

Editors occasionally seize power and attempt to subjugate the church to their plans and programs. Careless and indifferent members prefer to let another do their thinking and often regard a paper as a “brotherhood organ.” The editor is exalted to the position of “oracle” and his pronouncements become law. He debars from his column those who differ and funnels a one-sided propaganda to the readers. This is the essence of popery and smacks of the thought control and brainwashing of Romanism. There is no such thing as a “brotherhood paper.”

It is not the function of one congregation to discipline the members of another. The elders of one congregation cannot exclude the elders of another. One congregation cannot disfellowship another congregation. There is no headquarters on earth for the church of our God and the elders are to oversee only those “among them.” That is the extent of their jurisdiction. When they go beyond that they are usurpers.

If the elders of a local congregation believe that error threatens the flock of which they are superintendents, they can instruct and warn them, but they cannot summon a meeting of delegates from other congregations to discuss and decide brotherhood policy with a view to binding a course of procedure or conduct upon the churches or brethren in general. They cannot create a brotherhood journal to represent the churches, nor select an editor to be the interpreter of brotherhood thought. Neither can they formulate a code or standard to which all must conform. There are no diocesan bishops, no delegate conventions, no ecumenical councils of talented men, no convocations of preachers, no consistorial and ecclesiastical courts for the trial of heretics, provided in the framework of God’s revelation.

If elders, preachers, editors, papers, and congregations, remain in their proper sphere, the church of God will move forward in glorious triumph. Let us remember that the smallest congregation of saints in a remote area is as great in heaven’s sight as the largest in a metropolitan center. The worth and dignity of each individual must be cherished, the rights of the local congregation must be protected. Then we will be free from creedalism and lordship of men!

Big Preachers

Mission Messenger (January 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

Burton Coffman is the spark plug of the big promotional scheme to raise a million dollars to erect a church building seating 500 in New York. In the November 19 issue of Firm Foundation, he gives us an insight to the current thinking of the denominational “Church of Christ.” That thinking centers around big preachers, big drives, big programs and big money! Read this:

What would happen if these men, sometimes called ‘big preachers’ were to give up their positions and go to some weak and distant post to establish the work? Who would replace them? . . . Few people realize what a load rests upon the shoulders of a man preaching for a big congregation. The congregation is often in large measure the result of his excellent talents and consecration in the work of the Lord. The large congregation is not built up in the first place nor does it long continue without the ability and energies of a man in the pulpit who is truly ‘big’ enough to lead them into ever greater and greater paths of usefulness in the Master’s service.

I doubt that Burton needs to worry about the big preachers going to some weak and distant post. There is only one thing that would move them, and that’s a big raise in salary. Take the lucre out of religion and you’ll soon be looking for a replacement. But the above statement is a forthright admission that the big churches are built around a clergyman rather than the Christ. The pulpit, unknown in the primitive congregation of saints, is a stage for the dramatic performance of a trained professional. When the entertainment ceases and the show ends its run, the congregation “does not long continue.” The attendants do not want to watch a stage-hand or a second-rate performer.

Then, may we keep these big men where they belong and where they are doing so much good stoking the furnace of the great powerhouses supplying the energy for so much of the church’s mission work today.

If you interpret this clerical terminology, you’ll find Bro. Coffman is really talking about raising money! “Stoking the furnace” means turning on the heat in a big financial drive like “Million for Manhattan.” “The great powerhouses” are congregations made up of oil magnates and cattle barons. “Supplying the energy” is pledging a fist full of greenbacks to help a huge promotional scheme. The clergy always employs double-talk and gobbledygook! Look that up in your dictionary! What they mean is more money! Bro. Coffman identifies a bunch of big preachers.

Men like John Banister, Cleon Lyles, Batsell Baxter, George Stephenson, George Bailey, Clifton Rogers, Leroy Brownlow, Clyde Hale, John Smithson, Melvin Wise, Ralph Russell, Harrison Matthews, Paul McClung, Ray Chester . . . their name is Legion.

You’ll recall that this was also the name of the demons which entered the two thousand hogs, and these were stampeded into a big drive, and ran violently down the steep slope into the sea. They also made a big splash!

Religion of Fact

Mission Messenger (February 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

The system of religion which God has proposed for the age of the reign of the Messiah is eminently adapted to secure the end for which it was revealed. Its purpose is thus stated by the apostle, "He has made known to us in all wisdom and insight the mystery of his will, according to his purpose which he set forth in Christ as a plan for the fulness of time, to unite all things in him" (Eph. 1:9, 10). His will has been made known as a plan. The purpose of that plan is to unite all things. We take it that the expression "all things" refers to men as intelligent beings, for the same writer declares it was his obligation "to make all men see what is the plan" (Eph. 3:9). Since no plan for unity would be required by those who were already united, it follows that the plan of heaven was adapted to those who were out of harmony with God and each other.

An investigation of that plan will show its superiority over every other religion and demonstrate its divine origin. God is the author of the human mind and the creator of the intellect. He can appreciate the scope and range of human thought and reason. He did not organize our minds alike any more than he arranged our facial features all alike. Men cannot think alike any more than they can look alike. It is impossible for all of them to entertain the same opinions. If they did, they would all seek the same employment and there would only be one universal vocation. The world would not function long if imagination and rationalization were forcibly funneled into one rut.

In spite of this, every system of religion devised by man has been founded upon opinion. This is one of the trademarks of human religions. They are all religions of opinion. For that reason they are all calculated to divide rather than to unite men. The sectarian divisions are the logical fruits of such religions. They cannot help but divide for the germ of division is in the seed from which they all sprung. The first great cleavage from simple Christianity came upon the basis of opinion. Every other sect since has sprung from the same source, an attempt to confine the opinions and imaginations of men behind creedal barriers.

The religion of heaven is a religion founded upon facts. These are but statements of acts, of deeds done in our behalf. They are commended unto us by testimony, and upon the basis of that testimony we believe. Faith is the belief of testimony. And because the Father had mercy upon frail creatures steeped in ignorance and sin, and because, in His grace, He desired the salvation of even the lowliest in intellectual attainment and ability, He hinged our salvation not upon an understanding of abstract propositions, nor upon a complex and intricate philosophy or system of doctrine, but upon one fact, and only one— that Jesus is the Messiah, the Son of God. This is the foundation of the Christian religion, and one who was commissioned, like a skilled master builder, to lay that foundation, declared, “For no other foundation can anyone lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ” (1 Cor. 3:11). Any man who believes that fact and proves his belief by the one test of faith— immersion in the name of the Lord Jesus— is admitted into the fellowship of the Father and the Son.

In the Christian religion men dare not make opinions tests of fellowship. On this point the revelation of God is clear. “As for the man who is weak in faith, welcome him, but not for disputes over opinions” (Rom. 14:1). The reason is clear. One man in Christ believes one thing, while another disagrees (verse 2). But God welcomes them both (verse 3). One man esteems a certain thing highly, another makes no distinction. Neither is to pass judgment on the other (verse 13). God recognizes that we cannot and will not entertain the same opinions, and His revealed religion takes this into account, and provides for a unity in diversity as relates to such matters.

His interest in this regard is that men not bind these opinions upon others as bases of union, for any attempt to do so will rend and divide. Therefore, such opinions are to be kept between a man and God, lest in his insistence that others conform, he destroy the work of God (verse 20). The plan for the ages is to “unite all things” but it does not include in the unity desired an absolute agreement upon opinions. In this area there is liberty. The unity here is an undivided belief that men are free where God permits liberty. “The unity of the Spirit” embraces seven planks in its platform, every one of which expresses a divine oneness (Eph. 4:4-6). It is ignorance of God’s will and plan which has plagued the ranks of professed restorationists and shattered them into bitter splinter parties.

But we will be asked to explain such passages as 1 Corinthians 1:10. “I appeal to you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that all of you agree that there be no dissensions among you, but that you be united in the same mind and the same judgment.” Whatever this means it cannot mean that it was an absolute necessity to agree upon all opinions, for in this realm the apostle recognized there could be legitimate differences. Neither can it refer to matters of personal judgment unless Paul was guilty of advocating one thing and lapsing into contradictory conduct, for there was a sharp contention between Barnabas and himself “so that they separated from each other” (Acts 15:39). Nor can it refer to perfect knowledge and equal attainment of perception. “Nevertheless, whereto we have already attained let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing” (Phil. 3:16).

The context shows that the thing Paul was condemning in Corinth was the party spirit. He declares, “What I mean is that each one of you says, ‘I belong to Paul,’ or ‘I belong to Apollos,’ or ‘I belong to Cephas,’ or ‘I belong to Christ.’” Please note that it is just as sinful to call a party by the name of Christ for the purpose of segregating it from other believers, as to call it by the name of Cephas or Paul. To designate a party in Christendom as “The Church of Christ” with the motive of separating it from other children of God, is as wrong as to call one after the name of Paul for the same reason. The party spirit is not rendered sinless by calling over it the name of the sinless one.

Paul was condemning the laying of other foundations and boasting of men (3:21). These defeat the eternal purpose of God. They give the impression Christ is divided. On the testimony of God (1 Cor. 2:1) there should be agreement and unanimity. “The same mind and the same judgment” is a phrase opposed to “dissensions” in the passage under discussion. This word is from SCHISMA, which means “a rent, or tear.” The fabric of Christian fellowship is to be kept intact, rather than torn or rent by partisan strife.

There is a diversity in the minds of those who compose the church of God. Some are highly cultivated, some are limited in ability, as evidenced by Matthew 25:15. Some are quick to perceive, some are slow and deliberate. In some the faculty of retentiveness is very acute, in others it is not. The environments, educational opportunities, circumstances of rearing, and local influences, are different, and all of these modify our individual thinking. Accordingly, men differ in every department and phase of life: science, jurisprudence, medicine, psychology, and agriculture, to mention but a few. It is by virtue of such differences of opinion that research is stimulated and constantly carried on. We learn forbearance and tolerance as a result of our divergencies of opinion, and thus we develop a sense of social consciousness.

But we can rejoice and be thankful that in a world of marvelous variety, distinction, and disparity of views in the physical and mental spheres, God has ordained and revealed a religion founded upon facts, testimony and faith. The unity upon these, upon the part of those who are in the Christ, enables them to be united in enjoyment of those opinions which are not destructive nor detrimental to the planks in the platform of the Spirit, and which will not subvert the brethren. This, to our humble way of thinking, is proof undeniable and incontestable, of the divine origin of the Christian religion which we cherish as the means of bringing peace to a disordered world. We see no other hope.

Thoughts on Fellowship (2)

Mission Messenger (February 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

The word “fellowship” is generally from the Greek koinonia. This word is rendered fellowship 12 times, communion 4, communication 1, contribution 1, distribution 1, to communicate 1. Actually the term koinonia has such varied aspects that no single English word is adequate to express them all. It is a derivative of koinos, the word for common. “Common” has two different meanings in the Greek and English. It can refer to that which is jointly held by a large group, and it is in this respect that Jude speaks of “the common salvation.” It can also refer to that which is commonplace and vulgar as contrasted with that which is rare and distinguished. In this sense, it came to be applied to that which was unhallowed or not ceremonially clean (Cp. Acts 10:14, 15). This is comparable to the word “profane” from the Latin. This last word simply refers to that which was pro fanum, that is, left outside the temple or sanctuary, and thus not consecrated. We speak of “profane history” in contrast with the history of God’s kingdom.

The basic definition of koinonia as given by Thayer, is: “Fellowship, association, community, communion, joint participation, intercourse.” In its application to the New Testament usage, he divides it into three parts: (1) The share which one has in anything, participation; (2) intercourse, fellowship, intimacy; (3) a benefaction jointly contributed, a collection, a contribution. It is interesting to note that this last is a use unknown to profane authors. It is an acquired meaning given only by the New Testament writers, and even though Thayer defines koinonia as “a collection, a contribution,” he adds, “as exhibiting an embodiment or proof of fellowship.” Actually, the gift or benefaction is not the koinonia at all, as we shall later demonstrate. It is a manifestation of it. The koinonia (fellowship) is already existent and prompts the gift. We shall learn that for Christians, the only genuine riches we have are those which we share in the Christ, and we supply the bodily needs of each other because we all alike are redeemed and in Him. The sharing of earthly goods is a spontaneous expression of our sharing in the divine wealth.

The word “fellow” came into our language from the Old Norse term for a comrade or associate. The suffix “ship” is Anglo-Saxon in origin and is generally found in connection with nouns denoting persons. It relates to a state or condition in which such persons move. We speak of friendship, partnership, and sonship.

Ignorance of this fact prompts many to use rather ridiculous expressions. Indicative of these are some which come from various segments of the disciple brotherhood. Men write and ask me if I fellowship cups, classes, fermented wine, colleges, orphan homes or instrumental music. I would like for someone to tell me how one would do so.

One of the most tragic misconceptions is based on the idea that fellowship is synonymous with, or equivalent to, endorsement of everything the other “fellow” may hold or advocate. In any final analysis this must lead to the conclusion that no two persons could ever be in fellowship until they both reach perfect knowledge and complete agreement upon every minute detail. The folly of such a view can easily be detected by any thinking person. We do not make other kindred terms subject to such unreasonable interpretation. Can friendship exist between those who do not agree upon all issues. Can a partnership exist between persons who are unequal in knowledge and attainment, and who possess divergent views? Certainly there are many close friends who disagree upon some matters, and many partners who associate in business in spite of divergent opinions.

We are to be in fellowship “with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ” (1 John 1:3). Does this mean that God does not accept us into fellowship until our understanding of all things is equal to his divine knowledge? If so, how can we “grow in grace and knowledge of the truth” after we come into the Christ? Now, if God being perfect, can fellowship us in our ignorance and imperfection, why do we set up a standard for others which he did not set up for us? If it be argued that John meant only the apostles were in fellowship with the Father and the Son, the difficulty is not lessened. Was Peter in the fellowship of Christ from Pentecost to the time of his vision on the housetop at Joppa? Certainly he did not realize that God had removed the restrictions upon eating of meats and zealously followed the ceremonial regime of Judaism. Nor did he previously grasp the great truth that “God is no respecter of persons.” If he could be in the fellowship until he learned these truths, may not others be in the same fellowship, while learning the truth more perfectly?

The fact is that the fellowship of the new covenant is not based upon unanimity of opinion, interpretation, or even understanding of scriptural doctrine. It does not imply nor indicate endorsement of the position of one with whom we may differ. Fellowship is one thing; endorsement of the position taken by another is a wholly different thing. Fellowship of Christ, and in Christ, is a state or condition into which we are called by God through the gospel; endorsement of an interpretation or idea of one in or out of that fellowship is a rational act of our own minds. It is the jumbled, mixed-up thinking on this point that has created the factionalism, partisan spirit, and sectarianism, so rife among the heirs of the restoration movement.

Not long ago I attended a meeting conducted by a young brother. He announced in the paper that he would hold a “gospel meeting.” His “gospel” consisted of informing the partisans who were present that grouping of students in classes to study the sacred oracles of God was a tool of hell and an instrument of Satan. This was the Good News of salvation! After the meeting I introduced myself to him, and he in turn introduced me to several about him. He was careful each time to say “Mister Ketcherside.” As I spoke to each, I addressed him as “brother.” During what he referred to as his “sermon” the speaker alluded to “the brotherhood” several times. I asked him if he counted me as a member of it, and if not, to tell me what I would have to do that I had not already done to become a part of it. He was hesitant to commit himself on either count.

Later, at my urgent invitation, he attended a service where I was speaking. I mentioned my joy at his presence and requested him to lead in prayer. He shook his head in refusal. Afterwards he told me that he could not “fellowship” me because I did not oppose Bible classes, and he was afraid if he prayed to God at my request, it would consist of “fellowship.” I felt sorry for him, for I grew up in the same kind of bigoted and partisan environment. I can recall how we used to discuss whether it was right to call a man “brother” who disagreed with us on colleges, orphan homes, classes, cups, instrumental music, or the millennial theory. I was afraid to call upon a man to pray who was not of “our group,” for I realized what “the brotherhood” would do to me if they found it out. I have recently very carefully scrutinized my heart on all of these controversial issues. I find that I have not changed my position on a single one of them. I am stronger than ever in my previous convictions on most of them. But I am no longer afraid of what men will do unto me! I refuse to be the mouthpiece of a faction, or the cat’s paw of a clique! I want to belong unto the Lord and bow to Him only!

I have learned that those who differ with me on these issues are my brethren, because of their relationship to the family, or household of God. We have the same Father, and Jerusalem from above is the mother of us all. Every baptized penitent believer on this earth is my brother, and we are in fellowship because we are a part of the brotherhood of Christ. I do not agree on much with most of them, and do not fully agree with any of them, but fellowship in God is one thing, and perfect agreement is a wholly different thing. My father had six children, and they often differed with each other and even with the parents, but it never once occurred to me to deny they were my brothers and sisters because we argued loud and long. We were brothers not because of what we had done but because we were introduced by birth into a family state or relationship. The relationship into which we are introduced by the new birth is the fellowship of the new covenant. We have been in fellowship with a lot more people than we ever realized, or even yet realize. I am in fellowship with every saved person on this earth, that is, if I am saved!

Every person who has received Christ Jesus, and thus has been born of the water and of the Spirit, who has experienced the riches of the glory of God's mystery "which is Christ in you, the hope of glory," is in the fellowship. They are partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light, having been delivered from the power of darkness and translated into the Kingdom of the Messiah. Having been called into the kingdom and glory of God, and having been sealed by the Holy Spirit they are in communion with God and with every other person on earth who has been born again. They are the beneficiaries of the grace of our Lord, of the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit (2 Cor. 13:14).

When the apostle wrote to Corinth he told them they had been called into the fellowship of Jesus Christ. They were torn by partisan strife, tolerant of immorality, intolerant of the scruples of the brethren, impleading each other in heathen courts, and even so factious they would not eat the love feast together. He was fearful of coming among them lest he find quarreling, jealousy, anger, selfishness, slander, gossip, conceit and disorder. Yet he did not tell “the faithful” to go and start a “loyal” congregation! He did not even intimate that he would split them and take out a group when he arrived. He asked, “Do you not know that Jesus Christ is in you?— unless indeed you fail to meet the test” (2 Cor. 13:5). What was the test? Was it an attitude as to classes for Bible study, individual cups, fermented wine, unleavened bread, orphan homes, etc.? These are tests which men have concocted to shatter and split into factious groups those who are in the fellowship.

God devised no such tests. Jesus Christ can be in men, who in their weakness and ignorance, differ in opinion as to these things. Paul said “What we pray for is your improvement” (2 Cor. 13:9). Not once in all of the divine revelation of God was a congregation of believers advised to split or separate! Not once was a group of believers told to come out from, or separate themselves from among the believers. If so, where is the place? Paul did not advise the congregation at Corinth to divide. He did not advise the establishment of two “Churches of Christ” in Corinth— one a “heathen courts congregation” and the other an “anti-heathen courts congregation.” Here is what he wrote: “Mend your ways, heed my appeal, agree with one another, live in peace, and the God of love and peace will be with you.” Never in the checkered history of the saints has this exhortation been needed more than at present. Every word needs to burn and sear our hearts until “we put no obstacle in any one’s way, so that no fault may be found with our ministry” (2 Cor. 6:3). The Christian life is difficult enough in these days without adding an extra burden of hate and animosity kindled by the factious spirit. Let us labor for unity!

The Thing That Counts

Mission Messenger (February 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

Our regular readers are aware of our conviction that the Lord Jesus has not regulated whether we shall use leavened or unleavened bread, fermented or unfermented wine, in observance of the memorial feast, the Lord's Supper. We do not hold that our communion of the body and blood is dependent upon how the loaf is broken or distributed, or whether one container or many are employed in the distribution of the drink element. We are content to allow each congregation of saints to determine these things for itself, and we will sit down at the table with them in thankfulness that we may enjoy the occasion of breaking bread in their company.

There is, however, another side to the issue. Not all of my brethren share my views. Some cannot conscientiously regard these matters as I do. They have scruples against certain things, as for instance, the use of multiple cups. What shall be my attitude toward them? Suppose that I proclaim the Good News in a place and band together a group of immersed believers, and when the time comes to determine the order of our corporate worship procedure, one of these humble saints files an objection to the use of individual cups, and asks that the congregation employ but one container. Shall I ruthlessly disregard his feelings, ridicule him for his position, and demand individual cups be used regardless of consequences?

To act in such a manner would be to violate every principle of our relationship in the Christ, and would make my observance of the Lord's Supper a hollow mockery. Is that Supper not an overt and public expression of fellowship? Then how can I pretend to fellowship the Christ and His disciples when I crush the heart of one of the redeemed ones over a matter which I regard as immaterial and indifferent? Is not love the seal of perfection? Do I walk in love when I grieve my brother in such a fashion? "If your brother is being injured . . . you are no longer walking in love" (Rom. 14:15).

The apostle Paul said, "Do not let what you eat cause the ruin of one for whom Christ died." He further declared, "Do not for the sake of food, destroy the work of God." But he also said, "Thus, sinning against your brethren and wounding their conscience when it is weak, you sin against Christ" (1 Cor. 8:12). I admit that Paul was not dealing with our modern problems, but will not the same principle apply? The salvation of a brother was worth more than food. The work of God was incomparably greater than having one's way about what he ate. Is it not also greater than the method of passing the fruit of the vine? If I force a child of God from the table of the Master, and drive him out into the cold by my insistence on having my way regardless of his feelings and compunctions, do I not sin against him, and in doing so, sin against the Christ?

I may excuse my harshness and pitilessness by reasoning that he is weak and unworthy of attention. But the word of God declares, "We who are strong ought to bear with the failings of the weak, and not to please ourselves; let each of us please his neighbor for his good, to edify him" (Rom. 15:1, 2). What good will it do to boast of correct doctrine and practice, if I callously disregard the injunction, "Love one another with brotherly affection; outdo one another in showing honor"? The law of God is rightly obeyed only when it is observed in an atmosphere of love. "Love does no wrong to a neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law."

I do not intend to set up my opinions regarding the method of serving the Lord's Supper as a law to be bound upon my brethren. The fellowship symbolized is infinitely greater to me than the details of serving. I shall look beyond the mere physical aspects to the purpose of the feast. But I hold no brief for those who profess a loyalty to the King and treat His humble servants as dust under their feet. "If any one says, 'I love God,' and hates his brother, he is a liar; for he who does not love his brother whom he has seen, cannot love God whom he has not seen."

Is It New Doctrine?

Mission Messenger (February 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

It is a matter of concern to every sincere thinker to know that the spirit of restoration has for a good many years become congealed and stagnated, with the result that little has been done to continue the noble efforts launched by such worthy men as Thomas and Alexander Campbell, Barton W. Stone, Walter Scott, and others. In truth, much of the real gains made by them in their attacks upon the citadels of sectism, has been lost, and as it has always happened in previous reformations, the sons of the pioneers have allowed themselves to grow into an exclusive and bigoted party, which has, in turn, fractured into numerous splinters over the opinions of leaders. We need to restore the restoration. To do that, means that someone, rising above the narrow partisan confines, must catch a vision of the land yet to be captured, and inspire and encourage brethren to begin anew the task which has been forsaken.

Any one who furnishes such leadership must be thoroughly immune to discouragement, and able to withstand the maligning of friends and brethren, for no one is more despised by sectaries than a man who refuses to be one. His very plea is a condemnation of their practice, and their minds will turn to means of ridding themselves of him rather than of their unchristian and uncharitable attitudes. No reformer ever attempted to call any people back to the old paths who was not charged with advocating new doctrines. Truth long hidden always appears new to those who see it exposed for the first time.

As an illustration of what we mean, we mention our personal conviction that there may be children of God scattered among the various sects today. Since all children of God are born of the same Father whom we claim, we recognize them as our brethren, regardless of the mistakes in reasoning of which they are now guilty. We conceive that our task is to point out to them the fatal danger of continuing in human parties. We do not paganize them, nor do we seek to re-immense those who have been immersed as a result of their faith in the Christ. By some partisan souls this is designated “a new doctrine.” In thus branding it they manifest an ignorance of the Bible and of the history of the restoration movement.

We recognize no uninspired man as our authority in matters of religion. But we can certainly refer to the position of those gone before to refute the charge that what we advocate is something new, and I unhesitatingly affirm that in the matter under discussion I stand with such worthies as Alexander Campbell, Barton W. Stone, Moses E. Lard, Benjamin Franklin, David Lipscomb, Daniel Sommer, et al. If my position is “new” it is not nearly so “new” as it was when they advanced it. If holding such a position is “modernism” then these men were all modernists. It might do the brethren good to read what some of them thought and said.

Concerning the projection of the restoration movement, Alexander Campbell wrote:

A deep and abiding impression that the power, the consolations and joys— the holiness and happiness— of Christ’s religion were lost in the forms and ceremonies, in the speculations and conjectures, in the feuds and bickerings of sects and schisms, originated a project many years ago for uniting the sects, or rather the Christians in all the sects, upon a clear and scriptural bond of union— upon having a ‘thus saith the Lord,’ either in express terms or approved precedent ‘for every article of faith, and item of religious practice.’

Moses E. Lard, writing in his quarterly for March 1864, and dealing with the subject “Have We Become a Sect?” has this to say about those in sects:

Against the individual members of these parties we cannot have even one unkind feeling. Many of them we regard as true Christians, and love them sincerely. But as long as they occupy a place in bodies holding traditional and other unsanctioned tenets, holding practices unknown to the Bible, and supporting humanly imposed names, we must tell them plainly that they stand on apostate ground.

Most of our readers will have learned that it was Thomas Campbell who wrote the Declaration and Address, which helped to launch the restoration movement. This was addressed to the Christians in all of the existing sects. That our interpretation of the document is correct, we will prove by a statement of its author, who wrote 35 years later in these words:

We speak to all our Christian brethren, however diversified by professional epithets, those accidental distinctions which have unhappily and unscripturally diversified the professing world. By our Christian brethren, then, we mean the very same description of character addressed in our Declaration published at Washington, Pa., in the year 1809— namely, ‘All that love our Lord Jesus Christ, in sincerity, throughout the churches.’ If there were none such at that time throughout the churches, then Christianity was dead and gone. And if there be none such at present within the same limits, it still continues extinct.

Among the outstanding writers in the Millennial Harbinger in 1862, none was more illustrious than George W. Elley, who wrote:

That there are many Christians among the sects, I have never doubted; and that there are also many thousands among them who are pious, but not Christians, in Bible teaching, I do not deny. The brethren have uniformly said, that we receive from among the sects all the immersed who have piety, and that to such we give the bread and wine, and this not upon the score of our will, but that of our Lord. We urge fellowship, or communion, with all such as are entitled to membership in the house of God, and to none others.

In the same year, Benjamin Franklin wrote in the American Christian Review of which he was the editor:

There are individuals among the sects who are not sectarians, or who are more than sectarians— they are Christians; or persons who have believed the gospel, submitted to it, and, in spite of the leaders, been constituted Christians according to the Scriptures.

This position was not limited to the brethren in this country, but was also representative of the stand of the brethren in Great Britain. David King, wrote in the British Millennial Harbinger, Feb. 1, 1862, as follows:

We also recognize as in the kingdom many who are still in error upon baptism. All baptized believers who walk in love we regard as Christian brethren, though many of them hold to much error in regard to the design of baptism. Many of this class stand ‘among the sects,’ and the voice of God cries, ‘Come out of her my people.’

David Lipscomb, writing in the book Questions Answered, page 582, expresses his view in this fashion:

There are some in nonsectarian churches who are sectarians, who violate the laws of God in order to oppose sectarians. They are sectarians in their opposition to sectarians. There are some in sectarian churches who will obey God and follow him in spite of the churches in which they find themselves. As examples, there are persons in the Baptist, Methodist, and Presbyterian churches who are baptized to obey God rather than to please the sects. In this they rise above the sectarian spirit, despite the parties in which they find themselves. They ought to get out of the sectarian churches, but they see so much sectarianism in the nonsectarian churches that they think they are all alike.

Daniel Sommer, in his booklet entitled Religious Sectism Defined, Analyzed and Exposed, wrote thus:

What shall we say of those preachers who denounce all persons who happen to hold membership in a sectarian denomination with a sentence of sweeping impeachment, as though they were all under the influence of sectism? We should say that they are probably more sectarian than some whom they denounce. Their manner shows that they are unscripturally exclusive, and this is one of the elements of sectarianism. Should we acknowledge any of those to be Christians who are identified with sectarian churches and wear sectarian names? No, not in the full and scripture sense of the word Christians. In mind and heart some of them are doubtless converted to Christ, but they cannot keep the ordinances fully, nor be altogether in harmony with the gospel while they hold membership among sectarians and wear sectarian names. None of the denominations are wholly right and none of them are wholly wrong. We should admit the truth and condemn the error in each, and should admit that many among the denominations are better than their sectarian creeds. Sectarianism is bad enough, and preachers of Christ should not stain their spirits with sin by misrepresenting what is found in sectarian systems.

Our brethren have made the mistake of concluding that the restoration was finished and that we have gathered all of the sheep of God from the scattered hills into one flock on the high mountain. As a result they have become sectarian in their attitude. They have no doubt driven away as many as they have saved. The self-righteous spirit, aided by legalism and dogmatism, has kept our plea from being heeded by real students and thinkers. It is time that we take stock of ourselves. The position occupied by many today would make them renounce as modernists brethren who lived, fought and died for the very faith we now hold.

Our Attitude

Mission Messenger (February 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

We recognize that those who read the MISSION MESSENGER in these days are seeing a different approach to the problems which confront us in the religious world. Those problems are no longer being ignored. We are striving as best we can, in our weakness, to face up to them. We feel that we must find a solution to them, or fail the generation in which we live. If we leave this world without having done anything to answer the prayer of our blessed Lord, if we leave behind us only more division and strife when we go, then we have not served the age in which we live, but have done disservice to the cross.

We do not know all of the answers! We are not big enough to achieve what we believe God wants us to accomplish. We are humbled by the fact that intellectually we cannot grasp all of the great angles which enter into the discord and division of Christendom into various sects. But we are resolved to explore the Word of God for the answer. Convinced that the solution does not lie in ill treatment of those who honestly differ, we shall pray for all, even our enemies. We will not seek to devise a plan upon which men must agree. Our views will be submitted in sincerity and with a contrite spirit. Those who differ will not be subjected to brutal attack in the paper. We will not try to undermine them. If they can accomplish the will of the Master in another and a better way, we shall thank God for them and what they do.

Our aim is to maintain an open heart and an open paper. We shall be eternally grateful to those who take the revelation of heaven and show us where we deviate from it, either in teaching or spirit. Humility is not cowardice. The meek and lowly One was not afraid. Neither are we! We do not intend to be moved by threats nor to be bribed with money. The cross of Christ is greater now than life. That cross is shattered by the littleness of men. We have sometimes in our ignorance assisted in the shattering; we shall seek to repair breaches and restore the peace of God to human hearts. We refuse to compromise; we dare not forsake the truth of heaven. But “with malice toward none; with charity toward all” we shall continue our plea for the unity of all believers in Christ and the restoration of a pure Christianity in this century in which we live.

The Party Spirit

Mission Messenger (March 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

“Now the works of the flesh are plain . . . strife, jealousy, anger, selfishness, dissension, party spirit . . . I warn you, as I warned you before that those who do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God” (Gal. 5:19-21).

The party spirit is a work of the flesh. It is here listed with other things which will debar from heaven. This alone should cause us to examine ourselves to see if we are free from its blight. We earnestly desire an entrance into the everlasting kingdom. We must be willing to crucify the flesh with its passions and desires. But the party spirit is very deceptive. Those who boast the loudest about their freedom from it are often the tragic victims of its poison. How can we know if we are beset by it? We suggest a few indications of its presence.

Symptoms of Party Spirit

1. A reluctance to admit the truths held by others. Truth is truth, regardless of who holds it. The partisan is afraid to acknowledge truth held by those outside of his group for fear it will reflect favorably upon them. If he does admit truth on the part of another, he must hasten to speak deprecatingly of the person or some other position he holds. If someone remarks that Billy Graham certainly spoke the truth in his fight against evil in a radio address, the partisan replies, “Yes, but look at all the money he gets for doing it.” If questioned as to how much Graham gets for his radio service, the partisan cannot tell you. He does not know, but he seeks to offset the fact that truth was spoken by creating suspicion against the man and his motives. No one in the group to which the partisan belongs ever preaches for money, but every person who is a member of another religious party and who speaks any truth, does so insincerely, because he knows better, and his sole object is to inflate his pride and secure filthy lucre.

2. Inability to rejoice over the good done by others. It seems that some would rather see men left to wallow in misery than to see others credited with helping them. They “pass by on the other side” and then revile the “Samaritans” who stop and relieve the wounded and desolate. Recently I was in a town where the local Christian Church preacher had made numerous trips to the home of a drunkard to read the scriptures and talk to the man about his soul. Eventually he had immersed the man who straightened up his life and gave evidence of making a good husband and father. I took occasion to express my gratitude for such an accomplishment in the home of one of the brethren. He scoffingly said, “They cross land and sea to make one proselyte, and then make him twice as much a child of hell as themselves.” I am opposed to instrumental music in the public praise service of the congregation, but I trust I never get so little that I would rather a man would stay in a drunken stupor, or kick and beat his wife and children, than to be led to faith in the Christ by someone who differs with me on instrumental music. I’m opposed to Roman Catholicism but I rejoice at every leper whose path on earth is made freer from pain by the ministrations of the Catholic nurses in a leper colony.

3. Unwillingness to hear both sides of an issue. The Catholic sect seeks to maintain its narrow exclusiveness by refusing to permit its members to read anything which conflicts with its tradition. The clergy can read what they please, but laymen are not allowed to do so. Yet, at Paragould, Arkansas, a clergyman in “The Church of Christ” stood in the pulpit and advised his parishioners to mail back copies of “Bible Talk” and MISSION MESSENGER without reading them, although he reads them all of the time. I know a preacher who cancelled his subscription to one of these journals with a letter consisting of a tirade against the publisher, yet he can hardly wait until he gets his hands on the paper when it comes to a home where he is staying. He just wants to be “in the clear” when he is questioned, so he can say, “I do not subscribe for his paper.” Free men in Christ are not afraid to read anything, go anywhere, or hear anyone. Party men must stay in good with the party or be given a Russian purge.

4. A tendency to abandon the search for truth and rest satisfied. I asked a brother how the cause of restoration was progressing in a certain area, and he told me it was not progressing— they had already arrived! All of the debris of sixteen hundred years of the dark ages had been fully swept away. There was nothing left to learn, no new discoveries to be made. All that was necessary was to parrot the same sermon outlines, misapply the scriptures in the same fashion, defend the same fallacies in reasoning; mistake the same customs and traditions for God’s word, and stir up the same false emotions in the congregation toward others. Every reformation in history ended in another sect; every such sect proclaims that it has arrived in Jerusalem and persecutes those who call upon it to rouse up and keep marching onward and upward. There is nothing which bothers a sect more than to be around one who refuses to be made a sectarian. No partisan is ever at ease in the presence of one who is unwilling to allow the God of the universe to become a tribal deity or local divinity. A real partisan does not seek for new truths. He does not need to do so. His party has ascended to the highest peak of spiritual attainment. There is nothing beyond to challenge his thinking or stimulate his intellect. There is nothing ahead but stagnation and decay!

Effects of Party Spirit

1. It breeds inconsistency. There is not a congregation existing in which all of the members are agreed. In many, the arguments are frequent over marriage and divorce, relation to civil government, our obligation to non-members, etc. In all of these, despite these differences, the members recognize and call upon each other for prayer. Sometimes one is called upon to participate whose moral life has been a disgrace and whose conduct has been a constant source of trouble. He is a member of the party. But let one come in who has been a shining light in the community and who has lived a life of consecration, and he is given the deep freeze treatment, because he does not share with those present in their view upon some point of doctrine. He may be mild, inoffensive, and possessed of a sincere desire to know the truth, and may be doing the best he can in the light of his present knowledge, but he does not yet know the party pass word, so he is a pagan.

2. It shrivels the souls of men. The humanitarian love of God which should expand our souls and cause us to grow in grace withers under the chilling frost of the party spirit. In a certain community a prominent citizen died, and the grief stricken members of his family asked the local Church of Christ for permission to conduct the funeral service in their meetinghouse. They were refused on the ground that they were not using one of “our preachers” and the brethren were afraid of “bidding Godspeed” to one who brought not this doctrine. In another place the Red Cross asked permission to set up an emergency food kitchen in a meetinghouse to serve disaster victims. They were turned down because the brethren did not endorse the Red Cross and did not believe in having a kitchen in the church building. When the Methodist people offered their building, the members of the Church of Christ got in line and marched in to get their plates filled. Their bellies were not partisan; it was just their hearts.

3. It destroys the sense of proper spiritual values. The party spirit, in opposition to the Spirit of Christ, always demands “sacrifice instead of mercy.” In many places a man will be tolerated regardless of his life if he is sound on the party test. In one of the most intolerant and bitter factions of the disciple brotherhood, a number of the preachers have been loose in morals, but their straying from the path of virtue is whitewashed because they are adept at defending the party line. Some of the most bigoted, haughty attackers of “the sects” have personal records which will not bear too close inspection. Some are careful and scrupulous about the Lord’s Supper. The bread has to be prepared a certain way, it has to be broken just so, and passed to the audience in a certain manner. But some who are so zealous about these things often indulge in profanity and other wickedness. The murderers of Jesus would not enter the judgment hall “lest they be defiled and not be fit to eat the passover.” They did not scruple to kill the Son of God, but they must be careful not to be ceremonially defiled.

4. It produces legalistic extremes. The members of each party regard that party as the one holy, catholic, and apostolic church of God upon earth. In some cities there are six different “Churches of Christ” each claiming to be the “only faithful church.” The members of one hardly dare speak to the members of another. If one rises above the narrow confines of his unwritten creed and visits another to discuss with him points of difference, he at once becomes a subject of comment and censure. “When Peter went up to Jerusalem, the circumcision party criticized him, saying, ‘Why did you go to uncircumcised men and eat with them?’” If the apostle Paul were here today, he would not long be allowed to remain in a single faction of the disciple brotherhood. He would be talked about, criticized, and soon excluded from any of them now existing. Paul spent his life in opposing the attempt to bind anything upon men as a basis of fellowship except faith in God’s Son, as the Messiah. He was under constant fire from the circumcision party in the church, whose members insisted upon laying another foundation.

Recently a preacher announced as his sermon topic, "Where Would Paul Attend Church in This City?" I told him it would not make much difference, because they would soon withdraw from him, wherever he went.

The party spirit will keep us out of heaven. All of us have been tinctured with it. It is a passion of the flesh. We should try to overcome it. We need elders today who will cultivate in their flocks a breadth of vision, a charitable spirit, a love for fallen humanity, and a sense of the need of reformation. It is with the bishops that the future of the church of God actually rests. We must all revere God's revelation, refuse to compromise truth, and cling to the word of God as the sheet anchor of our liberty. But we do not need to be dogmatic, arbitrary and hateful. It requires no sacrifice of principle to make allowance for honest mistakes, early religious environment, or lack of proper education. We do not forfeit truth when we make a distinction between those who knowingly and deliberately disobey the Christ, and those who obey him to the best of their present knowledge, even though it is faulty and imperfect.

Just here a word of caution may be necessary. We should guard against unwise generalizations. It is easy to say there is no excuse for a person not seeing all of the truth since he has access to the Bible. But more is required than mere possession of the Book. A man who inherits a rich farm which was long since cleared from the wilderness may conclude that the poor man across the road with a hundred acres ought to be as well off as himself. But he may overlook the fact that the other has to dig sprouts, cut down timber and clear away undergrowth before he can plant his grain. Let those who have been more fortunate in inheriting truth discovered by others, exercise charity toward those who are still laboring to discover what we have. Let us not try to bind God with the law which He gave to bind us. It is better to use the truth we have in charitably helping those who struggle upwards than to use it to repel and drive them away.

Thoughts on Fellowship (3)

Mission Messenger (March 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

The essence of true scriptural investigation is an attempt to understand the real meaning contained in the revelation of God. The Holy Spirit conveyed to mankind the will of the Father in words employed by men in their communication with each other. Our task is to determine the meaning which God attached to those words. In order to do this we must divest ourselves of prejudice and bias, otherwise we will read into the sacred scriptures our own slanted views. It is an acknowledged fact that every sect in Christendom claims spiritual authority for its exclusive doctrines. Those who go to the word of God expecting to find confirmation for a preconceived idea will generally find it, although they get out of the scriptures something which God did not put into them.

What is generally true of the religious world is also applicable to the various factions in the disciple brotherhood. As a case in point we mention the controversy over the use of mechanical instruments in public worship, in which some of the arguments in its defence are about as ridiculous as some of those used by its opponents. Both groups have gone to the Book to confirm their respective positions. They found that for which they were looking. On the subject of “fellowship” even wider divergence is found among the two dozen splinter groups, few of whom even take the time to find out what God meant by the term.

A short time ago I wrote a prominent leader in a faction which makes a test of fellowship out of the matter of grouping students to instruct them in the word of the Lord. I presented to him a hypothetical case as follows. There is one brother in a congregation who does not think it is right to have classes to study the word of the Lord. All of the other members have a deep conviction that it is right and proper to do so. The elders go to the dissenting brother and express their regard for him and their respect for his personal views. They encourage him to come and participate in the corporate worship and mutual edification, and assure him that no reflection will be made against him if he waits to come until the classes are concluded. They confirm their love for him as a brother.

I asked the brother who is a factional leader these questions. What would you advise this brother to do? What scriptural basis would you give for such advice? He replied that he would advise the man to leave the congregation, call for a “loyal” preacher, and try to establish a “faithful” church. In the event that none of the members of the “disloyal” group would come out and take their stand, he would advise the man to move off to a locality where he could worship with a “loyal church.” And as a basis for this conglomerate scheme he cited just one scriptural text— 2 Corinthians 6:14-18.

Brethren, regardless of your position on grouping students to study the sacred oracles that is sectarianism gone to seed! This preacher, in spite of his protestation of “loyalty” is slashing the body of God’s Son to pieces. He is giving counsel which may destroy the souls of those who heed it, and is actually doing despite to the Spirit of grace. And he demonstrates his utter ignorance of the very basis he quotes for his divisive advice. We propose an investigation of this scripture which has provided a weapon for carving the church of God into bloody ribbons. “Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you.”

Nothing is clearer to the honest student of God’s word than the fact that the primitive disciples of our Lord regarded themselves as a community of saints, separated from unbelievers and idolaters by faith in the Messiah as the hope of their salvation. Through the bond of this faith in Him, they were linked together as a family having God for their Father. They constituted a temple or shrine in which dwelt the living God. Their faith in Jesus as the Messiah, the Son of God, constituted the basis of their communal life. The believers were not always agreed among themselves, as witness the congregation at Corinth, but those in Christ who disagreed were not “unbelievers” and were not so designated.

There were two great communities upon earth. One was the church, the other was composed of the pagan world. The first was a koinonia of light, because God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. The temple in which God dwelled was aglow with the light of His presence. It was a kingdom of light, not because of the perfection in life and knowledge of those who composed the temple, but because the Light of Heaven dwelled therein as the pillar of fire once rested upon the tabernacle in the wilderness. The other was a koinonia of darkness. It was the habitation of Belial in whom is no light. Those who walked in it were past feeling, having given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness. They had their understanding darkened, because they were alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that was in them, because of the blindness of their heart.

Each of these communities had its sacrifices. Each expressed its fellowship by communal acts. Since eating and drinking together was an open manifestation of fellowship, this came to be the symbol of the mystic bond which united them. One temple sacrificed to God; the other to idols. One temple brought man into sacred unity with heaven; the other into fellowship with the demons who motivated the idolatry. The apostle writes: "What say I then? that the idol is anything, or that which is offered in sacrifice to idols is anything? But I say, that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to demons, and not to God: and I would not that ye should have fellowship with demons. Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of demons: ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and of the table of demons" (1 Cor. 10:20, 21). Be sure to note the usage of the terms "fellowship" and "partakers."

We are now prepared to note the passage in 2 Corinthians 6:14-18. The admonition to "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," has no application whatsoever to any alliance or association between members of two branches, or sects, in Christendom. It is not even related to the question of whether a member of "The Church of Christ" ought to marry a Baptist, or buy a filling station in partnership with a Methodist. It certainly has nothing to do with whether a girl from a "one cup congregation" should date a boy in a "cups congregation" as the distinction is so naively made by some of the brethren. Regardless of whether or not such ought to happen, it was not the purpose of the Holy Spirit to suggest it here, and some of the more common applications made of the passage would be downright amusing, if it were not for the serious fact that factional leaders, with more ambition for personal power than love for unity in Jesus, cram such thoughts down the theological throats of gullible and unsuspecting partisans, who, in their ignorance, defeat the very purpose of the cross, and do it under the guise of "loyalty" to Him whom they crucify afresh and put to an open shame.

What does the passage mean? The koinonia of heaven is expressed by the terms righteousness, light, Christ, believer, and temple of God. The koinonia of the underworld is expressed by the terms unrighteousness, darkness, Belial, infidel, and idols. There is a community attached to the Christ. It includes the angels of heaven and the men on earth who have acknowledged Him as their prince. There is another community presided over by Belial. It includes the demons of hell and those on earth who are idolaters, refusing to acknowledge the sovereignty of God in their lives. There can be no more fellowship between these communities than there is between their respective princes. They have nothing in common! So long as God lives in us and walks in us, we cannot participate in idolatrous practices, rites and services.

What is meant by the expression “Come out from among them, and be ye separate and touch not the unclean thing?” This is the handle that fits every factional tool ever devised. It has been used by spiritual demagogues to split and splinter those who met and worked together for years. It has been made the agent for separation, heartache and tears, and in many localities has clabbered the milk of human kindness, and inspired such gall and bitterness, that those who once sat together at the Lord’s Table, have set up rival tables, and treat each other with such lack of courtesy and respect as is not so much as named among the Gentiles.

Does this mean that when my Baptist neighbor, who is so kind, generous, and friendly, invites me to go listen to his preacher in a special meeting, that I must draw the garments of my self-righteousness closer about me, to keep from being defiled by his touch, and insult him, because he does not know that I am to “be separate and touch not the unclean thing?” What is the unclean thing? Is it a Bible class for little children, individual cups, fermented wine, a special way of breaking the loaf, colleges, orphan homes, etc.? Remember, the preacher to whom I posed the question about the brother who did not believe in classes, would advise him to try and rend a congregation at peace among themselves in Christ, and this was the scripture he gave for dividing believers in the Lord! To him “the unclean thing” was a system of grouping students to teach them to develop faith in the Christ! Could ever a more damaging, destructive idea be advanced than that which would take the word of God and completely ignoring its purpose, use it in such a manner as to shatter the body of the Lord? This is carving the body of Jesus into bits with the sword which he furnished us to subdue an alien world.

The unclean thing which we are not to touch, refers to the contaminating lust and vice associated with the impure mystery religions of idolatry. The term is not even remotely related to differences among brethren as to interpretation of various scriptures. It would be impossible to describe the degradation and degeneracy growing out of the idolatrous worship, and believers in the Christ are to have nothing to do with such practices or those who engage in them. “What agreement hath the temple of God with idols?”

Even though modern sectism is deplorable, it is still a condition existing among believers in the Christ. Our opposition to it must not be based upon the idea that our religious neighbors are infidels or idolaters, motivated by a voluntary love and attachment to Belial. My Baptist and Methodist friends are firm believers in the truth that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. They are certainly mistaken about certain items contained in His will, and they have exalted their love for a party above their love for a unity of all believers. But to quote the verses under consideration and apply them to those who are of a different order in Christendom, for the purpose of forbidding association, even in order to reason with and teach them, is to make of us the most rabid of all sectarians. These people do not constitute a realm of “darkness” or “unrighteousness” as the terms are used here. Many of them live above moral reproach and have never engaged in filthy or immoral conduct because of idolatrous leanings. They are frequently good examples in moral behavior for some of their rabid attackers. It ill becomes a preacher who is carrying on an affair with another man's wife, to get on the radio and slash away at others of the religious community as sectarian and in "darkness" when their lives are a credit to his!

Every honest, sincere believer in the Messiahship of Jesus of Nazareth, is my brother, either in prospect or in fact. If such a believer has submitted to immersion on the basis of his faith in Jesus, he is my brother in reality, a child of God, and a member of his family. He may not have understood all of the blessings accruing from baptism into the Christ, and he may even have been mistaken as to the time of the bestowal of some of them, but his ignorance of effect or time will not nullify God's grace or promise, if he surrenders his will to that of the Messiah. Since his birth, he may be in error about many things pertaining to his responsibility, worship or service, and he may require a tremendous amount of teaching and adjustment, but he is still my brother, and I will teach him as a brother, and not count him as a pagan or an infidel. If our hearts are both honest we will grow ever closer to each other as we both "grow in grace and knowledge of the truth." The transformation in our lives through conformity to the life of the Christ, will produce uniformity of heart and thought in the two of us.

Not all believers have been immersed. What shall be my attitude toward those who are in that state? It will be the same as the attitude of a family toward an unborn child. We do not revile, castigate or belittle a child in the womb. We rejoice that it has been conceived, and with an air of expectancy prepare for its arrival. So I shall labor to aid those who have been conceived by faith, to come to birth and full delivery into the glorious fellowship of the sons of God. If they die before delivery I shall mourn our loss; if they are born again I shall seek to nurture, strengthen and support them until they can walk alone. To this I am dedicated, believing it is the will of Him whose slave I have become.

(Next month we will give attention to other scriptures which we have previously misused and misapplied in our misguided sectarian zeal. Our intent is to know the truth which makes men free— free from superstition, ignorance, the party spirit, and all that will hinder the free reign of Jesus in our hearts).

The Road to Ruin

Mission Messenger (March 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

The modern one man minister system in “The Church of Christ” is the sectarian pastor system in disguise. Calling those who engage in it “located evangelists” only white washes a system which is without divine authority and exists in opposition to God’s plan of edification for the saints. The idea of hiring a man to do what all are required to do appeals to a lazy, untaught and unconsecrated membership. The special reverence given “The Minister” pampers the pride of the graduate of a seminary who seeks a position of professional status in the community. Of no small moment is the fact that many wives of “Ministers” bask in the social prestige accruing to the office which has been created by the clergy caste among us.

It is not implied that all who are hired as “The Minister” of a congregation are necessarily hirelings, in the modern usage of the term. Many are tireless and self-sacrificing men, but this is true of the clergymen in many denominations. They are victims of circumstances, and lack the courage of conviction required to launch out into the deep through faith in God. A half century ago, the idea of elders hiring or firing a local minister was unknown to restoration-minded churches. But even then conditions were ripening for it to occur.

Brethren were wrapped up in the task of converting men to the Christ. The cause was growing so rapidly and there were so many demands on their time they could not stop to consolidate their gains. They did not train their converts nor develop elders. Men were appointed as bishops who were untaught and unable to cope with changing situations. They had to turn elsewhere for help. In desperation, human institutions were created to supply the need. Every human institution to do the work of the church is a monument to the mistakes of the brethren. Through “ministerial courses” in Bible Colleges men were trained to take over the work and handle it with professional ease for a fee. Under their skillful manipulation congregations grew in size, and made the mistake of thinking that size meant strength. Discipline disappeared as the criterion for a “successful ministry” became the number on the church roster and the increase in contribution. “The church budget” was introduced and pressure methods of exacting money to keep the machinery moving were inaugurated.

Congregations began to bid for the services of “big preachers.” To secure a prominent name as window dressing on the sign in front of a huge cathedral-like building, meant constantly increasing salaries. Special inducements were offered in contracts. Congregations went into the real estate business. They built attractive residences for the “Ministers” although a few decades ago, gospel preachers decried parsonages, rectories and manses as symbols of a decadent sectarianism. Now a full-fledged pastor system is in vogue and a vicious circle is created. The college seeks to place its alumni in favored pulpits for advertisement; the alumnus seeks to recruit from his congregation ministerial students for his alma mater, and the church pays the bill. Scores of sincere individuals are drawn into this whirling vortex of politics and business and think they are doing God service. Many need to be pitied, for they blindly follow blind leaders.

Can “The Church of Christ” be rescued? It is doubtful! It is contrary to all history that a people once started on this giddy path can be checked short of rampant sectism. They now have millions invested in human organizations and money considerations alone would keep them from returning to the old paths! Perhaps if bombs rained upon our cities to blacken and destroy our material temples, ruin our gadgets and drive us to dens and caves of the earth, we might see ourselves in a proper light; or if dearth, famine, plague and depression reduced us all to an equality with no one to whom we might turn except to the Lord, we might find a proper sense of spiritual worth. Otherwise, pride, power and pelf will continue to be motivating factors eating like gangrene at the vitals of the body.

What can be done by those humble servants of the Lord who love Him and His Cause, and who weep over the fate of Zion? They must with earnest devotion find the place they can fill in the Kingdom and dedicate their life to service. So long as brethren desire to be ministered unto, there will be those to do the ministering for hire; the answer is to make every disciple of the Lord a minister through love for God rather than for gain. Godly men must be trained as bishops. Here is our greatest need! The respect for God's eldership must be restored. In short, all Christians must be opposed to the clerical system which steals away their rights and privileges, and relegates most of the congregation to the position of a laity. All must resist the drift away from the simplicity of the divine arrangement and the ancient order.

Restoration

Mission Messenger (March 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

We do not think the church of God ever ceased to exist since the day when it was given birth in Jerusalem, but we do believe that it was forced to flee into “the wilderness” to be nourished of God for 1260 years, during which time knowledge was obscured and a pall of superstition and ignorance enveloped the earth. The love for truth was kept alive in the recesses of the hearts of those who yearned for communion with God, and that love kindled into a flame in the lives and deeds of the reformers, who did their best to uncover the purity of the original ideal of God. We are still laboring to get a clearer view of the divine revelation, and to scale the mountain of faith to greater heights.

When we talk of restoration, we do not imply that the church disappeared or went out of existence. We use the term in the same sense that the art dealer does when talking about “restoring” a painting. Through the years a beautiful work in oils accumulates deposits of foreign matter until the original luster is lost and the vision of the artist is only dimly seen. The work of the “restorer” is not to create another picture, nor produce a new one, but to remove the grime and dirt that has gathered until the original can be seen in its full glory. In the case of God’s masterpiece, much has been done by such worthies as Wycliffe, Luther, Calvin, Wesley, and others, including the Campbells, Stone, Scott, Smith, and others of even more recent date.

But the work is not completed. The prayer of our Master for the unity of all believers has not been answered. That can only come through a restoration of the spirit and form of apostolic Christianity. We must meet the challenge of today! We dare not rest upon the accomplishments of the pioneers of restoration. We need to restore to this age the spirit of restoration! If we assume that we have it all, and that we are without additional challenges to meet, we shall stagnate and become a helpless and dying sect. The church of God must move forward to its great task of world conquest. This is not the time to stop for rest. There remaineth a rest for the people of God, but this is a time for action. The sheep are still scattered on the hills. The children are not yet all in the house. We have a work of gathering to do before the night falls. Are you meeting that challenge?

Not Many Fathers

Mission Messenger (April 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

The relationship sustained by an evangelist to a congregation which he plants is vividly set forth in the words of Paul to the church at Corinth. When the apostle left Athens, he came to the great commercial center of Corinth, where he testified that Jesus was Christ, with such power that “many of the Corinthians, hearing, believed, and were baptized” (Acts 18:8). Later, when the congregation was torn by schisms, he wrote concerning his trials and hardships in proclamation of the word, but added:

I do not write to make you ashamed, but to admonish you as my beloved children. For though you have countless guides in Christ, you do not have many fathers. For I became your father in Christ Jesus through the gospel (1 Cor. 4:14, 15).

So pregnant with meaning are these three sentences that a proper understanding of them would correct many of the abuses extant in the churches today. We freely admit our own incapability of bringing out the depth of thought, but suggest a few items for your meditation. The gospel is the means through which spiritual children are begotten. It is the initial proclamation to aliens to enlist them as citizens. It is not the course of teaching or discipline by which children are to be reared. This is designated “the apostles’ doctrine.” This latter was revealed as congregational growth or mistakes demanded it, just as we train our children in various phases of their growth. But the gospel was as fully proclaimed on Pentecost as it ever was. It had to be, else those who were born that day would have been deformed.

A loss of this distinction has been productive of many errors and is today standing athwart the path of restoration, barring the way to a complete return to primitive Christianity. It is directly responsible for much of the factionism promoted by "The Church of Christ." In a future article I intend to show that these brethren hold to the false premise that "the gospel" embraces the whole of the new covenant revelation. On that basis, since obedience to the gospel brings us into fellowship, they demand that one, in order to be in their "fellowship" must believe and understand every part of the new covenant scriptures exactly as they do. Refusal to conform in any degree means cessation of fellowship and creation of another faction. They are split over their interpretations of the apostolic doctrine on marriage, divorce, civil government, the Lord's Supper, the millennium, care of orphans and widows, Bible classes, and a host of other items too numerous to mention. Their divisions in many localities are a scandal in Christendom, and in their ignorance of fundamental truths they have raped the restoration.

I shall prove these grave charges at another time, but it is sufficient now to say that a child, once begotten, need never be begotten again. He may have many teachers, he has only one father. After being born, he requires instruction and discipline to correct deficiencies in conduct, but does not require begetting. We are begotten by the gospel, and having been begotten, we need not again hear the gospel. In spite of this, and because of a grave error in interpretation, congregations of saints are regularly exposed to what is called gospel preaching at the Lord's Supper, as a stripling fresh from the seminary labors to beget again old saints who were born again forty years before he was born at all. “Can a man, when he is old, enter a second time into his mother’s womb and be born?”

Paul declared that the saints in Corinth might have ten thousand instructors in Christ. This has a strange ring in these days, when, in spite of educational facilities and attainments, brethren are taught that they are not able to teach or instruct each other, but must hire someone for a fee to come in and do that. The apostle wrote to all, “Ye ought to be teachers;” the modern version is, “Ye ought not to be teachers.” But the theme of our remarks is that there is a difference between bringing men into Christ, and instructing those who are in Christ. Men are begotten by the gospel, they are taught in the apostles’ doctrine. The gospel is the good news! One does not teach news. He announces or proclaims it.

What is the relationship, then, of an evangelist to a congregation which he plants? The great evangelist, Paul, regarded those whom he had led to Christ, as beloved children. He declared that he became their father through the gospel. Now the duty of every parent is to work himself out of a job. From the moment a child is born, the true parent is dedicated to the task of training that child to the point where he can stand alone and be independent of the parent. If the child is pampered and spoiled, and does not reach emotional maturity, the parents have failed. Thus, the apostle wrote, “For you know how, like a father with his children, we exhorted each of you and encouraged you and charged you to lead a life worthy of God” (1 Thess. 2:11). He also said, “We were gentle among you as a nursing mother caring for her children.”

Parents do not desert their helpless offspring. They care for them night and day, and often shed tears over them. Thus, Paul said, “Remember that for three years I ceased not to admonish you all, night and day, even with tears” (Acts 20:31). But, having brought them to maturity, he commended them to God, and the word of his grace, which was able to build them up. The primary work of an evangelist is to proclaim the gospel. This we derive from the very word itself. Paul declared, "For Christ did not send me to baptize but to preach the gospel." One is not a father because he assists at delivery, but because he begets his children. A doctor or midwife may assist the children into their new relationship. The work of training immature children grows out of the relationship of a father to his offspring. Fatherhood necessitates care for children until they are self-supporting. Thus, an evangelist is obligated to provide for a congregation of his planting until men are developed and appointed as bishops. The work of guiding and supervising then passes into the hands of these permanent officers. As relates to a congregation, an evangelist must be constantly striving to work himself out of a job, so that he may be on with his primary task. His chief purpose is to preach the gospel, but this is a work with aliens, not saints. The sooner he can rear a family to maturity, the sooner he can be out in his real field.

Because of a misconception of these great truths, many congregations never mature to the place where they can be free from the service of an evangelist. They grow up and become big, but they are helpless and unskilled. They must have a "nursing mother" to gently cherish and pamper them. They appoint elders to meet "the form of church government" but these are often not qualified, and it is never the intention to allow them to supplant the evangelist. In truth, their chief task in many places is to pass upon the merits of prospective foster-fathers, and to hire another for the family to support, when one deserts or is run off by the children.

A new term has been invented to designate these rotating foster-fathers. They are called "located evangelists." Since the holy scriptures know nothing of such a system, human organizations have been created to produce them. Those who would enter the ministry are shipped off from the local congregation where they hold membership and out from under the care of the bishops charged with their spiritual growth, and sent to Tennessee or Texas, to be polished and perfected as pulpiteers, by a human organization. Then they go looking for a family to adopt, and exhibiting their wares, they await the verdict as to whether or not they will be adopted by the family and placed on the pay roll.

The present practice of sermonizing will never produce a mature congregation for it is impossible for it to do so. After years of it under one man, the church will be as weak and helpless as when he started, and upon his departure another sermonizer will have to be hired. No evangelist worthy of the name can engage in such a practice without a sense of guilt, for he is obtaining money under false pretense. Lest we extend this treatise unduly, we conclude with the words of Alexander Campbell, which we commend unto your careful reading and meditation.

This everlasting sermonizing! What good is in it? It resembles nothing that is rational in all the compass of thought. A. B. professes to teach arithmetic; he gets a class of forty boys from 12 to 15 years old, we shall say. He tells them to meet once a week and he will give them a lecture or sermon on some important point in this useful science.

The first day he lectures on cube root for an hour. They sit bookless and thoughtless, heedless, and, perhaps, often drowsy, while he harangues them. He blesses them and sends them home, to return a week hence. They meet. His text is arithmetical progression. He preaches an hour, dismisses as usual. The third day of the meeting up comes vulgar fractions; the fourth, rule of three; the fifth, addition; the sixth, notation; the seventh, cube root again, etc.

Now in this way, I hesitate not to say, he might proceed seven years and not finish one accountant. Who ever thought that a science or art could be taught this way? And yet this is the only way, I may say, universally adopted of teaching the Christian religion. And so it is that many men have sat under the sound of the gospel (as they call it) for forty years, that cannot expound one chapter in the whole New Testament. And yet these same Christians would think it just to prosecute by civil law that teacher who would keep their sons four or five years at English grammar or arithmetic, and receive their money, and yet not one of their sons able to expound one rule in syntax or arithmetic.

They pay the parson— they are of maturer minds than their children, and they have been longer under his tuition, and yet they will excuse both the parson and themselves, for knowing just as little, if not less, of the New Testament, than their striplings know of grammar or arithmetic. . . .

People can never be taught the Christian religion in the way of sermonizing. Public speeches may be very useful on many occasions; but to teach a church the doctrine of Christ, and to cause them to understand the Holy Scriptures, and to enjoy them, requires a course essentially different from either hearing sermons or learning the catechism.¹

END NOTES

1. Alexander Campbell, “A Familiar Dialogue,” Christian Baptist 12 (July 1824): 234-35; Burnet edition: 77.

Thoughts on Fellowship (4)

Mission Messenger (April 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

Some brethren are concerned about my explanation of fellowship and they are unable to reconcile it with traditional explanations of certain scriptures. It is difficult for them to see how we may be in fellowship and differ on any point, although most of them claim to be in fellowship and differ on many points. One passage which seems to give some trouble is Amos 3:3. "Can two walk together, except they be agreed?" It is assumed that this teaches absolute unanimity of opinion as a requisite to fellowship in the Christ, and since I contend that fellowship is a state or condition into which we are called by God, through acceptance of His Son, and that we may walk together in Him while we are learning, even though we now differ in some particulars, it is concluded that my contention is contrary to God's plan and purpose.

Accordingly, it will be necessary for me to take time out from my outlined study on fellowship, to deal with this problem, and while I am anxious to get on with my theme, I do not want to travel with such rapidity that I ignore objections which brethren consider valid. It is obvious that my thesis is in conflict with the common interpretation of Amos 3:3. I do not think it is in conflict with what Amos said, but it is in conflict with what some brethren think he meant. This should point up to us several grave dangers. One is that of jumping at conclusions while ignoring the context, or setting, of a scripture. Another is that of creating an unwritten creed out of our interpretations. We are obligated to accept what God says; we are not obligated to accept what any person thinks that God meant. The basis of God's judgment will be His word, not some interpretation of it. He will open the books He has written, and we will be judged out of the things written in those books, every man according to his own works. God will not open up the books I have written, nor will He use the MISSION MESSENGER as a basis of judgment. I may be judged by what I have written, but you need not be.

Either my general proposition is in error, or the common interpretation of Amos 3:3 is wrong. Before I ever began this series of discussions on fellowship, I carefully listed every passage which might be deemed as being in opposition to the thinking which has crystallized in my heart. I examined critically every one of those passages. If even one had been in apparent controversion of my view, I would never have expressed that view. This passage was the first on my list. In my examination of its bearing on the subject, I became convinced that it has been misused and sadly abused. I have been no less an offender than others, and I must apologize for my error.

"Can two walk together, except they be agreed?" They do so all of the time! I have never fully agreed with any brother upon every interpretation of the holy scriptures, yet I have walked in soul-stimulating partnership with many of them for years. Many a married couple has walked and worked together in spite of serious disagreements at frequent intervals. Many congregations have worshipped together in spite of varied and diverse concepts. Their love for Jesus was greater than their love for their own views and interpretations. To affirm that two cannot walk together until they have reached absolute agreement upon all issues is to deny the testimony of human history, and give the lie to our own experience.

The common explanation is a good indication of what happens when men engage in textual preaching. Nothing else has scrapped the scriptures, or disjointed and butchered God's revelation, to the degree that it has been done by the popular method of preaching from a text. We want to deliver a talk on unity. Amos 3:3 looks like a good foundation, so we lift it out, and start to work. And the sad result is that we employ it in such a manner as to actually divide God's people and create disunity. The purpose of any talk on unity should be to bring brethren closer to the Christ and each other, but if you convince them that it is impossible to please God and walk together if they are not agreed upon every point, then when they disagree on any point, they will sever relations and think they are doing God a service.

But what did Amos mean? To understand this you must know a little about the man and his mission. Amos was not a recognized prophet, nor a product of the school of prophets (7:14). He was a lowly herdsman and a gatherer of sycamine figs, which were used as food by the very poor. God summoned him to travel north and pour out a condemnation in the very courtyard of the king of Israel, the ten tribe northern kingdom, with its capital at Samaria. The statement in which we are interested occurs in one of the denunciatory speeches delivered by Amos. It is only one of a series of questions, intended to show the reason for his sudden appearance on the scene as a prophet. Here is the contextual matter.

Hear this word that the Lord hath spoken against you, O children of Israel, against the whole family which I brought from the land of Egypt, saying, You only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities.

Can two walk together, except they be agreed? Will a lion roar in the forest when he has no prey? Will a young lion cry out of his den, if he have taken nothing? Can a bird fall in a snare upon the earth, where no gin is for him? shall one take up a snare from the earth, and have taken nothing at all?

Shall a trumpet be blown in the city, and the people not be afraid? Shall there be evil in a city, and the Lord hath not done it? Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets. The lion hath roared, who will not fear? The Lord God hath spoken, who can but prophesy?

The prophet is here using the common logical argument that for every effect there is a cause. If a lion roars in the forest, you can be assured he has a prey; if a bird is caught in a snare, it is because the trigger (gin) was set; if you see a trapper run to take up his snare, it is because he has caught something. A trumpet is blown only when danger approaches a city. In the same manner, when one of God's prophets speaks, you can be sure there is a reason. God no more speaks aimlessly through his prophets, than a watchman sounds a trumpet for entertainment.

The expression "Can two walk together except they be agreed?" is only one facet of the argument. The term "agreed" is from YAAD, which Strong's Exhaustive Concordance says is a primitive root. It is defined, "To fix upon (by agreement or appointment); by implication to meet (at a stated time), to summon (to trial), to direct (in a certain quarter or position), to engage (for marriage)." It is obvious that the point under consideration is that when you see two people walking together, it is as the result of an appointment to meet at a stated time. The purpose of the meeting is not under consideration. They might meet to debate their differences as they walk along together, but the fact they are walking along together, indicates an agreement to meet. They had an appointment!

It is possible, that in our thickly populated areas of today, one might run into an acquaintance and walk along with him, but Amos did not live in such an area. J. R. Dummelow, M.A., in his comment on the passage says, "R. V. 'have agreed,' have an appointment. If two people were seen walking along together in the desolate regions with which Amos was familiar it might be assumed they had not met by chance. Nothing happens by chance. There is a reason and cause for Israel's calamities."

There is not one thing in the definition given by Strong which has to do with absolute agreement as two people walk together. The original word relates to an initial engagement to meet, regardless of the purpose. It does not cover the period of marriage, but relates to the engagement; it does not cover the trial in court, but relates only to the summons; it does not cover the purpose of meeting, but merely an agreement upon time and place. I might agree to meet my dentist at a certain time, and we might be together by appointment, but that does not argue that I am in harmony with all of his views or techniques. I'm not!

I do not argue that absolute conformity upon all matters of interpretation is not an ideal for which we should labor. I do argue that it is not a prerequisite to fellowship in the Lord. We do not come into relationship with the Christ because we understand every point of theology alike, but because we have come into Him, we seek to reach a greater degree of mutual understanding. We are not in fellowship because of complete unanimity of opinion but in spite of our divergencies of opinion. We walk together because we have made an appointment with Him to do so. If we wait until we get together upon all of our varying opinions, we will never walk together at all!

God, who is rich in mercy, out of the great love with which He loved us, has quickened us together, raised us up together, and made us sit together in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus (Eph. 2:4-6). We are together because of grace, the undeserved kindness of God. We walk with God and He walks in us. Is this conditioned upon our perfect understanding of all things as God sees them? If God can walk together with me while I am learning, seeking, searching, and yearning to know more about His will, can I not walk with all others in Him who are in the same condition? Jesus walked with two disciples on the way to Emmaus, and asked them, "What is this conversation which you are holding with each other as you walk?" After hearing their stumbling explanation, he said to them, “O foolish men, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken,” and beginning with Moses and all the prophets, he interpreted to them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself. Will he who then walked with foolish men who were slow to believe all that was spoken, refuse to do so now? Or, will His gentle grace abide with us, through the Spirit, that our hearts too may burn within us while he talks with us on the road?

God’s purpose as to ourselves has not yet been perfected. It cannot be as it pertains to each individual, until the individual reaches the ultimate in his spiritual attainment. The temple of God is a growing structure. Each generation finds it reaching outward and upward. The ropes are lengthened and the stakes are strengthened. It is not static, but active. Strangers and foreigners become fellow citizens with the saints and members of the household of God. These are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets. Jesus is the chief cornerstone. In him “the whole structure is joined together and grows into a holy temple in the Lord” (Eph. 2:21). The act of joining the stones together is a divine one; the act of growth is a natural one, aided by the Spirit. Growth always indicates change and adjustment. We must make that in order to fit more fully into the plan of Him “in whom you are builded together for a dwelling place of God in the Spirit.” The fellowship is the joint participation in the Christ, which makes us a part of the building. We are held together, not because of equality of ability, genius, attainment, accomplishment, or opinion, but by the cement of divine love. That cement allows for soul expansion as “we grow up in every way into him, who is the head, into Christ” (Eph. 4:15). How shall we treat each other while we are growing?

The Power of Prayer

Mission Messenger (April 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

The spiritual condition was at a low ebb in Israel. The son of Omri, who succeeded him to the throne, exceeded him in doing evil. This was no small feat for the father had been more evil than all who preceded him. Idolatry was everywhere prevalent. To make matters worse, the monarch took as a wife, Jezebel, the wicked daughter of the Sidonian king. She resolved to crush out the worship of Jehovah and install Baal worship in the land. Her first act was to get her husband, Ahab, to build a great temple to Baal, and construct an altar to that idol, in his capital city of Samaria. Then she began a war of ruthless extermination against the remaining prophets of Jehovah. It was then that the national prophet, Elijah the Tishbite, showed what prayer could accomplish.

Realizing that a demonstration was necessary to bring the people to their knees before Jehovah, he prayed that all rain would be kept from the land. The heavens became like brass and the earth like iron. Springs ceased to flow and watercourses dried up and became dusty. The king called his prime minister and said, "Go through the land to all the springs of water and to all the valleys; perhaps we may find grass and save the horses and mules alive, and not lose some of the animals." They divided the land between them to survey it. The king went one way by himself, the minister went in the other direction by himself. Three years and six months had gone by, and Elijah prayed again, this time for rain. “And in a little while the heavens grew black with clouds and wind and there was a great rain” (1 Kings 18:45).

James 5:17, 18 says, “Do you remember Elijah? He was a man like us but he prayed earnestly that it should not rain. In fact, not a drop fell on the land for three and a half years. Then he prayed again, the heavens gave the rain and the earth sprouted with vegetation as usual.” This is cited to illustrate a point. “Tremendous power is made available through a good man’s earnest prayer.” Elijah was a man like us in one way, but the thing we need is men who will be like Elijah. He knew how to turn on heaven’s generator, he had the key to the power plant of God.

The power of heaven is available to us. If it is not, there would have been no point in saying that Elijah was a man like us. But that power, tremendous in its potentiality, is only made available through prayer. It must be offered by good men. It must be offered in earnest. This is the combination which unlocks the vault of divine energy. A great mistake is made in concluding that God’s power is expressed only in the realm of the natural and miraculous. Men conclude that because supernatural power is not exercised that extraordinary power is not. There is a difference in the two. Not everything that is uncommon or unusual is miraculous.

I am convinced we do not use the might that is available for us. Our house is wired for electricity but we burn tallow candles. We possess dynamite but are content to shoot firecrackers. God is ready to do more for us, and through us, than we are ready for him to do.

We are self eclipsed, getting between ourselves and the light of heaven. When Jesus withered a fig tree to the roots by a spoken word, his disciples were amazed. He answered them, “Have faith in God. Truly, I say to you, whoever says to this mountain, 'Be taken up and cast into the sea,' and does not doubt in his heart, but believes what he says will come to pass, it will be done for him."

Not all mountains are physical. There are intangible mountains of disunity and division. Because they loom big, men become fearful and unbelieving. They quail before the seemingly insuperable barriers. But no obstruction is greater than God's power. Any mountain is weak when it meets a man of God. When such a man rises up the mountain falls down. Does God want this mountain removed?

Furnish him the man who will say, "Be taken up and cast into the sea," and He will furnish the power. There are two things required of such a man. He must have a heart empty of doubt and full of faith. He must believe that what he says will come to pass. A heart is powerless when it vacillates between doubt and belief. "A house divided against itself cannot stand." "He must ask in sincere faith without secret doubts as to whether he really wants God's help or not. The man who trusts God, but with inward reservations, is like a wave of the sea, carried forward by the wind one moment, and driven back the next. That sort of man cannot hope to receive anything from God, and the life of a man of divided loyalty will reveal instability at every turn" (James 1:6-8).

Secret doubts, inward reservations, divided loyalty— these sum up the reasons why so many are weak, helpless, frustrated, distressed and discouraged. Like Peter, they take their eyes off of Christ, and look at the water. That is when they start to sink. Jesus put his finger on the difficulty when he said to Peter, "O, thou of little faith!" Peter had faith to start when Christ called to him, but it was not enough to keep him going. We need men today who can keep their heads above water while walking to Jesus. We do not need to be satisfied with things as they are. During the Renaissance men re-made the world. We can do the same. We can help usher in a golden age. It is true that waves of sectarianism beat high, the winds of false doctrine shriek through the rigging of the Ship of Zion, and the thunder of schismatic cries reverberates through the religious firmament. But I serve one who commanded the sea to be calm, and the winds and the waves to obey his will. There was never a storm which did not end. The sun will shine again!

I am asked if I really expect my feeble efforts to contribute materially toward restoration and unity. Men point to my lack of finance, my limitations of formal education, the puny size of this little journal issued only once per month. They picture the magnitude of the problem with almost three hundred great sects pitted against each other. They point to the huge seminaries grinding out thousands of clergymen annually, the millions of dollars in the hands of those who support sectarian enterprises, the hundreds of books and papers pouring in a stream from the press, to be used as propaganda mediums. They tell me of whisper campaigns of my own brethren, of secret meetings filled with fear and fuming. "But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself!" Does Jesus want the mountain of sectism and partisan spirit removed and cast into the sea? Does he want all who believe in him to be one? Does he really? Then someone must arise who has no doubt in his heart that it can be done. He must believe that what he says will come to pass. Only then can God do for him what he prays to be done! He who works thus, and works for God's purpose, works with God! Tremendous power is made available through a good man's earnest prayer!

God's power is not limited by education, finance, or feebleness. He can conquer by the few as well as with the many. He has not chosen the wise, the mighty, or the noble. He has chosen the foolish, the weak, the base, and the things that are despised! That lets me in. "Here am I, Lord, send me!" Yes, brethren, it will come to pass. The prayer of Jesus will not go unanswered!

Instrumental Music (1)

Mission Messenger (May 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

For almost a century those congregations which resulted from the restoration movement have been disturbed over the question of instrumental music in the public praise service of the saints. Next year will mark the centennial of the introduction of a melodeon into the worship of the church at Midway, Kentucky, by Dr. L. L. Pinkerton. During the past ninety-nine years countless reams of paper have been devoted to treatises on the theme, heated debates have been held, congregations have been rent asunder, families have been divided, and communities disrupted by the issue, and yet, the cleavage continues as great as ever.

Those of us who live in this generation have inherited the problem and its consequences. Have we the courage to face up to it in the spirit of Christ and to seek for a proper solution in calm humility, and not inflamed by the same passions and animosities which characterized previous generations? Is it possible for us to admit mistakes in attitude which only served to widen the breach, and now to labor together in mutual love for Christ and with respect for each other, that we may, by His help, eliminate the cause of the division? It is evident that our Father does not want His children divided over use of instrumental music in the corporate worship. He wills that we be one, and that we endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. We are divided, and since such division is contrary to His will, we must work toward a healing of the breach, and strive for unity.

It will not do for those who do not believe in using the instrument to wash their hands of the problem, and profess an unconcern about it, or declare that it is no affair of theirs. Regardless of who must bear the blame for the creation of the problem, or the responsibility for perpetuating it, not one of us dares to be insensible to the fact that the family of God is torn and rent, and the divine will is that “there be no schism in the body” (1 Cor. 12:25). If I dare not set at naught my brother, then I can never be callous toward, nor unaffected by, those things which act as walls to separate us.

The methods employed in introducing the instrument served to focus upon it an importance it probably does not deserve. In almost every congregation there were strong protests. Older brethren tearfully besought that it not be forced upon them. Locks were installed upon meetinghouse doors. These were often broken at night with an axe or sledge hammer and the organ brought in under cover of darkness. Congregations were split and lawsuits for the property were instituted. In many cases those who insisted upon having the organ regardless of consequences were younger men and women. Those who opposed it were designated “mossbacks,” “old fogies,” and “antis.” The ones favoring the instrument labeled themselves “Progressives.” They thus made it appear that the progress of the kingdom of heaven depended upon having the instrument. In turn, they were called “Digressives” by those who opposed them.

In many areas the two groups built meetinghouses in proximity to each other. Although both proclaimed the gospel and immersed the believing penitents who accepted it, there was no recognition and no common ground. Members often refused to employ common courtesy, not even deigning to speak to or greet those of the opposition. Both proselyted from the other with vengeance and diligence; both hailed it as a signal victory when one left the other group to take a stand with them. Through the years, the instrument came to be the party standard around which the battle was waged in fury.

Recently, in Charleston, West Virginia, I visited two congregations within a few blocks of each other. Both bore the label "Church of Christ." One used the instrument, the other did not. The minister of the non-instrumental congregation was asked how he regarded those who attended at the other place. He replied that he regarded them just as he did any other sectarians. He said he would not call upon one of them to pray or to comment in a Bible study. He did not regard them as brethren and he felt if they "came over" they should be re-baptized.

In Birmingham, Alabama, during a debate held between two factions of "The Church of Christ" the writer took occasion to query a number of preachers from the Southland as to their attitude toward those who use the instrument. None of them recognized them as brethren; some said they would just as soon accept a Baptist on his "Baptist baptism" as a Christian Church man on "Christian Church baptism." They would insist that he submit to "Church of Christ baptism." It was a vain effort to try and show these men that their position was extreme party-ism. They were the products of David Lipscomb College, Harding College, Freed-Hardeman College, and Abilene Christian College, and in their seminary training they had been taught an arrogant exclusivism, and shown how to "handle the instrumentalists." It is worth remarking that when the division first occurred, the organ was only one of several issues placed in the same category, others being the hired minister, parsonages, and human institutions to do the work of the church. Now that the church in the south has "outprogressed the Progressives" on all of these other matters, the only issue left is the music question and around it the forces rally.

It is not unfair to state that since "The Church of Christ" now has bigger cathedrals, better parsonages, and greater ministerial salaries, a number of preachers in Texas and elsewhere have suddenly decided that instrumental music is a sin, some even submitting to re-baptism in order to assure the congregations offering them a job that they are orthodox, and now look upon the instrumental brethren as being “of all men most miserable.” This does not imply that all who reach the conclusion that instrumental music has no place in the corporate worship do so from mercenary motives, for many suffer greatly for such conviction. Yet it is a known fact that a comfortable job at a good salary has been dangled as bait before some in order to “convert” them to the wrong of using the instrument.

There have been some notable changes wrought in the past several years among those who use the instrument. Whereas, it was introduced by the younger element over the protest of older brethren; now a great many sincere young people would be willing to abandon it to secure peace and unity, but they are restrained by the older ones, who would consider any such move as “a surrender to the antis.” In the seminaries the budding ministerial students are taught how to meet the arguments of “the antis” and in many communities it is felt that the organ or piano is a veritable symbol of freedom in Christ, so that just as some men die for freedom, some would die for the instrument. It is altogether possible that if a calm appraisal of the situation could be made, and if it could be shown that liberty in Christ does not need a material symbol as a bastion of defence, in not a few communities the breach could be healed. It is evident that many non-instrument groups have liberty in Christ, with a freedom to think, speak and act; whereas, many who use the instrument have little freedom in either respect. The reverse is likewise true. It is a consideration of this fact which prompts me to say that the instrument has been elevated to a position of importance it does not deserve. So long as a material thing is regarded as the embodiment of intangible rights and privileges it will be elevated in our thinking to a position not commensurate with its real value.

I think that I can detect throughout the whole world signs of a rising interest in restoration. Letters cross my desk from almost every continent on the globe. Many of these indicate a fervency of spirit, a degree of consecration, and a yearning for oneness in the Master such as I have never observed in any previous period of my life. Of course, some evince a spirit of timidity and fear, and many shrink back from contacts with those whom they have regarded as enemies. There is a belief in some circles that the Cause of Christ is being betrayed, and that the church is being "sold down the river," but brethren in general are able to see that our attitude in the past has driven away as many as have been led to Christ, and the narrow factional spirit is decried as unworthy of those who "seek peace and ensue it." It is now possible to discuss differences without rancor, hatred or animosity. This alone can only betoken good for the future.

My own personal views about the place of instrumental music in the public praise service of the body have tended to crystallize more fully as I have examined the question anew in the light of the arguments of those who defend it. I find myself more opposed than ever, if possible, and my conscience forbids my participating in corporate worship in conjunction with it. But those believers who use it are my brethren. They are children of my Father. Jerusalem, which is above, is the mother of us all. They are in my fellowship in the scriptural import of that term. I do not hesitate to go among them. I invite them to my home, not as enemies, but as brethren in Christ. Those who oppose instrumental music are not my brethren because they oppose it, those who use it are my brethren in spite of the fact. We are brethren not because of our position but because of our parentage. We have been born into the same family, and in that family we have inherited certain conditions which produce friction. We must work on these problems and seek a solution which will glorify God and maintain the human dignity which belongs to those who are in Him.

I do not recognize the instrument as a symbol of degeneracy, dishonesty, or apostasy. To do so would hinder a proper approach to our problem as much as to regard it as a symbol of freedom. Those who employ it may as honestly think that they worship God with it, as others honestly think they cannot. In most cases, in this generation, we were born and reared under one influence or another. Many do not know anything about the original disruption over introduction of the organ. They either have it, or they do not have it, but they could not give a sensible answer why in either case. They are content to leave such matters to the preachers and to follow the lead of the theologian who is most friendly and a good mixer. There are thousands who worship where the instrument is used who are blissfully unaware that anyone opposes it. To say that they have maliciously and deliberately conspired to violate God's command is the height of folly. It is possible that we have bombarded each other with slogans and symbols until the truth has been obscured.

Not long ago I was invited by the elders of a Christian Church to speak one night on "Restoring the Restoration." I readily agreed to go. I did not make any demands or issue any ultimatums, nor did they place any restrictions upon me. At the outset of the meeting, one of them announced that because of my personal convictions they would desist from use of the instrument in the service. I would have spoken in any event, but I hail such overtures as indications of a new day for restoration, as we learn mutual respect for one another.

A goodly number of young preaching brethren, reared in instrumental congregations, have told me that if they were planting new congregations, they would urge the brethren not to use the instrument, not because they oppose it as an innovation of Satan, but because they would not want to be responsible for creating a state of things which would debar brethren like myself from participating in every phase of the public devotions. This indicates real magnanimity of character. Of course, some of the noninstrumental brethren might demand that they make a public confession that the use of the instrument was a sin before they would have anything to do with them. I would not do so, for to me that would be an exhibition of party spirit, and one should not be forced to confess a thing is a sin against his conscience.

I am of the opinion that this question will be worked out, if ever solved at all, upon a local level. There will never be, nor should there ever be, a top level meeting of representatives of the two groups to decide the course of action which must be taken by all the churches nationally. We must not be frightened by our differences into creation of an ecclesiasticism which would be far more harmful in its effects than what we seek to overcome. Above all, we must not expect the problem to be solved for us by editors, or papers, for these can dominate the brotherhood if they become dogmatic and arbitrary interpreters of God's will for His people.

The one thing essential to provide the proper atmosphere is love. With it we can achieve things above what we ask or think; without it we will accomplish nothing. We must remember that Jesus teaches us that the nail of love is the one from which is suspended all the law and the prophets. It would gain us nothing, if in our zeal to keep one commandment, we pull out the nail on which all hang, and let them all fall to the earth.

We must not assume that this is a closed question and that nothing further should be done about it. No question is closed for those who love God, so long as it keeps His children apart. There must never come a time when our hearts are so hardened we will not resume negotiations in love with the hope of lessening the barriers. We must never slam shut the door on further study of the issue. Even though progress appears imperceptible and it appears we are making no gain, God may be working through us as His humble instruments to lead mankind to a brighter day. The long days and weary nights spent in consultation and prayer must produce fruit if we grow not weary in well-doing. Only Satan can gain when we cease to love each other, and become stubborn and adamant.

This is enough for this time upon this problem. Next month, God willing, I will present some of the reasons for my own personal conviction upon this matter, and at the same time I will notice one of the more recent arguments which is being made in behalf of the use of instrumental music. I solicit the prayers of all who love the Lord that what I say may be spoken in love, and that it will not worsen, if it does not help, our present status. Since only the peacemakers can be called the children of God, I want to be numbered among them if possible, and to that end I shall dedicate my feeble efforts and limited talents. May He help us to be kind and forbearing.

Thoughts on Fellowship (5)

Mission Messenger (April 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

The divided state of believers in the Messiah is one of the most tragic blights upon our modern world. It is the chief deterrent to the subjugation of the alien world to our King. We must face up to the full implications of this condition, for we will not escape in the final judgment, any personal responsibility for creating or perpetuating it. We dare not slight or try to ignore the situation. This fact was clearly recognized by our forefathers and they sought to alleviate and eliminate the sectarian status. Thus Alexander Campbell wrote:

Tired of new creeds and new parties in religion, and of the numerous abortive efforts to reform the reformation; convinced from the Holy Scriptures, from observation and experience, that the union of the disciples of Christ is essential to the conversion of the world, and that the correction and improvement of no creed, or partisan establishment in Christendom, could ever become the basis of such an union, communion, and Cooperation, as would restore peace to a church militant against itself, or triumph to the common salvation— a few individuals, about the commencement of the present century, began to reflect upon the ways and means to restore primitive Christianity.”¹

The resultant effort amazes every student of the history of the church of God. Sectarian citadels were shaken to their very foundations. Those who were “tired of new creeds and new parties in religion,” imbued with an unquenchable desire for unity in order to achieve the purpose of the Messiah upon earth, attained such goals as made it appear that this whole nation might be brought to the foot of the cross. Of the fierce ambition which burned within the hearts of these worthies, Campbell wrote:

Next to our personal salvation, two objects constituted the summum bonum, the supreme good, worthy of the sacrifice of all temporalities. The first was, the union, peace, purity and harmonious cooperation of christians— guided by an understanding enlightened by the Holy Scriptures; the other, the conversion of sinners to God. Our predilections and antipathies on all religious questions arose from, and were controlled by, these all absorbing interests. From these commenced our campaign against creeds.”²

It is interesting to note the simple way by which it was proposed to unite all Christians. We quote again from Campbell:

A deep and abiding impression that the power, the consolation and joys— the holiness and happiness of Christ’s religion were lost in the forms and ceremonies, in the speculations and conjectures; in the feuds and bickerings of sects and schisms, originated a project many years ago for uniting the sects, or rather the christians in all the sects, upon a clear and scriptural bond of union; upon having a ‘thus saith the Lord,’ either in express terms, or in approved precedent, ‘for every article of faith, and item of religious practice,’ . . . making faith in Christ and obedience to him, the only test of Christian character, and the only bond of church union, communion and co-operation.”³

What is the present status of those who are spiritual heirs of the “few individuals who began to reflect upon the ways and means to restore primitive Christianity"? Are they tired of new parties in religion? Are they seeking to restore peace to a church militant against itself? Do they still look upon the union, peace and harmonious co-operation of Christians, as an object of supreme good? Do they deem this object worthy of the sacrifice of all temporalities? Are they yet laboring on the project of uniting the Christians in all the sects?

Far from it! They have been enticed into the business of producing sects. The noble ideal has been shattered. There are more than two dozen splinter parties which have grown out of the restoration effort. Each of these claims to be the one holy, catholic, and apostolic church. Each contends that it alone is the kingdom of the heavens. Each one is "the brotherhood." Each one is the "loyal church." There is no project to unite the Christians in all sects, for each sect claims, like Rome, to have all the Christians there are under its inconsistent wings. This is the bread upon which we have been fed, this is the milk we have drawn from the paps of our factional religious mothers, and upon it we have been nurtured and nourished into spiritual dwarfs of bigotry, hate and exclusiveness, "which say, Stand by thyself, come not near unto me; for I am holier than thou" (Isa. 65:5).

Physical dwarfs sometimes develop warped personalities. In a world of men of normal stature they must be over-assertive, pugnacious, resentful of every imaginary slight. They must walk with a swagger, cultivate a deep voice, and growl at every one else. Napoleon, the little Corsican, set out to conquer the world, to prove his power despite his diminutive stature. The same psychological reaction may be characteristic of spiritual dwarfs. Little men may appear big if they can rationalize all others into inferiority. A small faction can appear of tremendous importance if its members can be made to believe they constitute the sole survivors of the Israel of God, and are the exclusive recipients of God's grace, while every other person on the face of the earth is doomed to damnation because he does not see eye to eye with them on every minute point of practice. But such delusions of grandeur are fatal to the intellect and deadly to the heart.

Indicative of the effect of such attitudes is the wresting of certain scriptures which may be twisted to justify schism and the party spirit in direct contradiction of those passages which forbid and condemn it. Men now love the party spirit. They advocate disunity and preach division among brethren. Under such circumstances any passage which seems to condone separation is seized upon with joyful abandon. As an example, I cite Ephesians 5:11, which says, "And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." Brethren seem to be overjoyed at the thought that they find here the expression "Have no fellowship." All they need to do is to make the term "works of darkness" elastic enough to cover the item currently in dispute, and another division is born.

A short time hence I was in correspondence with a brother who was contending that one could not scripturally engage in the Lord's Supper, except with fermented wine. He was bitterly partisan. I asked him for the scriptural ground upon which he made this a test of fellowship. He merely wrote down in big letters Ephesians 5:11, underlining it twice. Upon such ignorance of the intent of God's plan or purpose a new sect is introduced into the strife-torn religious world.

Did Paul who wrote in one verse instructing the congregation at Ephesus to manifest "all lowliness and meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one another in love," write in another verse for the same brethren to fracture into splinter parties over opinions and preferences? Did he who wrote, "Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," write again to the same group to "have no fellowship"? Even a cursory examination of the context would demonstrate the folly of any such interpretation. "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness!" Are these works to be interpreted to refer to classes to study the Bible, individual cups, leavened bread on the Lord's table, orphan homes, etc. Brethren should not add the stigma of being ridiculous to that of factionalism.

Whether the things enumerated, or a score of others in the same category, are right or wrong, this passage is not even remotely related to them. "The works of darkness" in verse 11 are the "things done in secret" (verse 12). These refer to the indescribable vices and licentious practices of the mystery cults of the Gentile world. Under cover of darkness and in the inner recesses of idol temples such gross sensuality was engaged in that the depth of depravity can hardly be fathomed by minds not attuned to base immorality.

Fornication, unchastity and idolatry debar from inheritance in the kingdom (verse 5). These things bring the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience (verse 6). Because of these considerations the disciples were not to be partakers with them (verse 7). The state in which they existed had been changed. The apostle said, "You were sometimes darkness." Once they were steeped in idolatry and all of its filthy and abominable practices. "Now ye are light in the Lord. Walk as children of light." To get a true picture of the darkness of which the apostle writes, one need only read Romans 1:21-32 and ponder the significance of the statement, "God gave them over to a reprobate mind."

Now to apply these passages to those in the realm of Christendom who are of a different order than ourselves and cite them as the basis for refusal to be partakers with them in their rituals and worship is to stultify any claim we make to fairness as scholars of the sacred oracles. There may be, and there are, good and sufficient reasons why we cannot endorse, assist or participate in the religious performances of many about us, but they do not fall within the category of characters described by Paul. The divided state of believers in Christ is a sad and dreary thing to contemplate, yet in every sect and segment, there are good men and noble, those who are pure, chaste, and holy in life. We owe much to the scholarship of such men in the Church of England, Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, and Quaker communions, as well as others. It ill becomes us to accept the fruit of ripe research from their hands, and then bite the hand from which we take it.

Please observe that we are not now dealing with whether or not such men are Christians. Our present treatise does not concern what they are, so much as what they are not. And we affirm that they are not the type of characters to whom Paul alludes in this passage. No sincere believer in the Messiah who is morally above reproach falls under this condemnation. To assume that a man is degraded and degenerate because he honestly disagrees with us upon the subject of baptism, for example, is a greater reflection against our reasoning powers than against his. Many of my neighbors are members of the Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, and other Protestant sects, which today portray so graphically the deplorable state of division into which the world has fallen. But they are not walking in the darkness of which Paul wrote, nor do they have fellowship with the unfruitful works which he contemplated.

Theirs is the wrong of perpetuating a party to the division of God's people. This is a work of the flesh. But there is a difference in the influence upon society and the moral tone of the world in some of these works, as every logical reasoner must admit. Moreover, many of the adherents of the various religious parties are to an extent innocent victims of birth, environment and other circumstances beyond their control. And many love the truth, seek after it, and sigh for a greater knowledge of it. They pray for the unity of the church of God and long for a better day for Zion.

A person in one of the numerous sects of Christendom today may be a child of God, or he may not. That is also true of those who are in “The Church of Christ.” Certainly one who is a child of God and still attached to a sect or party, is a child of God and something else. The mere fact that a man is in the Baptist party does not argue that he is not a child of God, but he may be a child of God and a Baptist, in the partisan sense of that term. I am a baptist, but not a Baptist. Our task is not to deny he is a child of God, but to get him to cease being a partisan, for the party spirit is a sin. The dividing of God’s children into schismatic groups labeled by partisan names, designed to keep them apart, is sinful. God wants all of His children to be one in the Christ. All who are truly His children are dedicated to the destruction of all religious parties, regardless of which one they may be associated with at present. A follower of the Lamb cannot condone, defend, uphold or perpetuate the party spirit. If he finds himself in a human party, he must either transform it or come out of it, if it is impossible of reformation.

We must be careful that in our opposition to the party spirit we are not mere partisans. I am fully convinced that many of my brethren are opposing sectism from a sectarian standpoint. They are interested in getting people out of “their sect” and into “our sect.” Of course they would not admit that, but that is what it amounts to. No doubt they are honest in their endeavor for they too are the victims of the circumstances of birth, training and environment. Some feel that sectism cannot exist in a religious body wearing the title “Church of Christ.” They think it serves as an amulet or charm with special powers for exorcising the demon of sectism. But some of the most partisan and bigoted sectarians in our modern world operate under that title. The very usage of the term in a segregatory and separationist fashion is indicative of the sectarian spirit.

There was a “Christ party” at Corinth. They were condemned in the same language as those who called themselves after the name of Paul, or Cephas, or Apollos. It is just as sinful to divide the body of Christ by saying, “We belong to Christ,” with the intent to separate yourselves from other brethren, as to say, “We belong to Paul,” for the same purpose. It was to the members of this party that Paul wrote, “Look these facts in the face. If any man is fully persuaded as regards himself that he belongs to Christ, let him consider again with himself, that just as he is Christ’s, so also am I” (2 Cor. 10:7). Paul had accepted the Good News and been immersed into the Lord, and he did not propose to be dispossessed of his citizenship by those who claimed to belong to Christ in a special way, because they had formed an exclusive party wearing the term “Christ” to distinguish them from other brethren who had been immersed. There are scattered sheep on the hills of sectarianism today who could say to those calling themselves “The Church of Christ,” as Paul said, “Let them consider again, that just as they are Christ’s, so also are we.” God’s children have not all been gleaned from Babylon yet, and it will not help to wall off a little segment of Babylon and label it “Jerusalem.”

What is the essential equipment for those who would help answer the prayer of Jesus for unity of all who believe in Him through the testimony of the apostles? It is possible that we cannot detail all that is required. We have exercised such poor personal judgment in the past, and have so often mistaken the factional spirit for the spirit of righteousness, that we may be in a poor state to make suggestions. However, in humility and sincerity we mention the following as attributes of him who would walk toward the greatest goal that can challenge the thinking of the slaves of God on earth.

1. A firm and unshakable conviction that sectism is a sin, a work of the flesh, and will keep all who wilfully indulge in it out of the kingdom of heaven.

2. The ability to distinguish between the person and the party to which he belongs. Many are attached to sects who are not at all sectarian. Wholesale denunciation without recognition of the varying attitudes and degrees of knowledge is unwise and unreasonable.

3. A rigid determination to be nonpartisan and to call upon all men to rally to the cross, that at this common center we may become truly one in the only One who has a right to draw all men unto himself.

4. A spirit of forbearance and patience while men are learning. The road from Babylon to Jerusalem will not be covered in a day. Let us be content to contribute our little bit to the great work of the ages, and He who made the ages will weave it into His pattern so the thread will not be lost. No one of us can develop the whole pattern of God for the whole world in his lifetime.

5. A love of truth for truth's sake, which will crucify within us the dogmatic spirit, and make us realize that our intellectual "Geiger counters" may indicate a rich deposit of heaven's precious ore in areas which our human wisdom would cause us to pass by and leave unexplored. Let us prospect every inch of ground for truth.

END NOTES

- 1. The Christian System, London (1843), iv.
- 2. Ibid, ix.
- 3. Ibid, v.

Thoughts on Fellowship (6)

Mission Messenger (June 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

Fellowship in Christ is a state or relationship to which we are called by the gospel. All who are immersed into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, as believing penitents are in that fellowship. We share with each other because we are made partakers of the Christ. We are holy brethren because we share in a heavenly call (Heb. 3:1). We are fellow heirs and members of the same body, because we are partakers of the promise in Christ Jesus through the gospel (Eph. 3:6). In view of this we are to live “in such harmony with one another, in accord with Christ Jesus, that together we may with one voice glorify the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ” (Rom. 15:6). In order to do this we must “welcome one another, therefore, as Christ has welcomed us, for the glory of God” (Romans 15:7).

We are joined and knit together as a body (Eph. 4:16). We have access in the one Spirit to the Father (Eph. 2:18). We must be “eager to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace” seeing that there is only one body and one Spirit (Eph. 4:3). So long as the Holy Spirit dwells in any man he is bound by an invisible cord to heaven; and by the same token, he is bound to every other person in whom the Spirit abides. This is “the fellowship of the Spirit” (Phil 2:1). Because we sustain that relationship we are urged to “complete my joy by being of the same mind, having the same love, being in full accord and of one mind” (verse 2). We do not come into the fellowship because we are of the same mind, or have the same love but we come to be of the same mind and have the same love, because we are in the fellowship. God brings us into fellowship through grace; we grow together by mutual eagerness to maintain that unity.

One of the greatest tragedies of this age has been the lack of eagerness to maintain unity. There has been an eagerness to divide but a decided reluctance to unite. Men have no fear of separation, but live in mutual dread of ending it. Nowhere does the word of God counsel division among believers. In scores of passages unity is urged, but we could not be more divided if the word of God had commanded it. No one is so unpopular in some circles today as he who speaks for unity. Brethren take counsel together to stop the mouth of one who pleads for it, and if they cannot stop his mouth, they stop their ears. This is the sad state to which Christendom is reduced by our littleness, fears, frustrations, bigotry and hatred. Is it any wonder that under such circumstances we seek and earnestly look for scriptural warrant for our procedure? We have charted our course by ourselves; we must alter God’s chart and map to justify it. We now place a ban upon unity and a blessing upon division. “Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet and sweet for bitter! Woe unto them that are wise in their own eyes, and prudent in their own sight” (Isa. 5:20).

Think of the frightful cleavages that invest the realm of Christendom. If you disregard the great division between Romanism and Protestantism, and regard only the latter as filling the nominal Christian domain, behold the almost three hundred sects and cults which cumber our own country. If you restrict your narrowed vision to the heirs of the restoration movement, you must contemplate no less than twenty-five splinter parties, each one belaboring all of the others as sects and factions. Nor is the end yet, for the germ of the seed which has produced this state is not dead or dormant, and there must follow more division, factionism, strife, contention and bitter debate. We will bequeath to our children and our children's children a legacy of hate and intolerance, so they will bite and devour one another, and long after our bones moulder in the earth, the feuds will go on and damn our offspring to the flames of hell. With all of our modern skills and scientific acumen we have not yet solved the problem of how all believers in Christ can be one. Is it any wonder we cannot solve our national and international problems? The greatest challenge to Christendom today is to find the answer to the prayer of Jesus. There is an answer! There has to be!

Those who love God and revere His word will seek for the answer in that word. But they must learn how to handle it properly. It is a sword, and such a weapon in an unskilled hand may slay more friends than enemies. We want to deal in this little essay with one passage of scripture which we have used in a factional sense. It has been used over and over to create and widen schisms in the body of the Lord. We refer to 2 John 9, 10. "If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him Godspeed, for he that biddeth him Godspeed is partaker of his evil deeds." This is the handle that has been shaped to fit every factional tool man has invented.

In Tennessee, a man reaches the conclusion that it is a sin to teach little children the word of God in a Bible class in the meetinghouse. This is made his party test, and "If any man bring not this doctrine, receive him not." In Texas, a man decides that the fruit of the vine must be passed to the congregation in one container. That is made his party test and "if any man bring not this doctrine, receive him not." In the same factional strain, one in his congregation concludes that the fruit of the vine passed in that one container must be fermented. This becomes his party test, and "if any man bring not this doctrine, receive him not!" To one "this doctrine" means a special way of breaking the loaf, to another it refers to orphan homes, to another our relation to civil government, to another it has to do with certain regulations on marriage. But whatever the party test, one must bring this doctrine, or he is an outcast, and must be given the cold shoulder, disregarded as a brother and treated like a pagan.

Did the apostle of love intend to create such a conglomerate mess as we now behold? Did he who wrote that “we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren” also give us instruction to club the life out of them or to drive them out when they could not conscientiously agree with us on some point of interpretation? Did he who said “Any one who hates his brother is a murderer,” provide us with a verbal dagger by which to stab our brethren to death doctrinally? Did he who condemned Diotrephes because he “refuses himself to welcome the brethren, and also stops those who want to welcome them and puts them out of the church,” lay down a principle which would propagate the Diotrephesian spirit in every church? What did John mean by “this doctrine”? Was he referring to individual cups, Bible classes, leavened bread, fermented wine, a special method of breaking the loaf, orphan homes, colleges, radio programs, instrumental music, tuning forks, baptisteries, collection plates, and a host of other items too numerous to mention?

Whatever “this doctrine” was, the man who did not bring it was not to be welcomed when he came, nor speeded on his way with good wishes when he left. We are of the opinion that we can only understand what John was talking about by consideration of the background and circumstances under which he wrote. John spent his final days in Ephesus, laboring in the vicinity of Asia Minor. It was in this area that the great error of Gnosticism was affecting the brethren. Ephesus was the home of Cerinthus, a Jew who studied in Alexandria, and who is credited with being the original propagator of the theory which was destined eventually to divide almost every congregation on earth. It is a conviction of ours that John was spared to deal the death blow to this cult of Greek mysticism, even as Paul was destined to save the church from the inroads of a mistaken Judaism.

The first and second epistles of John were written to deal with this problem. No one can rightfully understand them if he ignores this fact. We cannot here enter into a full analysis of Gnosticism, its origins, nature and effects. The word is from the Greek gnosis, i.e., “knowledge.” Paul alludes to it in warning Timothy to avoid “the contradictions of what is falsely called knowledge (gnosis)” and affirms that “by professing it some have missed the mark as regards the faith” (1 Timothy 6:20). Although, because of its speculative nature, gnosticism finally took many forms, it generally denied the pre-existence of the Son of God in some fashion.

Cerinthus taught that God was exalted above all contact with the world of nature and sense, that the world was created by angels, and presided and ruled over by one of them, who was the Sovereign and lawgiver of the Jews. He affirmed that Jesus was born of Joseph and Mary by the natural process of birth, but developed and grew in such a degree of wisdom, and of favor with God and man, that he was deemed to be worthy of divine honor. At his baptism by John, the Logos, that is, the divine wisdom and energy, descended upon him, thus making him the Christ (the anointed one). By this supernatural endowment he was permitted to work miracles and reveal the divine purpose, which the Logos could penetrate. Cerinthus further taught that when Jesus was arrested, the Logos left him and returned to the Father, so it was just the man who died, and not God, or the Son of God. One who is familiar with the teachings of the Jehovah’s witness cult will at once recognize the similarity in their doctrine and that of the Gnostics.

John wrote to refute this dangerous theory which had already infiltrated most of the congregations during his lifetime. This will explain many of the statements and emphases in his gospel record. He starts it by affirming, “In the beginning was the Logos, and the Logos was with God, and the Logos was God.” He declares that “The Logos became flesh and dwelt among us” (John 1:14). He begins his first epistle by affirming that he had personal audible, manual and visible witness of the word of life, that this life had pre-existence with the Father, was manifested to the witnesses, and proclaimed to others so they might also have fellowship with the proclaimers, the Father and His Son Jesus Christ (1 John 1:1-3). The message of the proclaimers was that God is light! To say that one has fellowship with God while denying the manifestation of God (in Jesus Christ) is only to lie, and to walk in darkness. “To walk in the Light” (i.e., to be in God) is to be in fellowship with one another and in contact with the cleansing power of the Son of God (1:5-7). No one can be in the light (that is in God) who is not in the Son, for they sustain a divine fellowship. “No one who denies the Son has the Father. He who confesses the Son has the Father also . . . If what you have heard from the beginning abide in you, then you will abide in the Son and in the Father. And this is what he has promised us, eternal life” (2:23-25). What was it they had heard from the beginning which must abide in them, so they could abide in God? “The life was made manifest, and we saw it . . . and proclaim to you the eternal life which was with the Father and was made manifest unto us.”

To say one is in fellowship with the Father while denying the pre-existence and revelation of the Son makes one a liar (1:6). “Who is a liar but he who denies that Jesus is the Christ? This is the antichrist, he who denies the Father and the Son” (2:22). There are many kinds of liars, but the one with whom John was dealing while writing this epistle was the one who denied the Messiahship of Jesus. The Gnostic was not a Christian, but an antichrist. These men had created a party or heresy, for we read, “They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would have continued with us, but they went out that it might be plain that they are not of us” (2:19). The saints were not to believe every spirit. They were to test the spirits, because many false prophets were abroad. The criterion was simple. “Every spirit which confesses that Jesus is come in the flesh is of God, and every spirit which does not confess Jesus is not of God.” By this the Spirit of God could be identified (4:1-3). “Whoever confesses that Jesus is the Son of God, God abides in him, and he in God” (4:15). “Every one who believes that Jesus is the Christ is a child of God, and every one who loves the parent loves the child. By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and obey his commandments” (5:1, 2).

We are now ready to appreciate 2 John. It was written to a sister in the Lord. Some of her children were following the truth (verse 4). The congregation may have met in her house. John wrote the same thing to her in verses 5 and 6 that he wrote in 1 John 2:7-9. He tells her “many deceivers have gone out into the world” (verse 7) as he previously said, “Many false prophets have gone out into the world” (1 John 4:1). He identifies these as “men who will not acknowledge the coming of Jesus Christ in the flesh” (Cp. verse 7 with 1 John 4:3) and labels them in both instances as “antichrist.”

In verse 9, he tells the sister, “Any one who goes ahead and does not abide in the doctrine of Christ does not have God; he who abides in the doctrine of Christ has both the Father and the Son.” The doctrine of Christ is the testimony “that the Father has sent His Son as the Savior of the world” (1 John 4:14), that is, that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh (4:2). Those who go ahead and do not abide in this conviction do not have God, but those who retain this conviction, have both the Father and the Son. As phrased in 1 John 2:23, “No one who denies the Son has the Father. He who confesses the Son has the Father also.” To “deny the Son” in this expression is equivalent to the expression “does not abide in the doctrine of Christ” in the other place.

The instruction is “If any one comes to you and does not bring this doctrine, do not receive him into the house, or give him any greeting: for he who greets him shares his wicked work.” The abuse of this passage by men motivated by a partisan spirit is indescribable in its awful effects; only eternity will reveal the tragic loss of souls caused by such abuse. It has been quoted to justify driving out into the cold those humble souls who could not bow to clerical domination; it is the whiplash that has cut into the hearts of sincere believers in the Lord who would not do abject obeisance to an arbitrary interpretation of some despotic and tyrannical faction. It is the sword that has spilled the blood of the saints, the axe that has wrecked the house of God; and the rude hand that has torn the fabric of fellowship into a hundred bits and flung the pieces into the face of the Christ of Calvary who died that we might be one in Him. Dear Lord, forgive us the sin of mistaking zeal for your kingdom with the blood lust of the sectarian spirit! Let us truly know your will!

Men may have God, and God may have men, who sincerely differ on Bible classes, individual cups, leavened or unleavened bread, fermented or unfermented wine, lesson leaves, baptisteries, and a host of other things. Men may abide in the “doctrine of Christ” of which John speaks, and hold conflicting views about implementation of God’s will for us in this age. It is a matter of our attitude toward truth. But those who split, tear and rend the body of God’s Son, then try to call heaven’s blessing upon their destructive ways, by quoting as justification, “If any come and bring not this doctrine, do not receive him into your house, nor give him a greeting,” are the real factionists and troublers of Israel. Such a spirit is more dangerous to the well-being of the church of God than some “innovations.”

Those who profess to be defenders of the faith, may become wreckers of the church; those who pose as champions of orthodoxy may be intolerant advocates of an unwritten human creed. We are not apologists for error, nor do we excuse divisions in Christ, of those who earnestly strive to know His will, but we do not propose to settle our problems by driving out of the house our brethren who disagree. We shall not throw the baby out with the bath water! The members of the present factions and dissident groups need to get on their knees before the Savior lest they be forced to do so before the Judge of all the earth. It is time to repent. Reformation must precede true restoration. Let us all love the brethren, and in that spirit resolve that we shall end factionism and party strife. The night is far spent, the day is at hand!

Instrumental Music (2)

Mission Messenger (June 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

There are two great themes which engross my attention in these days. One is the restoration of the ancient order; the other the unity of all believers in the Christ. I consider that they are related. I doubt that the latter can be achieved without a sincere attempt to accomplish the first. I recognize that the church of God is fractured by schisms, and we have not achieved the ideal of God, so I am interested in any problem linked either to unity or restoration. The subject we are discussing may have a bearing upon both.

Some of the arguments employed against the use of instrumental music in the public praise service have been very shallow and unprincipled. As an example, I mention Amos 6:5, where a woe is pronounced upon those who “chant to the sound of the viol, and invent to themselves instruments of music, like David.” The prophet was condemning those who lived in luxury, spending their time in idle songs and musical entertainment, “but they were not grieved for the affliction of Joseph.” A careful analysis of the context would demonstrate that on the basis of the argument commonly made, one could prove it was a sin to stretch out on a couch, eat lamb chops or veal steak, and use perfume or shaving lotion.

An equally weak argument is often made by a cheap interpretation of Romans 14:23, a passage which becomes the last stand for every embattled faction in opposition to what someone else does, without realizing the idea the apostle had in mind. It is as sinful to misuse a scripture to condemn a thing we believe to be wrong, as to misuse one to uphold what we believe to be right. We need to be fair with God and our brethren, lest in differing with the latter we separate ourselves from the former. A great deal that has been written in favor of instrumental music ought to be scrapped, and an equal amount of what has been written against it should receive the same fate. In both cases, much of it should be charged off to ignorance and the party spirit. Either of these is bad, a combination of the two is especially so.

The base of operations has shifted several times in the struggle over instrumental music among the heirs of the restoration movement. I am persuaded the instrument was introduced on one basis, but brethren now seek to defend it on a wholly different basis. As I compare the modern reasoning of some who retain it, with that employed a century ago by those who introduced it, I am persuaded that if all they had to commend it then was the basis of its present defence, they would never have brought it in at all. They would never have divided God's people over something in the same category as a tuning fork, collection basket, or bread plate, which is the category in which many brethren now place the instrument.

There can be little doubt the instrument was brought in as a means of expressing worship. So far as I know, the use made of the instrument today is the same as it was then, and in the minds of the unskilled it occupies the same place. It is the preachers and seminarians who ordinarily make the keen distinctions and draw the fine lines, so the battle can be waged to greater advantage against the opposition. By this means the piano can be left in, but defined out of "the worship," and can be talked out instead of taken out. Many good brethren who employ the instrument now affirm they oppose it "in worship" or "as worship." Some take the position you could not put the instrument in the worship without putting it in the heart.

I am very sorry that instrumental music was ever introduced to trouble our ranks. I am saddened over the division which resulted. I am grieved also by my own attitude in the past toward those brethren who employ it. We gain nothing for the Christ by an attitude of intolerance and partisanship. Tolerance is not unity. It must never be mistaken for unity. It is only the atmosphere in which we can labor and strive toward unity. I do not advocate tolerance for a thing which you believe to be wrong; I only plead for tolerance toward the person who sincerely believes it to be right. In such a spirit we can continue to explore avenues leading toward a closer walk with God and with each other.

The brethren who use instrumental music are seriously divided over the question. They are not agreed as to the attitude they should manifest toward it, and it is variously defended even in the same school or congregation. Those who do not use it must not conclude that those who do, are inflexibly agreed, and have closed all further discussion among themselves. Many non-instrument brethren grind out the same old grist of argument, and deliver with gusto the same old sermon outlines (generally borrowed), not realizing that they are beating the air and firing at random, without touching the local situation. Of course these outlines have a familiar ring in the ears of members of "The Church of Christ." They have heard them often in every "gospel meeting" so they can sit back and relax, knowing just what is coming next. Yet these arguments, often delivered from a partisan level, do not meet the problem in the heart of many sincere students in the community. Nor do public debates, as generally conducted, meet the problem, for they tend to engender too much party spirit.

Within recent months we have seen an argument in favor of instrumental music which seems to be pleasing to many. I would like for you to read it as stated by Bro. Given O. Blakely, of Dallas City, Illinois, in his paper “The Salt Shaker.”

I want every one reading this paper to immediately read the 87th psalm. Does this apply to the church of Jesus Christ. If not, why not? Is not ‘Zion’ typical of the church? And is not ‘Jacob’ typical of Israel? If this is admitted, and it certainly should be, read that last verse once again. Are the two groups mentioned here in the body of Christ? Is not this what the psalmist is referring to? Who will deny this? . . . ‘The singers and the players of instruments shall be there,’ said David. He spoke under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit! What spirit, I humbly ask, would influence anyone to say that instrumental music is a sin in worship services? What is the sense of having players of instruments if there are no instruments? What is the use of instruments if they shall not be played? And what is the use of playing them if it is not an expression of worship? The Holy Spirit said they would be in the church— Zion. Amen! I take God at His word, ready to relinquish any stand that is not substantiated by God’s word. Are you that sincere, that honest, that desirous to be right with God?

We have a very high regard for the writer of this although we have never met him personally. We have corresponded and I hope to meet him in the future. Very humbly I suggest that he does his own cause harm by this form of interpretation and argument. I want to take God at His word, to be honest, sincere, and right with God, but I do not think the writer of this “Song for the sons of Korah” was giving instruction for the conduct of the public worship of the church of God, any more than I think that Amos was doing so, in his prophecy mentioned above.

Our brother asks, “Does this apply to the church of Jesus Christ?” I quote from Two Thousand Hours in the Psalms, by Dr. Marion McH. Hull, Dean of Atlanta Bible Institute, and Professor of Bible Exposition and Prophecy. He says, regarding this psalm, “The heading given in the Authorized Version is wholly misleading. Zion, the city of God, is not the church.” Our brother says, “I hastily say that I may be wrong, but it does appear rather obvious to me that this Psalm is referring to the church.” Yet, in closing, he writes: “The Holy Spirit said they would be in the church— Zion.” The Holy Spirit did not say that. Brother Blakely said that, but yet admits he may be wrong, and it only appears rather obvious that the church is intended. Brethren, regardless of what we seek to justify, we ought not to handle God’s sacred revelation so recklessly and charge the Holy Spirit with our interpretations. There is a vast difference in one thinking that Zion may typify the church, and saying that the Holy Spirit said so!

“His foundation is in the holy mountains. The Lord loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob. Glorious things are spoken of thee, O city of God” (Psalm 87:2). Our brother concludes that Zion is typical of the church; and Jacob is typical of Israel. He says this should certainly be admitted. But I do not agree. I do not think that God is trying to show he will love the church more than he loved Israel. That may, or may not, be true, but this passage has nothing to do with it. “The holy mountains” as the sons of Korah who rendered the psalm would understand, and as the congregation at the temple which heard the song would agree, were the hills upon which Jerusalem was built. “Zion” was Jerusalem; “the dwellings of Jacob” were the other cities of Judah. Jerusalem was superior to all of these, because God had selected it as the place to write his name, it was the location of the temple, and the center of worship. It was the capital city of the theocracy, and its very gates were hallowed unto God.

Since Jerusalem was the dwelling place of God through the Shekinah, the nations of the earth were blessed by contact with this city. Verse 4 mentions Egypt (Rahab) on the south, Babylon on the east, Philistia on the west, Tyre to the northwest, and Ethiopia, representative of the nations afar (Cp. Isa. 18:1, 2). As a result of this, it was a distinct honor to be born in Jerusalem, and verse 6 declares that when God makes a register of the nations, he will record the names of those who were born there.

Verse 7 says, “As well the singers as the players on instruments shall be there: all my springs are in thee.” Brother Blakeley, and others, conclude that since “The players on instruments shall be there” that the “there” is the New Testament congregation of the saints assembled for worship. But there are several things these brethren overlook. The marginal rendering in the King James Version, substitutes “the dancers” for “the players on instruments.” The RSV reads, “Singers and dancers alike say, ‘All my springs are in you.’” This seems to be the view of scholars generally. The commentary edited by J. R. Dummelow M.A., with many scholarly contributors, agrees with the Revised Version, “They that sing as well as they that dance, shall say . . .” In view of this, we are inclined to think that the psalm, instead of regulating the worship of the church, records the attitude of those who engaged in triumphal processions, and entered the city through the gates, dancing for joy and shouting, “My springs (fountains of joy) are in thee.”

May we suggest a word of warning to those who would be interpreters of the psalms. The only authorized interpreters are the apostles of Christ. “He opened their minds to understand the scriptures” (Luke 24:45), which the context shows included the psalms. Is it not dangerous for us to go back to the law, the psalms and the prophets, for authority for worship under the new covenant, in those matters where the apostles have not interpreted these scriptures as applicable? If Psalm 87:7 was intended to install instruments of music in the primitive churches of the saints, the apostles whose minds were opened to understand the psalms, remained blissfully unaware of the fact, for no such instruments were used in the church until it began to borrow from Judaism those items which would contribute to pomp and pageantry, and pamper a growing pride.

James Pierce, an erudite scholar of the Presbyterian faith, who died in 1726, in A Vindication of the Dissenters, sums up the case: “I come now to say somewhat of the antiquity of musical instruments. But that these were not used in the Christian Church in the primitive times is attested by all the ancient writers with one consent . . . From what has been said, it appears no musical instruments were used in the pure times of the church.” Even Thomas Aquinas, the man most responsible for the present day doctrines of the Roman Church, writes, “In the old law, God was praised both with musical instruments and human voices. But the Church does not use musical instruments lest she should seem to Judaize. Nor ought a pipe, nor any other artificial instruments, such as organ, or harp, or the like be brought into use in the Church, but only those things which shall make the hearers better men. Under the Old Testament such instruments were used, partly because the people were harder, and more carnal, and partly because these bodily instruments were typical of something.” How far modern Catholicism has drifted since the days of “The Angelic Doctor” can easily be seen by even a casual observer; and how far many of our brethren are yet from the primitive simplicity of worship, may just as easily be detected.

Bro. Blakely asks the question, concerning the instruments, “What is the use of playing them if it is not an expression of worship?” Many instrumental brethren now deny that it is right or proper to play instruments as an expression of worship. They say it would be wrong to do so, and a violation of the principle of God’s authority. We shall allow them to answer Bro. Blakely on their justification for playing them since they do not do so as an expression of worship, and because this treatise has been extended to such length, that we be not further tedious, we will reserve until next month, our presentation of reasons why we oppose the use of instruments as presently practiced by many of the brethren. You may be sure we will write in love.

Thoughts on Fellowship (7)

Mission Messenger (July 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

Dr. Erich Lindemann, while directing clinical work at Massachusetts General Hospital made an epochal discovery. He specialized in research with patients suffering from mental and physical illness induced by grief and sorrow. Many of these developed severe sicknesses or depression years after the loss of a loved one. The researchist uncovered the basic fact that to repress feelings of grief may lead to morbid and abnormal reactions later on. In our modern culture, the idea has obtained that emotional outbursts are to be avoided, and that one should be ashamed of tears and paroxysms of sorrow. Psychiatry has now discovered that expression of grief is a healing process for the soul, while repression of sorrow leaves wounds and scars on the fabric of life. Joshua Loth Liebman, in his book Peace of Mind, points out how the Bible long ago taught this elemental truth and cites the open and unashamed expression of sorrow by Abraham, Jacob and David as examples.

This is but one case among many where men have discovered that the real teaching of the Bible is in direct contradiction to the accepted view and common practice. We are glad when men like Dr. Lindemann find the solution to problems of mental stress and depression, so they can help the victims of emotional disturbance to have a happier existence. We believe that the Bible has also long held the answer to a problem which has plagued the disciple brotherhood. The problem is that of division, strife and factionalism, with all the kindred ills which attend it. It is everywhere manifest and is detrimental to the achievement of the purpose of restoration, the unity of all believers in the Christ. The answer is simple, but it is exactly opposite to the generally accepted position. That the present view is not achieving the proper purpose is evident in the fact that factions are multiplying and the possibility of unity recedes farther into the distance with each passing year.

The discovery we are going to mention can revolutionize our lives, revitalize the restoration movement, recharge our spiritual batteries and change our whole relationship to the religious world. It can make us apostles of world brotherhood in the van of a great movement to lead mankind to a closer walk with God and with each other. But it is so simple you may be inclined to underestimate it and overlook its power-packed vitality. You will need to think about it for a long time before the full potential dawns upon you. You will need to understand what a tremendous change it can work in your own life and practice by transforming your attitude and altering your perspective. The unlimited possibilities it will provide will be in direct contrast to the spiritually restricted life which has been yours. Through grasp of this great truth God will open up for you “a great door and effectual.” Read what follows carefully and thoughtfully!

Fellowship in Christ is not the result of our agreement upon matters of opinion and interpretation; but our agreement upon these things comes as a result of our fellowship.

Do you ask what is so great about that? First, it is the reverse of what most of us have been taught and have taught. It may, therefore, produce unity where our previous attitude has produced division and disunity.

Second, it begins with fellowship and ends with agreement; whereas we have been trying to start with agreement and work towards fellowship. But it has been impossible to agree because we have had an improper attitude toward each other. We have regarded each other as aliens, enemies and opponents. We have been fearful of each other. In this spirit the area of disagreement has widened and fellowship was thrust farther away. We thought we could not love each other as brethren. This produced an impasse with a new faction given birth almost every year.

Third, this places our fellowship in proper perspective. It makes it infinitely greater than any matter of interpretation or any difference of opinion. In the past even minor opinions have been deemed greater than fellowship. As a result fellowship has been sacrificed at every disagreement. In reality, there is room for differences and disagreements inside the circle of fellowship, provided the royal law of love is not forgotten or forsaken. Love is the spiritual law of gravity which draws us toward a common center. So long as it is operative, we may differ greatly on many things, and still remain in the domain of Christ, even as men may differ in the political world and still remain on earth.

Fourth, fellowship is attained at once through the grace of God, while agreement upon spiritual implications and interpretations may be the work of years, and achieved only through intensive study and mutual intercourse of thought. We are called into fellowship by God. We arrive at understanding through the exercise of our rational faculties. To recognize that fellowship is a state or relationship into which we are brought by divine power, and to conceive of every immersed believing penitent as being in that relationship, will allow our own spirits to expand and the love of God will then be shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit which has been given unto us.

Fifth, this concept, if understood and taught, will assure that not another division will ever occur among those who sincerely love Christ. Moreover, a number of breaches now existing will be healed. We recognize that “there must be factions among you in order that those who are genuine among you may be recognized” (1 Cor. 11:19). In the past, the genuine ones could not be recognized, because they joined up with one or the other of the factions. We take it that if two parties were created in the church, the genuine ones would not be recognized if they aligned themselves with either. The genuine ones are those who refuse to be factional. If a congregation is divided into parties over an interpretation of Revelation 20, and there is a pre-millennial and a post-millennial faction formed, the genuine ones, regardless of their views on the millennial question, would recognize all as brethren, and refuse to become partisans in the matter. Those who are genuine exalt Jesus above any opinion and refuse to divide those who are in Him; those who are factional exalt an opinion above Jesus and refuse to recognize those who differ as being in Him. Our misconception of the New Testament teaching has tended to make more of us factional than genuine!

Fellowship is not a fruit of agreement but agreement is the fruit of fellowship! Does the Bible teach that? Do we come to be in fellowship because we are of one mind, or do we come to be of one mind because we are in the fellowship? Much depends upon the answer you give. If we come into fellowship by agreement upon opinions, then how many things must we agree upon, and which ones, before fellowship commences? If we must agree upon all views and opinions then no fellowship at all exists today for no two persons are wholly agreed. If we need not agree upon all, who is to determine which ones we may eliminate from the area of agreement without impairing fellowship? If we decide which opinions and views we must agree upon to have fellowship, what happens if one learns more on some point and changes his mind? Shall he be put out of the fellowship for “growing in knowledge”? On the basis that fellowship is contingent upon agreement in matters of opinion, no congregation existing a hundred years ago could now be in fellowship, and no congregation now existing would be fellowshiped a hundred years from now if our Lord tarry that long.

No such difficulty is encountered if we regard fellowship in the proper light. Allowance will be made for the ignorance on many points a century ago, and for the increase of knowledge a century in the future. Neither ignorance nor growth affect fellowship unless the first is wilful and the second disregards the law of love. There will be room for minds that are liberal and conservative to work together in love, the first lending fresh outlook and new vision, the latter exercising proper restraint to keep the progress within the pale of God's revelation. But is this concept scriptural. We assert that it is!

Every admonition in the New Testament to be of one mind, to agree among yourselves, or to speak the same thing, was given to those who were in fellowship. In no case were brethren told to achieve peace in order to be in fellowship, but, having been called into fellowship, they were to achieve peace. "And above all these put on love which binds everything together in perfect harmony. And let the peace of Christ dwell in your hearts, to which indeed you were called in the one body" (Col. 3:14-15). It was those who were in the one body who were to put on love, and to allow the peace of Christ to rule.

Paul wrote to the saints in Christ Jesus at Philippi with their bishops and deacons and instructed them to "Complete my joy by being of the same mind, having the same love being in full accord and of one mind" (Phil. 2:2). His joy began when they entered the fellowship of Christ. As they grew closer to each other in that area and achieved unity of thought and purpose, his joy and theirs abounded. "I shall remain and continue with you all, for your progress and joy in the faith" (1:25). On what basis were they told to achieve the same mind, the same love, and full accord? The previous verse hinges its accomplishment upon "encouragement in Christ, the incentive of love, the participation (fellowship) in the Spirit." With such encouragement, incentive and fellowship they were to labor toward unity of thought. But while they were struggling the fellowship was not impaired!

The church of God at Corinth was composed of those who “were called into the fellowship of his Son, Jesus Christ our Lord” (1 Cor. 1:9). It was because they were in fellowship, that the apostle said, “I appeal to you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that all of you agree that there be no dissensions among you, but that you be united in the same mind and in the same judgment.” They were rent into schismatic groups, yet they were in the fellowship. Paul pleads with all of them as brethren, regardless of the party names they wore. To them all he recommends love as the answer to their predicament, for “love is patient and kind; love is not jealous or boastful; it is not arrogant or rude. Love does not insist on its own way; it is not irritable or resentful; it does not rejoice at wrong, but rejoices in the right. Love bears all things, believes all things, endures all things” (13:4-7). Paul rises above all partisanship in this letter. He takes sides with neither group, not even with those who said “We are of Paul.” He addresses them all as brethren, and admonishes them “as my beloved children.” He says, “Finally, brethren, farewell. Mend your ways, heed my appeal, agree with one another, live in peace and the God of love and peace will be with you” (2 Cor. 13:11).

Let us again state this revolutionary principle. Fellowship in Christ is not contingent upon agreement upon matters of interpretation and opinion; but agreement in these is contingent upon fellowship. What practical changes will be made by recognition and application of this law?

Perhaps we can best illustrate by example. A group of brethren from another section of the country reared in a different traditional background, and in a congregation which is opposed to Bible classes, move to a northern city to find employment. They find a congregation of saints meeting there and attend with them to break bread. The procedure is different than that with which they have been accustomed to and some things are very difficult for them to see. Fortunately, all are sincerely motivated by a deep love for Christ.

They meet together in Christian love to discuss the problem. All agree that they are brethren. All recognize that they are in the fellowship, not because of personal agreement, but because of their relationship to God through the Holy Spirit. All resolve not to tear the fabric of fellowship because it is greater than any personal view relative to teaching the Word of the Lord, however dear that view might be to their hearts. They first decide to list and discuss those things in which they stand together, believing that emphasis upon these will lay a more solid foundation for discussion of differences. They find the area of agreement is much greater than the area of disagreement, and they concede that it would be foolish to give up this ground which has already been gained in their struggle to possess the small remainder in unity.

All are patient and kind. No one is jealous or boastful. No one is arrogant, rude, irritable or resentful. No one insists upon having his own way. (Read 1 Cor. 13:4, 5 again). The brethren who have moved to the city, agree to work with the congregation in every way possible and to allow each one's personal conviction to be the determining factor as to how far he can go in cooperating with the classes for Bible study. As several years pass, their love for each other is deepened through sharing in times of joy and sorrow, prosperity and adversity, health and sickness, and pain and death. Their children have married and they are bound together by ties of affection. The congregation grows so large it is deemed best to plant another.

The brethren who have opposed the grouping of students ask permission to form a new congregation in which they can conduct a teaching program more in conformity with their views. Consent is given and all labor together in planting the new unit. They continue to meet together once per week for mutual study of the word, they exchange physical labor upon the two meetinghouses, and also exchange talent for the purpose of edification. They recognize that because brethren meet in two different places and hold some varying views does not justify disfellowship, and frequent association will mean a closer unity as they come nearer to the ideal of Christ.

Would not such a course be better than the procedure generally followed? Would it not be more consistent with the tenor of the sacred revelation? Then, why have we not acted in this fashion? There is just one answer. "For you are still of the flesh. For while there is jealousy and strife among you, are you not of the flesh and behaving like ordinary men?" (1 Cor. 3:3). Christians are to be extraordinary men. They are not to be conformed to the world, but transformed by the renewing of their minds. Men of the world quarrel, fight, and separate into cliques and parties. When we do the same, we are conformists to the world. We can only be transformed when our minds are renewed by some great overwhelming, powerful thought. We will never achieve unity by devising ingenious human schemes and drawing up formal professions. The very existence of these testifies to a lack of love.

We are today exactly where our thinking has brought us. We will be tomorrow exactly where our thinking takes us. If we will change the tragic picture of divisions, desolation and spiritual destruction, we must alter our thinking. So long as we seek to achieve fellowship by agreement upon propositions we will divide every time someone learns a new truth. Unity will not be achieved by external documents and forms. It must come from within. We must feel that we are one in Him with every other person who has accepted Him as Lord. That feeling will do more to promote peace, and prove to be a surer bond of lasting union than all the pacts, concordats and comity agreements men have written. We are in fellowship! We are one in Christ! We have been raised up together and made to sit together in heavenly places! The Holy Spirit dwells within us as a seal of our fellowship with God and with each other. Under the benign influence of that Spirit, let us move closer to having one mind, the same love and full accord. God hasten the day! Peace must be waged, as others wage war and strife.

Instrumental Music (3)

Mission Messenger (July 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

This is the third, and for the present, the concluding article of a series on this subject. In it we will state briefly a few of our several reasons for opposing instrumental music in the public worship of God. We do so without rancor towards those who employ it, and with a sincere prayer that this vexing problem may be resolved by an application of the law of love.

1. Instrumental music in the corporate worship stands athwart our path in the attempt to promote the unity of all believers in the Christ. The most memorable address I ever heard on the topic was delivered at the graduation exercises of the Presbyterian College in Belfast, Ireland, in 1951. The reverend doctor spoke on “Instrumental Music in Public Worship Is a Sin.” I have read more than a score of books on the subject by scholarly men not connected with the movement which grew out of the restoration effort launched by Thomas and Alexander Campbell. These were all vehement in their opposition. Our plea will be nullified in many areas if some persist in use of the instrument. Dare we love that which is not essential more than we do the souls of men?

2. The introduction of the instrument created division. Whether those who introduced it, those who opposed it, or both, were to blame for the division which resulted is not now the question. Before it was brought in, brethren worshiped and did so acceptably as all admit, and such worship was unified; after it was introduced division came as a result. Regardless of whether worship was thus polluted or corrupted as some charge, we can return to our original status and be acceptable and be together if there are no other barriers. It is hardly conceivable that a division can be healed unless we return to the source and remove the original cause.

3. A genuine restoration, complete in details, of the primitive pattern of public worship will find the instrument excluded from use. It is our conviction that no one can show that it was employed in the congregations planted by the apostles, and this conviction has been reached after careful examination of all available material on the subject.

4. The employment of instrumental music in the public worship of God introduces an element unauthorized by our King, and therefore, constitutes will worship, which is condemned by the Holy Spirit.

5. The use of instrumental music in public praise service is actually ritualism, and to that extent, is a departure from the simplicity which should characterize those who profess to be followers of the meek and lowly one.

How shall I regard those who disagree with me? They are my brethren if they have been immersed into the Christ. We love them all because He loves them all. We think they are in error in the practice under consideration, but this does not lessen our regard for them. We only yearn to help them and in turn to be helped by them to correct our many errors and mistakes. They are in our fellowship. Such fellowship in the Spirit is not contingent upon perfect agreement but mutual parenthood. We cannot participate in the public praise service where the instrument is used in conjunction. We love to sing but we must answer to God for a violation of honest conviction and sincere conscience. If brethren wish to inject into the service that which will exclude us on the basis of conscience and make it impossible for us to join with them in praise the responsibility will rest with them. We will not malign them, hate them, nor speak evil of them. If they are content to answer to God for their action which forces some of us to stand on the sidelines in certain aspects of public praise, the matter will be left in His hands, and if they can explain their attitude satisfactorily to Him, so they may enter in through the gates into the City we will rejoice to be with them forever where all of us may sing together in an unbroken chorus unhindered and unaffected by human failing or schisms.

A Sound Mind (1)

Mission Messenger (August 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

There are some indications in the Bible that Timothy was subjected to periods of discouragement and despondency. Under such circumstances zeal wanes and fears are multiplied. One reads with interest the advice given by the old soldier Paul to this younger recruit, to stimulate and encourage him. As an example we cite 2 Timothy 1:6, “I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands. For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind.” Is there an implication in this that the young evangelist allowed the divine gift to lapse or wane in intensity because of personal fear? Certainly the problems he had to face were sufficient to cause one to shrink back if he was at all moved by timidity.

There are three Greek words translated fear in the Authorized Version. The one used here is deilia. It refers to fearfulness or cowardice. Archbishop Trench in his work on synonyms, says it is always used in a bad sense. The spirit of cowardice is not from God. It is the triumph of our lower nature over our higher. It is the manifestation of animal nature over the spiritual. The fearful, as well as the unbelieving, will have their part in the lake of fire.

To combat such a failing, God has provided us with three things— power, love, and a sound mind. A recognition of the fact that we are in Christ, and are strengthened with might by His spirit in the inner man will do much toward making us “more than conquerors.” Love also inspires boldness. “Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment. . . . There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear: because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love” (1 John 4:17, 18).

The third factor in the conquest of unreasoning fear is a sound mind. This suggests that there may be minds which are not sound. The mind is that part of our being which thinks and wills, remembers and reasons. We are what our thinking makes us. “As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he.” No man can walk straight who thinks crooked. I hold that the chief aim of man is to search for truth, that this is the highest and noblest pursuit to which he can devote those intellectual powers which lift him above the dumb animals. Man was not meant to be enslaved. He was made for freedom. But sin has shackled him. Only truth can make him free, and it can only do so when it is known.

In order for the mind to arrive at proper concepts it must be regulated and disciplined. This suggests that certain principles must be recognized which will properly channel our intellectual faculties and provide necessary restraints. A mind exercised in due regard for these principles is “a sound mind.” It is that kind of mind God would have us possess. Soundness of mind does not refer to breadth or scope of learning, nor even to depth of knowledge in a special field. It has to do with that quality or state of intellect which enables one to think clearly and reason correctly in regard to those propositions which come within the sphere of his personal experience or relationships. A man might possess great knowledge of facts in a wide field and not have a “sound mind,” while another might possess such a mind, although limited by circumstances in his area of investigation.

Since truth alone can make us free, and that only when it is known and acted upon, and since truth can only be perceived clearly by a well-regulated mind, and since such a quality of mental power must be cultivated and nurtured, it would appear that it is a matter of first importance to consider those factors which will develop in us the ability to think clearly and reason correctly, that we may truly have sound minds. Accordingly, it is our hope, God willing, to supply our readers, especially those who are younger in years, with suggestions of a practical nature which will enable us all to lay foundations for mental progress which will react to personal well being and good of the entire community of saints.

Obviously, what we write in this regard will hold little appeal for those who are light and frivolous, or slothful and neglectful. We need to approach a subject as vital as life in a sober vein, for life is a serious business, and our destiny should be a matter of real concern. We will expect to write in an understandable fashion, but those who read have an obligation to seek for understanding even as the writer has a like obligation to convey his thoughts in understandable fashion. We have been amazed the past several years at the number who have lamented that we sometimes use words outside their vocabulary. One would think there was no such thing in existence as an English dictionary. But it is easier to file a complaint than to look up a word and make it part of a growing vocabulary.

This serves to illustrate the fact that our nation has been victimized by “easy living” and the spirit of “getting by.” Many in school have selected courses, not because they would contribute to real educational attainment, but merely to serve as fillers and secure scholastic credit without mental effort. The masses are not as able to comprehend profound thinking as those of a century ago. One needs but to compare the sermons of Alexander Campbell and Barton W. Stone delivered to backwoods audiences standing among forest trees, with the frothy utterances of modern preachers made to well dressed audiences sitting in cushioned pews, to see what has transpired in a world which suffers from “luxury’s vile contagion.” A stomach constantly fed with pre-digested food will soon cease to function, and the same is true of a mind limited only to “digests” containing that which is skimmed off by other minds.

The modern mind is subjected to constant battering by pressure groups and hucksters. The advertising fraternity no longer seeks to set forth the merits of a product, and allow you to make up your mind, but rather by stealth, subtility, and suggestiveness, to captivate that mind and exploit it for personal gain. Radio and television audiences find that every phase of life is thus made to bow to Mammon, patron deity of American business. Athletic events become vehicles for the sale of beer and safety razors; news reports for cigarettes and sedatives. The world is suffering from a monstrous “hang-over” and the aspirin sales climb to staggering figures as the reeling, staggering populace seeks relief from a throbbing headache.

In the midst of such a maelstrom how can the child of God find peace? How can he enlarge and expand his spirit until he can have a consciousness of the abiding Presence? Surely it must be in the cultivation of a “sound mind” which will enable him to find a satisfactory answer to the greatest personal question of all, the reason and purpose of human existence, for the brief span we spend on this material realm. What is the meaning of life? What must we do under the heavens all the days of our life? This question of the wisest human monarch should still challenge our own day and generation.

We are today where our thinking has brought us. We will be tomorrow where our thinking takes us. The antidote to fear and shame is “power, love and a sound mind.” The questions of our Lord, “How think ye?” (Matt. 18:12) and “What think ye?” (Matt. 21:28) are pertinent to life, for your character will be moulded by how you think and what you think. For this reason we offer no apology for devoting some space in a few future issues to matters pertaining to intellectual philosophy. We trust you will share these articles with serious young people in high school and college who do not subscribe for the paper.

Lord, let me not be too content

With life in trifling service spent —

Make me aspire!

When days with petty cares are filled

Let me with fleeting thoughts be thrilled

Of something higher!

Help me to long for mental grace

To struggle with the commonplace

I daily find.

May little deeds not bring to fruit

A crop of little thought to suit

A shriveled mind.

Thoughts on Fellowship (8)

Mission Messenger (August 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

Martin Luther wrote about the “church fathers” in these words, “Though they said nothing decisive about justification by grace, yet at their death they believed in it. These worthy Fathers lived better than they wrote.” That last sentence is applicable to most of our brethren. Their practice is better than their unwritten creeds, and while many of them would like to find fault with our views on fellowship, most of them have wittingly or unwittingly gone far beyond what we have suggested, and would as fiercely resent one questioning their practice, as they personally resent our advocacy of a part of it.

The act of eating and drinking together had great significance in primitive times. Speaking of the sop which Jesus dipped and gave to Judas, A. M. Rihbany says, “At Syrian feasts, especially in the region where Jesus lived . . . in a more significant manner these morsels are exchanged by friends. Choice bits of food are handed to friends by one another, as signs of close intimacy. It is never expected that any person would hand a sop to one for whom he cherishes no friendship” (The Syrian Christ, page 49). As a public demonstration of that fellowship sustained by the community of saints, our Lord ordained a feast at which those who are in Him eat and drink together in proclamation of His death.

The very word, koinonia, generally translated “fellowship,” is used to describe the Lord's Supper. "The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion (koinonia) of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion (koinonia) of the body of Christ? For we being many are one bread, and one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread" (1 Cor. 10:16, 17). You recognize as being in your fellowship every one to whom you pass the bread and fruit of the vine with your permission to eat and drink with you. If I come to the table in your home, and you pass the food to me without informing me that I am not entitled to eat of it, your very act is an invitation to eat. In the case of the Lord's Supper, such an act constitutes a tacit acknowledgement that the person is in the kingdom, a child of God, and a member of the one body. The apostle says, "The very fact that we all share in one Bread makes us all one Body" (Translation by J. B. Phillips).

Jesus said His table was in His kingdom. The disciples were to eat and drink at His table in His Kingdom (Luke 22:30). When you pass the food and drink from that table to a person to allow him the privilege of eating and drinking with you, by that very act you recognize him as a citizen of the kingdom. If not, then there is no significance in your own eating, and you are a mere ritualist. I solemnly charge that almost every segment, fragment and fraction of the disciple brotherhood in the United States, by practice is guilty of extending fellowship to believers and unbelievers, immersed and unimmersed, alike. And if these latter do not eat, it is because of their own volition in the matter, and not that of the congregation. And such open communion is actually the first step to open membership. Why should an alien wish to become a member of a fraternity when he can partake of all the rights, privileges and prerogatives thereof in his alien state?

But I may be asked why I employ the restricted term "brotherhood in the United States?" I do so because our brethren in Great Britain have not been guilty of such foolish procedure. In general they have had a clear understanding of what is involved in the term fellowship, and have acted in conformity with that knowledge.

Recently I had occasion to visit a congregation which claims not to “fellowship” brethren who believe it is proper to have classes for Bible study and individual cups in the Lord’s Supper. But they fellowshiped me. They allowed me the privilege of participating in the corporate act of fellowship, the highest expression of the koinonia, in the church of God. A short time before that, a young preacher from a Christian Church seminary attended the Lord’s Day service with me. The brethren passed him the bread and the fruit of the vine, thus demonstrating their fellowship of him as a member of the one body. They do not endorse his views on instrumental music in the public praise service, neither do they make those views a test of fellowship.

Let us get down to brass tacks! Whatever you set up as a barrier to admission to the Lord’s table is your creed and your test of fellowship. Would you stand at the Lord’s table and say, “We invite all brethren to partake with us except those who believe in Bible classes?” If not, then you fellowship those who believe in classes, regardless of your position on the subject. Would you say, “We invite all brethren to participate with us in this feast except those who hold the opinion it is proper to use instrumental music in worship?” If not, then you fellowship those who hold such opinions. Suppose that a man who was traveling through the country stopped at your place of worship on Lord’s Day, and prior to the service informed you that while he was a member of a congregation using instrumental music, he and his family would like to worship and break bread with you on that day. Would you welcome him and invite him to do so? Then you fellowship him, but that fellowship does not constitute endorsement of his position on the point of difference. You differ with many members of the congregation where you hold membership, but you fellowship them. Fellowship is one thing; endorsement of a position or opinion is a wholly different thing.

Occasionally I hear that brethren in some places are disturbed by my articles on fellowship. They think I am “letting down the bars.” How can I, when they have never barred any one? The trouble lies in the fact that the brethren are ignorant of the meaning of the word “fellowship” as used by the Holy Spirit, and because they have it confused with endorsement of some person’s views, when I speak of fellowshipping all sincere believers in Christ who have been immersed into Him, they think I am advocating swallowing hook, bait and sinker, every innovation, speculation, variation and exaggeration. Yet they have been fellowshipping every one indiscriminately at the Lord’s table for years. If a member of another faction comes in, they will run half way across the house to hand him a song book, find the number, and invite him to participate with them in praise to God, but they would not think of calling upon him to pray to God. He can talk to God, teach and admonish, and speak, as long as he has a tune, whether he is in key or not, but he is not allowed to talk to God in a normal tone of voice. That would be “fellowshipping him.” Just how silly can we become?

But what test shall we propose? We have no right to propose any. Only Jesus has a right to tell us who is in Him and who is not. We must receive all whom he receives. “Wherefore receive ye one another, as Christ also received us to the glory of God” (Rom. 15:7). What must man believe and what must he do to be admitted to the “breaking of bread” and thus to the fellowship of the Spirit? God has proposed only one fact to be believed, and one act to be obeyed. All who accept that fact with trusting hearts, and obey that act, are inducted into the Christ, become members of the one body, and are in the fellowship of the saints. That one fact is that Jesus is the Messiah, the Son of God. That one act is immersion in water prompted by belief of that fact. When a man believes that Jesus is the Messiah and God’s Son, and acts upon that faith in God’s appointed fashion, he is added to the Lord’s company. “He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.”

But someone adds, "Provided that he knew at the time that his baptism was for the remission of sins." The word of God does not make that proviso. That is modern Church-of-Christ-ism. When a man believes in Jesus sincerely, and moved by that faith in Jesus as Saviour, is immersed, that act of immersion, is for the remission of sins, whether the believing penitent knows all about it or not. Remission of sins is a pardoning act with God. It takes place in heaven. We are saved by the grace of God and not by the knowledge of man. It is not faith that baptism is for the remission of sins which qualifies us for baptism, but faith that Jesus is the Christ and God's Son. That should be our only creed.

At the inception of the church of God, they that gladly received his word were immersed, and it was those who were immersed who continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine, the fellowship, the breaking of bread, and the prayers. We know of no questions they were asked about methods of teaching, modes of worship, views on the millennium, etc., before being recognized. They were not catechized about their views, opinions, ideas, or expositions of scripture. They were in fellowship because they were in the Christ; they were in the Christ because they were immersed into Him upon the basis of their faith. Their knowledge was far from perfect, differences soon developed, varieties of views created problems, but they maintained their fellowship in spite of their differences. Perhaps before we can recapture that fellowship we will need first to recapture the spirit of love which was a passion with them. Surely the responsibility to seek to restore that unity which they knew and which was such a potent force in the world, offers the greatest challenge that can come to us in these days.

Reply to Brother Zerr

Mission Messenger (Month 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

Of the many reasons I am glad that Brother Zerr is writing his objections to our plea for restoration, I will mention three. (1) He may point out errors in my thinking so I can correct them; (2) I will have an opportunity to correct any misconception he may hold as to my position; (3) It will provide a demonstration that men may be in fellowship as brethren, yet disagree upon some matters. I learn from those who differ rather than from those who agree with me. The latter but confirm my views, the former cause me to re-study them in the light of new evidence. I love our good brother, but I never did fully agree with all of his interpretations. That fact has never lessened my regard for him.

I have read the article “One Church” a number of times. I cannot see the point our brother seeks to make. He implies that in our plea for restoration we consider the various sectarian bodies “as parts of the ‘one church’ the New Testament recognizes.” This is exactly opposite to my position. I have repeatedly said that the church of God is not a sect. No sect is the church of God. No coalition or aggregation of sects constitutes that church. The various sects exist in opposition to the word of God. They are a manifestation of a work of the flesh. I think our beloved brother is confused because we contend there may be children of God among the sects. That is far from saying that the sects are a part of the one body. There are citizens of the United States in Russia, but Russia is not a part of the United States. There are citizens of the United States in every foreign country, but these countries do not constitute the United States. There may be citizens of the kingdom of heaven scattered among the denominations, but the denominations do not constitute the kingdom of heaven. The one church is composed now, as it has always been, of all the saved ones. It embraces within its membership every child of God on this earth.

Our brother concurs with the view that we do not have perfect knowledge of all truth. All we plead for is that we recognize and acknowledge truth where we find it. Since it is now granted that “If a group must ‘know all the truth’ in order to be a true church, then the Lord has never had a true church,” the question arises as to how much truth a group must know before it is a true church. What truth must it know, and what truth may it not know, and still be a true church? Who is to determine that? This is no problem with our Roman Catholic friends, but who is to assume the papal authority among the various segments of the disciple brotherhood?

If our brother’s reasoning is correct, could a group be a true church in one century, and the same group not be a true church in another century? Could a group be a true church in one part of the world with part of the truth, and another group in another place be a true church at the same time with another part of the truth? If not, just which part of truth must either have to be a true church? My answer to the problem is that it is not so much a question of how much truth a group has at any time which makes it acceptable to God, but the attitude toward truth as such. A group having but little truth may be eager to discover and accept all truth, and God will bless them; another may have a great deal of truth, but resent any discovery of new truth, and thus be rejected.

In dealing with fellowship and exclusiveness our good brother chides us for seeking to lead out of sectism those who have been immersed in the name of our Lord. He asks, “Why wish to lead him out? If he is a child of God, is in a saved condition, and the Lord has already added him to His church, why disturb him?” Because, after the Lord added him to His church, the person added himself to something the Lord does not approve. The party spirit is carnal (1 Cor. 3:3). It is a work of the flesh (Gal. 5:20). God does not want His children to be divided into religious parties and factions. Those children of God who exhibit the party spirit displease the Father. They thwart the divine purpose.

Our brother asks, “What could we offer him that would be any better than what he has?” In many places— nothing! Many brethren would not destroy the party spirit at all. They would merely channel it into defence of another party, perhaps one referred to as “The Church of Christ.” That is what we oppose. It is as wrong to be a Church of Christ sectarian as any other kind. But, in many places, brethren have seen the folly of the partisan spirit, or setting up unwritten creeds and human tests of fellowship. They can offer a man who has been enmeshed in sectarianism the liberty and freedom which are the heritage of all who are in Jesus.

Our good brother poses the problem, “Since we do not know all the truth, this man may know as much of it as we, and hence we just as well ‘leave him alone in his glory.’” Perhaps, measured by quantity, many know as much, or even more truth than we do. But we have learned the truth about the sin of division among God’s children. It is this truth we must share with our brethren in the toils of sectism. Most of them have not learned it. In turn, they can convey to us the truths they have learned and all of us will profit. We cannot leave a brother “in his glory” if he is enveloped in sectism, for religious division is not a glory, but the greatest scandal of modern Christendom. It is disgraceful and sinful!

It is true I think we should have an open mind for reception of newly discovered truths, and since our brother admits we do not have all the truth, he would not suggest we close our minds against more of it. Many of the arguments I once made on certain issues have been proven by study to be illogical and unscriptural. I will not make those arguments again. I was sincere when I made them, but I was sincerely wrong! Toleration of others who are honestly striving to learn is not restoration. It is only the atmosphere in which restoration studies can be pursued.

To join The Christian Church or The Methodist Church would be to ally myself with a human party. This would no more help save humanity than creating another sect called “The Church of Christ.” I love all of those who compose The Christian Church and The Methodist Church. I acknowledge all truth taught by any of their members, and I fervently pray that God may use me as an humble instrument to show them there is “a more excellent way” than the partisan road. To that end I will go among them, and thankfully welcome any opportunity to plead the Cause I love. By such contacts in charity and sincerity we may all of us come closer to each other as we come closer to Him who died for every one of us.

In our next issue Brother Zerr will present additional objections to our plea. Read them carefully and studiously. I will also reply at length to Brother Loney who is filing his objections to restoration. May God help all of us to be humble followers of His Son, and brethren in the Lord, is my fervent prayer! We need each other very much.

Thoughts on Fellowship (9)

Mission Messenger (September 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

In this series on the koinonia, or fellowship, of the disciples of our Lord, it is appropriate that we consider the related term koinonos, which designates the sharer or partaker. As William Barclay points out in “A New Testament Wordbook” this term in classical Greek means a companion, a partner, or a joint-owner. In secular usage it was primarily a business term. In Luke 5:10 we are told that James and John were partners with Simon in a fishing enterprise. In the same sense Paul informed those who asked about the status of Titus that he was his partner (2 Cor. 8:23). When asking Philemon to receive back his runaway slave as a brother, the apostle says, “If you consider me a partner, receive him as myself” (verse 17). In the New Testament, therefore, the word is used of partnership in either secular or spiritual pursuits.

The Galilean fishermen who became ambassadors for the Christ would not need an explanation of what it meant to be a koinonos in the Lord. They understood its implication from the partnership of the fishing nets. They had been joined together by a common objective, they had mutually toiled and endured hardship, and had shared in prosperity and adversity, depending upon the size of the catch and the vagaries of the market.

When Paul seeks to enforce the point that those who eat the bread and drink the cup together are in fellowship, he cites an example. "Behold Israel after the flesh: are not they which eat of the sacrifices partakers of the altar?" (1 Cor. 10:18).

A certain portion of some sacrifices was to be eaten by those qualified under the law. Those who thus ate were partners or sharers in the benefits and blessings derived from attendance upon the whole service centered about the altar. Paul extends his reasoning to show that one cannot be in partnership with the Lord and with demons at the same time (see verse 21). There is nothing in common between God and idols, so there can be nothing in common between ourselves and both at the same time. "You cannot be partakers of the Lord's table and the table of demons."

We share with each other in Christ because He has shared His bounty and grace with us. We are not in the fellowship because of our attainments in wealth, power, prestige, wisdom, or knowledge. These do not necessarily debar from entrance into the fellowship, and neither do they enhance it. We are not in the fellowship because we understand everything alike, or because we have reached a certain stage of spiritual development. "The brotherhood" we are told to love (1 Peter 3:17) does not consist merely of those who agree with us upon some controversial point such as Bible classes, colleges, individual cups, the pastor system, contribution baskets, or a manner of breaking the bread. Those who use it in such a fashion are schismatic and sectarian in their outlook. They suffer from restricted vision and spiritual astigmatism. "The brotherhood" of Christ stems from the fatherhood of God. Jesus is not ashamed to call us brethren because we have the same Father as himself. He said, "Go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father" (John 20:17).

Every person on this earth who is a child of God is my brother. He is in "the brotherhood." When we talk of the brotherhood in such a manner as to exclude any of God's children we are sectarian. Such a narrow, partisan usage of the term is quite frequent. It is promoted by factional leaders and editors. I regularly receive a number of journals and read reports of those preachers who contribute news items to them. All speak of “work in the brotherhood” but they do not mean by the term what God’s word implies. To one the brotherhood is limited to those who oppose classes, to another those who use fermented wine in the Lord’s Supper, to another those who break the bread in a certain fashion, to another those who oppose orphan homes, to another those who object to individual cups, to another those who employ instrumental music, to another those who oppose its use.

It is a rather strange phenomenon that all of these various factions have a paper, and generally the editor and certain chosen cohorts in his favor, constitute the ruling hierarchy of each “brotherhood.” Regardless of how you stand in the grace of God, if you do not continue in the good graces of the editor, you will be ruined and hounded out of “the brotherhood.” Pressures are exerted to keep people “in line” and brain-washing methods are employed to stifle individual thinking and to confine men behind the “paper curtain.” It has long been a question with me as to whether the schismatic spirit produces a faction which then creates an editorial mouthpiece, or whether an editor creates a faction “in his own likeness, and in his own image.” But there is no denying that the sectarian spirit is so rife, and there are so many “brotherhoods” in existence, that the one thing which is unique in these days is a wholly unsectarian plea, and when brethren hear it, they say like the ancient Athenians, “May we know what this new doctrine, whereof thou speakest, is? For thou bringest certain strange things to our ears” (Acts 17:19, 20).

Any group which forces you to believe something other than the great fact that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, as condition of admission to their fellowship, has laid another foundation than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. And that “something else” is the creed of that group, and the group constitutes a sect in the fair import of that term. And any group which establishes admission to brotherhood upon any other basis than the new birth is doing despite to the Spirit of grace, and opposing God’s plan for the ages.

We are participants with God because we share in the divine nature. The very word koinonos is used in this connection. “Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust” (2 Peter 1:4). Being partners in the divine nature brings us into an intimate relationship with all who share in that nature. It also obligates us to use our faith as a foundation and upon it to build a life structure using as materials the “excellencies” which are enumerated. This indicates that when we are called to glory and virtue we are far from being spiritually perfect or mature. We are one in Him, not because of personal attainment but because of grace.

Due to differences in early training, environment, and temperament, as well as variations in aptitudes, skills, and opportunities of study, there will be many things upon which we will disagree. These differences can be resolved if they need to be. There are some matters on which we may always differ, but they are of such little consequence as to warrant no particular effect upon us; there are others of a graver nature, but upon these we should bestow more abundant study and consultation. The whole problem is one of attitudes— toward God, His word, and each other. A recognition of kindred ties in Jesus will enable us to treat each other as brethren while we draw closer to Him and each other in our efforts.

A Sound Mind (2)

Mission Messenger (September 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

“God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind.”

Man is a rational being. Physically he is an animal, but he differs from all other animals because he can reason. Jude tells us that irrational animals know by instinct (verse 10) and Peter calls such animals “creatures of instinct” (2 Peter 2:12). Man is not limited to instinct for what he may know. Only a rational being can truly worship, and man was created to glorify God. The creator has always treated man on a rational basis. He has never required man to believe anything without furnishing sufficient evidence as a basis for faith. His appeal is, “Come now, let us reason together, saith the Lord” (Isa. 1:18).

What is reason? It is sometimes referred to as that exercise of the mind by which we distinguish truth from falsehood. Occasionally it is equated with judgment. I doubt they are synonymous. Reason consists of comparing and weighing facts and considerations, in order to reach a conclusion from them. Judgment is the acceptance of that conclusion with a view to including it as a part of the pattern of personal belief or conduct. One is the tree, the other the fruit. Perhaps you may feel this is “a distinction without a difference.”

There are several functions of the mind. Reason is just one of them. As related to the exercise of reason, however, a sound mind is one which is regulated or governed by the principles which pertain to investigation and deduction. As in every aspect of life, this demands the application of certain positive factors, and the avoidance of certain negative factors, since these last would interfere with the discovery of truth. In a very humble way we hope to discuss some of the pitfalls to be avoided, and enumerate some of the laws governing our mental processes. Our aim is to help all of us to think clearly and reason correctly. We are what our thinking makes us. Thus we need to know how to think and reason properly.

We have said that reasoning involves the comparing and weighing of facts. In the process we must decide which facts are essential and which are incidental. We must correctly evaluate them. But before we can do that we must collect the facts. The interest we have in the subject to which the facts are related will govern the intensity of our effort. The true scientist working on a project can hardly take time from his laboratory to eat or sleep. You have heard that Thomas Edison limited himself to four hours of sleep daily. There was so much he wanted to discover and so little time in which to achieve it, he begrudged the hours given to sleep. If we had a few researchists in the spiritual realm imbued by that spirit we might be amazed at the discoveries they would make.

We dare not “jump at conclusions” if we would be safe reasoners. To do so is a sure mark of the careless and indifferent thinker. To avoid this we must have sufficient data on a subject before we can reach a conclusion. If we become too hasty we will be superficial. The sound mind proceeds with caution. It is not impulsive or frantic. We are to “test all things, and retain that which is good.” This is the true scientific approach. That it is commanded in the word of God proves that the word is not in conflict with true science. But it requires time to test all things. There is a danger one will become tired or bored and reach a conclusion on partial data. This is unwise and dangerous.

How do we know when we have all the facts? We may not know, for which reason we must retain open minds in which our judgment is subject to correction or modification when confronted with new facts. At the same time the sound mind will not be shaken or troubled by trivialities, frivolous objections, carping criticisms, or unrelated matters. Opposed to the sound mind in this regard are two extremes, which start at a common center, yet are poles apart in nature.

Both form hasty conclusions without proper attention to all facts and considerations involved. But their personal reactions are widely divergent. One is shaken in his conclusions by every new thought presented to his attention, as well as by every minor objection or criticism. He becomes unstable and vacillating, shifting ground and altering his stand constantly. He is like a reed shaken by the wind. He is like a restless wave of the sea. The other forms his opinions on the same inadequate basis, but then clings to them with such tenacity as to become impervious to fact or reason. He is right, all else is wrong. He shuts himself inside a bastion of his own construction, from which he refuses to budge regardless of the weight of testimony brought to bear upon him.

Such a person has the utmost confidence in his own opinions, and entertains only contempt for those who differ. It is difficult to assess the origin of such an arbitrary spirit. Is it the result of a natural peculiarity of mental constitution, of a deep seated inferiority complex, of deficient education, or social insensitivity? Whatever the cause, when one indulges this spirit, he becomes a victim of his own pride, so that the motives and evidences which influence other men will not pierce his mental armor.

We should cultivate sound minds, then, by refusing to form an opinion based on insufficient data, by weeding out the trivial from the worthwhile, by firmness of character which will not yield to every whim, and by being open to a review of our position in the light of additional evidence. When you slam the door of your mind to keep others out, you shut yourself in.

Anew our pledge we make to Thee

To follow where Thy truth shall lead;

Afloat upon its boundless sea,

Who sails with God is safe indeed.

Christian Church Baptism

Mission Messenger (September 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

It is difficult to convince brethren that “The Church of Christ” in many localities has become a narrow and intolerant sect. Yet one only needs to read the periodicals representing the position of much of the membership to see that this charge is true. As an illustration I cite the following from The Gospel Guardian, written by Lester Weaver, under the above heading. His sub-head is, “Let’s Face the Facts!”

In recent years some brethren have sought in first one way and then another to justify their friends who are guilty of participating in the errors of the Christian Church. Sometimes these brethren say that Christian Church baptism is alright. The truth, however, is not as lenient as some brethren. Let’s face the facts!

For one’s baptism to be alright it must be the one baptism (Eph. 4:5). If Christian Church baptism is the one baptism then the Bible is not true. For the Bible teaches the one baptism puts all who receive it into one and the same body (1 Cor. 12:13, 20; Eph. 3:6)

If Christian Church baptism is not the one baptism then all the members thereof are lost being out of Christ. For salvation is in Christ and only one baptism puts us into Him (Eph. 1:3; 2 Tim. 2:10; Gal. 3:27). Christian Church baptism either is the one baptism or it is not. Therefore, either the Bible is not true or all members of the Christian Church are lost. Yes, at all times we must face the facts. "For he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds" (2 John 11).

I am not interested in justifying my friends who are guilty of participating in the errors of the Christian Church. Neither am I interested in justifying my friends who are guilty of participating in the errors of "The Church of Christ." I hold no brief for error or sectism regardless of who is guilty. Brethren should not dismiss the above as an isolated instance. Instead, it is representative of the thinking of a great majority, especially in the southland. Brother Weaver is the victim of the sectarian teaching which is prevalent in the colleges, and announced from most of the pulpits. These brethren make the mistake of thinking that "The Church of Christ" with its policy making lectureships (conventions), hireling clergy system, seminaries, congregational missionary societies, and great philanthropic associations, is the one body mentioned in the New Testament scriptures. They have been brain-washed into thinking that until they cannot face the facts!

One need not be brilliant to see that acceptable baptism with these brethren is only administered by a clergyman of the "Church of Christ." There is no such thing as "Christian Church baptism." Neither is there any such thing as "Church of Christ baptism." If there were, one would be worth as much as the other. The one baptism is the immersion in water of a believing penitent upon the basis of his faith that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. When one submits to it he is added to the one body, composed of all the saved of the earth. It does not make any difference who immerses him, or where. Such an individual, through ignorance, may continue in a sectarian environment, and he may, or may not, become a sectarian in that environment. But he was added to the one body, and he is my brother. When I find him in the wrong environment, I shall not deny that he was born again, or that he is my brother. I shall seek to show to him that our Father wants us all to be one in

Him, and that he must therefore discard those sectarian attitudes and practices which divide us.

Those who have been immersed into the Christ are not out of Christ. They may be doing a lot of things “in Christ” that they ought not to be doing. They may, or may not, be lost eternally. We will probably do well to allow God to handle that phase of the situation. One thing we do know, and that is that we will be saved or lost as individuals, and not as congregations, regardless of what title we have over the church building. But those who have been immersed in water upon their faith that Jesus is the Messiah and God’s Son, will not be lost because there was something wrong with their baptism. They may be lost because of the way they regard or treat their brethren, and they may miss heaven because of their self-righteous attitude and sectarian bigotry.

The misapplication of 2 John 11 with which Brother Weaver closes his party-making thesis was handled at length in our June issue. He has missed the teaching of John as far on this subject as he did the teaching of Paul on baptism and the one body. Again, I affirm that every sincere believing penitent who submits to immersion in water on the basis of his faith in Jesus, is added to the one body by the Lord, and that person is my brother. Let’s really face the facts!

A Sound Mind (3)

Mission Messenger (Month 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

The first essential to a well regulated mind is the cultivation of a habit of undistracted attention. This means that the mind must be concentrated on a subject, so that all the powers of intellect are directed to an investigation of that subject in all of its elements and relations. This is the foundation of all mental growth. Every intellectual process is dependent on it. Moral character is shaped by recognition and practice of this principle.

“The life of a man of divided loyalty will reveal instability at every turn” (James 1:8). Divided loyalty is the ultimate result of misdirection of the mind. In turn, this generally stems from lack of regulating the attention so that there is no proper consideration of any subject in the light of its antecedents and consequences. We need to discipline our minds. A rolling stone gathers no moss, and a wandering mind accumulates little real knowledge. Most adults who are unsettled, vacillating, and unable to make decisions, could trace their failure to youthful indiscretion in pampering their minds, by giving in to every vagary or stray thought.

The world today demands clear thinking persons of conviction. We are subjected to foreign and alien ideologies. These must be met on the field of reason, or their proponents will be faced on the field of battle. We pay in tension, international distrust, and bloodshed, for our neglect and indifference in the realm of thought. The person who develops a clear rational mind is a real benefactor to the age in which he lives. We should not make the mistake of thinking that we may give way to our inclinations when young, and then suddenly reverse the process when we grow older. Our youthful folly may dog our steps and dampen our hopes to the brink of the grave.

How shall I a habit break?

As you did that habit make.

As you gathered you must lose;

As you yielded, now refuse,

Thread by thread the strands we twist

Till they bind us, neck and wrist;

Thread by thread the patient hand

Must untwine, ere free we stand.

As we builded, stone by stone,

We must toil, unhelped, alone,

Till the wall is overthrown.

To develop a sound mind you should form the habit of attempting but one thing at a time, and giving it your undivided attention. This is not easy in our complex world. There will be a constant temptation to give in. Your resolution will be battered by outside influences which clamor for attention. Many young people are unconsciously laying the foundation of an unstable life. You cannot, for instance, study a lesson and watch a television program at the same time. If you have a mathematics lesson for tomorrow, and you spread your book on a table while an interesting program is on the screen you are doing an injustice to yourself. Your aim is to derive the advantage from the lesson and the pleasure from the program. You achieve neither objective. The uneasy feeling down inside you that you ought to be studying mars the enjoyment of the program, while your investigation of the lesson is superficial and useless.

The tendency is to shove the mathematics lesson aside and focus attention on the television program. This may be a real crime against your own person. The program may be wholesome entertainment. The wrong is not in the television set, nor in the nature of the program. The sin lies in the injury you do to your will and reasoning faculties. You make a wrong choice. You destroy your sense of values. You give pleasure and entertainment priority in life over duty and responsibility. You plant the seed of indifference toward your purpose in life. The fruit from that seed is always bitter and acrid.

The road to success is paved with sacrifice. Pleasure deferred may bring rich reward. Indulgence of present whims may mean eventual loss of that which is most important. Start now, in high school, to deny yourself that which you crave in order to meet the obligations imposed by the present. The motto of Paul was "This one thing I do!" He was an example of the undivided life. Concentration may be closely akin to consecration.

Dwell deep! Forego the pleasure if it bring

Neglect of duty; consecrate each thought;

Believe thou in the good of everything

And trust that all unto the wisest end is wrought.

Bring thou this comfort unto all who weep:

Dwell deep, my soul, dwell deep!

Thoughts on Fellowship (10)

Mission Messenger (October 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

The Lord's Supper is a public expression of corporate fellowship. The word "communion" is from koinonia. This is the word translated "fellowship." Every person you admit to your communion is in your fellowship. This startles a lot of folk because they realize they have been fellowshiping a lot of people they do not even recognize as brethren. Those who are students have seen the "handwriting on the wall." They must either admit the truth of what we have been saying, or alter their practice. But if they start debarring baptized believers who disagree with them most of them will soon have no one to "fellowship."

Recently I asked a prominent evangelist if he would knowingly pass the bread and fruit of the vine to a member of the Christian Church if such an one visited his meeting. He replied in the negative. When asked why he would not, he said to do so would constitute endorsement of all the errors in the Christian Church. I know a lot of members of that church who do not endorse all of its errors. If the visitor were one of these, the preacher who is not a member of the Christian Church would endorse more errors than the member, according to this method of reasoning.

I have always understood the purpose of the Supper was to show the Lord's death. It is therefore a fellowship of those who have been baptized into his death. It indicates that all so baptized have been added to the church of God. They are thus made a part of the one body, the family of God. A lot of members in that family have some queer ideas. But my eating with them at the Lord's table does not sanction or endorse all their varied ideas. It does demonstrate that, in spite of those ideas, we are one in recognition and portrayal of the great fact which is the basis of our hope—the death of the Messiah!

According to the reasoning of some of our brethren, the apostle Paul could not have passed the emblems to Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, when they came from Corinth to visit him (1 Cor. 16:17), because in doing so he would have endorsed all the evils in the congregation of which they were members. We need to recall that one of the chief sins at Corinth lay in the fact that members of one faction would not eat with those of another. Paul rebuked such segregation and discrimination. He asks, "What shall I say unto you? Shall I commend you in this?" He concludes, "No, I will not."

God holds no man accountable for what he disavows. I am not responsible for the ideas, opinions, and notions of other brethren. If I share the Lord's Supper with one who does not believe in Bible classes, I do not surrender my position. If I partake with one who believes in extra institutions that does not make me endorse them. Neither do I endorse instrumental music when I pass the emblems to a visiting brother who believes in it. God does not hold me guilty of believing something I do not believe.

The position of some brethren is that of the Pharisees during the earthly sojourn of Jesus. They said, "This man eats with publicans and sinners," and they thought that by so doing, Jesus endorsed the errors of those with whom he ate. Guilt by association, in politics called McCarthyism, has no place in our spiritual thinking. We have no right to make anything a test of fellowship which God has not made a condition of salvation. If we are to reject Jesus as our creed and set up other terms of admission to His table, we ought to have the grace to demand agreement to that creed as a requisite to admission to our fellowship. It is deceptive and misleading to teach men that all who believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God, and who are immersed on the basis of that belief, are thereby introduced to all the privileges of citizenship, then change the rules after they have come in among us.

Are you ready to ask a penitent believer as a requisite to baptism, “Do you believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and do you here and now promise to oppose Bible classes, individual cups, unfermented wine in the Lord’s Supper, orphan homes, missionary societies, instrumental music, the pre-millennial theory, and any other thing that we may determine in the future to be wrong?” If not, why not? If those things are necessary to your fellowship, why not put them into the creed to which men must subscribe to get into that fellowship?

As for me, I shall make no demands which God has not made. I shall create no tests of fellowship which God has not made conditions to salvation. I shall not debar from His table any whom He has added to His family. I shall recognize as His children all whom He recognizes, but that does not mean I will endorse all they think or teach. Fellowship is not endorsement of a man’s position!

Thoughts on Fellowship (11)

Mission Messenger (November 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

The series of articles on the above topic nears its close. We will present the concluding one, God willing, in our next issue. In these articles we have humbly set forth our convictions. We have not sought to bind them on others. We respect and love those who have disagreed with the thoughts suggested. As we prepare to turn our attention to other matters we trust our readers have been stimulated to think, reason and discuss relative to this important matter. We begin herewith a summary of our views.

1. Believers in the Lord Jesus Christ are divided and torn into warring sects, and these defeat the purpose of our loving and absent King.

2. His will is that all who believe in Him should be one, and for this he prayed on the night before his death. The thing of paramount importance to Jesus as he faced Gethsemane and Golgotha was the unity of all who accepted him as the Messiah and God's Son.

3. Religious division and sectarian strife is not the normal condition of the body of Christ. Like the cancer in a physical body, it is a malignant growth, and an abnormal state. If medical researchists ever accept cancer as a normal condition they will cease to dedicate themselves to research dealing with its cause and cure, and we will be doomed. Likewise, if we accept sectarianism as the normal state, declare there is nothing to be done about it, and cease to labor to determine its cause and cure, we will be doomed to incessant warfare amongst believers, and none of us can be wholly guiltless.

4. Moved by a desire to help answer the prayer of our blessed Lord, we have sought to investigate again the subject of fellowship, and we have set forth our own findings in this series of articles. What we have suggested may help only if we do not accept these conclusions as final, but use them as foundations for future exploration and study.

5. The question of sectarian strife is a major one with many roots. There is no simple answer or solution. Casual and careless thinkers frequently demonstrate their immaturity by professing to have a glib answer to every problem. It is possible that over-simplification is one of our chief faults in reasoning. Certainly, it generally ignores the thinking of the other person, and his reasons for so thinking.

6. We have suggested that the issue of fellowship is confused because we now use the term in a sense in which it was not employed by the Holy Spirit. It is frequently equated with endorsement of another's position. But fellowship is a state or condition into which we are called by God through the gospel. Our entrance into that relationship which is described as being "in Christ" is contingent upon belief of one fact, and obedience to one act. That one fact is that Jesus is the Messiah, the Son of God. The one act is immersion of such a penitent believer in water. This act inducts one into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit. Such an one is added to the Lord's church, and is a member of the one body.

7. Unfortunately, and in opposition to the will of the Father, those who believe in our precious Lord are divided and scattered over the hills of sectarianism. They are kept apart, segregated, and separated by human creeds, interpretations, and opinions, which have been made tests of fellowship. To alleviate the abnormal condition we must eliminate these factors. We should guard against any future division among believers by resolving never to make anything a test of fellowship which God has not made a condition of salvation. This one principle accepted and adopted now, will guarantee that no other cleavage will ever occur among earnest believers in the Saviour.

8. The problem of offsetting divisions already in existence, some of which are of long standing, will not be so easy. The peacemakers will be called compromisers. Those who plead for unity of all believers, and are devoid of the party spirit, must be prepared to endure misrepresentation, abuse and false accusation. They must steel themselves against retaliation when their motives are judged as evil. They must never allow themselves to cease to love and pray for those who try to undermine and overthrow them. But the healing of schisms and breaches is so important to the work of God that it must be dearer than wealth, prestige, or even life itself. A restoration must be preceded by a reformation— a change in attitude. The work can only go forward in love— an all pervading love which knows no limit so far as humankind is concerned.

9. There must be a willingness to examine past acts which have resulted in division, and a readiness to admit mistakes. There must be a heart yearning for oneness, a fervent desire to see the will of God done on earth as it is in heaven. Division did not come over night. Unity will not be achieved in a day. Patience and forbearance are prime requisites. We must be willing to plant the seed; the increase will be given by God.

10. If it be true that all who have accepted Jesus as God's Son, and have been immersed by his authority, are children of God, and by this fact constitute a brotherhood, we can regard each other as brethren while we discuss our differences in humility, and seek a solution to our problems. We lose nothing by being kind, considerate and courteous toward those who disagree with us. A recognition of brotherhood is not evil. But we must want unity. We must wage peace as others wage war. Those who prefer to maintain the status quo will never answer the prayer of Jesus. We must be discontent to perpetuate human parties. We must sigh and cry for something better than what we have. We must pray for unity, then toil to achieve it. We must agonize in prayer, and bombard the ramparts of heaven night and day with our petitions.

Above all, we must love every soul for whom Jesus died. The love of God must be shed abroad in our hearts. It must be the motivating principle of our lives. Then, regardless of what men may do unto us, we will triumph over hate and envy. We will serve those who would destroy us, help those who would ruin us, and do good unto all men. And this heaven will work, for it is the heaven of God. It is our only hope for survival. It is the key to future happiness and security. There is no other alternative. We must love all men or perish! We must find the way to oneness or we may miss the way to heaven! One thing essential to offsetting division is fairness and justice. The mind of an editor must not become our criterion of scripturality. Let those who disagree also be heard. Truth has nothing to fear by presenting both sides of an issue so that honest readers may study them side by side. Through equity and kindness we may be able to heal schisms of long standing. Every tendency toward unity of the Spirit should bring rejoicing. Love is the golden key to unlock for us the storehouse of God's grace. Let us make use of that key!

Thoughts on Fellowship (12)

Mission Messenger (December 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

If Christ were to come back and walk the streets of any of our great cities today, the heart that bled for the sin of mankind, would bleed afresh because of the condition existing among those who believe that He is the Son of God. He would behold the party spirit parading under the guise of faithfulness, see hate wearing the livery of love, and selfishness enshrined as sacrifice. In the name of Christianity, he would hear men bear false witness against brethren, and behold the malignant spirit stab character and defame reputation. He would see church buildings rising as temples of pride, and visualize the haughty spirit of the Pharisee in modern dress as men still pray in effect: "Lord, I thank thee that I am not as other men are."

Sectarian division is the scandal of Christendom. It has raped the church and pillaged God's sanctuary. And because all of us are a part of the Christian realm we are shamed and debased by what has transpired. Because I am a human being I cannot be unaffected by man's inhumanity to man. The tortures and barbarity of Dachau and Buchenwald must rise up to torment my dreams, for all humanity suffered in the gas chambers of these German prisons. The stiff fingers of those dead point at the heart of every human being on earth. In the same way, every division that has ever occurred in the Christian world, every rent in the fabric of brotherhood, cannot leave me untouched, even though I do not consciously acknowledge it, and though I seek to disavow it.

Every new schism that appears, every sect that is spawned, every faction that is created must affect me, whether remotely or otherwise, for it makes the task of arriving at unity a greater one, it postpones by so much the answer to the prayer of my blessed Lord, it increases the pressure of endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. I cannot be unmoved or untouched by religious dissension anywhere on earth, for, being a follower of the Nazarene, I am a partaker in the momentous effort which cost His life. When a little congregation in a far away place, kindled by jealousy and inflamed by passion, erupts, until those who walked together now walk apart in their partisan spirit of self-righteousness, this pebble flung into the pool of Christianity, creates ripples which will not only break against the shores of my heart, but will not spend themselves until they foam out their mire upon the beaches of eternity.

No one of us can be utterly free from a sense of shame while bigotry, intolerance and factionism exist in the name of religion. We are Christian, and the rents and tears in the Christian fabric reflect against us all, as surely as injustice, inequality and cruelty to human beings in any part of the earth reflect against us as human beings. We cannot disavow our responsibility by arrogantly enquiring if we are keepers of our brethren. We cannot, like Pilate, wash our hands, and be free of the guilt of the mangled body of Jesus, so long as we have made no attempt to pour in ointment and bind up the wounds.

I am impelled by a sense of urgency, because I believe that our civilization staggers today on the brink of a precipice. I think we are doing a crazed and drunken dance on a narrow ledge above the valley of destruction. Unless we can make the Christian concept work, our children, or our children's children, may become mere statistics in an atomic holocaust, their burned, seared and charred bodies mingled with white hot steel and choking rubble. Time is running out. The sun is setting. Gog and Magog are gathering for the fray. There is but one thing that can save our world from disintegration. Jesus said that his disciples were the salt of the earth. If that salt loses its strength the earth cannot be preserved. There is no other alternative. We must restore the saving quality to the salt, or we shall perish.

Realizing this, some two years ago I began to plead that we increase our labor in love to heal the breaches in the walls of Zion, that we wage peace as diligently as others wage war. Only the peacemakers will be called the children of God. Happy are the peacemakers, says the prince of peace. We must find the way to unity or our boasted glory will lead to the grave. We must recapture the sense of spiritual kinship with all sincere believers in the Messiah. We dare not compromise truth, we dare not forsake principles. But we must find the solution to the problem of division. We cannot fracture ourselves into strength, nor split ourselves into unity of the Spirit. Unity will not come by accident. We cannot ignore the causes of disunity and restore it. But time is of the essence. The shadows are lengthening. The storm clouds gather. The winds of destiny are moaning and rising. Brethren, do not tarry much longer, or it will be too late.

In coming issues of the little paper, I shall seek to arouse all who love Jesus, to a realization of the danger confronting our world. I shall endeavor to get them to realize that it is no time to nail stray shingles on the barn while the house is on fire. It is possible we will not be able long to send out this call. Our funds are almost expended, our resources are running low. We will do what we can with what we have left. We owe it to Him to be faithful to the end. He does not expect us to do more than we are able. Perhaps others will be raised up with more means and greater ability, to arouse a slumbering church to the threat of what will happen if we do not restore peace on earth to men of good will. We trust that you will pass our subsequent issues to your friends, whatever their faith, for we must gather every grain of salt from the sectarian shakers, if we are to apply it in force to the accomplishment of His will.

A Sound Mind (4)

Mission Messenger (December 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

This series of brief essays is being offered because of the conviction of the author that the Creator, in making man a rational creature, has given him the power to reform his life and the social structure of which he is a part. The potential which is so great for good, can, if misdirected, wreak havoc and destruction. The mere fact that man possesses a mind, or that he uses it, is no guarantee that he will work good. He must cultivate a sound mind and employ it in harmony with the laws of intellect and ethics. These short lessons are calculated to help all, especially the young, to cultivate those qualities of mental soundness, essential to our perpetuity.

In our last article we pointed out the need of giving undistracted attention to the matter at hand, not only to understand the subject of current importance, but also to guide the mind in the formation of stable characteristics. But the habit of inattention and mental fluctuation is not always the result of trying to do two diverse things at the same time. It may just as readily be produced by attempting to do one thing with the mind while it is perplexed with doubt that it ought to be doing another thing.

To eliminate this condition we must understand its causes. It may issue from an impetuous approach to life. Those who do things upon the impulse of the moment are always subject to its deleterious effects, for our impulses vary and fluctuate. One may sit down to write a letter to a friend, while doubting if he should take the time to do so, when he ought to be studying his science textbook. After writing a few lines, the thought intrudes itself that he must check certain data about which he is not sure. He lays aside the pen and takes up the book, but even while reading, he is thinking he ought to finish the promised letter. By trying to make two “deadlines,” one for the mail collection, and another for the class period, he may miss one, and be ill-prepared for the other. Actually, such doubts are like rust on metal. They have a corrosive effect. They eat away at the solid structure of mental strength.

Of course, the answer to this problem lies in development of system and method, which provide for the maximum good to be derived from the time available. Industry could not exist in our modern world without what is called “time study.” Accordingly, analysts are employed by various firms at high salaries to carry on such research. Each of us, as a created mechanism of God, engaged in building character, should employ self-analysis and time-study, and should modify our habits and alter our procedures to conform to our best interests. Essential in doing this is the faculty of decision.

We have only 24 hours each day. We should mentally decide what use we can make of that time which will pay the greatest dividends now and in the future. This requires determining what is absolutely essential to be done today, what should be given priority after the essentials are accomplished, and what may be safely postponed until a future date. Having made the proper catalogue, we should concentrate on one of the essentials until it is properly disposed of, and pass on to another undistractedly. Afterwards we can give undivided attention, in succession, to other matters. Even the Eternal One began his work with purpose and proceeded with plan.

It is essential to cultivating a sound mind that, having planned our tasks for today, we not worry about tomorrow's assignments. Trying to live tomorrow while doing your work today is but a short cut to the psychiatric ward. Look at life like an hourglass. Each morning when the glass is inverted there are hundreds of grains of sand in the upper compartment, but these can only pass through the narrow neck one at a time. The tasks of life can only be fulfilled in the same way. The apostle said, "This one thing I do." The Saviour said, "Do not worry about tomorrow. Leave tomorrow to worry about itself. One day's trouble at a time is enough" (Authentic Version).

True worth is in being, not seeming;

In doing, each day that goes by,

Some little good, not in dreaming,

Of great things to do by and by.

For whatever men say in their blindness

And spite of the fancies of youth,

There's nothing so kingly as kindness,

And nothing so royal as truth.

A New Conservation Corps

Mission Messenger (December 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

In the economic depression which began thirty years ago, our nation took drastic steps to aid recovery. One such step was organization of the Civilian Conservation Corps. This enlisted young men who were walking the streets and banded them into a group to help conserve and salvage natural resources. They planted shelter belts across the prairies, replanted thinning forests, and helped on flood control projects. In addition to the good accomplished for the country, they benefitted by working with each other, by the discipline of labor, and development of physical strength. Today, in the midst of economic plenty, we suffer from a moral depression. To conserve our spiritual resources, all who are concerned need to constitute a corps of diligent workers. We need to become a spiritual CCC, with the following:

1. Courage. We need men with courage to think for themselves. Regimentation is suicide for the spirit; conformity may mean the end of spiritual growth. We need courage to speak and to act. Freedom unused will soon be abused. Liberty requires exercise to stay alive. Transformed lives resulting from reformed hearts will keep us from becoming deformed and dwarfed.

2. Commitment. The battle of life is the only one which can be won by absolute and complete surrender. Too many merely play at being religious. Religion is secondary with them. It is merely one facet of life, and not life itself. Consecration to Christ involves a genuine crucifixion of our old way of existence, and a burial of our previous self never to be resurrected again. The way of the cross leads home. Any other way leads from the home of the soul. The life that counts is the life that is undivided, wholly committed, so that it is lost to us. "He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."

3. Courtesy. We live in a complex world. Men differ in ability, understanding and interpretation. We cannot ride roughshod over their hearts. The soldiers of God are not storm troopers or shock troops. We must deal with those who differ kindly, considerately, and in love. Discourtesy, anger and the party spirit will not lead others to the right; they only reveal what is wrong with ourselves. "The servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle, patient, apt to teach, in meekness instructing those who oppose themselves." These things—courage, commitment, courtesy— will make of you a real member of God's conservation corps of the spirit.

Are You Loyal?

Mission Messenger (December 1958)

Volume 20

[Abstract]

It is a common thing to hear men speak of “loyal churches” or “disloyal churches.” The loyalty to which they refer is generally conformity to a partisan or factional position. Each group has its own special measuring rod. In one case a church is loyal if its membership, or at least those in authority, oppose the United Christian Missionary Society; in another if they oppose individual cups; in another if they oppose classes; in another if they oppose the use of unfermented grape juice in the Lord’s Supper; in another if they oppose orphan homes. Thus, a man who is regarded as loyal by one faction, will be branded as disloyal by all others.

There are as many loyalty tests as there are “Churches of Christ.” Most of these are based on negative attitudes. In many cases, it makes little difference what all a man is for; what counts is the one thing he is against. He may be loyal and be for many things that are wrong; but he must be against the right thing that is wrong. Read that again! No one is recognized as loyal by all of the brethren; all of the brethren are recognized as disloyal by someone.

The word of God says, “This is his commandment, that we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another, as he gave us commandment.” This is not sufficient for the factionalist. Proper regard for Jesus, and love for the brethren, count for nothing unless one is in line with the party. It is not a matter of standing for Christ, but falling for the unwritten creed, that makes the difference. Our experience has been that as love for the party increases, love for the brethren decreases. Brotherly love is supplanted by partisan love for those who agree with us. Others are regarded as dishonest, treated as outsiders, and subjected to coldness and indifference.

As God looks at us, there are probably no “loyal churches.” There are some in each congregation who do the best they know how to do; there are many in each who do not. It is our attitude toward truth that makes the difference. Some may have but little knowledge and do much for Jesus; others have much knowledge and do but little. We will not be saved or lost as congregations, but as individuals. This does not imply that it makes no difference where you belong. It may make a great deal of difference. But wherever you are a member, the congregation is made up of frail humans, and it is just as “loyal” as all of the members who compose it. I pray for the day to come when party names, tests, and creeds, will be discarded, and love for the Master will be the true measure of a man’s spiritual worth and standing.

MISSION MESSENGER ESSAYS (1959)

Volume 21

Covenants of God

Index to Volumes

- The Ebbing Tide
- Address to Sincere Believers
- Facing the Future (1959)
- Our Drawing Power
- Fractured Fellowship
- The Running Sands
- Churches of God
- Our Position
- Sunset in the West
- Grace and Faith
- Straws in the Wind
- The Sword of Damocles
- Acceptable Unto God
- To Think About
- Red Sky at Morning
- Causing Divisions
- The Use of Liberty
- Pattern for Disaster
- Making Allowances
- The Claims of Rome
- Facing the Facts
- The Protestant Picture
- What Divides Us?

- A Dangerous Reply
- What Divides Us?
- Turning on the Light
- Light and Fellowship
- Living in Fear
- The Conservative Party
- Schisms and Parties
- Thoughts on Fellowship (13)
- The Revolution
- Church of Christ Party

The Ebbing Tide

Mission Messenger (January 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

I am not a prophet, nor the son of a prophet. I am a student of history, and I know that history is repetitive. Like causes produce like results. This is the basis for sober contemplation of the fate which awaits our civilization unless there is a startling reversal of attitude and behavior. By “our” civilization, I refer to the culture developed in the western hemisphere. It is not the only state of civilization in existence, but it is of particular interest to me, because by the circumstances of birth I am a white man, and by locality I live in a nation which is a part of, and a contributor to this culture. It is likewise of interest that this is the only civilization extant predicated upon the belief that Jesus of Nazareth is the Son of God, and His way of life is the only satisfactory code of conduct, and the source of happiness beyond the grave. I subscribe to that belief.

Every symptom which preceded the downfall of other great previous civilizations is apparent in the western world. We are relying for our continued existence on the very things which proved to be “broken reeds” when others leaned upon them. Like the Macedonian, Roman, and prior world powers, we place our hopes upon our abundance of natural resources and the power of armed might. But the experience of all ages teaches that without single exception, those who placed their hope of survival upon these factors were destroyed. Other peoples who were regarded as savage and uncultured, as uncouth and ignorant, have surged forward and overwhelmed those who had become soft and effeminate.

It is evident that the western world has long believed it was invulnerable because of a fancied superiority in technical skill and scientific acumen. That very thing may prove to be the Achilles' heel which will provide the avenue of death for all we have cherished. Certainly the adage of Paul, "If a man think that he stands, let him take heed lest he fall," can be projected to a national level, for a nation is but a collection of individuals. No other poison is so toxic as the idea of racial superiority, and the graveyard of nations is filled with the tombstones of those who regarded themselves as a super race. Many of them were engulfed by the very ones they despised.

A short time ago we received a severe jolt when Russia placed a satellite in orbit around the earth. Most Americans had lulled themselves into believing that this vast sprawling area of the earth's surface was peopled by dull, plodding peasants and semi-barbarous kulaks. Had we not read that they lived huddled together in small apartments, that they had few private automobiles, and no tiled baths. It was unthinkable that people who dressed in baggy clothes and walked to their destinations, could out-distance our brilliant scientists working in their gleaming, well-equipped laboratories. So shocking was the revelation of the Russian accomplishment, that our people were temporarily in a state of fear bordering on frenzy. But when our own geniuses hurled a couple of baby moons into space, we relaxed, and resumed our pleasurable existence. We could do it too! Despite the fact that our little satellites compared in size with those of Russia like an apple placed beside a sack of potatoes, we were content. It does not take much to satisfy the ego of those already full of it.

We stand today on the brink of disaster. We are like children toying with a loaded revolver or tossing a live grenade.

We are flirting with death, and gambling with extinction. This is the measured conviction of many serious modern philosophers. It is altogether possible their warnings will fall upon deaf ears. Belshazzar was throwing a drunken party the night the Medes entered mighty Babylon through the channel of the Euphrates. The citizens of Rome still believed it was the "Eternal City" when Alaric and the Visigoths knocked at the gates. Jeremiah urged his people to train women in the art of weeping, so they could take up a wailing, "that our eyes may run down with tears, and our eyelids gush with waters." He assigned as the reason, "For death is come into our windows, and is entered into our palaces, to cut off the children from without, and the young men from the streets." But the king, sitting in his palace of luxury, took a penknife and cut the message to bits and fed it into the fire on the hearth, and Jeremiah was arrested and thrown into a dungeon filled with muck and mire.

The situation confronting our civilization is serious. We are in the critical ward. Is it hopeless? My reply is that it need not be. In what direction does hope lie? It cannot come from material wealth or expenditure of money. In the United States today we have piled up a national debt of such staggering proportions as to defy all ability to describe. The mind of man is incapable of grasping a picture of the amount of the earth's surface which would be blanketed if this colossal obligation were reduced to ten dollar bills and these were spread out like a quilt. Only recently the chief executive signed into law a bill raising the ceiling on the debt, and it is now predicted that it must be jacked up again by new billions. Much of this mammoth expenditure has gone to underprivileged areas, and many of these people have taken our money and become our bitter enemies. We have saddled our children's children for centuries to come with a yoke of taxation, and have spent money we did not have, but have borrowed from unborn posterity to protect our way of life, although in doing so we may have destroyed theirs. We have gone into debt in a time of greatest prosperity. If we do this in a green tree, what shall we do in the dry?

But does not God bless those who share their bounties with others who are in need? Is it not more blessed to give than to receive? That depends upon the motive for the giving. Our national budget for foreign aid is not an exemplification of Christian charity, nor an altruistic expression of love for the down-trodden. It is born of political necessity, and is a diplomatic expedient engaged in all too often as a policy of appeasement. God has not promised to bless the sacrifice one makes when he flings his purse to a robber to keep him from ransacking his house. We would not imply that no good has been done in filling the starving bellies of the victims of famine, but it must be admitted that all too frequently we have sent shiploads of grain only when we have learned Russia was going to do so. As a people, we are prone to rationalize and to assign ourselves the highest motives for our conduct, like the criminal who feels he is helping to solve the unemployment problem by keeping so many policemen at work.

We cannot trust in armed might for survival. The cracking of the atom marked the end of the myth that any one can win in a future war. All that can be expected is, that like the blind Samson of old, we will pull down the house and perish with our enemies. The few survivors who sought refuge in dens and caves deep enough to escape the fall-out would grope their way back to a blackened, desolated surface covered with the pitiable remains of men, women and children reduced to seared cracklings. Mighty cities would disappear in a blinding flash, rivers would be dried up, and mountains of debris would cover once fertile plains. Our only hope lies in a power greater and mightier than atomic energy. That superior power is the moral power of the universe, proceeding from the Creator of the universe. Atomic energy is created force. The Creator is greater than the created. So the moral strength of God is greater than any force which is neutral in moral relationships, such as atomic energy.

Any power to be utilized as a constructive or protective force must be properly channeled. For generations, rivers ran wild and turbulent, until men flung huge dams across their courses, and directed the flow through water courses which enabled turbines to capture, tame, and harness the horsepower to light our homes and operate our factories. The power was there through the ages, but it was unused. The mere existence of moral power in the world is not enough. It is of such a nature that it must operate through human hearts, transforming them and using them as transforming agents. Those of us who believe that we are strengthened with might by His Spirit in the inner man, as Christ dwells in our hearts by faith, also believe that God is able to do abundantly above all we ask or think, according to that power which works in us. This is the power of faith!

Why is it, then, that the only civilization based on the Christian concept, is tottering on the brink of the abyss which has swallowed so many previous civilizations? Has Christianity been weighed and found wanting? Is it outworn, outmoded, and helpless to compete with a complex secular modern world? There are those who affirm that this is the case. Certainly, after two thousand years, the majority of the world's population is not even nominally Christian. Millions have never learned the ethical principles of Jesus of Nazareth; millions more are unaffected by what they have heard. Has Christianity by virtue of its contact with the material sphere, and through friction thus engendered, lost its transforming power? If not, why is that power so ineffective?

In a series of articles, of which this is the first, addressed to all who believe that Jesus, born in Bethlehem, in the days of Herod, was the Word made flesh, and the only begotten Son of the living God, I want to attempt to establish certain principles which may help to arouse thought and spur action, leading to our survival. These lessons will, it is hoped, commend themselves to the earnest thinkers of all denominations. This writer has long been associated with a non-sectarian fellowship based upon a sincere attempt to restore the primitive community of saints, and it is but natural that much of what is said will have specific bearing upon the problems confronting those with whom he is affiliated. But recognizing that there are many others who believe in the Messiahship and Sonship of the Nazarene, and are sincerely seeking to understand and implement His will, it is hoped that there will be a sufficient degree of universality in the essays to encourage reading by all who love God and tremble over our impending fate.

Since our contact with our fellowmen depends upon the willingness and activity of others who are serious and sober thinkers, and who are concerned about the conditions outlined, we trust that our readers will share their papers with neighbors and friends who have a passion for truth, regardless of their religious affiliation. If each article could be passed to many hands and its suggestions become the grist for many minds, the resultant accumulative effort might be surprising. It is in the spirit of love that we urge you to read our article next month, entitled, "The Running Sands."

We are convinced that our greatest enemy is the indifference born of smug complacency. We refuse to believe the signs of the times. We are like the condemned man who awaits his fate at the gallows, but allows no thought of impending death to mar his last meal. Not one great world power of the past believed its own prophets. It is a characteristic of all great civilizations that the generation which inherits the blessings carved out of a rude and cruel wilderness by the toil of dedicated ancestors, accepts those blessings as its due, and loses the sense of consecration and renounces the labor essential to perpetuate them. Thus, men grow soft and effeminate as wealth becomes the end to be sought, and not the means to an end. Goldsmith has aptly said

Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey;

Where wealth accumulates and men decay.

The tide is ebbing out for us. The pull and tug of unseen forces is slowly and relentlessly drawing it out toward the deep, leaving great stretches of naked shore covered with the flotsam and jetsam once buried deeply, but now exposed to the gaze of all. Can that tide be stayed? Only a divine hand can hold it back. He who drew a line in the sands and said, "This far, and no further shalt thou come," can restrain the waves. But the reversal of the tide depends upon the reformation of our lives. Our civilization is not so much endangered by nuclear fission as by spiritual deficiency. Our greatest threat is not atomic power in the control of others, but lack of moral power as the controlling factor in our lives. Will you be one of God's "Minute Men" to help warn of the dangers that are clawing at our door?

Address to Sincere Believers

Mission Messenger (January 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

To our respected and beloved friends in every religious sect, who are concerned about the strife and division existing among believers in Jesus Christ, our Lord, we offer the following conclusions reached from a study of Ephesians, chapter two.

1. There was once a gulf of enmity between Jew and Gentile, so that the latter were referred to as being afar off, and, in a sense, were regarded as dead.

2. Jesus, as our peace, made both one, abolishing the enmity by means of death, that is, he killed the enmity by allowing himself to be killed, so that the cross became the rallying standard for those afar off, as well as those nigh.

3. The previously divergent elements were made one new man in Christ. Outside of him, they were segregated from each other, hating and being hated. In him, they are fellow citizens and of the household, or family, of God.

4. Reconciliation has been achieved in one body. That body is his church (Eph. 1:22, 23). Those who are in that body are charged to walk as followers of God, and dear children, that is, to walk in love as Christ has loved us (5:1, 2). Thus is to be guarded and maintained “the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace” (4:3).

These conclusions lead us to observe further that:

1. The church of God had its beginning on earth, on the first Pentecost following the resurrection of Jesus. It was inaugurated with the proclamation that Jesus, being raised from the dead, has been exalted to the right hand of God, as Lord and Christ.

2. Admission to the fellowship was contingent upon personal faith in his Sonship and Messiahship, no other creed or proposition being offered as a basis for fellowship. All who believed in Jesus as the anointed Son, were accepted as brethren upon validation of their faith by one act of obedience, immersion in water of the believer.

3. Every immersed penitent believer was by the Lord added to his church and enjoyed all the privileges, prerogatives and rights of citizenship and brotherhood.

4. The church of God consisted then, and has always consisted, of every repentant believer who acknowledges the sovereignty of Jesus over his life, and who seals his faith by submission to baptism.

5. Such believers today have become divided and segregated, building up many walls of partition, and allowing barriers of enmity to exist, contrary to the will of God, and in opposition to the purpose of the death of Jesus.

6. All who love him are obligated to work for removal of every partition wall which separates the people of God. To achieve unity, the cross must again be exalted as the rallying point for all who love him. We are divided because we have strayed from the cross. Some may again be nigh, and others afar off. But all must recognize that "he is our peace."

7. Peace cannot be secured through comity agreements, creedal statements or synopses of faith. It will not come through signed documents. All of these indicate distrust and suspicion. It can only come through humility, crucifixion of self, and complete surrender to Jesus, for “through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father.”

8. We may take comfort in the fact that no chasm between us is as great as that which separated Jew and Gentile. If the cross of Jesus, as a bridge of love, was great enough to reach across the yawning abyss and tie the two sides together, is it so incredible to believe that it can span the gaps between us?

9. I have addressed only the concerned ones, for in any religious organization, it is only these who will study, search, pray, and labor to bring about that peace for which Jesus prayed, and which is so pleasing unto God. When our love for Jesus transcends our party loyalties and sectarian ties, we shall begin to see the dawn break after a night filled with the darkness of hatred, schism and strife.

10. As you pray for the light, please pray for us, that we may be willing to give our all, yea, even life itself, for the advancement of his cause. May we never consider that anything is settled while a cleavage still exists amongst the brethren, may we be ready always to examine anything that will lead to a semblance of peace among the warring factions. Entreat God for us that we may be humble instruments in his hand to promote peace on earth among men of good will, that his will may be done on earth, as it is done in heaven!

Facing the Future

Mission Messenger (January 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

For more than twenty years we have regularly sent this little journal forth. We have never taken one cent of subscription money for our personal use. It has been a sacred trust to be used in sharing truth with others. We have never had enough to guarantee publication for more than a few months, yet never allowed an obligation to go unpaid. Somehow there was always enough when needed. Days of toil and long hours at night, have been invested by both Nell and myself to keep the paper coming to you. We have given this time freely and cheerfully.

No religious paper without paid advertising can survive on subscriptions alone. It can only exist when others who believe in the principles for which it contends are willing to share the cost of production to help acquaint the world with those principles. When men lose interest in those principles, or deem them unworthy of support, the paper must cease unless the editor is independently wealthy. Again we are forced to call your attention to our need of assistance, if we are to continue. Here are the facts.

The cost of materials and printing has tripled since we began. Those unacquainted with the printing trades are startled when they learn the truth about the inflationary spiral. The cost of mailing has risen greatly. It is due for additional increases. Many papers have been forced to quit; others have had to consolidate to continue. It costs five cents to enroll a new subscriber, the actual cost of an address stencil. It costs five cents to notify those whose subscriptions expire. When necessary to send a second printed card, it costs an additional five cents. That is a hundred dollars just to notify each thousand readers their time is up. When you move and do not notify us, the post office charges us five cents to do so. Each month Nell and I must raise $250 to get the paper to you. That is $3,000 per year. It actually costs more than a dollar per year for each reader on our list.

Some have advised to raise the price. We have not increased it in twenty years. If we do, some will no longer be able to take the paper. To old age pensioners, boys in school, and large families, a dollar is precious. They scrimp and save to subscribe. Those who tell us they would like to have the paper but cannot afford it, receive it without charge. But some will not tell us. After serious study and meditation we have decided not to raise the price. If there are not enough brethren interested in our plea to help sound out the message, we will conclude our work is unavailing, and suspend operation. That you may properly judge whether our course is worthy we will present a few ideas about our purpose, then suggest what you may do.

This will not be a factional journal. It is not a "brotherhood paper" in the common usage of that term. It does not exist to plead for separation or segregation of disciples of our Lord on the basis of opinions relative to classes, individual cups, baptisteries, orphan homes, colleges, societies, pre-millennialism, or any other thing. Men may divide over these, but this journal will not become a factional mouthpiece for any party, segment, clique or faction. The editor has decided convictions on all these matters and will state them. A majority of writers may hold the same views, but the paper will not degenerate into a party organ. We will not denounce those who differ as pagans or heathen, nor refuse to regard them as children of God and brethren.

We will continue to plead for restoration of the ancient order as the only hope of answering the prayer of Jesus for the unity of all believers. We will do this in a spirit of firmness and fairness. We will not force our views upon others as terms of fellowship. Those who disagree with us will be regarded as brethren. If they want space to set forth dissenting views it will be granted when available, and if we reply, it will be in love. It is our hope to edit a journal which you may freely pass on to your friends and relatives, but we will not deny brethren who differ, space to express themselves, in order to increase circulation. We would rather have the paper go down in a spirit of fairness and justice, than to thrive as a partisan journal.

Shall we continue? We have on file material needed in these days of tension, strife and division. But Nell and I cannot do the work, get the subscribers, and finance the project too. We have no surplus funds. We shall go on as long as we can. When we can no longer go on, we will cease with clear consciences and a sense of having done our best. Here are some of the ways you might help.

- Send in a list of subscribers from your congregation. Many will subscribe if you will but announce it, or ask them privately. Only a few ever really work to get other readers. Perhaps you would like to send the paper to a number of brethren and friends as an incentive to their study and spiritual growth. Work for it!

- If God has blessed you with a good salary, why not use a little of it each month to help promote peace on earth among men of good will? If just a few would share each month in the task, it would help lift the burden. You cannot go among all the factions of the disciple brotherhood personally, but you can help us reach the leaders and labor for better feeling and understanding.

- If you cannot do either of the foregoing, when you send in your own subscription, add a little to it, and we will use the additional amount to send it to others who cannot afford to subscribe.

• Please pray for our feeble effort to serve Him. If you feel we are presenting truth in a distressed and troubled world pray that it may have free course; if you feel we are not, pray that we may learn the way of truth more perfectly.

We will discontinue announcement of those who send subscriptions or financial aid. None of us are working for glory or honour bestowed by men. We are content to serve Him without thought of personal gain. God knows who our helpers are, and we know. It is enough that we are workers together with Him. This means that you will have to repose confidence in Nell and myself that we will be true to our trust. We pledge ourselves, in fear of the judgment, that we will not abuse that trust. We will not be factious or stubborn. We will not be divisive. We will use what you give to help further the cause of peace. Our sole interest is truth. Will you invest regularly in this campaign for spiritual peace and restoration, and trust heaven, as we do, to reward you with eternal dividends? Our prayers are for all of you!

Our Drawing Power

Mission Messenger (January 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

The church for which our Lord died is a simple, rather than a complex organism. Jesus lived a simple life among humble people. He was looked upon as a peasant carpenter in the region of his home. He knew nothing of luxury, worldly wealth, or ease. The ambassadors he selected and sent forth were unlearned men. They knew hardship and were acquainted with unremitting toil. The members of the one body in the first centuries were mainly slaves. They frequently met for worship before daybreak so they would not intrude upon the master's time, and to be free from the prying gaze of enemy spies. They owned no church property, but gathered in private homes and upper rooms. They were the poor of this world, but rich in faith.

When men are given special honor in the church because of worldly attainment, whether it be in wealth, education, or political prestige, the spiritual life wanes. The greatest enemy we face is pride. The church stifles the Spirit when it thrusts into prominence, as drawing cards, those of its number who are movie stars, outstanding athletes, or who have doctorate degrees. To bask in the reflected glory of great men is to dim the majesty of Jesus in the eyes of our fellowman. The humble saint who sings the songs of Zion with cracked voice may be greater in God's estimation than the crooner whose face is pictured on theatrical magazines. He who runs with patience the race set before him may be more worthy than the crack miler of the sports pages. The one who knows naught but Jesus and him crucified, may be closer to the spirit of the lowly Nazarene than the lecturer upon ponderous themes.

God's children should not ape the world's tactics, nor employ the world's methods to achieve recognition. We fight a losing battle when we borrow the armor of the enemy. The only attraction we have any right to offer sinful men is the man Christ Jesus. In him the world finds the ideal it needs so much. His power has not weakened. He declares, "If I be lifted up from the earth, I will draw all men unto me." Our task is not to draw men. It is to lift him up!

The erection of mammoth temples of pride, the boastful advertising of elaborate programs, the recounting of earthly attainments of pompous speakers, all of these are far removed from the humility and simplicity which were the strength of primitive saints. It is possible that the apostles of our Lord would not be welcome to speak in many places today where men pay lip service to their writings. Our Lord may be standing outside, unable to find room in the hearts of many who profess to follow him. We need to recapture the ideal of the simple life, so that even the lowliest may feel at home among us. We need to develop the Christian philosophy as our guide through life, so that we shall really believe that the road to greatness is pointed out by the signs of self-denial and service. The table of the Lord should be the gathering place of all his children, rich and poor, great and small, black and white. Caste systems based upon economic status, educational attainment, or racial differences, will be unknown in heaven, and should be foreign to the church on earth.

Fractured Fellowship

Mission Messenger (January 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

In some segments of the disciple brotherhood we hear with increasing frequency such terms as “Men’s Fellowship,” “Youth Fellowship,” etc. This is a straw which indicates how the wind blows, and it is not blowing in the direction of restoration of the ancient order of things. The fellowship in Christ to which we are called by the gospel is universal as to membership of the one body. In him, “there is neither Jew nor Greek, male or female, bond or free.” It is true that some attempted at first to fragmentize the fellowship on the basis of nationality. Peter sought to establish a Jewish fellowship at Antioch, and was sternly rebuked by Paul. It remained for “latter day saints” to use sex or age as admission to the charmed circle, and organize something for which there is no more scriptural authority than there is for the United Christian Missionary Society.

This means little to those bitten by the “organizing bug.” They point to the work being done and the amount contributed by the “Men’s Fellowship” as an indication of the spiritual strength of the church. It is really a symptom of weakness. In many cases the bulk of the membership just go along, and do little. Because the congregation as a whole is “poor, and weak, and miserable, and blind, and naked,” something else is organized in the hope that it will make enough noise so it will appear like the body is functioning. It is like painting the garage to detract attention from the decrepit condition of the house; or blowing loud on the bass horn to cover up the dearth of sound from the other instruments in the orchestra.

To hitch any kind of limiting term to the front end of our fellowship in the Christ is to destroy the real sense of that fellowship, which is contingent on being in Christ, not on age, sex, or other consideration. Jesus did not use the term from such an exclusive standpoint. A men's fellowship excludes women. A youth fellowship excludes those of mature age. Such a fellowship is not the one for which Jesus died. The fellowship in Christ is not partitioned off or chopped up. It has no walls, cubicles or cells. "We are all one in Christ Jesus."

We might as well face up to the fact that the idea of restoring the ancient order is not the aim of most of the disciple brotherhood. They are concerned with defending what they have and organizing something else. They do not care to reproduce the church in apostolic simplicity. They have too much money tied up in other things. Bible colleges, seminaries, eleemosynary societies, charitable organizations, missionary societies and benevolent institutions— all of these prove they are as big as other sects, and they will keep them regardless of God's word. And these things have let down the bars. There is no end to how far man will go when he starts organizing things. He will tamper with anything on the basis that he can improve on God's arrangement. Anything God wants done I can do in the fellowship of the whole church; whatever I cannot do in that fellowship He does not want done!

The Running Sands

Mission Messenger (February 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

The civilization of western men, receiving its impetus from the teaching of Jesus of Nazareth, has acted as a dike to keep back the frothing waves of the sea of barbarism and cruelty. Behind that dike the nations of the west have elevated the living standard of their citizens to the highest peak yet scaled. Scientific research has eliminated the fear of many diseases, the average length of human life has been greatly increased, new techniques have been discovered in the realm of surgery and medicine which enable practitioners to salvage many who would have been lost a few decades ago. Old age assistance, increased pension funds, and social security benefits have eliminated the thought of dependency in the declining years. Slums are being rooted up, scientific housing projects are going up, and even low income groups can now share in things which would have been counted as luxuries, obtainable only by a few of the wealthiest people, but fifty years ago. It would seem to the casual observer that this is a golden age and that it will continue so until it blends into the eternal.

But the careful investigator, using the measuring reed of history for a guide, detects dangerous cracks in the dike, and sees the water seeping through the crevices, and he is fearful for the future. He hears the ominous beat of the breakers as they foam in fury against the foundation and the sound is a portent of evil days ahead unless the breaches can be cemented and the walls buttressed. It is as if the hour glass of western culture had been inverted for the last time and the trickling sand is getting low in the upper portion, and time is running out. The cool wind in the face is the harbinger of a storm which will unleash its violent fury in a destructive blast against all that we hold dear.

These are not the pessimistic ravings of a professional precursor of doom. They are the sober conclusions reached from a comparison of our present condition with the condition of every nation of the past which has been ruthlessly overthrown at the height of its power. A careful analysis of the symptoms of corruption which undermined those nations, together with a study of our own situation, will convince any serious thinker that not one symptom is lacking. We can mention but a few.

Our great cities are not only breeding grounds of crime, but crime is no longer an enactment of a weak anti-social individual, or of small groups welded together in a nefarious scheme. Crime is syndicated. It is the product of an organized gang with tentacles reaching into every department of our governmental structure. The master minds are members of the dread "Black Hand" movement, the sinister Mafia, with its hired assassins and imported thugs. Prostitution, gambling and liquor are fertile fields of activity for this underworld coterie, and "Murder, Incorporated," represented the ultimate of its plan to manipulate and control the entire nation for gain. Crooked lawyers are on the alert night and day to thwart the law, and are sustained by the payroll of the gang. With well placed agents in high places, the hoodlum element has rendered local officials and average citizens well-nigh helpless. And the greatest weapon in the gang arsenal is not the blackjack or tommy-gun but the spirit of apathy, indifference, and unconcern of the populace.

The workmen's unions which began as a protective measure to counteract the exploitation of labor by industrial management, have often been infiltrated by communists and gangsters. The thought of great "war chests" composed of millions of dollars exacted in compulsory dues has attracted the underworld like sugar attracts flies. Men like Dave Beck and his son, of the teamsters' union, have filched and stolen, to live like Oriental pashas in sumptuous luxury on the spoils exacted from the toils of grimy and sweaty men. While denouncing capitalists they have existed in a style which many of those they deride have never known. Worst of all has been the fomenting of hate and class consciousness. The worker has been taught to look upon the employer as an enemy from whom he must exact the last penny regardless of the means employed. In turn, the employer feels a sense of contempt for those with whom he bargains only through a professional agent, who frequently "plays politics" with the welfare of the very workers whom he is engaged to represent.

This is a day when men seek to get all they can, and in many instances where fair means will not avail, foul methods obtain. We are not opposed to the idea of men receiving just compensation for their labor. We are pleased that certain benefits are now accorded them, such as fewer hours of labor per week, and lengthier vacations. But what use is made of increased wages and more leisure? Do these contribute to the strengthening of the social fabric and the moral betterment of our world? On the contrary, there are grave implications the opposite is true.

Each wage increase brings a corresponding rise in commodity prices, which in turn produces a higher cost of living index, and this brings a clamor for increase of the hourly wage scale. An inflationary spiral is created which places manufactured goods on an ever higher price level. But many wages are relatively static, and each time the price is increased, a certain number are eliminated as potential purchasers. The available market will sooner reach the saturation point and unemployment will result. We have already priced ourselves out of the world market, and now must loan other nations the money with which to purchase our finished products. What will happen when the day of accounting arrives?

But the danger lies not in high wages and price increases, although history attests to the fact that even on a world scale economic conditions run in cycles, but in the spirit that prompts the demand for these things, and the use to which they are put when obtained. Have higher wages generally improved our moral and spiritual status? On the contrary, the demand for increased pay has not been based upon increased effort and service, the just basis for calculation, but upon greed and envy. These recreant twins besmirch everything they contact, and like borers in a tree, will eventually destroy the very social structure upon which they feed.

Greed gives birth to the most dangerous philosophy that can infect a nation. It places an emphasis on things and engenders the view that the more things one possesses, the better he is. It estimates the value of a man by the neighborhood in which he lives, the size of his car, or the cost of his suits. This is in direct opposition to the doctrine of Jesus, who declared, "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things which he possesses." One needs only to stand at the checking counter of a large supermarket to see that better wages do not mean better living. Beer by the case, and cigarettes by the carton, constitute a major part of many weekly purchases. One is tempted to cry out like the ancient prophet, "Wherefore do you spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfies not?"

Our problem is not the high cost of living, but the cost of high living, or perhaps, the high cost of low living! It is interesting, but frightening, to realize that Russia looks upon cigarette sucking as an indication of weakness and demoralization in the western nations, and warns against it. The increasing incidence of lung cancer in smokers, has convinced me that the tobacco trust is a better agent of the communist world plot than all the secret spy rings in the nation. It is a tragic truth that while we fear the atomic bomb we may be beaten into submission by a weed. Our people get wrought up at the thought of radioactive fallout which may sear the lungs and eat the body tissues, but at the same time, deliberately pay for the privilege of sucking into their lungs the tars “which will eat as doth a cancer.”

It has been said that you may judge the character of a man by what he does with his leisure time. One cannot always do what he would like during his hours of gainful employment. He works for another and must be subservient to his will. But one makes his own decisions relative to what he calls his “free time.” What is true of judging an individual is also true of a nation which is only a group of individuals living under a common government. Has increase of leisure time and freedom from daily toil been used to strengthen our moral and spiritual resources? Have we used these hours to gain wisdom and intellectual growth, better to serve humanity? Is our recreation truly a re-creation of vital forces sapped by the daily grind?

It is probable that an honest survey would reveal that the opposite again is the case. Our forefathers who hewed their homes out of the wilderness, had to provide their own entertainment. As a result they became excellent conversationalists and inimitable story tellers. Men who could hardly read or write could enjoy mutual exchanges of the spoken word for hours or days. Their little world was circumscribed, but they gained the ultimate from every experience. Today, with the television bringing the whole world into the living room, we are tongue-tied and our speech organs are virtually paralyzed. A local university is giving a course entitled, “How to be a good conversationalist.” We are no longer able to entertain; we have become a nation that must be entertained. We have lost our power of creativeness, spontaneity, and purposeful interest. The sense of humor has given way to the repetition of stale jokes of cheap cigar-smoking comedians, who derive an agonized living out of trying to make us laugh.

Again, our hearty foreparents engaged directly in their athletic events, simple as these were. While waiting their turn at the grist mill, there were foot races, jumping contests, weight lifting tests, or shooting matches. These were participation sports. Now, we are a nation of spectators, sitting in packed grandstands, munching peanuts, devouring wieners, imbibing soft drinks, and watching others exercise. How much has our civilization gained when thousands will jam a great stadium to see two trained gladiators beat each other into insensibility, and yell and scream with delight when gore spurts from a battered nose, or an eye goes shut from brutal blows? Has our leisure improved our family life? Has it made our home ties any stronger? Those who are inclined, in this sophisticated age, to look with a patronizing air upon the simple lives of their grandparents, need to recall the warning in Gray's Elegy in a Country Churchyard:

Let not ambition mock their useful toil,
Their homely joys and destiny obscure;
Nor grandeur hear with a disdainful smile
The short and simple annals of the poor.
The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Awaits alike the inevitable hour;
The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

There are indications that “the inevitable hour” may be much nearer than many think for our famed civilization, and the shadow on God’s dial may be further on its decline than we realize. Those who are students of the rise and fall of empires stare in grim fascination at the trickling sand in the hourglass of destiny. Those sands are running out. What factors, if any, at this late hour, can hold them back, and retain for our children's children, a world from which hope has not fled, and faith remains a vital force? We propose to state a few principles upon which, God willing, we shall elaborate in future issues. We present them now, merely that you may meditate upon their value, in advance of our application of them.

1. The only force in the universe capable of sustaining any nation indefinitely is moral power.

2. All power is of God, and the principles of his moral power were first revealed to chosen persons, and then exemplified in a person, the Word who was made flesh and dwelled among us.

3. A civilization is truly strong only to the extent that those who compose it exemplify the principles enunciated by Jesus of Nazareth, and it is weak to the extent that they pay lip service to the person of Jesus, and neglect to apply his principles in personal conduct.

4. A nation which is weakened by internal corruption cannot be preserved by the development of natural resources, emphasis upon scientific research, or increase of expenditure to maintain greater armed might. It can only be saved by repentance, which is the first requisite of moral re-armament.

5. The call to reform can effectively come only from those who have been transformed by the power of Jesus, through the Holy Spirit. Just as Jesus would have been but another ethical philosopher except for the cross, so those who have not personally experienced their own Gethsemane and Golgotha, can never exert a power calculated to transform those whom they touch. It is only the crucified life which can lead to the Crucified One.

6. The world must be preserved by salt. This is God's decree. There is no alternative. "Ye are the salt of the earth, but if the salt loses its strength, how can the earth be preserved?" Before we can salt the earth, we must restore the strength, or preservative power, to the salt. That is our real problem today, and our major consideration.

7. When the preservative power is present, to be effective the salt must work in united effort. As one grain of salt, isolated and alone, would be ineffective to preserve a body, so our strength must be exerted in a fellowship, and such fellowship to be truly efficacious, must include and make use of all the strength of all the salt.

8. The salt must come into contact with that which it is to affect or influence. Just as salt in a shaker may maintain its identity and yet be worthless because it does not accomplish its mission, so disciples of Jesus may remain aloof from the world of mankind. The purpose of salt is to lose itself in service to that which it seeks to preserve. When the church becomes introverted, it is concerned with strengthening itself in faith and becoming a respected community organization, and it always ends up by worshiping itself. The world then becomes ignorant of the church, because the church is ignorant of the world. (Please read the forthcoming article in our next issue, entitled, "Sunset in the West.")

Churches of God

Mission Messenger (February 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

“For ye, brethren, became followers of the churches of God which . . . are in Christ Jesus” (2 Thess. 2:14). What is the nature of those who become followers of the churches of God which are in Christ Jesus? We submit the following for your study.

1. They are catholic. This word means “universal.” The commission of Jesus to his ambassadors was to “go into all the world.” They were to preach the gospel to every creature. I am catholic, but not a member of the Roman Catholic Church.

2. They are baptists. A baptist is one who baptizes. In current parlance it refers to one who regards immersion as scriptural baptism. I qualify on both counts, so I am a baptist, but I am not a member of The Baptist Church.

3. They are methodists. The work of God should be carried on systematically and orderly, that is methodically. Paul rejoiced at the “order and steadfastness of faith” (Col. 2:5). I am a methodist, but not a member of The Methodist Church.

4. They are presbyterian. This indicates rule by a body of elders. Timothy was ordained by a presbytery (1 Tim. 4:14). I am a presbyterian, but not a member of The Presbyterian Church.

5. They are episcopal. This signifies government by bishops. The church at Philippi had bishops and deacons (Phil. 1:1). I am episcopal, but not a member of The Episcopal Church.

6. They are congregationalists. This indicates recognition of the autonomy of the local church, as opposed to a central governing board. I am a congregationalist, but not a member of The Congregational Church.

7. They are friends. Jesus said, “I have called you friends” (John 15:15). I am a friend, but not a member of The Friends Church.

8. They are disciples. A disciple is a learner. It was the disciples who met on the first day of the week to break bread. I am a disciple, but not a member of The Disciples Church.

9. They are brethren. Jesus said, “All ye are brethren” (Matt. 23:8). I am one of the brethren, but not a member of The Church of the Brethren.

10. They are christians. “The disciples were called Christians” (Acts 11:26). I am one of these, but am not a member of The Christian Church.

11. They are united brethren. They are obligated to guard the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. I am united with all of the brethren in Christ, but am not a member of The United Brethren Church.

12. They are an assembly of God. The word ekklesia can be translated “assembly” as justifiably as it can be translated “church” (Cp. Acts 19:32, 39, 41). I am in the assembly of God, but am not a member of The Assembly of God Church.

In short, I am not a member of any religious party. I am opposed to the party spirit which appropriates scriptural terms and makes a sectarian usage of them. The Brethren are distinguished from Friends, and Disciples from Congregationalists. The height of such folly is seen when a partisan group calls itself United Brethren to segregate itself from Brethren, Friends, and Disciples. The very name “United Brethren” is employed to signify a division.

I am in the church of the firstborn (Heb. 12:23), but am not a member of The Church of the Firstborn, a modern sect. I am in “the church of God” (1 Cor. 1:2) but am not a member of The Church of God, a modern sect. I am in “the churches of God which are in Christ Jesus” (1 Thess. 2:14), but am not a member of The Church of God in Christ, a modern sect. I am in the churches of Christ (Rom. 16:16), but hold no brief for The Church of Christ. There are modern parties designating themselves: The Church of God, The Church of the Firstborn, The Church of Christ, and The Church of God in Christ. One such usage is just as scriptural as another, and just as unscriptural when used in a partisan sense. It is wrong to take any scriptural term and elevate it as a party title to exclusion of other terms given by the Holy Spirit of God.

I am a member of the church. It is the church of God, the body of Christ, the flock of God, the church of Christ, the kingdom of heaven, the church of the first-born, the temple of God, the church of God in Christ, the family of God, and the assembly of God. It is composed of brethren, saints, disciples, Christians and friends. Every saved person on earth is in it. It is not a party. It is not a conglomeration of parties. There may be, and no doubt are, some in every religious party who are in it. They should leave these parties, and become “followers of the churches of God which are in Christ Jesus.”

Our Position

Mission Messenger (February 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

We are subjected to constant censure because we grant so much space to brethren who are critical of our position. While some have stopped their subscriptions because of what we write, more have quit reading the paper because so much of it is given over to opposing brethren, whose writings, they say, are not edifying. We are unmoved in policy by these demonstrations of party spirit. All sides of an issue must be heard. None of us is perfect, none know all there is to know. We must learn from each other, and we can learn more from those who disagree, than from those who agree with us.

We need to be fair, courteous, kindly affectioned to each other, forbearing one another in love. I have reached that state of spiritual maturity where I can love all of the brethren, even those in radical disagreement with my views. I do not base my love or fellowship upon absolute conformity to my personal ideas, so I shall not seek to harm, undermine, or in any manner hinder any one who does not see things like I do. I will discuss our points of difference, and set forth my position. If he cannot subscribe to it, I shall not hate him because he cannot, but by love, serve him in whatever capacity I may.

We have been victims of the party spirit so long, that when brethren state opposite views, we immediately jump to the conclusion that we must side with one or the other. There is not a congregation on this earth where all the members see everything alike. Yet they work together! Why not allow those who write to this paper the same leniency which you accord your own congregation? It is not necessary that you “take sides” with any writer, certainly not with the editor. It would be dangerous for you to do so with the latter, because if I learn I am wrong, I will acknowledge it, and adopt the truth, regardless of what others may do or say, so you might be left in the lurch!

I have resolved not to be a religious partisan! This is not a party journal. We are thankful when brethren see things as we do, we love those who do not just as much as ever. We need to grow up in Christ Jesus, get rid of our false standards, and learn that the great principles we hold in common are superior to the things on which we differ. In any event, love will be the only solution to our problems!

Sunset in the West

Mission Messenger (March 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

The Saturday Evening Post is running a series of articles by great contemporary thinkers under the heading “Adventures of the Mind.” Number eleven in the series was written by Miss Edith Hamilton, on “The Lessons of the Past.” The author is 91 years old. She is an outstanding authority on the Graeco-Roman civilization. Her article should be read by every serious American. Think about these statements:

Today we are facing a future more strange and untried than any other generation has faced . . . and the possibilities of destruction are immeasurably greater than ever. . . . We have a great civilization to save— or to lose. The greatest civilization before ours was the Greek. They challenge us and we need the challenge. They, too, lived in a dangerous world. They were a little, highly civilized people, the only civilized people in the west, surrounded by barbarous tribes and with the greatest Asiatic power, Persia, always threatening them. In the end they succumbed, but the reason they did so was not that the enemies outside were so strong, but that their own strength, their spiritual strength, had given away.

Miss Hamilton elaborates upon these ideas in the September 27, 1958 edition of the Post, in these words:

A slackness and softness finally came over them to their ruin. In the end, more than they wanted freedom, they wanted security, a comfortable life, and they lost all—security and comfort and freedom. Is not that a challenge to us? Is it not true that into our education have come a slackness and a softness? Is hard effort prominent? The world of thought can be entered in no other way. Are we not growing slack and soft in our political life? When the Athenians finally wanted not to give to the state, but the state to give to them, when the freedom they wished most for was freedom from responsibility, then Athens ceased to be free and was never free again. Is not that a challenge?

It is a sobering thought that every factor which aided in the downfall of Greek civilization is present, and predominantly so, in our present civilization. All history points to the fact that we are approaching the sunset of our national existence. The orb of national greatness has passed its meridian and the decline is steady and observable. Will some future Gibbon write, “The Decline and Fall of the American Nation?” Is the approaching darkness inevitable? Can we not stay the sun in its relentless march across the political heavens? There is one ray of hope. When God’s ancient people were engaged in a fierce struggle against an implacable foe, the intrepid Joshua called out for the sun and moon to stand still. The sun stood still in the midst of heaven and did not go down for a whole day. “And there was no day like that before it or after it, that the Lord hearkened unto the voice of man: for the Lord fought for Israel” (Josh. 10:14). Perhaps if we would earnestly implore God, he might lengthen the day of our national existence, and stay the declining sun.

On the other hand, our luxurious way of life may have ruined our hearts for a restoration of the saving quality so needful in these days. Bishop Stephen Fielding Bayne, of the Episcopal diocese of Olympia, Washington, said, as quoted in Time, Sept. 29, 1958:

The only trouble with our intellectual habit of likening our times to the decadent Roman Empire and the challenge of the barbarians is that in the earlier case there was a vital, revolutionary new leaven at work . . . Whether Christianity can once again perform that function remains to be seen. To do so would require a pretty radical rebirth of Christian thought, of which I wish I could see more signs. Perhaps we may find such a rebirth in the remembrance of the Birth, that timeless fact about God which did once turn the world upside down. But we shall have to separate the birth from the Cadillacs and the crystal decanters and the ladies' electric shavers.

The luxuries of life and the desire for ease and security have taken their toll and sapped the strength of our moral fiber. This nation was born of hardship and sacrifice. Our fathers turned their backs upon the easy way of life and faced the wilderness and its terrors unafraid. Their sinews toughened and their muscles hardened as they cleared the forest, hewed the logs, and erected their rude cabins. They knew the burning heat of summer, the biting cold of winter, the lashing of the storm, and the cruelty of drifting snow and blizzard. They had to be men of ingenuity and inventive bent. They learned the need of cooperative effort at husking bees and log raisings. They were forced to adapt themselves to changing fortunes of life, and to accept with stoical calm the suffering which their way of life entailed.

It was these pioneers who, amidst privations we have never known, hammered out on the anvil of history, the principles which made this nation great. They lived close to nature. They gauged time daily by the shadow cast by the sun, they anticipated the changing seasons by the flight of migratory birds, and by the activities of the furry creatures of the forest. They learned to nourish themselves upon the breast of mother earth, and revered the soil, until their bodies were finally planted in it and went back to the elements from which they sprang. Their hands were calloused, their faces tanned like leather, and their step sprightly alert. It was from nature they learned the blessings of contentment and serenity.

The strength of a nation is not often found in cities where vice stalks openly, blighting what it looks upon; and where graft rules as king. In such crowded areas where the poverty stricken huddle in filthy, vermin-infested slums; where children grow up on dirty streets; where all too often clever politicians manipulate the citizens like pawns to achieve their nefarious ends; dishonesty is bred by greed, and cleverness is mistaken for success. Here, where great factories belch out their corrosive smoke, men seem to live always under a cloud of artificiality. Life itself becomes a struggle, the spirit is worn raw by contact with the abrasives of profanity and obscenity. Morality erodes under the constant battering of open temptation. The spiritual background of a nation are its tillers of the soil, whose simple lives and unrelenting toil build stout hearts and stalwart bodies. There can be no adequate substitute for these. Goldsmith aptly states it:

Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,

Where wealth accumulates, and men decay.

Princes and lords may flourish or may fade —

A breath can make them as a breath has made;

But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,

When once destroyed, can never be supplied.

One thing which hastened the downfall of Rome was the destruction of small farms, and the enforced transfer of their owners to the cities. The extensive foreign conquests brought more than a million slaves into Italy. Some of the patricians owned hundreds of these hapless victims. To furnish employment and to exploit their bodies for gain, they began to purchase whole sections of rural areas. The price of land increased to such proportions that the small owners could not resist the offers made for their holdings. The result was that the land, which had long been the proud possession of an independent family, passed into the hands of those who farmed an entire district on a mass production basis.

The rural folk, dispossessed by financial pressure, moved into great urban centers. They were not adapted to city life, and soon, having spent what they had received for their farms, they were reduced to living in squalor. Foreign slave labor had absorbed available gainful employment, and those who once labored to wrest a living from the soil, and who had gazed with pride upon green fields, now congregated daily in public parks and forums. Here they drifted about aimlessly, watching jugglers, listening to mountebanks and charlatans. Soon they began to clamor for food, and gathering themselves into mobs they stormed the storehouses. Robbery and pillaging increased in volume, and the ratio of crime began to climb in a dizzy spiral. The government sought to appease the hungry, distraught and unkempt rabble by inaugurating a system of public doles and providing for free entertainment and spectacles.

The dole system destroyed the shreds of independence and self-respect which remained. Those who once labored to feed the nation by honest sweat in the fields, now came to believe that the nation existed to feed them, and on the days when the pittance was dealt out they pushed and shoved in screaming, shouting disarray, seeking to be foremost in receiving the grain allotment. They filled the arena in order to see others present performances, many of which were satirical in tendency, and gradually cynicism and skepticism became the order of the day. The attendant train of immoralities and vicious actions sapped the moral and spiritual stamina of the people, and decay ate like dry rot at the core of national existence. The nation was weighed in the balances and found wanting, and the sun of destiny was eclipsed by the hordes of daring, adventurous, hardy barbarians who swept down like an engulfing tidal wave from the northern forests.

One would be blind indeed who cannot see the great transformation in our own national character. Technology has provided for the invention of farm machines which now do the work formerly requiring scores of men. But the investment in machinery demands a sufficient acreage to warrant its purchase and maintenance. This means consolidation of farms in a given area. The little farmer is caught between the crushing jaws of a vise. He cannot afford to pay for expensive machines and he cannot continue to meet competition without them. The lure of regular wages in the city acts as a siren to entice him away from his frugal life, and soon he joins the host of those who annually move away from soil to pavement. In many portions of our land, the empty farm houses with the sparrows flitting through their broken windows, stand as mute monuments to the era of change. Great syndicates purchase the land, and the owners live remote from it in the pampered luxury of the city. It is no longer a home. It is now merely another business enterprise, and the pride in green fields is a false pride, for it is but a symbol of wealth.

These transformations in our national life produce changes in the people. The struggle against adversity as well as the perversity of nature, breeds endurance. Facing storm and sleet in winter, toiling in the burning heat of summer, these produce ruggedness. City dwellers often become soft and flabby of body, though they may become hardened in spirit. Divorced from a life of wrestling with the caprices of the elements they lose the true spirit of adventure. It was a recognition of the dangers involved in such a type of life which prompted Theodore Roosevelt, in a speech entitled "The Strenuous Life," delivered in 1891, in Chicago, to say:

Our country calls not for the life of ease, but for the life of strenuous endeavor. The twentieth century looms before us big with the fate of many nations. If we stand idly by, if we seek merely swollen, slothful ease, and ignoble peace, if we shrink from the hard contests where men must win at hazard of their lives and at the risk of all they hold dear, then the bolder and stronger peoples will pass us by and will win for themselves the domination of the world. Let us therefore boldly face the life of strife, resolute to do our duty well and manfully; resolute to uphold righteousness by deed and by word; resolute to be honest and brave, to serve high ideals, yet to use practical methods.

What can the concerned ones do? We cannot halt the changing pattern. The tide will continue to flow from rural toward urban centers. In 1910, one in every three Americans lived on a farm; in 1950, one in six; in 1958, only one in eight. Our present population is near 175,500,000. Of this number, 20,800,000 are on farms. In 1950, with a population of 151,000,000 the rural dwellers numbered 25,000,000. This is a 17 per cent change in eight years. These are startling figures! They call for complete re-adjustment of approach, if Christianity is to become effective in our culture. Humbly do we offer the following suggestions:

1. We should face the situation unafraid. The Christian religion was revealed to meet the needs of all men, wherever they are. It is not a rural religion, nor a city religion. The apostles went directly to the great commercial marts of their day. The first century after the advent of the Messiah provides a drama of the conquest by the Crucified One in Corinth, Ephesus, Antioch and Rome—mighty centers of polyglot population, seething with idolatry and vice.

2. We should recapture the spirit of cooperation and helpfulness which was the bulwark of the primitive agrarian society in our country. We cannot gather for log raisings or husking bees. But a group can get together on Saturday and help a member paint his house, then repeat the act at the home of another on the following Saturday. The wives can each furnish a covered dish, and all can eat together. There is a peculiar value in breaking bread together, found in no other mutual act. Although the first community of Christ continued daily in the temple, they broke bread from house to house and “ate their food with gladness and singleness of heart.” To make the leaven work, we must get it out of cathedrals and meetinghouses and into homes.

3. The pioneers were forced to adopt a sharing policy. They shared danger, deprivation and disaster. To survive they also had to work together. If one broke an arm or leg, the neighbors came on an appointed day, and did the plowing or harvested his crop. The concerned ones, who are interested in building a better world, might well gather at the home of a widow, or an elderly couple, clean up the yard, repair the house, and paper the rooms. The act of sharing will reflect in an increased sense of fellowship with God and each other. It is possible that “social security” has brought material security at the expense of real social welfare.

4. Those who live in certain general areas might meet for an evening of scripture reading and prayer each week in the home of one of the concerned ones. Some urban congregations should dispense with “midweek meetings” which are often mere formalities carried out with habitual regularity, and with little genuine warmth, and substitute home meetings in various districts. Members will work all day, face harassing traffic conditions getting home, gulp down a few bites of food, and drive additional miles to get to a church building, passing en route hundreds in the neighborhood of their homes, who are beset with doubts and fears, and who need the comfort of scriptural truth and companionship with others. Home meetings ought not to be elaborate affairs.

They ought to be sharing experiences. They might consist merely of reading the scriptures, with each person participating, then prayers led by all who feel a burden of heart. These prayers should be offered while kneeling. If discussions of the Bible passages are engaged in, it should be without one recognized as a teacher, while the others constitute an audience, but rather a visiting with each other as neighbors, with the sacred scriptures as the theme.

5. The idea of “leaven consciousness” needs to be recaptured. Primitive saints recognized a personal covenant relationship to God. They had not been urged to “unite with the church” but to accept and recognize Jesus, whom God raised up. As witnesses of His, they were to affect and influence all whom they contacted. Quietly and surely, as leaven works in the dough, they worked in the social structure about them, for its good. Only by this means can a corrupt modern world be once again brought to its knees in obeisance before the King of kings. It can never be done by hiring preachers, holding meetings, putting on advertising campaigns. It is God’s plan that it be done through the ministrations of a priesthood of all believers.

The sun of western civilization is sinking. Already the shadows grow long over the land. The red and purple streamers of the dying orb reach like fiery fingers across the horizon. Darkness is coming. The specters of gloom are awaiting. Watchman, what of the night? Is there a Joshua, who will rise up as God’s leader for this day, and halt the sun in the heavens, and cause the moon to stand still? The skeleton hand of fate reaches out its bony fingers to crush all we hold dear. What are you doing to stay that fate? Are you one of the “concerned ones”? We urge you to read our next article, “The Sword of Damocles.”

Grace and Faith

Mission Messenger (March 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

“For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men” (Titus 2:11).

Salvation is by the grace of God. Without such grace salvation would not be obtainable. But that grace has appeared, and the offer of salvation has been made universally.

The grace of God must confer this salvation upon men, either conditionally or unconditionally. If it is conferred unconditionally, all men must be saved, and universalism is true. But if universalism is true, the Bible which reveals the grace of God is in error, for it teaches that some will be damned.

If the Bible is true, salvation is offered conditionally, and to be saved it is required that man determine the conditions specified by grace and comply with them.

That the salvation offered by grace is conditional, is revealed in Ephesians 2:8, 9: “For by grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast.”

Salvation is not of ourselves. If so, it could not be of grace. If a man merited or deserved salvation, to the extent of such merit, it would not, and could not be of grace. But salvation is predicated upon the unlimited, unrestricted grace of God, therefore, salvation is a gift of God. Being a gift, it cannot be earned, and thus is not of works. There is no merit in works as such to procure salvation. If such merit existed one could boast of his efforts and their results. “To him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt” (Rom. 4:4). God is not in debt to us, and we cannot do enough works to put him in debt.

There are two sides to salvation— the divine and human. The divine part is expressed by the word grace. The human part is expressed by the word faith. These are universally inclusive of their respective areas.

Whatever was required on the part of heaven to achieve our salvation, was, therefore, an expression, or manifestation of grace. It was not grace and something else, but grace expressed through this means. In Titus 3:5, we read, “According to his mercy he saved us.” In Romans 5:9, we learn that we are justified by his blood; in Romans 5:10, that we are saved by his life. Acts 4:12 informs us that we are saved by the name of Christ, while Romans 1:16 informs us the gospel is the power of God unto salvation.

These are not separate from, additional to, or opposed to salvation by grace. They are expressions of grace, by which it reigns through righteousness, unto eternal life, by Jesus Christ our Lord (Rom. 5:21). Since salvation is said to be by grace, whatever was required of God to provide salvation is merely an expression of grace, and cannot be said to be in opposition to the doctrine of salvation by grace. On the divine side, we are saved by grace alone, but by grace expressed, manifested and perfected in our behalf through ordained channels.

On the human side, salvation is by faith. Whatever condition, therefore, is required of man to appropriate to himself the blessings of grace, is merely an expression of faith.

Such a condition is not something apart from, additional to, or opposed to faith, but is an expression of faith in harmony with the divine will.

There is only one thing which avails in Christ Jesus. It is faith which works by love. “For in Christ Jesus, neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but faith which worketh by love” (Gal. 5:6). The only thing that avails is faith. But to avail, faith must be properly activated (it must work) and motivated (by love). So any condition imposed by faith, or as a test of faith, is not salvation by works versus faith, but salvation by faith at work. We are saved, not by faith and works, but by faith which works!

Is there any condition or test established by grace for salvation from our past sins? If so, compliance therewith is not salvation by works, but salvation by faith— at work! Jesus said, “Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel unto every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned” (Mark 16:15, 16).

The grace of God that brings salvation has appeared to all men. The gospel of God’s grace is to be announced, therefore, to every creature, in all the world. That gospel authorizes baptism as a condition of salvation, by which faith expresses itself. The grand design of baptism, as it pertains to God, is the remission of sins; that is, it is to place man in a position where God’s grace can be applied to the individual in a pardoning act. As pertains to man, the design is to furnish a test of his faith, to see if it is of an availing quality, if it works by love!

Baptism, then, is a condition of salvation, because it is a divinely authorized ordinance by which faith demonstrates or manifests itself. He who is baptized under the gospel seeks not to be saved by works, but by faith which works by love. Paul was baptized to wash away his sins (Acts 22:16). He declares he was saved by grace, not according to works. “According to the power of God, who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace” (2 Tim. 1:8, 9). To be immersed on this basis is not an attempt to be saved by works, but by faith manifested and perfected. Since salvation is said to be by faith, whatever is required of man to obtain salvation is merely an expression of faith, and cannot be said to be in addition to, or a substitution for faith. In this sense, it may be said man is saved by faith alone, but it is faith expressed, demonstrated and manifested, as well as perfected.

Is this in opposition to James 2:14-26? Not at all. The question under discussion by James is not whether we are saved by works, but if we can be saved by faith which does not work, that is, by faith which is not demonstrated or perfected. Note his proposal. “A man may say, Thou hast faith and I have works: show me thy faith without thy works and I will show thee my faith by my works.” What is to be shown? Works? No! I will show my faith—faith manifested by works.

Consider the example of Abraham. “Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar? Seest thou how faith wrought with works, and by works was faith made perfect?” What was perfected? Was it works? No, it was faith, perfected by works.

Romans 4:2 declares, “For if Abraham was justified by works, he hath whereof to glory, but not before God.” There is no contradiction. Paul, as the context shows, deals with works as deeds of merit, the performance of which would place God in debt to us. There is no merit in works as such. They cannot save us, but we cannot be saved without them. James deals with works as a demonstration of faith (“I will show my faith by my works”) and as a perfecting agent of faith (“By works was faith made perfect”).

Works sustain the same relationship to faith as my spirit does to my body. It does not form a separate or additional man. It only animates my body, making it a living something. Without it, the body is helpless, powerless and unavailing. The body of Adam existed before the spirit entered into it, but it was cold, lifeless, inanimate and useless. We are not saved by righteous works, but by faith. Yet this faith must manifest itself in righteous works. “Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Spirit” (Titus 3:5). We are not saved because we work for God; we work for God because we are saved.

“For by grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast.”

Straws in the Wind

Mission Messenger (March 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

In Old Paths Advocate, J. Ervin Waters reports an intensive study at Wichita Falls, Texas. Brother Waters says, “God has raised up an army of young men of moral worth and high intelligence; young men who are not tradition bound and who are casting off the fears and prejudices of the past; young men who dare to think and who humbly are learning what the Spirit of Religion is.” If this estimate is correct we shall expect to see important changes in attitude among some who are allied with a very dogmatic and arbitrary faction of the disciple brotherhood. We commend those who are rising above the narrow party spirit.

J. D. Phillips, editor of The Truth, who also taught in the study, writes, “The purpose of the study was to learn, and not to legislate. . . . Everyone respected everyone else. God’s word was respected above everything else. . . . I think a long step in the right direction has been made; that the study will prove to be an epoch in the restoration of primitive, apostolic Christianity; all were interested in restoration, and restoration is the answer to most of our problems.” It is evident rifts were healed and breaches repaired, and while these brethren differ with me on a lot of things, they are my brethren, and I love them and rejoice with them.

The Word and Work, published by brethren who are premillennial in their views, contains an excellent article in the February issue, by E. L. Jorgenson, on "Division— Causing or Curing It." The same issue announces a lectureship program in which they will participate with brethren from the conservative Christian Churches. J. R. Clark writes, "These meetings . . . will serve as exploratory meetings to help us determine the extent of our differences and how to resolve them."

In the February 14 issue of Christian Standard is a notice of the North American Christian Convention, to be held at Atlanta, Georgia, June 24-28, with the theme "Christian Unity— Our Unchanging Plea." Again, I find myself in disagreement with many interpretations, opinions, views and practices, of all these, but they too are my brethren, and I am pleased they are discussing these vital questions.

Once I would have sneered at such meetings. I would have regarded all who participated as hobbyists or sectarians. The meeting would have been a gathering of the forces of Gog and Magog. Even those who attended casually would have been eyed with suspicion. I now know that I was the one who was sectarian in attitude. I was guilty of a work of the flesh, the sin of the party spirit. I was not righteous, but self-righteous. I shall not compromise my convictions, nor stultify my conscience, but I will love my brethren, all of them, and no one shall ever again make me afraid to do so. I shall not bow the knee to an unwritten creed. I shall not crucify those humble ones for whom Jesus died.

The party spirit will not expire easily. So long as brethren write about "converting" a brother who alters his views or perspective, it will still thrive. One writes in Old Paths Advocate, "We hope to convert some of the Sunday School and cups brethren before the meeting is over." Another southern journal reports, "We wish to recommend Brother Blank as a faithful gospel preacher. He was recently converted from the Christian Church." This is the language of the party. It makes no allowance for maturing ideas or ideals. It recognizes no one as being in Jesus who is not in the party. It is earthly, sensual, devilish. It is narrow, bigoted, and deplorable. If, through the grace of God, we come closer together, let us not gloat over converting each other to a partisan view, but let us glorify God that all of us are growing up in the Spirit.

The Sword of Damocles

Mission Messenger (April 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

About the time that Malachi wrote his prophetic words in Palestine, Dionysius became tyrant of Syracuse. A man of obscure parentage, his public life began as a humble clerk. By sheer energy and indomitable will he elevated himself in successive steps to a place of absolute power. Damocles, a fawning courtier and flatterer, sought to ingratiate himself into greater favor with the ruler, by delivering a speech which contained unrestrained reference to the happiness of being king. He was invited to be guest of honor at a sumptuous banquet, and was seated at the table in royal luxury. But while feasting on the delectable dainties, he was horror-stricken when he cast his eyes upward, and saw a sword suspended by a single hair over his head. Dionysius thus taught him that life is uncertain even at a time of greatest apparent security. The “sword of Damocles” has become a symbol of impending fate or dread tragedy which may strike at any moment.

Western man sits today at a table spread with the luxuries of life. The creative genius and technical skill of modern science have combined to lift his burdens and smooth his pathway through life. Mechanical servants whirl into obedience at the pressing of a button, to heat or cool his house, wash and dry his clothing, gather the dust from his floors, cleanse his dishes, and dispose of his garbage. Life is regulated by gadgets and thermostats, by buttons and automatic switches. He can say, as the man in the parable, “Soul, take thine ease, thou hast much goods laid up.” But the student of history cannot be at ease. He feels the cool breeze in his face, he hears the moaning of the wind, and looks for the gathering storm cloud of fury. There is the faint persistent whisper of impending disaster. The “sword of Damocles” is swaying gently back and forth above our heads.

Every previous civilization has gone down because it contained within itself the seeds of its own dissolution. There is but one power which can preserve a culture— moral force! Men tend to trust in scientific intellect, wealth of natural resources, and armed might, to save them. Yet nothing is more apparent than the wrecks of nations bestrewing the paths of history, and without single exception, every one of these believed that it was moulded by a superior race. Even the nation chosen by God to keep alive the concept of monotheism in a pagan and idolatrous world, had to be subjected to brutal treatment and exile, to purge out the dross. No such nation has ever believed its own prophets. A nation intoxicated with pride, is like a drunken man, unable to reason intelligibly. “They are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink. For the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes: the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath he covered. And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed . . .” (Isa. 29:9-11).

I accept the Bible as a revelation of God’s dealings with man. I am forced, therefore, to recognize that history repeats itself. “The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be” (Eccl. 1:9). Like causes produce like results. He, who ruled that in the natural realm, the tree should “yield fruit, whose seed was in itself, after his kind,” has ordained the same order in the moral realm. As a man reaps what he sows, so will a nation reap what it sows. Each successive culture that has been swept away has left the history of its decline and fall, and these accounts make our own responsibility greater. “Now these things were our example, to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as they also lusted.”

If “whatsoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning,” we must read what is written, and we must learn from it. Only a fool will refuse to read the danger signs along a road he has not traveled before. Let us trace the finger of God as it marked out the destruction of a people. Are we following in the track that ends in cultural oblivion? Will you get your own Bible, and read very carefully, Amos, chapter six? Do it now, and let’s think about it seriously.

Verse 1 implies the life of luxury and social ease. The people had implicit trust in their location, and regarded their position as one of world leadership. They were named “the chief of the nations.” They regarded themselves as racially superior to others and esteemed themselves better than kingdoms which they surveyed. Verse 3 shows that they refused the words of warning and “put far away the evil day.” Their philosophy was, “It can’t happen to us.” It was not possible for them to conceive how destruction could overtake them, seeing their greatness.

Verses 4 through 6 contain a description of “luxury’s vile contagion.” Indolence, banqueting, entertainment, and drinking — these constituted the daily round of life. The furniture which graced their dwellings was of the most expensive kind, rivalling that portrayed in American Home Magazine today. They pampered their jaded appetites with gourmet foods, the choicest cuts of lamb, and milk fed veal. Stretched lazily upon downy couches, they sang the popular songs of the day, and listened to their version of stereophonic music. They drank huge goblets of liquor and rubbed their soft, effeminate bodies with cosmetic preparations and fragrant unguents. But “they were not grieved for the affliction of Joseph.” The threatened ruin of the nation did not trouble them. They were members of the cult of the unconcerned. They were in a stupor of indifference. They were gorging themselves for God’s butchering day, like oxen in a fattening pen. Verse 14 declares, “Behold, I will raise up against you a nation . . . saith the Lord God of hosts, and they will afflict you.”

The moral status of a people can be determined by their regard for the person and property of others. In these areas we manifest our integrity or fidelity, or show our lack of it. One is impressed with the number of times the prophets associate stealing, bribery and adultery, as symptoms calling for punishment and overthrow of the social order. These strike at the very roots of national life. And western civilization, especially as exemplified in current American life, is threatened by the dry rot of these things, at its very roots.

Norman Jaspán Associates is an engineering firm in New York which specializes in analysis of “sick businesses.” The president of this firm said recently that American business is being robbed of a billion dollars per year, that four million dollars is taken each day by employees, in one form or another.

“Not all of this haul is in the form of cash, of course. Employees, supervisors and executives are stealing thousands upon thousands of dollars a day in the form of time, merchandise, services, bribes, kickbacks, and dishonesties of every description.”

After asserting that women are as guilty as men, although stealing from different motives, the investigator points out the effect of such action upon our economic status.

“The eventual burden of all this dishonesty is borne by the consumer— you and me. If you are one of the millions of Americans who own stock, or whose pension plans or insurance companies own stock, then employee dishonesty cuts into your profits and dividends. Even, as a simple consumer, it is you who has to make up all this swindling by paying higher prices for everything you buy— whether it is a jar of jam, a new car or a winter overcoat. In fact I earnestly believe that if the blight of dishonesty could be removed from American business, the overall level of prices could be reduced as much as 15 per cent.”

We cannot overlook the factor of price, but I am more deeply concerned about these things as symptoms of a sick world, than about their effect upon pocketbooks and paychecks of consumers. When confidence erodes, and persons regard each other only as potential “meal tickets” or as sources of supply for greedy and covetous hearts, our social fabric will be worn thin. The acquisition of property is not morally wrong of itself. The method of acquiring or the motive for doing so, may be wrong. The revelation of God says, “Let him that stole steal no more, but rather let him labor, working with his hands the thing that is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth” (Eph. 4:28). Here are two methods of acquisition: stealing and laboring. One works evil, the other works good. One takes from another what he needs, the other gives to meet the needs of another. A national existence based upon greed and covetousness must die of its own hands. It is committing suicide! God’s attitude toward unjust acquisition of material things can best be estimated by consideration of other things which he places in the same category. “Will you steal, murder, and commit adultery?” (Jer. 7:9). “By swearing, and lying, and killing, and stealing, and committing adultery, they break out” (Hosea 4:2).

A prominent feature in the downfall of every previous civilization has been the inordinate emphasis placed upon sex. So general is the recognition of moral responsibility in this realm, that we tend to think of immorality only in connection with sexual abuses. This is a sad and dangerous mistake. The moral life extends far beyond the bounds of sex restraints. Wollastan, in his Religion of Nature Delineated, says, “Moral good and evil consist in a conformity or disagreement with truth, in treating every thing as being what it is.” Dr. Paley, in his Moral and Political Philosophy writes, “Every duty is a duty towards God, since it is his will which makes it a duty.” It is an indication of faulty reasoning to limit the word “moral” to one phase of conduct. A man who never violates a law related to sex, may still be immoral.

Chastity, as a way of life, has been generally disregarded in every decadent civilization. It is a question whether the decay of civilization is produced by such rejection, or if the opposite is the case. It is probably nearer the truth to say that sexual corruption is both a result and a cause. It receives impetus from a rotting civilization, then like an active cancer, contributes further to the decay. Why are proper relationships between men and women in this area so vital to civilization? Let me suggest a few reasons. Sexual relationships are directly connected with the source and inception of human life, and thus, with the perpetuity of the race. They constitute the foundation of the home which is the basic unit of our society. They contribute to the enrichment and ennoblement of the arts by which a culture finds aesthetic expression. They make possible the ultimate physical manifestation of unselfishness and love for another, with the consequent recognition of mutual dependency. "It is not good for man that he should be alone."

Polluting the fountain of these blessings poisons the stream from which society must drink. That which was ordained to life, thus produces death. Sex, like acquisition of property, is not wrong of itself. Actually, society requires both for its continuance. One fulfills the instinct of preservation, the other satisfies the acquisitive instinct. Both are directly related to our desire to continue life on earth, coupled with the recognition that death makes this personally impossible. We beget children, and accumulate property which we bequeath to them, that our light may not be extinguished by the snuffdish of death. Thus, sex is merely a means to an end. When it becomes the end to be sought, or the goal to be attained, regardless of the means used, man drops to the animal level, and sins— and in this state sex never satisfies!

We do our children a grave injury when we give them an unhealthy attitude toward sex. That which was ordained by the Creator as an expression of our noblest instinct, should not be regarded as debased, or degrading. Men may degrade it by their abuse, but such abuse serves only to contrast with its pure use. Sex is only one facet of life. It is not a pattern for life, but one thread in the pattern. Without that thread the pattern would not be so beautiful, but made from only that one thread, it would not be a pattern. It is not sex, but the absurd and foolish emphasis upon it which marks the decadence of a civilization. That emphasis is everywhere prevalent in our current society.

The advertisements on our billboards, and in our journals, are subtle in their allurement of the carnal appetite; the pornographic and indecent materials in some magazines and books is more blatant in pandering to the flesh. Even the names given to perfumes and cosmetics are chosen because of their relation to sex appeal. The exposure of the human body in modern dress, or undress, is indicative of the nakedness which was characteristic of Greece before her departure. The sex standard of a nation is not maintained by the men, but by the women. When the women become coarse, immodest, cheap, and indifferent, they are sowing the seed which will some day make their children, or their children's children, the victims of rapists and butchers. Thus it has ever been, thus it ever shall be! "Hear the word of the Lord, O ye women, and let your ear receive the word of his mouth, and teach your daughters wailing, and every one her neighbor lamentation. For death is come up into our windows, and is entered into our palaces, to cut off the children from without, and the young men from the streets. Speak, Thus saith the Lord, even the carcasses of men shall fall as dung upon the open field, and as the handful after the harvestman, and none shall gather them" (Jer. 9:20-22).

In our nation the rise of the divorce rate is a cause for sober concern. When marriage is regarded as a mere experiment or trial, and divorce is looked upon as a convenient way out, we are on our way down. This is not to say that divorce is never warranted, but certainly it should not be glamorized or glorified. At its best it is a symbol of failure, an open testimony to the world that two people have failed in a sacred relationship to which they were mutually pledged, in the presence of God, to remain true until death separated them. At its worst, it is frequently the doorway to successive failures, and the excuse for polygamy in sequence. Divorce is not a normal termination for marriage, as is death. It is abnormal, and an evil. It is not necessarily a sin in each individual case, but it is an evil, and no evil should be made easy, or treated lightly.

We must face up to the fact, stark and grim with possibilities, that we live in a sick world. We are in the critical ward. No lighthearted joking can eliminate the fact that over our heads, like the “sword of Damocles” hangs the threat of extinction to our way of life. There is rottenness in the marrow of the bones of western civilization. Our hope of survival depends upon those who are “the salt of the earth” that is, upon “the concerned ones.” These are the spiritually minded as opposed to those who are carnally minded. Unfortunately, the “concerned ones” have been separated, segregated, divided and rent into conflicting camps, by partisan creeds. They have dissipated their energies in antagonism against each other, and have been taught to hate, rather than to love each other.

What can these do now to offset impending disaster. Certainly the situation in which they find themselves is not ideal. There is suspicion and doubt toward each other. But we must do something, and we cannot wait to begin, until all things are in an ideal state. Very humbly do we propose the following simple steps which will help to restore some of the savour to the salt. God is long-suffering. He will not look with disdain upon the contrite heart.

1. We must develop an unyielding personal code of honesty and integrity. If we shortchange a man a few cents, we should make every effort to get the money back to him, small as the amount may be. If we are overpaid, we must return the overplus, regardless of the inconvenience to ourselves. We must not allow ourselves to profit because another has unwittingly erred. We must cultivate a sensitive conscience.

2. Young men and women should practice chastity, not because it is a good or safe policy, but because it is the will of God. “For this is the will of God, even your sanctification, that ye should abstain from fornication.” Sanctification and fornication are at opposite poles in the moral universe. The fact that man has used his scientific ingenuity to devise means of avoiding conception, does not make the sin of fornication less reprehensible, any more than safe-cracking becomes a virtue because the burglar wears gloves to escape detection.

We should rally the forces of “the concerned ones” to sweep the pornography and sensuality from the news stands and book displays. This is a problem which concerns us all as Americans, and on it we should work in unison, regardless of our differences in religious or doctrinal concepts.

3. Those who are married should make their marriage “work.” They are living under solemn pledge to do so. God will hold him accountable who breaks his promise, or who puts a strain on the tie that binds, by his attitude. Marriages are not made in heaven, but marriage is ordained by heaven. Husbands and wives should pray together, and be willing to confess and to forgive shortcomings. We need the example of persons firmly and indissolubly joined in wedlock, who demonstrate there is happiness and joy in the good life. One such example in a community is worth a dozen sermons.

4. Women who are concerned should make a resolution now to dress modestly from now on. Christian women should set the fashion, not be blindly led by the fashions of this world. Those who may have unconsciously generated lust in others by their abbreviated attire, should repent, confess privately to God the sin of their false pride and love for popularity, and go now and dispose of their scanty, form-revealing garments, and not be guilty of wearing such again. We face dangerous times and we need to take drastic means to save our culture.

We must find a solution, or perish! The salt must regain its saving power, or we are doomed. If you have never been concerned before, please become so now, before the keen blade of the sword descends and the blackness of darkness throttles our last hope of survival. Read our article next month titled, “Red Sky At Morn!”

Acceptable Unto God

Mission Messenger (April 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

One of the tendencies of the mind of man is extremism. Only a remnant of those who think seem capable of exercising their mental faculties upon the varied moral and spiritual aspects in such fashion as to comprehend them in all of their proper relationships. Intellectually, man is a product at education. He is a reflection of what he has been taught. His mind acts upon impressions received from without and these are woven into a pattern of thought. It is difficult to view any subject objectively. We tend to look at everything from a personal slant. As a result our outlook may be biased.

Since all of us have certain prejudices, and none of us, being finite, are wholly free from distorted opinions, it is no cause for wonder that equally sincere people are frequently poles apart in some of their conclusions. This does not justify such conclusions. It only serves to explain their origin. All of the conclusions may be erroneous. Most of us like to feel that our own motives and attitudes are of the highest order. We tend to think disparagingly of all who differ. We credit them with insincerity and lack of integrity. But none of us have perfect knowledge and all of us are inclined to defend what we have always taught, and to question the intelligence of any person who disagrees with us.

In the spiritual realm, for instance, there are those who disregard the value and authority of positive ordinances, and who elevate the grace of God to such a degree as to make it appear ungodly for Him to require obedience of man as a requisite to the personal bestowal of that grace. At the same time, others elevate the positive ordinances to such a place as to render the attribute of mercy a useless facet of God's character. The first become unsafe theorists; the latter unwise legalists. One seeks to loose man from all restraint; the other to bind God with the same law which he gave to bind us. Both are equally dangerous as leaders in the realm of religious thought, but I shall deal with the latter in this article.

In doing so, I am not minimizing any requirement of God. One of the greatest of my discoveries in the sacred scriptures has been the fact that God has chosen in all ages to make His blessings available to man through positive ordinances. Why he chose this manner I do not know, but the fact that He did so, argues that it is superior to every other means, and any other method is, therefore, inferior. To speak slightly of any ordinance of God would be to sit in judgment upon the divine wisdom.

It would be folly for one who reveres God and loves His own soul to seek to soften God's requirements. What would one gain by broadening his personal concept to include other men in a fellowship, if by doing so, he excluded God and Christ? Can any sane man who loves his children and his children's children, deliberately plot a course which would destroy their souls and damn his own? Our only aim should be to seek for truth. It is the summum bonum of all research. Having found it, we must be willing to purchase it as "the pearl of great price." Truth is never cheap! "Buy the truth and sell it not," said the wise monarch of Israel. What I say on this subject, as well as what I write on any other, I offer because I believe it is the truth. I may be mistaken in what constitutes truth, but if so, it is a sin of the mind and not the heart, for if I know my heart, I love the truth and want it. I am not one whit concerned about being consistent with my past teachings, nor of being in agreement with the present teaching of any one else, singly or in a group, if such consistency and agreement comes at the forfeiture of truth and freedom. I am interested in what constitutes truth!

In that vein, let us enquire concerning the basis of God's dealings with man. Are we judged by Him on the amount of our knowledge and understanding, or upon our affection for Him and our attitude toward His will? If upon the first, how much knowledge of His revelation must I have at a given time to be sure I am in His favor? Can I ever have any assurance that I am accepted of Him? Is it not possible that there is one thing more I ought to know today which I do not know, or one more passage I ought to understand which I am not able to explain? If my acceptability depends upon my love for God and my willingness to learn of Him, because I love Him, then I may know very little, and I may be frail, weak and ignorant, and still He will not cast me out. It is a common thing for men to judge others on the basis of knowledge, using their own personal attainment as the standard. You must understand all they understand, in just the way they understand it, and if you do not have the knowledge they possess, they will consign you to condemnation. But is that God's basis of judgment?

Here is one scripture for your serious study. "If any man think that he knoweth anything, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know. But if any man love God, the same is known of him" (1 Cor. 8:2, 3). This teaches us that God's recognition of us is not based upon our degree of knowledge, which is imperfect, but upon our love for Him. A man who loves God a lot, but has little knowledge, is better off than one who knows a lot but loves God but little. You may say that one who loves God a great deal will learn as much as possible about His will. That is true, but learning is a slow and tedious process. All of us have different intellectual capacities. All come from different backgrounds and environments. Many of us have much more to unlearn than others, before we can begin to learn. But it is our love that counts, and not our present understanding. Perfect knowledge without love would avail nothing! “Though I understand all mysteries and all knowledge, and have not love, I am nothing.” Love with little knowledge may qualify for God’s acceptance when all knowledge with little love would not.

Does God, who knows the heart, credit us with what we would do if we had the opportunity? Jesus said, “I say to you that every one who looks at a woman lustfully has already committed adultery with her in his heart.” This demonstrates there is sin in spirit when opportunity for the act is lacking. Does love for God produce the same effect of righteousness? “As a hart longs for flowing streams, so longs my soul for thee, O God. My soul thirsts for God, for the living God” (Psalm 42:1, 2). If lust for a woman can become so intense that one commits adultery in his heart who may never have opportunity to do so in fact, can love for God become so intense that one will obey in heart what he might never have opportunity to do in fact? The only thing which would keep the panting deer from quenching its thirst at the stream would be lack of opportunity. May the thirsty soul be in the same state?

True, Jesus declared, “If you love me, you will keep my commandments” (John 14:15), and “If a man loves me, he will keep my word” (verse 23), but even these passages show that love precedes the keeping of the word, and one cannot keep the word until he knows it, and has the opportunity to do it. Does a willing mind count for anything in the realm where man is lacking? Paul sets forth this principle, “If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not” (2 Cor. 8:12).

Voluntary ignorance is a sin; involuntary ignorance is not! A man cannot walk in more light than he has, but if he shuts his eyes to the light he has, he shows the disposition which would disregard all light. “For this people’s heart has grown dull, and their ears are heavy of hearing, and their eyes have they closed, lest they should perceive with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart.” To wilfully disregard any command of God which is known to be His command is to defy the authority of God, but there is a difference in wilful defiance and lack of compliance through imperfect knowledge.

Our readers will be anxious to know how we apply this reasoning to baptism. Can any one on earth be saved who has not been immersed into Christ? That is not for us to judge or determine. We are instructed, under the reign of the Messiah, to enroll students in His school by immersing them; and to announce salvation from past sins on the basis of faith and immersion. Any who have received this announcement and deliberately reject the terms are in rebellion against the King. They will be last. What he will do with those who do not receive the message, or do not have the opportunity to enforce it in their lives, remains in the realm of His mercy. It is my opinion, based upon my feeble understanding of the scriptures, that such will be accepted of Him. Does this not weaken the command? Not at all. If a judge, recognizing mitigating circumstances, tempers judgment with mercy, he does not thereby undermine a sovereign statute. A law or commandment takes its force from the authority which orders it, but that authority is superior to any law which it creates, and may suspend or modify it in any given circumstance. Such suspension or modification in no sense affects the validity of the law or commandment in its general application.

It is the tendency of all who would squeeze and refine God’s grace and mercy through their own legalistic strainers, to make our hope dependent upon knowledge and understanding, almost to the exclusion of love, motive or intent. This is evidenced by those who disregard, flaunt and set aside, the immersion of all who did not understand at the time it was to secure a certain blessing. A sincere, conscientious believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, who is immersed because it is a command of God, later learns that he is attached to a human party, and hearing of those who claim to be the Lord's people without sectarian affiliation, seeks to identify himself with them. He is told he must be baptized again. He insists that he believed with all his heart that Jesus was God's Son and the Messiah, and was immersed because of that faith. He is told that the human error he was taught negated God's grace, and even though he believed and was immersed, his ignorance cancelled God's promise, rendering it null and void. If he refuses to be immersed again, he is regarded as a heathen or pagan by this modern "undenominational sect."

But does not the word teach that we must repent and be baptized unto the remission of sins? Certainly so! And when a man believes that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, repents of his sins, and is immersed on the basis of that faith, it is unto the remission of sins! It makes no difference if he has some wrong notions, or if he has received some false impressions, when he complies with God's positive ordinance because of his faith in God's Son, he is inducted into all the blessings and privileges attendant upon the state into which such immersion introduces him, whether he knew what they were or not. But suppose one thinks he is saved before baptism? He is mistaken as to when God remits his sins and is in error as to the relationship of immersion to remission, but this ignorance does not invalidate his relationship unto God, for the simple reason that it is based upon faith in Jesus— not faith that baptism is for remission— but faith that Jesus is the Christ and God's Son.

Remission of sins is a judicial act which takes place in the mind of the God of heaven. It becomes effective to a penitent sinner upon belief of one fact and obedience of one act, conditioned upon that belief. This is the merciful arrangement of God who always conditions his requirements to our state. Since salvation is freely offered to every creature, learned and unlearned, brilliant and ignorant, savage and civilized, bond and free, if it was based upon a complex philosophy, or even a specific degree of intellectual attainment and knowledge, myriads of earth's number would be condemned to hopelessness and have no possibility of being with the God who loved them.

When the Holy Spirit commanded the Pentecostians to repent and be immersed unto the remission of sins, He was not specifying the degree of knowledge essential to the validity of the act, nor assigning a motive for it. Careless and factional reasoners conclude that to be baptized "for the remission of sins," is the highest and noblest motive for the performance of the act. That means Jesus was immersed for an inferior motive. Actually, to be immersed, simply to receive remission of sins, as that is taught by many, might well be selfish, for it is the doing of an act purely with the view of receiving something of greater value in return.

Our Lord always acted from the highest motives. He based his submission to immersion upon a desire to "fulfill all righteousness." When any person yields himself to the same act on that basis, he acts from the highest motive, and we have no right to set ourselves up as an inquisition or judicial court, and interrogate him as to the degree of his knowledge or understanding of God's plans, purposes and promises at the time. A lot of folk cannot understand the difference between "baptism unto remission" and "knowing that baptism is unto remission." We are commanded to be immersed unto remission of our sins, but we are not told that the validity of the act depends upon our understanding that what we do will enable God to do certain things in our behalf. We need only to act in faith, doing what He told us to do, in order to fulfill His righteousness, and whatever blessings are in store for us, He will grant. His mercy is not made available to us on the basis of our knowledge, nor is His power limited because of our ignorance. It is possible that if all of us admitted our ignorance and cultivated our love we would be better off. "Knowledge puffs up, but love builds up" (1 Cor. 8:1).

To Think About

Mission Messenger (April 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

We are made to wonder how many of the existing parties in religion stem from the vanity and ambition of men. Gifted men may think of themselves more highly than they ought to think (Rom. 12:3). They aspire to prominence and leadership. They develop a “Messiah complex” and court others who bask in their reputed wisdom. These “think of men above what is written” and “are puffed up for one against another” (1 Cor. 4:6). The one they idolize becomes their authoritative interpreter and expositor of God’s word. They surrender their rights for the sense of inner security that comes from belonging to a dogmatic faction, whose members feed their ego with the thought that they occupy a special place in God’s favor, and all others are outside the pale of grace, aliens and foreigners.

Their procedures and explanations become traditional. The scriptures are no longer searched to see what they teach, but for isolated passages which may be wrested in defence of the party position. Champions develop in each fold, and endear themselves to delighted factionists by their cleverness and political maneuvers in the debating arena. The party fortunes rise and the star is on the ascendancy, until someone arises to challenge the interpretation of the recognized leader, generally an editor. The usurper is then attacked with venom and spite and branded as a traitor to God’s word. He is abused, misrepresented and driven forth. Those who have grown weary of the dictatorial tactics to which they have been subjected also leave to follow this new voice, and produce a new faction built around him, and begin a repetition of the sorry, disgraceful mess.

And all of this is done “in the name of Jesus.” Each new party is started as “the true church of God;” each old party thrusts them forth to keep “the true church” pure. Thus have men acted for centuries, thus do they continue to act, motivated by pride, jealousy, envy and worldly ambition. And the land is filled with the discordant voices of the partisans, all proclaiming that they have found the key of knowledge, and the others are all fakes and counterfeits. Shall we continue to hack and chop sincere hearts to pieces in the vain hope we can thus save the world? What form of insanity possesses us that we suffer from visions of grandeur, and delude ourselves into thinking that the kingdom of heaven is limited by the party boundaries we have drawn? My brethren, these things ought not so to be!

Red Sky at Morning

Mission Messenger (May 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

Seldom did the Pharisees and Sadducees combine their efforts. They were antagonistic to each other, but formed an unholy alliance to test Jesus. Acting upon the Jewish superstition that demons can work wonders on earth, but only God can show signs in heaven, they approached him, proposing that he give them such a sign. Jesus replied, “When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather: for the sky is red. And in the morning, It will be foul weather today: for the sky is red and lowering. O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?” The Jews were students of the weather. They knew the portents of the storms, but they ignored the signs of the times.

Once again men are looking steadfastly up into the heavens. The stars and planets are under constant scrutiny. Scientific genius has unlocked the secrets of space. We have developed a kinship with remote satellites. We can discern the face of the sky. Can we not discern the signs of the times?

Our world is locked in a grim struggle. The most crucial battle of all ages is being relentlessly fought before our very eyes. There is an ever present danger that we shall forget the main area of conflict by diverting our attention solely to those places where it erupts into physical combat. We are made aware of how our world has shrunk as we are forced to discuss in daily conversation Budapest and Berlin, Matsu and Quemoy. Yet, these are but symptoms of the major war. They are pimples on the face of the world, which betoken the anguished unrest and suffering within. We still feel personally divorced from those places. Other men, speaking strange languages, confront the tanks and guns. But we are directly involved in the titanic struggle which, like a seething volcano, is ever rumbling internally, although it but occasionally bursts through a crevice or thin place in the crust of earth.

The major conflict is not fought over hills and valleys, but on the battlefield of human hearts. Its chief weapons are not guns and planes, but ideas and ideologies. It is a life and death struggle between two philosophies which seek to capture the whole realm of human reason. You are in this battle, whether you choose to be or not. Your children, and your children's children, for generations yet unborn, will be affected by its outcome. They will be free men and women, or they will be slaves. All you hold dear is at stake! Religious freedom, political liberty, all of the gains in the field of human rights, made through centuries of struggle, are risked in this gigantic contest. It is the first world war, beside which all previous wars, regardless of how designated, become mere local outbursts on the pages of history.

We face a ruthless foe. Denying the existence of God, the enemy has no regard for the sacredness of a covenant, nor for human rights. It is belief in God, and in accountability to a higher power, which makes men hold themselves to account for their words and deeds. Out of the atheistic concept has grown the philosophy that man exists for the state, and not the reverse. Man is a mere cog in a machine, and like a cog, when worn out, can be tossed aside on the scrapheap. This breeds the tyrannical notion that "might makes right," and "the end justifies the means." You cannot destroy concepts with atomic weapons, nor disintegrate ideas with bullets. You must meet a philosophy on its own ground, or be destroyed by it.

Standing athwart the path of Communism in its bid for world conquest is the only remaining philosophy with even a remote chance of victory. As these two face each other across the "No Man's Land" of human hearts, the deadly seriousness of their impact upon each other becomes apparent. Both were first exemplified in men born of Jewish parentage. This was true of Jesus of Nazareth, who was the son of David, the son of Abraham. It was also true of Karl Marx. But one was the Son of God and the Son of Man, while the other was merely a man's son. Thus, the present struggle is, after all, but one more phase in the age old conflict between the word of God and the philosophy of men.

Both have committed their systems to mankind in a book. Das Kapital is the bible of Communism, as certainly as the New Covenant Scriptures constitute the rule of faith and practice for the Christian. Both claim to be the truth, both claim to be complete. Nikolai Lenin, chief exponent of Marxism, declared, "The teaching of Marx is all powerful because it is true. It is complete and symmetrical, offering an integrated view of the world." The identical claim is made for Christianity. Both are catholic, or universal, in aim, having as their purpose the reshaping of the entire universe of mankind. Again, Lenin says, "Philosophers have only interpreted the world in various ways, but the real task is to alter it."

Communism is a religion. It is not merely a theory to which its proponents subscribe. It is a way of life, to which they are wholly committed. To Karl Marx, the historical process was God. It was the creator, the moulder, the controller of the race, shaping mankind for a destiny in a golden age on earth. The destruction of capitalism and the rise to power of the proletariat is viewed with the same drama of expectancy as the Christian views the second coming of Christ. Indeed, the Communist and the pre-millennialist, have in common the hope of a changed world on this earth. As the latter looks for an earthly reign of saints in a universe perfected by the abolition of sin through the binding of Satan, so the former looks for the reign of the proletariat through the relegation of Capitalism (the great seducer and exploiter of the race) to the bottomless pit of oblivion.

As the Christian regards the revelation of God as being given gradually, and on an ascending scale, leading mankind upward to a more perfect state, so the Communist regards the experience of world philosophy as having done the same. The first believes in a God who works in history; the other believes in History working as a God. The first accepts the concept of a God who sees our needs and reveals himself in compassionate love; the second recognizes only blind force which shapes our destiny, thus has no need for either compassion or love. The achievement of its ends is by force. Once again, the power of the Spirit must meet the challenge of the spirit of Power!

You are involved in this world struggle. Its outcome will affect every soul of earth's teeming millions. All that you hold dear hangs in the balance. The hopes and fears of all generations past, and of generations yet to come, linger in the shadows surrounding the battlefield, waiting with wonderment the final clash. The battle is not one, though, to be fought in the future—it is being fought now. The forces are grappling with each other, and a malevolent, treacherous and ruthless opponent moves closer to choke out the life you cherish. You are not a spectator, you are a participant! If you declare that you are too ignorant, or too insignificant, to make a choice, you have already made one. You are giving comfort to the enemy. Once again, as never before, can it be said, "He that is not with me, is against me!" If you weaken the forces of righteousness by your indifference, apathy and unconcern, you are, to the same degree, strengthening the arm which wields a mailed fist to destroy what you cherish.

In its ultimate, the titanic struggle will not be settled by guns, or planes, or satellites, or hydrogen bombs. These are mere manifestations of force. It is possible for scientific genius to continue to discover new applications of force upon an ascending scale. These discoveries may act as temporary deterrents, while the deadly race continues. An ever present danger is that man will cultivate force to the extent that he holds within his grasp the potential to destroy mankind. The accidental pulling of a central switch, or the activation of the mechanism by a desperate madman, could then hurl the material universe into an orgy of destruction. We can only pray that the orbiting of humanly created satellites will not so unbalance the sidereal realm as to cause a meteor to fall upon Washington or Moscow. Such an eventuality would hurl our world into a maelstrom of nightmarish agony.

There is but one power which is superior to all weapons of force. It is moral power! If this erodes and decays while the other is on the ascendancy, we may arrive at the point where it is no longer effective as a controlling agent. This is the power with which Christianity has held in check the brute tendencies of mankind. But there is every evidence that it is on the wane. Sir Richard Livingston, in "The Future in Education," writes

If you allow the spiritual basis of a civilization to perish, you first change and finally destroy it. Christianity and Hellenism are the spiritual bases of our civilization. They are far less powerful today than fifty years ago. Therefore, we are losing that spiritual basis, and our civilization is changing and on the way to destruction, unless we can reverse the process.

Our greatest problem, then, is "the reversal of a process." This is intensified because of the laws of momentum. Those laws are as inflexible in the social structure as in the mechanical realm. Before a car which is going forward can be reversed, it must be stopped. The pause may be but momentary, but it must come. It is for that reason, we have brakes as well as gears. If the automobile is going downgrade, the problem is augmented because the weight of the car adds to the forward thrust. The great danger in our present social trend is that we are going downhill, and we have burned out our brakes. The standards of behavior upon which we once depended to check immorality, have generally been discarded. They are considered old fashioned and unnecessary in our sophisticated contemporary mode of existence. It is as if a car designer decided that forward speed was the only requirement, and left all brakes off his product. The resulting catastrophe in the physical realm would be no greater than that which now threatens the moral and intellectual realm.

Before we can reverse the process, we must first halt the forward progress on a decline. How can this be accomplished? I hold that it can only be done by sheer courage of those who are concerned. If a man saw an automobile without passengers, hurtling toward a precipice, and, powerless to do anything else to stop it, threw his body in its path to deflect its course, he would be branded as a fool. But, if his children, or grandchildren, were in it, and doomed to certain death without his interference, he would be designated a hero of the highest sort, if he risked or lost his life, by such an act. The fate of our loved ones lies in our ability to stop and reverse the social order which makes our civilization so decadent. Someone must rise in the spirit of true adventure, and daring to face the misunderstanding, ridicule and derision of a world become alien to the Christ whom it professes to serve, hurl himself squarely across the pathway, rallying others to the task. If, against such a wall of men and women, our degenerating and deteriorating culture is brought to a halt, we can then turn about, and start upward once again.

But, we are asked if modern Christianity, as it is, cannot overcome the insidious foe. We are told of the increased number of communicants in the various religious bodies. It is pointed out that church attendance is at an all time high! The civilization of western man is based upon the belief that Jesus, born in Bethlehem of Judea, is the Son of God, and that the God of the universe has revealed himself to mankind as the Living Word, therefore, the life of this sinless one is the ideal for which we must strive in order to find happiness in this world and the one to come. Why is Christianity so powerless? It has been on earth for nineteen hundred years, yet there are millions of people made in the image of God, who have never even heard of Jesus of Nazareth, and millions who have heard and feel no spiritual impact from the hearing. How can we account for this?

First, much of what is designated “Christianity” is not really Christian at all. It is paganism, parading under cover of Christian habiliment; human philosophy which has stolen the livery of heaven, hiding its origin by use of terminology made sacred through tradition. We live in an age when Jesus is honored with the lips, while hearts are far from him. We are victims of the crime of substitution. “While men have slept an enemy has crept in and sowed tares.” These look like wheat, and the unwary are deceived thereby.

We confuse attendance at places of worship with Christianity, and the test of a man’s faith in the Christ is the regularity with which he shows up each week to sit as a spectator in the pew, and listen with stolid resignation to a clergyman air his views. Certainly, we are obligated by heaven to express our worship as a body with our fellow saints, but there are hundreds enrolled on the rosters of modern churches who never miss a meeting, yet never really worship God, nor do they have any life-transforming consciousness of Christianity. They subscribe to it as a good policy, or a satisfying way of life, but it is not life itself as it was to the primitive followers of the Nazarene. Increased attendance at the churches is not necessarily an indication of strength in the Christian realm.

We confuse personal ministering to God and humanity, the very essence of real Christianity, with the ministering to us by someone hired for the task by the week or month. In direct opposition to the philosophy of Jesus, we “come not to minister, but to be ministered unto.” So long have we integrated church buildings, cathedrals, rituals, and a professional clergy with Christianity, that we would not know how to worship without them, yet the infant church had none of these, and the church has lost its real impact on the world ever since it was tricked into adopting them as essential to the preservation of the Christian faith. We have even come to the point where we look upon giving money as “an act of worship” upon par with joint participation of the disciples at the table of the Lord. And many will carry their money to the church building to make “an offering” in conformity with a legalistic code which threatens damnation to those who do not contribute to the maintenance of a pompous clergyman, who would not cross the street in front of their homes to furnish sustenance to a widow who belonged to “another faith.” It is possible that the evil of substitution exists to the greatest degree among those who profess to be the exact reproduction of the original community of the saints.

The Christian world faces its task, harassed and hampered by schism and division. It is an astounding fact that Communism has united divergent elements and welded into cohesive unity those peoples who represented different cultural backgrounds. Regardless of how far apart Gog and Magog may be, they can still gather together. But the followers of Jesus are split and fragmented even within the same nation. The bloodiest battles that have been fought were religious wars, waged between opposing camps of those who claimed allegiance to the cross of Christ. It is a conviction of the writer based upon his personal understanding and interpretation of the words of Jesus, that the only hope of world survival is the acceptance, by the world, of Jesus, as the Son of God and the Messiah. This can only be brought about by a unity of all who believe in Him. If all who believe in Jesus were one, the world would be won for Jesus. This is the promise of him who knows the hearts of men!

The trend in Christianity, until recently, has been to divide and separate. Not a generation has passed since the close of the first century without leaving another cleavage in the ranks. The Christian world could not have become more divided, if it had been commanded to divide by the God of heaven. There are some signs that the tide is turning. Within the past decade some who have been separated have once more decided to unify their efforts. Religious bodies torn asunder by the question of human slavery have, in these more enlightened days, perceived the folly of maintaining division over an issue on which they now agree. Those who brought with them the prejudices engendered in native lands, have risen above those factors in this nation.

We rejoice in all such indications and signs of maturity. True, these coalitions leave much to be desired, and do not represent a return to the ancient order of things, but they do represent a change in attitude which can be to us a source of gratitude. We are not unaware that many within our own fellowship scoff and sneer at such indications, and belittle all such attempts. Yet, it appears to the writer that it ill becomes those who profess to exist to bring about unity in the spiritual realm, to gnash their teeth in frustration when men unite, and give their blessing to those who spill the spiritual gore of others in fratricidal strife. Surely our hope of uniting believers in the Christ is not dependent upon our keeping them divided. Those who follow such a philosophy have borrowed a leaf from the journal of atheistic Communism.

It is our purpose, God willing, to show the futility of a divided Christendom, in attempting to capture for the King of kings, those people who are alienated by geography and cultural backgrounds from western thought. We have acted as if Christianity were a white man's religion, and have sought to impose it as such upon other races, with all of its creedal differences, its subtle arguments, its western symbolism, and its varied disciplines. We have never considered how those things look to the philosophic minds of other races. And we have been so busy trying to plant an American Church in other countries, we have had no time to plant the seed of pure Christianity, untainted with the divergent interpretations of western thought. Most “missionaries” are not so much troubled now by the coming of the Lord, as they are fearful of an inspection visit from a representative of the mission board, or the elders of a sponsoring church!

In a subsequent article we shall study the case history of a mighty nation, whose origin is lost in the dim recesses of the past, but which survives until this day. Here the Christian religion had its greatest opportunity, and here suffered its most abject and tragic failure. Today, in that land, millions are enslaved by Communist overlords, while the representatives of the Christian concept have been driven across the borders. Why was it, with several centuries start, and with such favorable circumstances surrounding its introduction, that Christianity made such a poor showing in China? Shall we repeat the same tragic error elsewhere? What is the answer? Does it lie with the Roman Catholic Church and its authoritarian system? Does it rest with the World Council of Churches? Or, does it rest with the heirs of the Restoration Movement of the nineteenth century? If, with these latter, with which group of heirs? With the Disciples of Christ? With the conservative group which opposes the United Christian Missionary Society? With “The Church of Christ”? If, with the latter, with which segment or faction? Where is the answer to be found? We think it must be found, or we shall perish. And we intend, God willing, to investigate and probe the situation, as relentlessly as the scientist in his laboratory, searches for the virus or microbe, which destroys human life. We are not unaware of the price we shall pay for this seeking after truth! We are fully aware of what the cost will be. But we will not shrink from the consequences. We are committed to this study, and this search for truth, and truth never comes cheaply.

Christianity is the only force which can meet Communism at the last disputed barricade and stem the flow of this onrushing horde. We must make Christianity work or our children's children will be slaves. It is just that simple. It is just that serious. In subsequent issues we shall deal, humbly but sincerely and directly, with the problems of this age, contending for the right "as God gives us to see the right." If you deem there is anything meritorious in these feeble efforts and studies, we solicit your aid to make them available to "the concerned ones" in every denomination. Have you really done anything as yet to measure up to your personal responsibility in this crucial hour? Will you not start today in a small way, by sharing this very article with a neighbor or friend? If you are a Sunday School teacher, will you recommend it to your class? If you are a leader of a civic club— Lions, Rotary, or Kiwanis— will you use some of the material in a speech to your fellow members? Would you mail copies to friends who are affiliated with various religious bodies. Surely the danger we face transcends all partisan lines!

Causing Divisions

Mission Messenger (May 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

An Analysis of Romans 16:17

No scripture is safe in the hands of a religious partisan. The reason is obvious. The party spirit is a work of the flesh. It is opposed to the Spirit. It will debar one from inheritance of the kingdom (Gal. 5:17-21). The factious spirit is indicative of immaturity. Those guilty of it can hardly be addressed as spiritual men, but as babes in Christ (1 Cor. 3:1). However, the partisan jealously seeks to defend his party. To do so, he must warp and bend the scriptures. He must make them apply in a sense which God never intended.

The revelation of heaven was not given to be the private or exclusive possession of any sect or party. It is not a factional handbook. No uninspired man is an official interpreter of revelation. No group of men can advance themselves as the authorized expositors of sacred writ. God's word is authoritative. The interpretations placed upon it, or the opinions of men about it, are not. It is here the party spirit reveals its true nature. It interprets God's word in justification of the partisan position, substitutes the interpretation for revelation, then demands acquiescence in the arbitrary interpretation as the word of God, and disfellowships all who refuse to do obeisance to such tyranny of mind and thought.

The eternal purpose of God was “set forth in Christ as a plan for the fulness of time, to unite all things in him” (Eph. 1:9, 10). Schism and division are condemned. Disciples are to forbear one another in love. They are to be “eager to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace” (Eph. 4:3). The saints have been called into the fellowship of Jesus Christ (1 Cor. 1:9), and this is the fellowship of the Spirit (Phil. 2:1) because “by one Spirit we were all baptized into one body and all were made to drink of one Spirit” (1 Cor. 12:13). But the flesh wars against the Spirit, and the party spirit, being a work of the flesh, is opposed to the unity of the Spirit. Instead of being eager to maintain such, it is zealous to destroy it.

I have watched with amazement as men have taken the word of the Spirit, revealed to secure and maintain unity, and used it to sanction and defend division and disunity. It has been screened to find some scriptural reference to justify perpetuation of a partisan alliance, and erection of human standards and opinions as tests of fellowship. One would think the chief aim of the Christian was to proclaim division and practice disfellowship, and the highest moral attainment is reached when one is the most forward exponent of factionalism. There is not one scripture given by God for the purpose of tearing and rending the body of His Son. But even God could not give a revelation that was safe from maltreatment by partisans.

I propose an examination of one frequently used passage. I shall demonstrate how it has been perverted. I shall show that it has been made to imply exactly opposite to what it says. Attention is called to Romans 16:17. “Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which you have learned; and avoid them.” This is the rallying ground of every faction in the disciple brotherhood. Upon the basis of this passage humble saints have been hounded out and driven forth when they refused to surrender their God-given liberties and freedom to some despotic clique. Honest, sincere, God-fearing men and women, have been “marked” and branded, stigmatized and calumniated, for no other crime than daring to think for themselves. This is the one “sin” no party can tolerate, for the party spirit thrives on suppression and boycott, on ostracism and exclusion.

What is “the doctrine which you have learned”? In each instance, it is the shibboleth of the party, the password to the inner circle. In one case it is opposition to Bible classes; in another to individual cups; in still others, opposition to instrumental music, colleges, orphan homes, tuning forks, missionary societies, charitable organizations, or pre-millennialism. The vital doctrine is different with each party. If you are baptized in Texas and “your hap is to light” in a congregation which uses only fermented wine in the Lord’s Supper, and if you mature in your thinking until you express the opinion that it makes no difference whether the fruit of the vine is fermented or not, such an opinion will be construed as “causing division and offence contrary to the doctrine you have learned” and you will be castigated publicly with no chance for reply, marked and avoided. You are dangerous to the peace and safety of “the fermented wine party.”

If you find yourself in a congregation which makes an opinion about teaching classes a test of fellowship, you should cease to study or reason, for if you come to the conclusion that an opinion about Bible classes is not God’s eternal criterion of acceptability or rejection, and so express yourself, you will be marked and avoided. If you hold a secret notion that instrumental music in public worship is not necessarily a sign of rank apostasy, and that those who use it may be your brethren, you had better keep it secret in a lot of places, for if you state it merely as an opinion, and with no thought of changing the existing practice, that will be all for you, except marking and avoiding you as a moral leper, or a contagious criminal.

Did the apostle have reference to such an unspiritual hodgepodge when he wrote the Romans? Of course not! Then what did he mean? Read the passage again! “Mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which you have learned.” The doctrine they had learned was to not cause divisions and offences. In chapter 12:5, they had learned they were one body, and members one of another. In 12:10 they had learned to love one another with brotherly affection, and outdo one another in showing honor. In 12:16 they had learned to live in harmony with one another. In 13:13 they had learned to conduct themselves becomingly, and not in quarreling and jealousy.

In 14:1 they had learned they should welcome one who was weak in faith, but not for disputes over opinions. In 14:13 they had learned not to pass judgment on a brother, and never to place a stumblingblock or occasion to fall in a brother’s way. In 14:19 they had learned to follow after peace and things wherewith one might edify another. In the face of all this doctrine, or teaching, about love, unity, forbearance, and mercy, if someone still caused division or offence by refusing to receive a brother, or by intolerance for one whose opinion differed, such a person was to be marked and avoided. It was not the holding of an opinion that was contrary to the doctrine, for the doctrine was, “Welcome him, but not for disputes over opinions.” The doctrine they had learned was “One believes he may eat anything, while the weak man eats only vegetables.” It was not necessary for all to believe alike, or to be agreed upon every point, to be welcomed.

It was contrary to the doctrine to cause divisions and offences. Brethren were to be welcomed in spite of opinions, not driven out because of them. Who was to be marked and avoided? It was the schismatic who caused division by refusing to accept as brethren those whose opinions differed, for such division was contrary to the doctrine which said to receive them and not sit in judgment upon their opinions. There are two kinds of schismatics. One injects his opinion about a thing and seeks to build a party around it; the other sets up an unwritten law in which he makes opposition to such an opinion his test of fellowship. Either of these will cause division contrary to the doctrine which says to “maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.”

The apostle was not talking about classes, containers for the fruit of the vine, baptisteries, tuning forks, colleges, orphan homes, missionary societies, fermented wine, unleavened bread, a special way of breaking the loaf, instrumental music, the pre-millennial theory, and all that host of things used as the occasion for splitting, shivering and riving the churches of the saints into splinters and fragments. These may, or may not, be wrong, but the apostle has no reference to them here. The doctrine we have learned is that it is sinful to hate, judge, despise and divide the brethren. Without realizing it, every partisan who has used Romans 16:17, to justify his pet division, and condone his unwritten creed, has pronounced his own condemnation by quoting this verse.

“Take note of those who create dissensions and difficulties in opposition to the doctrine which you have been taught; avoid them.” We have lived to see a day in which men bitterly oppose those who plead for unity of all believers in Jesus, and blindly follow party leaders who teach division and schism as if such were a cardinal doctrine of the Holy Spirit. The most popular man in many pulpits is the one who will breathe out venom and spite against those who seek to draw all men unto Him. We are filled with fears and frustrations, bred by the party spirit. We are afraid to call men brethren, lest we forfeit our partisan standing. Our hearts are shriveled and dried up. We build walls because we feel safe behind them. We cannot face the full glare of the sunlight of love. We are dwellers in the shadows. No one is more obnoxious to the partisan forces in Christendom than he who truly seeks to answer the prayer of God’s Son. The person who most disturbs any sectarian is the man who refuses to be one.

Fellowship is not endorsement of another's views. It is not agreement with opinions of another, but love for the person which transcends his views and yours. It is a state or relationship in Jesus. We are called into fellowship by the gospel. Nothing should ever be made a test of fellowship which God has not made a condition of salvation. We do not come into the fellowship by agreement upon opinions; we should not disrupt it because of disagreement over such. If fellowship in Christ was conditioned upon perfect agreement, there would be no place for forbearance, and the instruction to "forbear one another in love" would be useless. Forbearance is never exercised toward those who see everything as you do.

We do not arrive at fellowship because we agree on things, but being in fellowship we seek to arrive at agreement on things. The unity of the Spirit is the oneness produced by the fact that the Spirit dwells in each of us. We are thus linked to each other because we are linked with God. The Spirit is not the word of God. The unity of the Spirit is not based upon perfect understanding of the words of the Spirit. It is not a unity maintained by those who have arrived, but it is God dwelling in those who are striving upward. It is maintained by a love for God and all of His children which transcends any opinion or partisan view.

The Use of Liberty

Mission Messenger (May 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

“For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another” (Gal 5:13). Freedom involves responsibilities unknown in slavery. The slave is not required to think for himself. He is not permitted to make personal decisions. His relationship to his fellows is marked off in well defined patterns. Thus, his life soon degenerates into stolid, plodding existence little above that of the beasts of burden. Liberty enforces the need to reason, will and decide. Judgment must be exercised.

We are free men in Jesus as the result of heaven’s emancipation proclamation, ratified and sealed by His blood. We are obligated to exercise our liberty in such a manner as to not injure ourselves or our brethren. The greatest danger to self lies in confusing liberty with license. Spiritual liberty conveys no right to fleshly indulgence. Such use is abuse, and it always provides its own recompence of sorrow. As regards others, liberty is the right to serve, and not the right to demand service. The body does not exist to serve the hand or the eye, but these exist to serve the whole of which they are a part.

Those who demand service rather than render it, lack the one ingredient which lends meaning and purpose to spiritual existence— love! He who would enslave his brethren to serve his selfish wants, thereby forfeits his own liberty, for he can never be free from expectation or desire, and thus, can never know happiness. Love is the regulator of liberty. If I exist to love and serve my brethren, it will not matter how they act towards me, or what they say about me, or do to me. If I allow myself to cease to love, and become hateful and embittered because of their attitude I do not gain them, but I lose my liberty, and life becomes futile and empty.

Love expends itself in service toward its object. It does not depend upon reciprocal action. It is not selfish or self-seeking. He loves most who serves most. He is greatest of all who becomes servant of all. One who serves only those who agree with, compliment or endorse him, is wrapped up in himself. No one so wrapped up is free. I love liberty, but I must use my liberty to love, or lose it. I love all of my brethren, because I love God. I do not love them because they agree with me, but because I agree with God. Fear produces bondage; love produces liberty, for “perfect love casteth out fear.” Learn to love, and be free!

Pattern for Disaster

Mission Messenger (June 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

John Dewey, the philosopher, said, "He who fears new truths does not walk the earth freely, for he is obsessed by the need of protecting some private possession of belief and taste." The same may be said of the man who fears to read or interpret history lest he find his position or views in a predicament. We must admit that Christianity will be interpreted by those who dwell in non-Christian regions, in the light of the conduct of those who claim to represent it. The history of those who make the profession is not one to be read with pleasure or pride. For many centuries the Christian way has not appeared upon the world stage in the role of a benevolent conqueror, by love subjecting mankind to a willing captivity by the Lord Jesus Christ. Instead, it has often been harassed and driven forth, forced to surrender territory once held, to those enemies who have moved in to dispel it.

What has happened to the vibrant power and glowing vitality of the faith which entered an alien world, transformed it, and toppled the mighty Caesars from their thrones? Perhaps there is no easy answer. Certainly there is no single factor which can be assessed as wholly responsible. But an answer must be sought, and it must be found! The civilization of western man is interlaced with the principles of the Christian religion. It is indisputable that our culture is an outgrowth of the concepts exemplified in the life of Jesus of Nazareth. Today that civilization is challenged as never before in history. Will it survive? Whether it does so or not, depends not so much upon winning an armaments race, as upon a moral re-armament, and this starts with repentance, which is always preceded, if it be genuine, by remorse over our tragic mistakes and abject failures.

It is difficult to stand off and look at ourselves objectively. We have been conditioned by education, environment and training, to rationalize favorably in our own behalf. It is easier to see a speck of dust in the eye of another than to behold a log in our own eye. What is true of an individual is also true of a nation, or of a body of believers in any system. Our faults are projected on a unified scale as well as our virtues. But we must probe our failures, and we must do so relentlessly and unsparingly. If we seek to protect ourselves from pain incurred by our diagnostic thrusts, we may seal our doom by infection, or cancer, in the future. If we shield ourselves it may lead to brutal exposure thereafter. Let us be candid, open, fair and honest.

Fortunately, there exists today a window display in which is portrayed a demonstration of the failure of the Christian concept of life to change and revolutionize a mighty nation of people. I say fortunately, because if we dare look at this display without shirking or cringing, it may provide for us an opportunity to remould our thinking before the sands run out of the upper glass. It provides an excellent opportunity for our research, because it has undergone a tragic alteration in our own generation. Too, where Christianity failed to gain a substantial foothold, atheistic Communism now holds complete dominance and sway. Yet Christianity had a priority as to time. It was on the ground for several centuries in advance of the enemy. The result is one of such startling consequence as to shake us out of our state of apathy and blind indifference.

The mists of antiquity shroud the beginnings of China. The Chinese personally claim a history reaching back more than fifty centuries, and Confucius begins his record with the career of an emperor who flourished in the days when Abraham was still a resident of Ur of the Chaldees. The problem of piercing the veil is made greater when we consider that in the third century before the birth of Jesus of Nazareth, the emperor of the Chin dynasty (which gave China its name) destroyed all available literature of the past, and slaughtered hundreds of learned men. This was done to make it appear that his reign marked the beginning of the empire. However, we may be fairly certain of the inception of the Chow dynasty, about the time of the Biblical account of the marriage of Ruth and Boaz, and it was at this time the people changed from a nomadic existence to become tillers of the soil, and a feudal system was introduced which was to shape the future of the country for generations to come, even as did our own feudal system in the days of slavery in America.

It is the considered view of many philosophers that every civilization passes through certain definite stages in its progress from tribal existence to national solidarity, and that these always occur in the same sequence. This being true, China passed through the phase in which we now find ourselves, before the birth of Jesus in Bethlehem. A failure to recognize this, coupled with an insupportable theory of racial superiority, has always hindered our approach to other peoples. This is as true in the religious, as in any other field. It is impossible for a people to exist for centuries with such a culture as the people of China developed, without creation of a philosophy upon which to build that culture. To assume that such people have discovered no truth, or to ignore the truth that has been discovered is the height of folly. Yet, it was upon that basis that the Christian concept was introduced to China. Instead of acknowledging the truths taught by Confucius, it was considered detrimental to Christianity to admit that some of the principles enunciated by Jesus had previously been inculcated in the minds of those regarded as pagan or heathen.

Confucius lived about the time that Socrates lived in Greece. He had no intention of founding a religion, and actually did not do so. He was a masterful instructor in ethics and an exponent of political idealism. Bereft of his father at the age of three, he was reared with a deep sense of love for learning by his affectionate, but poverty-stricken mother. He testifies that by the time he was fifteen he had a consuming passion for knowledge, and mastered the recorded wisdom of the sages and wise men of centuries long gone, knowing it was the guidance of these teachers which had made the Chinese a wise and benevolent people. But, beholding the abuses and oppression so prevalent in his day, he began to plead for restoration of the faith and practices of those ancients whose wisdom was being abandoned to the confusion of the nation and the immorality of the people.

He was very poor, but asked no compensation for his teaching. His was a life of utter simplicity and frugality. He rejected the idea that happiness could be obtained from the mere possession of material things, and said, "The scholar who is bent on studying the principles of virtue, yet is ashamed of bad clothes and coarse food, is not yet fit to receive instruction. With coarse food to eat, water to drink, and the bended arm as a pillow, happiness may still exist." It can be seen that he exalted wisdom above earthly possessions, acquisition of knowledge above worldly ease, and virtue above luxury.

His prescription for good government was to have an interested, enlightened and concerned populace, composed of those who put public welfare ahead of any personal consideration, and who would, therefore, select as officials only those who had proven themselves to have a genuine knowledge of public affairs, and were above the taking of bribes and corruption. So diligently did he teach that the true public servant was one who regarded responsibility as of prime importance, and salary as being secondary, that a revolution of thought took place, and a wise and judicious administration lifted the mighty nation to an exalted moral role.

Like many other reformers, Confucius was not appreciated until after his death. He was once given a high governmental position, and so outstanding was his example and so enlightening his rule, that his province excited the wonder and admiration of all who heard about it. The jealousy of a neighboring governor was provoked and Confucius was dismissed, but instead of bearing malice or ill-will, he regarded the event as an opportunity to demonstrate that the human spirit cannot be crushed by adversity and physical rebuff. The ultimate ideal held before the people was one of universal justice and freedom. Confucius expressed it thus, "Within the four seas all are brethren."

Confucius regarded life as being worthwhile only when disciplined. He would have agreed with the assertion of the Puritan, John Milton, that, "The flourishing and decaying of all civil societies, all the movements and turnings of human occasions are moved to and fro upon the axis of discipline." And he regarded the basic laws of life as being four in number. They were respect for parents, study, learning, and love for mankind. An application of these produced a glorious civilization of patriarchal simplicity, in which public service was the most honored of the professions, for it provided the opportunity to serve the greatest number, and the state exists only to minister to, educate and elevate the people. The state was not a queen but a handmaiden of the people.

After centuries of discussion and absorption of this philosophy, which lacked much because it could not deal realistically with the problem of sin and the relation of man to the Creator, the time came to introduce to the Chinese people, the Son of God, whose mission to earth was in behalf of all men. The Roman Church, aggressively missionary in past centuries, impelled by edicts of the popes to extend their sovereignty as the "vicars of Christ," made the first onslaught. And the initial attempt was made by the Jesuits, the shock troops of the pontiff, members of the order established by the military leader,

Ignatius Loyola. A contemporary philosopher has traced the results when other monastic orders moved in, fell out with their predecessors, and gave an exhibition of how professed followers of the Lord Jesus can carve each other to bits before the startled gaze of those whom they came to “save.”

The second and final blow fell when the Jesuit monopoly was broken and Franciscans and Dominicans settled in Fukien and Chekiang. Bitter quarrels soon started between the various orders and the Chinese began to lose patience. Emperor K’ang Hsi had remarked sarcastically to the missionaries that ‘you go to a great deal of trouble, coming from afar to preach contradictory opinions about which you seem anxious to slit each other’s throats.’ The Catholic missions were now slowly collapsing under their own dogmatic weight, torn by inner strife and dissension . . .”¹

It is upon the mission fields, without doubt, that the enormity of the sin of sectarian division is portrayed most graphically. Here are the millions who are alienated from God, in need of the knowledge of a Saviour who died to unite all men in one body or fellowship.

Driven by the party spirit, anxious to win laurels for their sects, impelled by the necessity of making reports which will appeal to the mission boards thousands of miles away, the bearers of the “glad tidings” must resort to the same political maneuvering as at home. Creedal interpretations are insisted upon to the utter confusion of simple minds. The tragedy is even greater when such schismatics so disgust a people as to prepare the ground for acceptance by them of an ideology which will turn them into foes of Christianity, and enlist them under the banner of antichrist. Never was this more in evidence than in the case of China.

Christian missions were to attempt to convert China for another century . . . But it was a hopeless struggle.

Torn between their various Protestant denominations and the Roman Catholics, they presented no united front. Catholics and Protestants could not even agree on the accurate translation of the word of God . . . And all this was not mere squabble over semantics; the very substance of the Christian message was mortally seared through and through by such superficial conflicting translations. If the missionaries were listened to at all, it was largely because they had the financial means which enabled them to be in China in the first place— and because they were, somehow, mysteriously connected with the awesome power of Western technology.”²

For generations another grave mistake has been made by religious representatives of our western world. They have seemingly been unable to distinguish between Christianity in its purity, and what is called Christianity in our day, but which has been moulded, shaped and adapted by our own environment and mode of thought. There is ever the tendency to equate the church of which one is a member with the one planted by the chosen ambassadors of the King in Palestine, twenty centuries ago. Not only do we regard what we now have as an exact reproduction of what was then given, but we regard the rest of the world as a laboratory for reproduction of what we are politically, socially and culturally. Thus, we expect the people in Mongolia, China, Japan, Ethiopia and Gwana, to conform to our patterns and standards. Western man is honest in this. He generally regards his civilization as the only one extant, in which he is gravely mistaken; and he has rationalized that being in a “Christian” nation, his way of life is Christian, and in this, he is even more gravely in error.

But, with such a fallacious idea, the work of the missionary has too often been not an attempt to plant the gospel, but to transplant a little bit of his own familiar way of life to alien soil, and to make the mission compound a recognizable minute portion of Britain or America. This requires the ignoring of the native culture and philosophy, and utter disregard for the forces which have worked through generations to bring a people to the point where they will even tolerate a foreigner in their midst. So the religion of Jesus, instead of being integrated with life itself, is looked upon as a foreign way of life to be adopted. The humble native may conclude that God began loving him the day the missionary stepped off the ship with his pile of converting tools; and that it was not so much the coming of Jesus to the world, but the arrival of the white man on his soil, that really counted.

The dramatic struggle underlining this whole Jesuit epic was the attempt of Western missionaries to impose not Christianity as such, but the Westernized version of Christ's teachings with all its symbolism and psychological twists suited to the West only and to no other civilization in the world."³

These are days of rapid transportation. The world has shrunk in point of the time required to go from one place to another. Remote regions are accessible at once through the air which would require decades to open up to surface travel. An Eskimo may be familiar with planes who never saw a train. A native may be transported from the depths of a South American jungle to a modern hospital, who never before looked upon an automobile. This freedom and rapidity of travel will make it ever more difficult for the missionary from the Western world. The native peoples think of America as a Christian nation filled with such love for those unseen as to want to share with them that which is good. The missionary paints a glowing picture of the church which sends and sustains him. But when some of the people from faraway lands come and behold the bickering, cavilling, prejudice and littleness which characterize the American churches, they are quick to detect that contributions to missions are too often made to salve the conscience of the giver, and that many will give a hundred dollars to preach the gospel to a Negro in Africa, who would not allow one to sit in the same meeting-house with them in America, and would close down their schools before they would allow their children to sit with a colored child in the same auditorium. The cant and hypocrisy of professed Christians eats like a deadly cancer at the very heart of our Western civilization. “This people draweth nigh unto me with their lips, and honoreth me with their mouth, but their heart is far from me.”

But worse still, when the leading Chinese went to Europe and America, they saw that many Westerners had nothing but scorn for this same Christian faith which was being exported to them; they listened to the philosophic arguments against the Bible and against Catholic dogmas generously provided by the Westerners themselves. Was it any wonder that the missionary effort ended in complete failure? And that by the middle of the twentieth century, barely one per cent of the Chinese population was converted, most of it made up of ‘rice Christians’ anyway? The failure was tragically evident. Western Christian proselytism failed to reach the vital centers of Chinese thought and emotion, never really touched the nervous system of China at all.”⁴

PRESENT STATUS OF CHINA

China is now under Communist domination. The Christian way of life has been rejected. Every part of the country is regimented and organized into militarized communes. These are super collectives composed of about twenty thousand families each. All of these have been shorn of property, livestock and all personal possessions. Family life has been broken up. The children, separated from their parents, are reared as government wards. Men and women alike live in barracks in a centralized work pool. Each day they are assigned tasks by work leaders. Those who demonstrate a sense of independence are placed in labor categories where they are worn down until the last shred of dignity disappears.

The goal is the complete industrialization of China. In its achievement spiritual values count for nothing. In this great modern experiment all human, animal and material resources are combined and pooled in the interest of the state. A man, like a mule, is worth only what he can produce. By clever propaganda methods, human beings are brainwashed until their reasoning power is warped and twisted. All day long loud speakers blare forth the party line. The unfortunate victims work, rest, eat and sleep under the subtle influence of this thought infiltration process.

Mao Tse-Tung, who was president of Red China, resigned his post to devote his time and efforts to organizing the communes more completely. This means that the will to rebel will be crushed, and swift death will overtake those who revolt. Under these circumstances the last vestiges of the Christian viewpoint are being eliminated. No missionaries now proclaim the story of God's love, no congregations meet to worship in the name of the crucified Saviour. Before our very eyes we have seen the spread of ruthless power and the loss of a great people to the Christian way.

REASONS FOR FAILURE

Those who revere God cannot be indifferent to the factors which operated to render Christian propaganda ineffective in China. We must learn from our errors, or we shall continue to stagger blindly along, eventually losing upon all fronts. No simple answer can be given, of course, but this writer would like to gaze into the show window and portray what he personally recognizes as contributory to the unfolding drama. In this presentation the term "Christianity" is not used as the dogma of any sect or segment of the divided religious world, but as the way of life based upon acceptance that Jesus of Nazareth is the Son of God and our Lord, which truth shines through all of the obscurations of sectism. It is not that a particular religious organization has been banned from China, or that a specific denomination has failed to reach the Chinese mind. The abundant life which Jesus came to give, and which transcends all partisan barriers, has been rejected in favor of atheistic communism. Why?

1. We emphasize once more that Christianity was taken to the Orient as an Occidental import. We forget that the Christian religion was first revealed in the Near East, and was proclaimed in Asia long before it was received in Europe. It was not Anglo-Saxons who made Christianity powerful, but the acceptance of the principles of Christianity which has made western civilization so great. It is not a “white man’s religion” to be shared with others; it is a universal religion in which white men are allowed to share— not because they are white, but because they are men! The patronizing air ill becomes the missionary. He takes to others not what is his, but what is theirs. God knows no superior race!

2. It is difficult to separate what is vital to Christianity from the Graeco-Western pattern of thought in which Christianity has thrived. The Chinese philosophy of life is profoundly different than that of Western man, influenced by the Hellenistic heritage. It is sometimes a question as to whether our logic has been formulated by Christianity, or if Christianity has been modified and adapted by the influence upon it of our logic. In our struggle for liberty, we have come to lay great stress upon the rights of the individual, arguing from abstract principles to sustain our views. This viewpoint is utterly alien to the Chinese mind, trained in an atmosphere which, for centuries, had stressed social conformity as the ideal, and where personal salvation was not the goal, but attainment to a place among the honored sages and ancestors was the purpose of all life.

Two hundred years before the birth of our Lord, a great ethical culture had developed in China, shut off from the rest of the world by towering mountains and rolling oceans. It left unsolved many problems as do all human philosophies, but by perception and reason, it had uncovered and discovered many truths of human existence. As centuries passed the civilization of China petrified, as all civilizations seem to do in time. In this state the West descended with full impact, smashing honored beliefs and customs, in the mad scramble to gain profits from trade with this teeming anthill of the earth.

Under these circumstances, Christianity was introduced, but, unlike the great missionary to the Gentiles who became all things unto all men, if by any means he might win some, the missionaries to China sought to impose a way of life which was based to a large extent upon Western ideas and logic. They never really understood the Chinese, and the Chinese people never really understood them. One wonders now what the result would have been if those who proclaimed Jesus had understood the philosophy of the Chinese and used any truth found therein as a foundation stone, and demonstrated that Christ was but the completion of the pattern and the meaning of human history, the thing for which they had been seeking for centuries. What would it be like today, if the Jew from the Near East who took the good news to Athens, and integrated his message with the unknown factors of their superstitions, had been the first Christian proclaimer to visit the Far East?

3. We must face squarely up to the fact that Christianity failed in China because of sectarianism and schismatic manifestations of those who took the message. The price of such division should make us shudder and tremble. At a time when the fatal blow of Western impact shattered all the Chinese had thought, believed, and practiced for several millenniums, they turned eagerly toward that which made Western civilization great in the earth. They craved that which would unify, strengthen and give them real purpose in life. They sought the answer of history to the problem of human existence. They asked for bread, and we gave them a stone; for fish, and we gave them a serpent. Our philosophers who went to their schools to lecture threw them infidel bones to gnaw on; our business men exploited them with untempered avarice; our statesmen deceived and deluded them; and the missionaries transplanted to their soil the strife and contentions which had torn and rent the Christian fabric through centuries of bickering, hatred and animosity. They requested unity and we gave them discord; they asked for hope and we furnished them despair.

What has it cost to maintain the party spirit in the Christian realm? Let us look at the cost in China. Thousands of men and women have been shot or beheaded in one of the most tragic blood purges in all history. Human gore has rushed like a mountain torrent down the gutters of some village streets. Almost one-fifth of mankind for whom Jesus died, are enslaved in conditions indescribable even as I sit at my desk writing these words. A deep, abiding and fomenting hatred toward the West, seethes within the Chinese heart today. Indeed, this is the unity we have bequeathed to them, a unity of smouldering hatred, which, we pray God, will never be fanned into flame by the whispering breeze of destiny. It is a recognition of these things which should cause us to re-evaluate our religious divisions and divergencies, and seek to find the solution to them. Time is running out! While we fiddle, the world is aflame and burning. We may not find the answer in our generation, but the fruit of peace can never be gathered while we sow division. If we sow the seeds of peace, our children's children may know better days. This is our only hope. It is not a quick panacea. It is not an easy road to travel. It will be fraught with tears and sorrow and heartache, because of the misconception of purpose and the crucifixion of those whose ideals cause them not to mind earthly things. But someone must start. "And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace by them that make peace."

LESSONS FROM THE ENEMY

By what means did Communism succeed in China, where Christian propaganda failed? What were the points of attack and what were the methods employed? Where should we strengthen our wall of defence? Obviously no one can assess all of the factors involved in a complex revolution. We need to guard against over-simplification. But let us suggest a few things.

1. Our greatest enemy today is indifference. Our people belong to the cult of the unconcerned. Like the ancient Hebrews who rejected the testimony of their prophets, these also “put far off the evil day.” There is an underlying conviction that it cannot happen unto us. There is a feeling that we are a chosen people, that God cannot get along without us, so we need not be too worried about getting along without God. We are spiritually weakened by “luxury’s vile contagion.” Crime increases, lust intensifies, while the moral tissue is consumed by cancer. True, there is a revival of church attendance, but much of the membership is nominal, and the transforming power of the indwelling Spirit is not often felt or exhibited.

2. The first bold attack of Communism in China was against the closely knit family life which was proverbial among the people. The appeal was made to the young, and the seeds of irreverence for parents and ancestors were planted and nurtured. Mere children were taught the State was supreme, and relationship to it transcended every other. They were urged to report their own parents and grandparents who sought to teach them the old principles of equity and justice, although the children knew that such reports would mean exile or death for the parents. Young people who made such reports were granted medals in public demonstrations and made to appear heroic. Thus, the family ties were dissolved in an aura of suspicion, distrust and hate. We should take note of this and strengthen the family bonds, already so seriously loosened in our modern age.

3. The next point of attack was against landlords and employers. These were made to appear as enemies of the people, and exploiters of their strength and labor for private gain. Under the feudal system there had been many abuses. The common people had been kept in ignorance and degradation, so it was not difficult to fan the spark of hatred in the breast of the peasant. Class consciousness was created. One group was arrayed against the other. It was made to appear that by ridding themselves of the landlords a golden day would dawn in which all of the resources would be used for the good of all. Mao Tse-Tung, Chou En-Lai, and Chu-Teh played a full symphony upon the chords of primitive emotions, with their oft-repeated dictum, "From each according to his ability, to each according to his needs." Like so many high sounding slogans for public consumption, this was not administered as ideally as it sounded, being regulated by a rule of force and compulsion. We need to learn to cement our national unity and resist those forces which erode it.

CONCLUSION

The writer can lay no claim to being a philosopher or political analyst. As a very humble follower of the Nazarene he has watched the gathering storm clouds and sought to know their portent. More eagerly, a solution has been sought. It is a deep personal conviction that Christianity is again on trial in our modern world. We do not doubt the final triumph of righteousness, nor the ultimate achievement of God's purpose. We are, however, deeply concerned about that purpose for this generation, and of our part in it. Will Western civilization go down before the onslaught of barbaric and primitive forces unleashed upon the earth? If not, what is to prevent such a catastrophe? If it is true that Christianity is the last hope of our survival, how can it be applied? With whom does the answer lie?

The Roman Catholic Church, content in its belief that it is the one true church of Christ on earth, presents itself as the only hope of salvation, and invites the remainder of the Christian world to return to its fold and unite against a common enemy. Is this claim valid? If not, where shall we turn? To the World Council of Churches, representing the strongest bulwark of Protestantism? Or, to the churches which grew out of the Restoration Movement of the preceding century? If to these, to which one, or ones? Which faction or segment provides the hope which mankind seeks to find? The conservative Christian Churches? The anti-instrument churches? If these latter, which faction among the more than two dozen splinter groups? We are committed to a relentless probing and investigation, regardless of consequences. We are aware of the price one must pay for searching analysis and non-partisan investigation. We think we are willing to pay that price. If we know our hearts, we feel only an urge for discovery of truth and the courage to state it. "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

END NOTES

1. The Soul of China, by Amaury de Riencourt. Published with the Foreign Policy Research Institute of the University of Pennsylvania, by Coward-McCann, Inc., New York. Copyright 1958. All quotations by special permission of publishers. Page 144.

2. Ibid., 152.

3. Ibid., 145.

4. Ibid., 152.

Making Allowances

Mission Messenger (June 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

“Accept life with humility and patience, making allowances for each other because you love each other.” This is the translation of Ephesians 4:2 by J. B. Phillips. It contains the secret for living together in peace and harmony. Pride and impatience often produce, and certainly perpetuate, frictions in the church. We need to learn how to accept life. We cannot have our way about everything. Even God had to suffer some things which He did not approve until conditions could be altered for the better.

Love is the golden key of fellowship. If we love each other, we will make allowances for each other. We do not thrust out one physically crippled because he cannot walk like we do. We do not exclude one for abnormal physical vision or a visual defect. Then why should we drive out those who are intellectually crippled or who do not look at everything as we do? Should we not try to correct the defect in love? Parents spend their whole lives and all of their substance trying to cure a crippled child. Can we not exert every effort to help a brother with warped vision? Will it assist him to be treated like an outcast or placed in the deep freeze?

I must make allowances for those who grow old, cease to study, and become inflexible in opinion, for I will grow old. I must make allowances for those whose youth and immaturity in judgment leads them to believe they have arrived, for I was once young and knew all the answers. I must consider the circumstances of birth, early environment, parental training, temperament and disposition, of the brethren, and make allowances for these. One is not necessarily dishonest because he disagrees with me. A man may be sincere and unable to see everything like I see it. Shall I seek to undermine his influence, destroy his effectiveness, ruin his work and do him harm? Not if I love him. I will make allowances for him!

If I had been brought up to believe that Bible classes were a sign of apostasy, or that individual cups constituted a snare of Satan; if I had been taught that instrumental music in the public praise service was pleasing to God and all who opposed it were stubborn “antis,” I might even now be on the other side of certain issues. In view of this, I shall make allowances for my brethren— all of them— because I love them.

The Claims of Rome

Mission Messenger (July 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

The world of mankind faces a crisis. The storm clouds are gathering. There is an ominous portent in the air. The forces of atheistic Communism are girded for the fray. The dialectical materialism of Marx is making its bid for universal conquest of the minds of men. The “four horsemen” of the Apocalypse are prepared to ride again, grim and foreboding. To what source shall we turn for strength and power to resist? Surely, in the Christian concept lies our hope to combat naked force with moral power. But how can this force be applied in a divided Christendom?

The Roman church proposes an easy answer. In its claim of universality it contends that it alone can stem the tide, and the only hope of world survival lies in the union of the strength of all believers under the pontiff in the Vatican. To many, beset by fear and tormented by doubt, this claim appears legitimate, and they surrender to it as the only alternative in a distressed world. But the contention of Rome should be critically scrutinized in the light of history, on the same basis as Communism. It is the application of a theory to human eventualities which reveals its real nature. Communism purports to free men from intolerable conditions, but if its history reveals a story of torture, banishment, blood purges, concentration camps, and slave labor, the facts belie the claims. Romanism should be tested by the past.

It is our thesis, herein, that Roman Catholicism offers not an alternative to Communism, but merely the substitution of one authoritarian system for another, and that both of these employ, or have employed, identical methods for exercising tyranny over the minds of men. In the development of my presentation, I shall have no accusation to make against members of the Roman Catholic Church. Many of them are sincere, conscientious and upright in life. They exemplify a religious pattern in which they have been reared. I do not question their integrity, impugn their motives, nor doubt the fidelity of their citizenship. They are answerable to God, not to me, for their religious convictions and practices. My investigation is not in the field of individual conduct of priest or parishioner, but of Romanism as a system, purporting to be the true church, and thus commending itself as the only lawful defender of Christianity.

The Roman Catholic Church offers as the credentials to prove that she is the true church, what she calls her four marks. Of these it is said, “The marks of the Church are external, objective signs by which the Catholic Church can be certainly known as the authentic Church of Christ.” These marks are unity, catholicity, holiness and apostolicity. In our brief examination of these, we shall not enter into debate on the doctrines of the Roman Church. Our concern is whether or not this ponderous religio-politico institution is the church of God, and whether it can meet and withstand the onslaught of an alien ideology, and provide a better atmosphere in which freedom of mind and thought can be exercised.

1. Unity

We live in a world filled with conflict, tensions and disagreements. The soul of man desires unity and harmony. There is an ever present danger that men will grasp at a straw without investigation of its support. The Roman Church claims to have united men in faith, worship and government. This is her first credential. Is it valid?

1. Faith. It is contended that this is one and unchanging. But history reveals otherwise. A man must believe certain things now to be a Romanist, which men in other centuries did not need to believe. An example is the dogma of papal infallibility. This was defined in 1870, and belief of it is now a condition of communion. Yet in the “Declarations of the Archbishops and Bishops of the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland,” issued in 1826, under the signatures of thirty such dignitaries, appears this statement, “It is not an article of the Catholic faith, neither are they thereby required to believe, that the Pope is infallible” (McGhee’s Laws of the Papacy, page 317. 1841). The Councils of Constance, Pisa and Basil decreed that a Council was superior to the pope. The Council of Florence and the Fifth Lateran Council declared against that doctrine of the other councils.

The unity of faith in our day, is not as absolute as we would be led to believe. Just a few years ago, The Reverend Leonard J. Feeney, S. J., a noted author, lecturer and poet, was thrown out of the Jesuit order. He had previously been deprived of his priestly functions by Archbishop Richard J. Cushing, head of the Boston diocese, because he upheld the teachings of three Boston College lay professors, that there is no salvation outside the Catholic Church. The priest issued this statement about his superior, the provincial of the Jesuit order, “Father McEleney, thank God, can not take away my priesthood, nor can any of my priestly faculties be removed by the fraudulent means which I know both he and the Boston chancery have taken in their effort to keep me from annoying them in their inter-faith alliances in the city of Boston.” The dispossessed cleric can take comfort in the fact that the whole Jesuit order was banished by Roman Catholic France in 1762, as being inimical to the welfare of the country, and dissolved by Clement XIV in 1773, although later recalled by Pius VII in 1814 to lead the fight against Protestantism.

It is a known fact that there is a strong undercurrent of opposition by liberal Catholics to the superstitions and paganistic practices which characterize their church. These enlightened intellectuals bring constant pressure to bear on the conforming clergy. News of this revolt is suppressed and the daily press seldom refers to it, but it is fomenting just the same. The present pope, John XXIII, has announced an ecumenical council on Christian unity. The initial statement left an inference that Catholics and Protestants might meet on equal footing to discuss reunion. A further declaration on April 4, this year, dashed all such hopes. The pope said, "The ecumenical council will give a magnificent spectacle on unity. It will show how united is the holy church of God. By its very nature the meeting will serve as an invitation to the separated brethren who call themselves Christians to return to the common fold. The leadership and protection of that fold was given by Christ to blessed Peter by an irrevocable act of the Lord's will."

Without entering into controversy as to the primacy of Peter, we would inject a few observations as to the nature and purpose of the coming council. It is possible that the spectacle is being arranged to convince the Catholics of their unity. In Italy, the Communist party is very strong. It has required threats and pressure by the clergy to keep the environs of the Vatican from falling to the Communists. A great rally may strengthen the feeble knees. If the unity of the Catholic Church was proof that God was with her, as it is claimed, such a demonstration would hardly be required. In any event, there is nothing in such a spectacle to serve as an invitation to Protestants to return to "the common fold." They did not protest because Rome lacked spectacles. Nor can a great modern display of power, pomp, and pelf blot out the previous spectacles of men's bodies burned at the stake because there were those who dared to think for themselves.

2. Worship. Romanism is not unchanged in worship. The "communion in one kind" in which the cup is withheld from the laity is proof of this. There have been grave differences as to the number of sacraments, and early Catholic writers have disagreed with the present regulation that there are seven. Moreover, the popes have recognized the rites of the Eastern (Orthodox) Church as of equal dignity with those of Rome. Leo XIII issued a decree that any priest of Rome who tried to persuade an Orthodox priest to adopt the Latin rite would incur immediate suspension. Yet, in the Eastern Churches, immersion is universally practiced with confirmation following immediately, leavened bread is used, and both bread and cup are given to communicants, while the clergy are not required to be celibates. Since the encyclical, Orientalium dignitas, issued by Leo XIII, in 1894, if there is unity in the approved worship, it is a unity of great divergency.

2. Catholicity

The claim for catholicity is generally based upon universality of classes in constituency, numerical strength, and geographical spread. It is argued that the Roman Church is catholic because rich and poor, strong and weak, learned and unlearned are found in its membership, and because it is larger than all Protestant sects combined, and has spread to every region accessible to its missionaries. We believe there is a fallacy in this reasoning, and while it may appeal to the pride of the hierarchy, it does not prove the catholicity of the Roman Church.

The church of God is a spiritual institution and its catholicity must be determined within the realm assigned to it by God. But all of the proofs submitted by Rome are physical and tangible. It is not a question of whether representatives of all secular trades, professions, and degrees of intellectual attainment are in the organization. Nor is it a question of contrast in size with another organization, or a combination of organizations. The church of God was catholic on the day of Pentecost when it made its advent into the world. It did not develop this characteristic by admitting other nationalities. It was catholic as a part of its divine nature. The church of God is catholic because it embraces every child of God on this earth. Every saved person in the world is a member of it, added to it by God himself. To admit that there are saved persons outside of the church to which one is attached is to deny the catholicity thereof to that extent, and to affirm it is a sect, that is, a segment containing only a portion of the saved.

The church of God was catholic from its very inception. On the occasion of the first presentation of the Good News, all who gladly received the word were baptized, and all who were thus baptized were added to the body. It contained all the saved on earth that day, although there were only Jews in its number. It was universal in the spiritual realm, and has never been otherwise in any generation.

3. Holiness

The Roman Catholic Church lays no claim to special holiness of individuals within it. It offers the holiness of its doctrines as a mark of identity. One modern apologist has written of opposers, "Perhaps they may point to a few bad popes. But they have never discovered any evil doctrines. And the very fact that the Church's teaching has ever remained pure and sublime, despite some bad popes and bishops, is even a greater miracle than if all its rulers were saints." Many are restrained from investigating doctrinal errors in these days of softness and compromise. But Rome bases her contention that she is the one true church of God upon the four marks. It is but fair that we examine her credentials. In doing so we will not refer to the moral conduct of individuals. We are certain there are many upright, clean and pure persons in the Roman Catholic communion. We are concerned with doctrines.

Alphonsus Liguori was canonized May 26, 1839, by Gregory XVI. Before this event his writings were subjected to twenty rigorous examinations by the rules of Urban VIII and Benedict XIV. They were approved with “not one word worthy of censure.” In his Moral Theology, Liguori says, “Although it is not lawful to lie, or to feign what is not, however it is lawful to dissemble what is, or to cover the truth with words or other ambiguous and doubtful signs for a just cause” (Vol. 1, page 364). Again he says, “It is lawful to induce a man to commit a less evil, if he has already determined to perpetrate a greater” (Vol. 1, page 420). Once more he writes, “To swear with equivocation (when there is a just cause, and equivocation itself is lawful) is not evil” (Vol. 2, page 118). To teach that it is lawful to do evil that good may come is the basis of immorality, and contravenes the law of God.

4. Apostolicity

The claim to apostolicity centers around origin and doctrine. Neither is correct. The Roman Catholic Church did not originate with Christ or the apostles. There was a church of God in Rome in apostolic days, but it was not the Roman Catholic Church. This latter is a sect, and the mother of all sects. It is a defection from, not a continuation of, the primitive church. It is a combination of Judaism, paganism and Christianity, blended together in an authoritarian system, without scriptural sanction, and anti-scriptural in doctrine and practice.

The argument for “apostolicity of doctrine” in the face of the recognition of tradition as equally binding with the written word, is calculated to mislead only the careless and unconcerned. The doctrine of the mass, transubstantiation, infant sprinkling, papal infallibility, celibacy of the clergy, extreme unction, penance, indulgences, priestly absolution, auricular confession, holy incense, holy water, purgatory, worship of saints, genuflection before images— all of these and many more, are not apostolic. Rome attempts to make them so by wresting, twisting, and juggling the holy scriptures, but the absurd attempt only makes apparent the dearth of apostolic sanction.

We conclude that the criteria which Rome offers, when fairly measured, destroy her claim to be the true church of God, and reveal that she is rather a great religio-politico creation, spawned by a lust for power, pride and wealth. We turn now to a consideration of the reasons why the Roman Catholic Church can never be the answer to the problem of the world in its search for strength of leadership in the great conflict with atheistic Communism.

NATURE OF THE ROMAN CHURCH

The Roman Catholic Church is not the kingdom of heaven, but a replica of the Roman Empire with Christian emphasis. It is a revival of Caesarism with headquarters in the same city where it formerly flourished. The Caesars were conquerors of universal ambition. Under their sway the whole earth became tributary to Rome, the Mistress of the Tiber. Not only the temporal, but also the spiritual dominance of the earth became theirs under the prevailing cult of emperor worship. Their rule was broken and Rome shaken by the assaults of the northern European hordes of Teutonic, or Germanic origin.

Upon the ruins of pagan Rome, the “Holy Roman Empire” was built to recapture the glory that surrounded the previous empire. The splendor and pageantry which once surrounded the Caesarean court were borrowed by the papal representative; and he became the new pontifex maximus, adopting the very title once worn by the emperor. Thus, emperor worship was revived, and a royal scepter again wielded in the hand of one who claimed temporal and spiritual sovereignty over the whole earth.

The pagan world was subjugated, and appeased by adoption of their own superstitious rites, amulets, and charms, and the integration of their festal days as occasions of religious significance with a Christian bearing.

But the empire of popedom was also shattered by forces from the very same region as those which attacked the previous empire. In Germany, Switzerland, and Bohemia, there arose men who stormed the spiritual and temporal bastions of papal power, as did the Huns, Goths, and Visigoths, the empire of the Caesars. Their work was enhanced by the growing sense of democracy and human rights, which sought to free men from tyranny of mind and slavery of body. Every gain in the realm of individual conscience was a loss to Roman dominance. In the revolt against tyranny and the inauguration of an "Age of Reason" men went to the other extreme as masses always seem to do when in the process of gaining freedom, but gradually reason prevailed in the Western world and an era of unparalleled progress was ushered in.

But the seeds of Caesarism are hardy. There is reason to believe that the papacy has continued to nourish them, although buried from sight. The dream of world conquest with Rome as the center or hub of the universe has not completely faded. It is for this reason succeeding popes are Italian. Theoretically, it is believed the choice of a pontiff is directed by the Holy Spirit, but if this is true, the Spirit is prejudiced in favor of Italians. No doubt it was this reason which lay behind the endorsement of Benito Mussolini by Pius XI, who alluded to him as "the man sent by Providence," and furnished motivation for Cardinal O'Connell of Boston to refer to the fascist dictator as "A genius in the field of government given to Italy by God." But Mussolini did not prove to be the new Constantine, as he was designated by the Archbishop of Milan.

The Catholic Church poses as a champion of anti-Communism. Its propaganda is intended to create the impression that there is no other effective medium of opposition — it must be either Catholicism or Communism. This projected role coincides with the fears projected in America, and the hierarchy sensing the timeliness of the claim, works overtime to bolster the contention. It is made to appear that those who challenge these claims are Communist sympathizers, or fellow-travelers. At the risk of being branded, I deny the Catholic propaganda. Here are some of my reasons for doing so.

1. It is possible that Communism gained its strength in Russia as the result of a revolt against a dogmatic, arbitrary and authoritarian church. The Russian Orthodox Church was a branch of the Eastern, not of the Western Church. But it was patterned after Constantinople and Rome in its emphasis upon clerical domination. It was essentially the tool of the czars and aristocrats, or vice versa. The peasants were kept in ignorance, and exploited as a result of their enforced stupidity and superstition. The revolution against their clerical oppressors, as is so often the case, swept the Russian masses into the camp of another dictatorial system which promised a heaven on earth. The oppression and cruelty of the hierarchy laid the groundwork for another fanatical religion in which Khrushchev enacts the role of pope, and the commissars are the priests.

2. The methods employed by Roman Catholicism in the past to enforce conformity are identical with those of the Communist world plot. There is attempted thought control by coercion. Both have their lists of forbidden books, both use threats and boycott to abridge the freedom to speak, write or publish. Freedom of the press, of assembly, and of criticism, are unknown in areas under absolute control of one or the other. Both employ distortion of facts, both prey upon the credulous and uninformed. Reinhold Niebuhr calls them “rival absolutists.” Karl Barth says, “I see some connection between them. Both are totalitarian; both claim man as a whole. Communism uses about the same methods of organization (learned from the Jesuits). Both lay great stress on all that is visible. But Roman Catholicism is the more dangerous of the two for Protestantism. Communism will pass; Roman Catholicism is lasting.”

3. The blood purges of dissenters by Communism are surpassed by the Inquisition, the slaughter of the Huguenots, and other events in Catholicism. The Inquisition produced a combination of espionage, power and cruelty, which the masters of the Kremlin have never been able to equal. Its fiendish tortures are unrivalled in history. Neither age nor sex were spared by its army of half a million, which included archbishops, bishops, and all orders of the clergy.

Dominick, called “Saint” by the Roman Church, founder of the order of the Dominicans, is generally credited with being the kindling spirit of the Inquisition. It was intended to ferret out and exterminate “heretics,” as Rome designated those who dared to think for themselves. This court of cruelty was presided over by a general inquisitor, called Il Padre Reverissimo, the Reverend Father, and associated with him was the ordinary, or local bishop as conjudex, or co-judge. Human depravity has reached no deeper state than it did in the hearts of those who devised the rack, the pulley, and the pendulum, to torture and wring confessions from the bleeding, broken specimens whose only crime was that of protesting against a despotic religion.

“Saint” Liguori in his Moral Theology, Vol. 4, page 239, deals with the Inquisition, and how to make it an effective agency for extirpation of heresy. He affirms that heresy is a crime of the deepest dye, and urges the necessity of the child denouncing his own father, and the father denouncing the child, to the Inquisition, in case of heresy. This may be where the Kremlin learned how to handle effectively those who disagree with current political philosophy as enunciated by the ruling cult.

Rome makes a lame attempt to wash her hands of guilt by claiming that the Inquisition was the work of secular government. But those who are students of history know that “the secular arm” was an arm of the church in the countries where this diabolic engine flourished. And Rome cannot expunge the authorizations of her own popes.

Alexander IV issued a bull in A.D. 1254, in which he lamented the rise of heresy in Italy, and established the office of the Inquisition to eliminate the heretics, urging all to aid in this work. Urban IV, in 1262, issued a bull, “That the office of the Inquisition might be more efficaciously fulfilled . . . and the vine of the Lord— the heretics being exterminated— might bear the fruit of Catholic purity.” Clement V, in the Council of Vienna, A.D. 1311, issued the decree, regarding treatment of heretics, “But to deliver them into hard bondage, or close confinement— which pertains rather to punishment than to close custody— or to expose them to tortures, or to proceed to sentence against them, the bishop shall not be able to do without the inquisitor, or the inquisitor without the bishop or his official.”

It was in Spain that the Inquisition reached its true depth of infamy. Here, Roman priestcraft had forcibly subjected Jews, under threat of punishment and death, to what was termed “Christian baptism.” Their infants were snatched from their arms and taken to the cathedrals, where they were sprinkled. Many of the Jews outwardly submitted to “baptism” but secretly kept alive their rites of Judaism. To hunt these down “the hounds of heresy” were given the power of the Inquisition. Torquemada, whose name lives in infamy, was appointed Inquisitor General of Spain, by Pope Sixtus, in 1483, and confirmed to the office by Innocent VIII.

As late as February 20, 1751, Benedict XIV, published a bull relating to heresy, in which he said, “If the crime of heresy is treated of; since, by our predecessor, John XXI, who is called XXII, in his constitution beginning ‘Ex parte vestra’ in the Roman Bullarium, Vol. 1, it has already been decreed, ‘that heretics, or those suspected of heresy— also Jews, who, when they have been converted to the Catholic faith, thence fell into apostacy— if they fly to a Church, ought to be immediately dragged out from thence by the inquisitor. . . .”

CONCLUSION

The Roman Catholic religio-politico system offers no adequate defence against Communism. Both are totalitarian, both have employed the same means and taken the same measures to tyrannize human thought. The freedom of mankind will be endangered by one as much as the other. Although the threat against liberty comes from different angles, and with divergent emphases, the ultimate goal will be the same. The alternative then for the lover of truth, is not Communism or Romanism, but opposition to both of these, and for the same basic reasons.

If this article falls into the hands of those who are members of the Roman Catholic communion, and if they should dare to read it, we beg all such to remember that our opposition is not to them as individuals. We love and respect those who are sincere in their honest convictions. We entertain no personal feeling of hatred or animosity toward any of them. Our controversy is with the great system of error to which they have pledged allegiance, but while we are committed to an unrelenting conflict with all forms of error and tyranny, we maintain a deep love for those in error. We represent no anti-Catholic party, steeped in bigotry and dealing in innuendo and spite. Our opposition is not based upon the fact that certain ones are Catholic, but that Catholicism is systematized error, containing a threat to what we hold dear. We oppose it, not because it is Catholicism, but because it is error. The writer is a member of the holy, catholic, and apostolic church of the new covenant scriptures, and of nothing else religiously. The Roman Catholic Church is a deviate from that church, and we earnestly pray that all of our friends who are members of it will study, investigate, and resolve to become Christians— and Christians only! One may do that and be neither Roman Catholic or Protestant!

Facing the Facts

Mission Messenger (July 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

The unity of all believers in Christ challenges the thinking of all segments of our divided world. The pope of Rome has announced a council to consider it. The World Council of Churches, organized in Amsterdam, in 1948, has sparked an ecumenical movement among Protestants. Charles Clayton Morrison writes, "The ecumenical movement for a united church is the resurgence in Protestantism of the same undertaking which inspired the great Reformers, but which they were unable to consummate." The march of events has crystallized into the greatest opportunity in the history of the church for men with a vision and a program to secure attention for their contributions to the religious thought of the age. There is an almost universal acknowledgment that division is a sin of the first magnitude.

In these times, so pregnant with possibilities, what is the role enacted in the great drama, by those congregations which grew out of the Restoration movement which began as a genuine attempt to achieve the unity of all believers? It is not unfair to say that now, while others seek the way of peace, these continue to wage bitter war among themselves. Far from measuring up to the demands of the age, they only contribute to the confusion by multiplying schisms and sowing discord. Motivated by fear and the partisan spirit they have withdrawn from the stream of humanity and secluded themselves inside the walls of their own castles, where they employ the energy which should be expended against the arch-foe in hacking to pieces their own brethren. Never before has God opened up such a great door and effectual, never has a body of people manifested greater indifference or shown themselves to be more ineffective and childish. Satan has inoculated them with envy, jealousy, wrath, strife, and the party spirit, and has not only successfully destroyed the effectiveness of their witness to an ideal, but has turned the sword of brother against brother, with a cunning that removes them from the arena at the very time when their labors could be most effective for peace.

There are some twenty-five splinter parties which have grown out of the movement for restoration of the primitive order. Each of these regards itself as the one true, holy, apostolic, and catholic church of Christ. The members of each party regard the members of all the others as apostates, traitors, and heretics. Fellowship is extended only to those who parrot the party line. Brotherhood is restricted to a charmed circle, the circumference of which is hounded by unwritten creeds, enforced with bitterness and animosity. Mistaking the restoration movement itself for the church of God, no one is regarded as a child of God who does not, at least pay lip service to Church-of-Christ-ism, the modern substitution for the primitive order announced by the ambassadors of our blessed Lord.

Just as Roman Catholicism exists today as a visible manifestation of the length to which the church of God may go when dominated by the overpowering ambition of men, so “The Church of Christ” in many communities is a living demonstration of what happens to the church of God when it becomes a victim of the corrosive, destructive influence of the party spirit. And, as the former can never unite the Christian world so long as it maintains papal authority, so the latter can never do so while it retains the dogmatic, exclusivist attitude which so often characterizes it, making it part of the problem, instead of part of the answer to division and strife.

What can be done to restore the spirit of restoration? Is it possible to recapture the ideals and regain the glorious vision of yesteryear? There is no easy answer, no patent solution. Much rubbish has accumulated about the walls. It can be done, but it will require enduring prayer, arduous toil, patient exploration. Those who lead in restoration will be subjected to false accusation, bitter recrimination, and open hostility by those with whom they labored. The party spirit does not easily relinquish its victims. There must be a complete change of attitude, a transformation of thought leading to a reformation of life and heart.

The first great test will come when one faces up to his relationship to God, Christ, and the kingdom of heaven as revealed in the sacred scriptures. He must be humble enough to admit that the segment of the disciple brotherhood to which he belongs, in which he has labored, and to which he has contributed his money and labor, is by its nature a faction. This does not mean he is factious. There are those in sects who are not sectarian, those in parties who are not partisan. But so long as one visualizes the segment to which he is attached as the universal church of God, and all others who are not members of it as being out of Christ Jesus, he reveals an ignorance of the true nature of the constituency of the church of God, and of the benefits accruing from the new birth of water and Spirit.

I do not recall having met a member of "The Church of Christ" who was not allied with some party, segment, or faction. Most of these deny that the fragment to which they are attached is a faction inside the restoration movement. They regard all of the others as factions, but the splinter to which they yield allegiance is the church of God on earth, the one kingdom over which the Lord Jesus reigns in power and might. Some believe that the God of the universe spent four thousand years preparing the world for a Christocracy founded upon the great and abiding principles of opposition to bible classes, individual cups, unfermented wine, pre-millennialism lesson leaves, and a host of other things too numerous to mention. This is the culmination of the purpose of the ages, the beau ideal of the plan of heaven, the fruition of the messages of the prophets, that Jesus might sit at the right hand of God, supervising a group of narrow partisans who judge a man's loyalty to the Messiah by how he breaks the loaf, or whether he drinks the fruit of the vine out of a little glass or a big one. Over such matters has the church been split, shivered, and fragmented under the plea of faithfulness.

If a man can truly face up to the real issue, he will have no problem with the lesser ones. This is difficult. It demands a species of humility, and humiliation, foreign to the character of most of the followers of the Nazarene. The difficulty is illustrated in the pitiable pleas of many who hate peacemakers. They cry that they know the church has many things which need correcting, that it suffers from many ills, but they deplore the efforts of those who rise above all party relationships and emotions, and strike at the heart of the trouble, which is the party spirit itself. When they talk of purifying the church, they mean to merely correct the conduct of some in the party.

It is hard for many to admit they have ever been wrong about anything. Those who are the most exacting with and censorious of others, who are harsh and intolerant in their accusations, seem never to be guilty of any error. Seldom does a man of prominence say "I was wrong," or "I have sinned." Like the Catholic priests, when they quote, "Confess your faults one to another," it is always the other one who must do the confessing. But the real truth of it is that with few, if any, exceptions, every member of the disciple brotherhood has been allied with a faction, a segment, a fragment of the church of God. Those who deny this, and disclaim it with the greatest force, are generally the most bitterly partisan of all.

There is no dishonor attached to such past affiliation, for the simple reason there has been no way to avoid it. Those who have obeyed the gospel under any preacher of the twenty-five splinter parties calling themselves “The Church of Christ” have been forthwith adopted into the party represented by the one who baptized them, and have been indoctrinated in its interpretations, unwritten creedalism, and tests of fellowship. We live in a decadent age of Christianity. Most of us have never created a party. These divisions and subdivisions occurred before we were born.

We have inherited them, or been adopted into them, as a result of circumstances of birth, environment or association. But it is a sin to perpetuate them. The party spirit is treason against God.

What shall we do? The first impulse is to get out of the party in which we find ourselves. Those who do usually join another. They “jump from the frying pan into the fire.” We should not abandon our brethren to their fate without doing all we can to help them. Those afflicted with the party spirit are sick. They need help. We will not assist them by sharing in, condoning, or defending the party spirit. One does not need to contract scarlet fever to aid those who have it. At the conclusion of our series of articles on the decline of western civilization, we hope to present several articles which will enable all who love Jesus to come to grips with the situation, and to find a solution. In the meantime, we humbly suggest a few things which will help us to do something practical and effective about the problem.

1. Transform your life through a change of attitude. You can do this through prayer, personal confession to God, and a careful re-study of the teachings of our Lord. Do not read the scriptures through “Church of Christ” lens, but “with unveiled face, beholding the glory of the Lord, and being changed into his likeness.” Let love seep into your heart and permeate your whole being, so that your soul can expand and reach out toward others.

2. Do not be hesitant to recognize as brethren, all the children of God. Many are afraid to use the word “brother,” lest someone get the idea they endorse the position of the other. There is nothing in the word that indicates endorsement of another’s views. It signifies only recognition of another’s relationship to you in Christ. In the face of admonitions to “love the brotherhood,” and to “let brotherly love continue,” we should be afraid to not call the children of God our brothers. One has a shriveled soul indeed who equates brotherhood within partisan boundaries and excludes all except those who agree with him on every point. Remember, that if a man is in Christ Jesus, you do him no harm by refusing to call him your brother, but you do yourself inestimable harm. It is an open insult to God to deny that His children are your brothers.

3. Never consider that any case is a closed book so long as the division resulting therefrom is still existent. No case is ever settled as God wants it settled while alienation and schism still exist. Be merciful and compassionate enough to review any situation in meekness and love, and in the light of your maturing concepts and conscience. You might have been mistaken. It may be no sin to be mistaken, but it is a sin to allow your mistakes to go uncorrected. Do not let your adamant and unyielding attitude “cause the ruin of one for whom Christ died.” It could be that what you call “faithfulness to the Book” may be stubborn pride in your own judgment.

4. Labor constantly to develop those with whom you are associated into a nonsectarian community of saints. This will require that you keep before them the ideal that we ought never to make anything a test of fellowship which God has not made a condition of salvation. Teach the brethren to be willing to listen to others of divergent views, and not to make opinions a basis of union or disunion. It is not the man who commends himself that is accepted, but the man whom the Lord commends. “Follow after things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another.” By this means “as grace is extended to more and more people, it may increase thanksgiving to the glory of God.”

5. Be ready to admit that we have not yet attained unto the goal of a complete restoration of the ancient order. We must not regard ourselves as those who have arrived, but as those who are on the way. There are many barriers yet to remove, and many obstacles to be surmounted. While we are marching on the road toward a closer walk with God, many others are doing the same. Let us not drive them back because of their lack of knowledge of some things we have learned, but let us rather give them a helping hand. We need not compromise truth to succor those who are trying to find it. Jesus is a merciful and faithful high priest in the service of God, because he has himself suffered and been tempted, and thus is “able to help those who are tempted.” He is no less faithful to God, because he is merciful toward men.

6. Be as willing to acknowledge truth wherever you find it, as you are to condemn error. None of us are right on every thing; none are wrong on every point. Any man is right only in so far as he apprehends truth and accepts it; he is in error to the extent that he does not. We are indeed partisan when we hesitate to commend the good done by others, lest by upholding his good, we reflect against our own party.

To those who love the Lord Jesus, and who, by circumstances of birth and training, find themselves in one of the current sects— Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, etc.— we very humbly plead that we can never be truly one in Christ Jesus, by building up these divergent bodies. They only separate and segregate the believers. It is possible for all of us to be one in Him, and none of us ever give up a single truth we have ever held. We need to surrender nothing vital to be united as Christians, and Christians only. Creeds produced by human arrangement have come to mean little to the present religious world. No longer are men held aloof from each other because of strong convictions as to Arminianism, Socinianism, or Calvinism. Modern divisions are not maintained because of profound theological differences. The average member of a Protestant sect does not know the basic contentions of his group. Would it not be possible, then, in answer to the prayer of Jesus, for us to sink into the depths of oblivion, those things which are distinctive in the various sects, and stand together upon the abiding principles of truth, as revealed in Christ Jesus?

We solicit your letters and comments. We will read them for our good. We can learn from our readers. Conveyance of knowledge is not by a one-way route. Even if your comments are written in a spirit of faultfinding and bitterness, we would like to study them. Because we want truth more than anything else, we shall look beneath the wrapping and seek for the content. We are not so much concerned about the shell as about the kernel. And there is just no way by which you can make us hate you. We receive letters tinctured with animosity, filled with dire predictions and even false accusations. None of these arouse resentment against the writers. We love them, bless them, pray for them, and seek for opportunities to do good unto them.

The editor refuses to be categorized with any party. We are not a spokesman for, nor a champion or representative of, any party. We oppose many things, but not from a partisan standpoint. We recognize as our brethren, in fact and in reality, every sincere and conscientious immersed believer in the Lord Jesus. We are in fellowship with all such; we are in full agreement with none. We endorse all that is right in any one of them; we oppose any thing that is wrong in all of them.

It is our firm conviction that unless we rise above partisan views and procedures we will utterly fail this era of challenge and opportunity. We need to recognize our past associations and affiliations for what they were. We gain nothing by rationalization which leads us to feel that our party is composed of the elect of God to the exclusion of all others on earth. We can make no real impact upon the world from behind self-erected walls of monastic exclusion. Christianity is not a shrinking, cringing, fearful philosophy, but a virile, powerful force imbued by the Holy Spirit.

We have seen the movement to restore the primitive order go aground and founder upon the rocks of partisanship. The glorious vessel which set sail under such auspicious circumstances now lies helpless, lashed by the waves, battered by the breakers, and disintegrating under the startled gaze of those whom she set forth to rescue, and who are marooned on the windswept islands of sectarianism. Those who walk her decks have mutinied against the Captain, fallen out among themselves, and now rove as predatory bands, preying upon each other.

Is it not time that we heed our advice as given to the rest of the religious world? Shall we not abandon our party enterprises, go back beyond our divisions and schisms, renounce those things which fractured and splintered us, and abandon them to the moles and bats, in behalf of the noblest plea ever made to a divided world? Shall we continue to flatter ourselves that we are the chosen people of God as we fight, split and divide, at the very time when the rest of the religious world is seeking the means of uniting? Do we think more of our divisive possessions than we do of the one body? Will we maintain and revive the feuds bequeathed to us by our fathers, who often mistook zeal for the party, for service to the Lord of all the earth? Shall we perpetuate in our folly, and preserve to our shame, the schisms which grew out of the aroused and unrestrained passions of other generations? Have we learned nothing from history except how to divide?

We make no plea that you come to us. We are not seeking to build “a nonpartisan party.” A Ketcherside party would be as reprehensible as one built around Luther, Calvin, or any other finite, erring and sinful man. We disclaim all partisan ambition, and seek to crucify all partisan spirit. We will not build, nor allow any one else to build a “Mission Messenger faction.” This little journal is not the mouthpiece of a party. It is not the official organ of any group. It is a means of expression for the thoughts of the editor, and such others as care to write, and for whom space can be found. But it is not “a brotherhood enterprise” and will not become such in spite of the secret and overt attempts of some pressure groups to make it so.

Our statements in this issue will arouse resentment. We will be castigated and maligned, and, as usual, misrepresentation will be rife. We are willing to pay that price, because we labor under the conviction that we live in dangerous times. Someone must risk reputation and personal welfare to stop the plunge toward destruction of all we hold dear. In no sense of heroic sacrifice, but in a sense of humble urgency produced by the feeling that it is later than we think, I have written.

The Protestant Picture

Mission Messenger (August 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

We live in a world filled with problems, tensions and fears. Our way of life is challenged as never before. Western civilization is being weighed in the balances of destiny. We are haunted by the grim specter of a godless ideology lurking in the shadows, scheming, planning, waiting, ready to crush out all we hold dear. Against such an implacable foe, the application of raw force in concrete and physical form will eventually prove unavailing. The philosophy of dialectical materialism, formulated by Karl Marx, must be met and vanquished by a philosophy of spiritual strength and power. It is the conviction of this writer that our hope of survival lies in adoption and implementation of the way of life exemplified, expounded and embodied by Jesus of Nazareth. But to whom can we turn for leadership in these times of crisis? Where is the Christian way now exemplified in such a manner as to exert a universal influence of sufficient power to offset the threat to our world?

Last month we examined the claim of Rome to be the one holy, catholic, and apostolic church of God upon earth, and thus, the only source of hope in the fight against world Communistic domination. We offered certain proofs to demonstrate the fallaciousness of the first contention, and enumerated our reasons for rejecting the second. In this issue we scrutinize the Protestant realm in an endeavor to determine if we may rely upon obtaining help from that direction.

Our task in this instance is more difficult. What is Protestantism? Is it capable of adequate definition? Even the origin of the term as currently used is not understood by the majority, who have a vague notion that it arose from the act of Martin Luther in tacking ninety-five theses upon the church door in Wittemberg. The notion is incorrect. The emperor Charles V. called a diet at Spire, in 1529. He had two purposes in mind. One was to enlist aid from the German princes against the Turks; the other to resolve the fierce disputes over religious matters engendered by Luther's opposition to the Roman Church. In this diet, Ferdinand, Archduke of Austria, in company with other papal princes, decreed that no Roman Catholic should be allowed to become a Lutheran, and no reformer should be allowed to speak contrary to the received doctrine of the church. Against this decree a solemn and formal protest was registered by six princes: John and George, electors of Saxony and Brandenburg; Ernest and Francis, dukes of Lunenburg; the landgrave of Hesse; and the prince of Anhalt. They were joined in the protest by the deputies of thirteen imperial towns. These were therefore called Protestants.

The term itself has a negative bearing. It indicates a state of opposition to an existing order or condition. Webster defines a Protestant as, "Any Christian not of the Roman Catholic Church or the Eastern Church." Protestantism is not a church, and has never claimed to be the church. Because of the many divergencies and divisions among the various bodies ascribed to Protestantism, it is difficult to write a thesis which will do justice to all and render unfairness to none. It is our desire and intention to be as objective as possible in any appraisal of this nature.

There have been great changes wrought in the Protestant realm in the last century, and tremendous alterations and adjustments are under way in these days. Unfortunately, those for whom we write are generally unaware of such re-alignments. Our readers are chiefly drawn from various segments resulting from the restoration movement which was promoted by the Campbells, Stone, Scott, et. al., in the first half of the nineteenth century. The splinter parties allied with this movement have insulated and isolated themselves from the great bulk of the religious world which they started out to unite in Jesus the Christ, and have occupied themselves chiefly with fighting among themselves, to the utter abandonment of their original noble ideal and purpose. So far have they drifted from their moorings at this time that one is looked upon with gravest suspicions if he even repeats the plea for the unity of all believers so eloquently voiced by the restoration pioneers.

As a result of their confinement and entombment behind the monastic walls of their own construction, the majority are wholly oblivious of the present position of Protestantism. Notable changes have taken place since the days of Alexander Campbell. How much of this transformation may be traceable, directly or indirectly, to his influence, we have no way of knowing. But to use the same war cries and to make the same accusations as a century ago will only serve to demonstrate the ignorance and date the information of the opponent, and render his testimony futile and ineffective among thinking people.

When Campbell launched his effort, men were contending sharply for their respective creeds, the party spirit was rife and intense, and doctrinal feeling was at high tide. He describes it thus:

While protestant hatred to the Roman pontiff and the papacy continued to increase, a secret lust in the bosoms of protestants for ecclesiastical power and patronage worked in all the members of the protestant states, and ultimately introduced a swarm of protestant popes, who gradually assimilated the new church to the old. . . . The power of religion was soon merged in debates about forms and ceremonies, in speculative strifes of opinion, and in fierce debates about the political and religious right of burning heretics. . . . After the protestants had debated their own principles with one another till they lost all brotherly affection, and would as soon have ‘communed in the sacrament’ with catholics as with one another; speculative abstracts of christian Platonism, the sublime mysteries of Egyptian theology, became the bond of union and the apple of discord, among the fathers and friends of the reformation.”¹

The state of things described no longer exists. It is useless to rail against creeds, or to take great time and space in analyzing them, with a view to altering the perspective of the average Protestant. A contemporary Catholic scholar says, “Unfortunately, many Protestants do not know exactly what their particular church teaches, nor why it teaches it. They are baffled when anyone asks them what their religion has to offer that any other religion does not have.”

It is just as useless to talk about “warring sects,” for they no longer dispute, debate and belabor each other. It is a source of pathetic amusement to hear some radio speakers denounce wrangling, warring sects in one breath, then in the next condemn their councils, alliances, and cooperative enterprises. There is more bitterness, strife and debate among “The Churches of Christ” than among all of the Protestant sects taken together, for among these last, hostility and hatred have practically vanished. They are still sects, but they are not “warring” upon each other. They are like neighboring tribes who have “buried the hatchet.” Let us glance briefly at the historic changes in Protestantism since inauguration of our century, now more than half completed. At the close of the nineteenth century the theologians were basking in the “peace of their self content.” Influenced more than most of them realized or would admit by the Darwinian theory of survival of the fittest and the upward trend of mankind, indoctrinated in the German philosophic idealism of Kant, Schleiermacher, Lotze, Troeltsch, and others, it was believed that man by his inherent goodness and inborn qualities of moral strength, would build a world of social equality and ethical values. The kingdom of heaven would be attained on earth by application of the philosophic principles of humanism with the aid of science and technology. All that was required to make earth a paradise and to cause “the desert to blossom like a rose,” was the implementation of a social gospel which would establish a true “brotherhood of man” as naturally as day follows night. The very titles of the books of that day reflect the ideal. There was, for example, Theology and the Social Consciousness, by Henry Churchill King, released in 1901; and Social Idealism and the Changing Theology, by Gerald Birney Smith, published in 1912.

But the prevailing philosophy, which was styled liberal theology, was given a series of rude shocks which shattered the spirit of complacency and forced a restudy of the accepted formulae. The first of these was the eruption of World War I, which pitted most of the rest of the world against Germany, the very seat of philosophic idealism. Once more “man’s inhumanity to man, made countless thousands mourn.” While the world was still staggering from the impact of this cataclysm of carnage and sorrow, the economic realm was shaken to its very roots by the depression and virtual panic which resulted.

Then came the next World War, and the fine spun theories of human behaviorism tumbled as did the burning buildings under the impact of “Block-buster” bombs. The depth of human depravity in the midst of a great cultural civilization was seen in the gas chambers and lime pits of Dachau and Buchenwald. The groans of the dying, and the agonized screams of the tortured, cried out for a new evaluation of God and man, of life and death, of human rights and responsibilities. Thus, out of the furnace of affliction, Protestantism has had to forge a new approach to the problem of modern man. In some phases, at least, this has amounted to a rediscovery of vital, but forgotten truths.

First in importance is the realization that a united world cannot be achieved by a divided church. Whereas, in the days of Campbell, sectarian division was a cause of glorying and rejoicing, there has come a complete reversal of thought, and such division is almost universally regarded as sin. Never before in the history of the Christian faith has there been so much written upon the subject of unity as is being written today. Book after book is produced dealing with the ecumenical movement. Sermons are being delivered, forums conducted, symposiums held, class discussions inaugurated, in all of which the goal of a united Protestant world is held out as a hope. It is affirmed that “the ecumenical movement for a united church is the resurgence in Protestantism of the same undertaking which inspired the great Reformers, but which they were unable to consummate.”

The writer of those lines, strikes a note of urgency in the same book, with the following words:

Our civilization is in a state of collapse. The old stabilities are dissolving before our eyes. The old world of America and of historical Protestantism is passing away. Whether a new world will rise from the chaos of the present, and whether, if it does, it will be better or worse than the world we have known, no man can tell. Only faith in the God of history can enable us to ride the tempestuous waves of this universal unrest and uncertainty. . . . The thought of carrying our impotent sectarianism into such a scene as that toward which the forces of history may be taking us, should awaken us to realize that in this world convulsion, the destiny of Protestantism itself is involved. Either it will decay with the decaying significance of its sectarian churches, as some believe that it will, or a new Protestantism will emerge, emancipated from its anarchic sectarianism and competent, under Christ, to gather up the fragments of a shattered civilization and build a new world.”²

We rejoice in the recapture of certain concepts which commend themselves to our hearts as being right and proper according to the scriptures of the new covenant. We mention only a few.

1. The realization of the fact expressed in the prayer of Jesus that the one thing essential to getting the world to believe that God sent Him is to get those who do believe to be one. To state it in other words, the world will be won to belief in Jesus, when those who believe in Jesus are one! In conjunction with this view, it is interesting to read these words from Charles Henry Brent, late American Episcopal Bishop of the Philippines:

It is little short of absurd to try to bring into the Church of Christ the great nations of the Far East unless we can present an undivided front. For purely practical reasons we feel the necessity of the Church's realization of unity. It must be either that or failure in our vocation.

2. The recognition that denominationalism is a hindrance to the realization of God's purpose in one body. Charles Clayton Morrison refers to the true church as being in "bondage to the apostate denominational system," and says that the desired goal can only be possible "by the dissolution of the denominational churches." Archbishop William Temple declared, "In a sense it is required that every existing Christian communion should die in order to rise again into something more splendid than itself." The idea of the incompatibility of denominationalism with God's eternal will is a radical departure from the apologies offered in bygone days. The defender of denominationalism is now behind the times, a relic of the past, and completely out of step with current reasoning.

3. Charles W. Gilkey, one time instructor in homiletics at McCormick Theological Seminary and Garrett Biblical Institute, and member of the board of Union Theological Seminary, writes of one of his friends, who said, as he looked back upon a long career of preaching, "I have rediscovered the church." This is a phenomenon of these days. For years liberal philosophers scoffed at the church and at religious organization. They regarded the church as wholly outmoded and derelict. They spoke of it as a kind of poor and embarrassing relative. But the current literature is filled with what some of us have known all of the time, that the church is related to Jesus, as a wife is to her husband, and “what God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.” It is amusing to read of religious doctors and professors who think they have succeeded in bringing the church back home to Jesus, whereas they have never been separated. The professors have just been away from home, and have mistaken their absence for that of the church. It is refreshing to read the encomiums upon the church, so vigorously and eagerly given, by those who used to sidle off so as not to be identified with the “church idea.”

4. There is a new appreciation of fellowship. Once more God’s people are looked upon as a family, or social unit. The purposes of God are not to be fulfilled by “souls, like stars, who dwell apart, in a fellowless firmament.” The judgment of God that “it is not good for man that he should be alone,” is seen to be as applicable in the spiritual and intellectual, as in the physical sphere.

5. Baptism is being given a new emphasis. There is a turning away from infant sprinkling. Under the impact of current investigation, the Christian life is conceived of as one of total commitment, which to be total, must be personal and individual. It cannot, in its very essence, be the commitment of one person by another, but it must be voluntary and spontaneous. In such a recognition sprinkling of infants must go. When Alexander Campbell started his trek from sectarianism he faced his first major test at the birth of his infant son. The infant was not sprinkled. For generations, since the days of Luther, it has seemed that the question of infant sprinkling was settled, and that there would be no attempt to return to the primitive practice. Now the whole matter is again at the forefront of discussion, with such men as Karl Barth and Emil Brunner, affirming that infant baptism is wholly out of focus with the biblical concept of the church. Those of us who have read “Studies in the Original Christian Baptism” by Johannes Warns, with the appealing introduction by his brother-in-law, Erich Sauer, know what great changes are taking place in our days. Truly the Spirit of God is still working!

CONCLUSION

We ask our readers to bear with us a little longer. We have sought to portray for you significant trends in modern Protestantism. We must now express our personal conviction as to the place of Protestantism in the mammoth struggle for the minds of men. We make this statement very humbly, sincerely, and with godly fear. We have a very deep respect for all who sincerely seek to serve the Christ. We love all who are affiliated with the various branches of Protestantism. We do not question that many of them are children of our Father which is in Heaven, and are, by the same token, our brethren, divided and separated though we may be. We acknowledge every truth held by every one of them. We would not discourage any, but prefer to encourage them to greater love for God, greater zeal and study.

However, honesty demands that in all candor, we openly declare that we do not accept the idea that Protestantism, as such, either united or disunited, is the answer to the problem confronting us. We believe that answer lies with the fellowship that is known in the scriptures of the new covenant as the church of God. The church of God was antecedent to Protestantism as it was to Roman Catholicism. To strengthen Protestantism is not, therefore, to build up the church of God. To unite the various sects and factions, of Protestantism, is not, thereby, to restore the church of God. We rejoice and thank God for every tendency upon the part of those in Protestantism to discover anew those principles and precepts which will lead in the direction of the restoration of the church of God, but Protestantism of itself is no more the church of God than is the Restoration Movement.

If I may be allowed an opinion at this juncture, it seems to me that modern Protestantism is sending forth its knights in shining armor, searching for the “holy grail” of an adequate theology, from which all may drink to spiritual satisfaction. But, like Sir Launfal, these may overlook and pass by the Christ, in the intensity of their quest. The Protestant world seems to become enraptured with each new philosophy, and men like Paul Tillich, of Harvard, captivate the American segment, at least, with such words as “theonomy,” and “ontology,” and with such expressions as: “The message of Christianity is not Christianity, but a New Reality. A New State of things has appeared, it still appears; it is hidden and visible, it is there and it is here. Accept it, enter into it, let it grasp you.” Perhaps the best reaction to modern systematic theology is found in the words of Jesus, “And they shall say to you, See here; or see there: go not after them, nor follow them” (Luke 17:23).

We pray that the day may yet come when all sectarianism may be dissolved under the rays of divine love, when the party spirit may be crucified and interred as a part of the old man of sin, when it will no longer be a question of uniting the various denominations in a grand ecumenical movement, but the uniting of all who love the Lord as members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones. To that end we will work and labor until the sunset claims us, to that task will we dedicate our feeble efforts “with malice toward none and with charity toward all.”

1. Christianity Restored, by Alexander Campbell. Published by McVay and Ewing, Bethany, Virginia, 1835, page 4.

2. The Unfinished Reformation. Charles Clayton Morrison, D.D., Litt.D., LL.D., Copyright, 1953, by Harper and Brothers, New York. Page 47. By special permission of copyright owners.

What Divides Us?

Mission Messenger (August 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

Archbishop William Temple, of the Church of England, uttered a profound statement when, in speaking of the disunity existing in the Protestant realm, he said, “So long as any of us are in schism, all are in schism.” To those of my brethren who restrict the church of God in this age to the heirs of the Restoration movement undertaken by the Campbells and their contemporaries, this statement still strikes home with tremendous impact. I do not equate that movement with the church of God, but most of my brethren do, reluctant as they would be to admit it. The disciple brotherhood is fractured into more than two dozen splinter parties, each with its unwritten creed and its special tests of fellowship. Each one of these claims to be the church, whole and entire, perfect and wanting nothing; each regards the others as factions.

This attitude precludes any possibility of ever achieving unity while it exists, as each separate unit remains fixed and adamant, demanding that all others move toward it. So long as each regards itself as “the faithful church” and all others as disloyal and apostate, we are treated to the ludicrous picture of some twenty-five organizations making an identical claim, at the same time that the very attitude of each makes its claim impossible and ridiculous. Yet, it is only by a common recognition that these bodies can make an approach toward unity and begin to answer the prayer of God’s Son. If each will recognize itself for what it really is, a party or segment, and not the whole, then all of the parts can begin to move toward each other and come closer together. It is in the very nature of things that if one regards itself as “the faithful church” it will create an ever-widening rift between itself and the others. If each regards itself thus, then all must shrink from the others, and the space will continue to become greater between them all.

The term “schism” means “a rent, or tear, as in a garment.” If a garment is torn into four pieces, neither of these four is the garment in its entirety. And if the garment is rent, and one part is in schism, all are in schism. Even the Roman soldiers at the cross knew that much, and thus cast lots for the garment of the Saviour. Each knew that if it was torn he would not have the garment but a remnant.

Neither of the splinter parties to the Restoration movement is “the faithful church” for all have been guilty of the wrong attitude, and that attitude is the tap root of most of the sins of schism and division. This is an inherited condition. We did not create these parties. They were created by our fathers, but they will be perpetuated by us, unless we conquer the party spirit. It is here the devil will make his last stand in the hearts of most of us. Pride will cause us to rebel against the very thought of admitting that our party is not the one church of God in its entirety, whereas, the members of all the others are not brethren, but outcasts, apostates, heathen and publicans. Preachers of the gospel will have the greatest fight, because they have professed to know the most, and it is more difficult for them to admit an error, seeing they have set themselves up as “instructors of babes, and teachers of the Gentiles.”

Brethren will try every way they can to avoid the showdown. They will plead for sympathy by prejudicial methods, they will try to escape the partisan stigma by creating new parties, they will accuse those who face boldly up to truth as being traitors. None of these things affect the real issue. The disciple brotherhood is divided. Division is contrary to the will of God. The party spirit is a sin. No single one of these parties is the church of God exclusively. Therefore, every one of us has been in a party or faction! There is no use trying any longer to damn every one else to hell in a vain attempt to save ourselves. We may all be damned together by perpetuating division, none of us can be saved by doing so!

Some brethren impractically think that all we need to do is talk about Jesus, and quit talking about unity, fellowship and restoration, and we will cure all of the ills of the world. Such an approach to the grave problems of our day is childish, immature and pathetic. It is not describing the character, or discussing the attributes of a physician that makes a patient well, but taking the medicine prescribed by that physician, if it is bitter or not! The way to show you love Jesus is to try and answer His prayer. You can write about Him until He comes again, but that will not cure a sick church or a sick world. No one can do a better job of writing about Jesus than the Holy Spirit, but despite His writings which we have had for nineteen centuries, we are in a mess. Why? We have not been humble enough to apply what He said to ourselves!

One sign of maturity is to face up to things as they are. The immature create dream worlds of fantasy into which they can retire. They like to build little walls of presumed perfection about their world. They resent those walls being torn down by the battering ram of fact, they cannot stand the cold hand of truth tumbling them from their cozy nests. But fact is fact, and truth is truth, regardless of what you do to the man who declares it. You can stop your ears, gnash your teeth, refuse to listen— or cancel your subscription— but what you do does not affect truth one whit! Truth does not become false because you refuse to read it, or because you may rant and rage in your helplessness because you cannot destroy it!

Not every congregation in these days is partisan. Under leadership of godly men some are throwing off the shackles. They have renounced the party spirit, and when that spirit is discarded, littleness, bigotry, hate and factionalism will die. We have had little leadership of a non-partisan character. All of us have been trained to represent a clique, segment, or group. Many cannot do otherwise. They are motivated by fear! They dread the misrepresentation of motive and teaching, the boycott and ostracism, the hostility of those who once regarded them with reverence.

It takes genuine courage to face up to the fact that though we have differed with others on many points of understanding and interpretation, and still do, that in one respect we are all in the same boat. We may have been in an anti-Sunday School faction, a one cup faction, a fermented wine faction, an anti-institutional faction, a premillennial faction, an anti-premillennial faction— we could run the whole gamut of things that have torn, rent, split and shivered us to bits, yet all of us know that none of these divided us. It was not classes, cups or instruments that divided God's people. These are all neutral. They are neither good or evil in themselves. It was the party spirit that divided us. The things enumerated may be a sin, or they may not, as used, but the party spirit is a sin. The Holy Spirit says it is! You could be right about all of these other things and still be a sinner by manifesting the party spirit. I suspect that if we conquer it, most other things will take care of themselves and go to their proper places eventually!

A Dangerous Reply

Mission Messenger (August 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

Our brother in the Lord, Roy Loney, favors us with a seven-page mimeographed document of a purely doctrinal nature. It purports to be a reply to questions on the problem of fellowship “sent out by certain brethren out west.” We have not seen their document, and do not know who mailed it out, but Brother Loney says he questions “the wisdom and spiritual understanding the document reveals.” I feel the same way with regard to his lengthy reply. I have read it several times and am convinced it contains many dangerous implications. Despite the fact it contains several grave errors, I shall confine my remarks to but one. It seems the brethren “out west” listed 25 points, and according to Bro. Loney, “the brethren are asked to mark the paper to indicate whether they will or not endorse or fellowship certain practices.” If the brethren “out west” said that, they ought to learn there is a difference between fellowship and endorsement. We do not fellowship practices or things, but persons. That’s why the word “fellow” is a part of the term. We can fellowship “a fellow” without endorsing all he says or does. I’m in fellowship with Brother Loney.

The first point concerned the use of tobacco. On this subject, Bro. Loney says, “The use of tobacco in any form is an individual matter that affects only the user and his influence.” In the same paragraph, he says, “Many times I have wished with all my heart that the church of Christ would take the same stand with reference to tobacco as the Adventists and Mormans (sic). I understand that no one can maintain membership with them and be a tobacco user.” These statements in the same paragraph are absolutely contradictory. The latter one exhibits a type of loose and careless thinking which would destroy the church of God if carried to its culmination.

I am opposed to the tobacco habit. I wish no one had ever contracted it. I wish all who are addicted to it would quit it. But I do not wish the church of Christ would take the same position regarding it as the Adventists and Mormons. Our brother wants the church to take “an individual matter that affects only the user” and create a test of fellowship out of it. Then it would be no longer an individual matter, but “a church matter.” How would the church formulate such legislation?

Should we call a national convention? If so, who will call it? Will each congregation send delegates to represent their viewpoint? Who will introduce the motion? Who will second it? Who will enforce the ruling? What will be done with our brethren now in fellowship who smoke? Will they be in today, and out tomorrow, after the church takes the stand on this new dogma? Or, will we set a deadline and demand that they quit sinning on or before midnight of that date under penalty of excommunication? Will we incorporate this unwritten creed in “the confession” and ask, “Do you believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and promise not to use tobacco in any form”? Or, will we fool prospective candidates into believing that our only creed is Jesus, then disclose later that there is a “rider” attached in the form of an anti-tobacco clause of eligibility?

These questions are not silly. They are important, not because they relate to tobacco using but because they reveal the dread fallacy of making the church of Christ a legislative institution. This is Romanism in its incipency. It is exactly on this basis Rome forbids eating meat on Friday. The church of Christ has no right to create any test of fellowship. Only the Lord can do that! Even the Mormons know that he did not make tobacco a test of fellowship, and they do so on the basis of a “revelation” given through Joseph Smith, at Kirtland, Ohio, February 27, 1833. He alleged that God revealed to him the following: “Tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and it is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill.” He also said,

“And again, hot drinks are not for the body or belly.” (See Doctrines and Covenants 89:8, 9).

The government and discipline of the church of God is congregational. Each congregation is autonomous. One congregation cannot decide a single thing for another. One congregation cannot punish, penalize or disfellowship another, for it has no jurisdiction over another. Suppose the church of Christ took the same stand with reference to tobacco as the Mormons, and some congregations refused to bow to this latest creed? Would there not be a division? Who would be responsible for it?

The church of Christ has no way of activating a program of universal legislation. God has made no provision for any conclave, convention, synod or conference, to take a stand, and demand universal conformity under threat of expulsion. It is ridiculous to ask what the church teaches on any subject. The word of God is our teacher, not the church. We are the church. If the word of God makes a thing a test of fellowship, we have nothing to say about it; if it does not, we ought to have nothing to say about it as a test. Why does our brother not wish the church would take the same stand as the Bible? Are the Mormons and Adventists better patterns than the word of God? If that word makes tobacco a test of fellowship, why not just point to the scripture? Then, whether the Adventists and Mormons make it a test of their fellowship will make no difference. I am deeply concerned about any teaching which encourages the church to make laws where God made none, and debars men from sitting down at the Lord's table because of human dogmas.

I am opposed to tyranny in any form or guise. I am opposed to any exercise of legislative functions by the church of God. Tobacco using is a bad habit, but it is not nearly so disastrous to the church as the spirit of factionalism which creates its own codes and regulations, then sets these arbitrary interpretations and opinions up on par with divinely ordained statutes as laws of admittance into or exclusion from the fellowship of the saints. I do not condone tobacco using. I am opposed to it. I teach against it, and that with vigor. I advise all who use it to abstain. But I will just as strenuously oppose every attempt of men to bind their opinions, interpretations, and views, as laws upon the kingdom of heaven. It is this attitude which has split, shivered, and splintered the church into fragments, and made its appeal for unity a laughingstock in the face of its practice.

What will I do about brethren who use tobacco? I will feel a sense of compassion for them in their slavery to a habit that is "an individual matter that affects only the user." I will seek to educate them to its harmful effects. I will try to show them how they will be better off if they cease using it. I will do this in love and mercy. Suppose they do not quit using it? I shall make no laws which will drive them forth. I have received no new "revelation" on the matter, so I shall be patient, longsuffering and forbearing. God will adjust a lot of things in the last day which I cannot straighten out on earth. I will let them stand or fall to "their own master." We have no right to make anything a test of fellowship which God has not made a condition of salvation! I sympathize with our good Brother Loney in his desire to see brethren live better lives. But we will not accomplish the purpose of God upon this earth by creating a legislative body of the church and usurping the rights and privileges of our Lord Jesus Christ. We need to follow the word of God and not to be so concerned about taking a stand like Adventists and Mormons.

Turning on the Light

Mission Messenger (September 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

In 1844, Alexander Campbell wrote: “Alas, for the times! when Methodism, and every form of Protestantism, of ancient Puritanism, have so soon run down to the dead level of all manner of conformity to the world. Splendid churches, rich saloons, well crimsoned pulpits, superb curtains, sublime organs, elegant preachers, well read sermons, well feasted hearers, and polite audiences, have gained the day, and triumphed over reason, conscience, the law, and the gospel.” Have the churches of the restoration movement also soon run down to the same dead level? We propose to direct the searchlight in their direction and reveal what we find.

For several months we have been dealing with the threat of alien ideologies in a world plot. We have pointed up the danger to western civilization of a diabolic attempt to seduce men’s minds. We have stated our conviction that hope lies not in the use of raw, naked force, but in the adoption and implementation of the Christian philosophy. Our culture is built upon the ethical teachings of Jesus of Nazareth, and the source of the power of his doctrine lies in an acceptance of Him as the Son of God. In our search for the means by which the Christian way of life can be made universal in application, we have reached the conclusion that the answer lies not with Roman Catholicism or Protestantism. We have stated the reasons by which we reach that conclusion.

We now examine the claims of a movement purporting to be neither Roman Catholic or Protestant, but a reproduction or re-institution in this age of the church as originally planted by the apostles of Jesus Christ. Our interest is heightened in this phase of our examination by virtue of personal alliance with one segment of this movement. It is difficult to maintain absolute objectivity under such circumstances, but we shall attempt to be fair and just in spite of human frailties and prejudices engendered by background and associations.

The history of the restoration movement sparked by the genius of such noble worthies as Thomas Campbell, Alexander Campbell, Barton W. Stone, Walter Scott, and others, is of such engrossing interest as to render it almost impossible to forego the thrill of repeating it, but our present task is of another nature. Our problem is to determine if the heirs of that movement in this generation are adequate, under existing circumstances, to the preservation of our world by the universal dissemination of the principles of Jesus in the Christocracy of which they are partakers.

In his prayer, as recorded in John 17, Jesus conditioned the acceptance of Himself by the world upon one factor—the oneness of those who believe in Him. The world can be won to Christ only when those who believe in Him are one in Christ. The world must either be saved through faith in Jesus and acceptance of His way of life, or without it. If it can be saved without it, God made a tragic error in sending His Son. But the entire Christian concept is based upon the philosophy, that, “Without me you can do nothing.” To those of us who accept as factual that He is “the way, the truth, and the life,” there can be no such thing as life outside of its source. “He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life.”

If the world can only be saved through belief in Jesus, and if the thing required to produce that belief is the oneness of those who believe, it stands to reason that the most important responsibility in a world of divided believers is to labor to bring about the unity for which Jesus prayed. It was a recognition of this which gave impetus to the restoration movement. Alexander Campbell wrote:

No mortal need fancy that he shall have the honor of devising either the plan of uniting christians in one holy band of zealous co-operation, or of converting Jews and Gentiles to the faith, that Jesus is that seed, in whom all families of the earth are yet to be blessed. The plan is divine. It is ordained by God; and better still, it is already revealed. Is any one impatient to hear it? Let him again read the intercessions of the Lord Messiah, which we have chosen for our motto. Let him then examine the two following propositions, and say whether these do not express Heaven's own scheme of augmenting and conservating the body of Christ.

First. Nothing is essential to the conversion of the world, but the union and co-operation of christians.

Second. Nothing is essential to the union of christians, but the Apostles' teaching or testimony.

Again, he writes that it is a general concession of all who accept the idea of a universal gospel, that the union of all Christians is essential to producing the effect desired and purposed by God.

These two propositions have been stated, illustrated, developed,— and shall I say proved, in the Christian Baptist, and Millennial Harbinger, to the conviction of thousands. Indeed, one of them is as universally conceded, as it has been proposed, viz., That the union of christians is essential to the conversion of the world: and though, perhaps, some might be found who would question, whether, if all christians were united, the whole world could be converted to God; there is no person, of whom we have heard, who admits a general or universal prevalence of the gospel— in what is usually called the millennial age of the world— and who admits that moral means will have any thing to do with its introduction, who does not admit that the union of christians is essential to that state of things. Indeed, to suppose that all christians will form one communion in that happy age of the world, and not before it; is to suppose a moral effect without a cause.

But what is the present status of the spiritual descendants of this great effort to achieve the Master's purpose? Candor forces us to admit they are torn by strife, rent by schisms, and even more divided than many of those whom they seek to unite. We believe there are some twenty-five splinter parties existing today among the ranks of "the disciple brotherhood," and we propose in a subsequent article to identify them. Which one of these parties is the ekklesia of God, capable of carrying the banner of Jesus to certain victory over all the forces of evil? With few exceptions each party regards itself as the one holy, apostolic, catholic church of God upon earth. Members of all the others are regarded as apostates and heretics. Which one of these parties is correct in its claim? To which one shall we rally all the forces of righteousness, and to which leaders must we look for safe conduct out of the wilderness and into the promised land?

Since a majority of the readers of this little journal are identified with one or another of these factions, we propose a careful analysis of the claims of many of them. In subsequent issues we shall seek to determine if either of the present parties bearing the title "Christian Church" or "Church of Christ" is, by divine right, the exclusive company of saints on earth, the elect of God, or the company of the redeemed. We are not unaware of the price we shall pay for such relentless research, of the friendships that will be forfeited, and the boycotts which must be suffered. Yet, it is not until we can see our present condition in its true light, that we can properly diagnose it, and then prescribe a wholesome remedy. At the conclusion of this current series we shall offer such a remedy, and, in the meantime, we can only humbly pray that, in spite of personal feelings toward us, most of our readers will continue with us unto the end.

How did we get this way? That we are divided, no one can deny. The divisions are so many and produced by such complex factors, it is hard to make a proper classification for their consideration. Many, as a matter of convenience, refer to those opposing sides of one major schism as “instrumental” and “non-instrumental” because of the use, or non-use of instruments of music in the corporate public worship. Yet, instrumental music was not originally the cause of divergence. On August 17, 1889, a convention was held at Sand Creek Church, Shelby County, Illinois, for the purpose of signing a statement, “with the view, if possible, of counteracting the usages and practices that have crept into the churches.” The document, signed by delegates formally selected and sent by a number of congregations, was written and publicly read by Daniel Sommer.

It closed with the words, “We state that we are impelled from a sense of duty to say, that all such that are guilty of teaching, or allowing and practicing the many innovations and corruptions to which we have referred, that after being admonished, and having had sufficient time for reflection, if they do not turn away from such abominations, that we cannot and will not regard them as brethren.” The innovations, corruptions, and abominations, are thus described: “The unlawful methods resorted to in order to raise or get money for religious purposes . . . the select choir to the virtual, if not the real abandonment of congregational singing; likewise the man-made society for missionary work, and the one-man imported preacher-pastor to take the oversight of the church.” Instrumental music was not even mentioned.

There are some things of significance in this document. It was called by its author “An Address and Declaration” in a word switch on the “Declaration and Address” written by Thomas Campbell at the outset of the restoration movement. But the document written by Campbell was to secure unity among all believers; the Sand Creek Declaration was written to “draw a line of demarkation between the churches of Christ and our innovating brethren,” in the words of its author. Campbell proposed, “All that are enabled to make profession, and to manifest it in their conduct, should consider others in the church of God, and should live together as the children of the heavenly Father.” Sommer proposed with reference to those being admonished who did not renounce the things specified, that “we can not and will not regard them as brethren.” This placed “brotherhood” upon a basis of conformity to certain practices, rather than upon a relationship to each other through acceptance of the blood of Jesus, and this attitude has generally prevailed to the present.

The author has seen documentary evidence in numerous places indicating that local cleavage was not produced by introduction of the instrument. A case in point is Valdosta, Georgia. The congregation now known as “Central Church of Christ” was begun by a group of dissenters who separated from the group now known as “First Christian Church” because of the insistence of some in hiring a regular preacher at a stipulated salary. Since Central Church of Christ now has a preacher hired at a stipulated salary, but does not have the instrument, it is a matter of policy to lead the membership to believe that instrumental music was the cause of the original schism.

In spite of tendencies toward division, and intense feeling, the open break was not manifest to the world until 1906. In that year the “Churches of Christ” were separately listed in the U. S. Religious Census. The Director of the Census in Washington, wrote to David Lipscomb about the matter, and Lipscomb replied:

There is a distinct people taking the word of God as their only and sufficient rule of faith, calling their churches, ‘churches of Christ,’ or ‘churches of God,’ distinct and separate in name, work, and rule of faith from all other bodies or people. . . . These disciples have separated from the ‘Christian Church’ that grew out of the effort to restore primitive Christianity, by remaining true to the original purpose and the principles needful to develop it, while these churches have departed from this end and have set aside the principles of fidelity to the word of God as the only and sufficient rule of faith and practice for Christians.

The instrumental music question has been given the forefront in the division for several reasons. The instrument was something concrete, tangible, and visible. Its voice, like that of the turtledove (Can. 2:12) was “heard in our land.” It presented a local problem calling for definite decision of acceptance or rejection, which was not true of a society with headquarters in a distant city, represented only by an occasional itinerant visitor raising funds. The circumstances of introduction of the instrument aroused passions and intensified feelings. Often an organ was spirited into the meetinghouse by night, locks on the doors were altered, suits for the property were entered in civil courts, and the consequent trials with their aftermath of broken families and communities left indelible scars and marks. The instrument thus became, and still remains, a symbol of an intangible something, to both groups. To one it is a visible token of freedom, and they would as soon see the flag trampled underfoot as to surrender it; to the other it is a mark of apostasy and corruption, the very presence of which so defiles a meetingplace, they could not even sit in it to listen to a man speak under any circumstance. Thus, it appears there are two groups which claim a common heritage, the instrumental and non-instrumental churches. Which of these, as now existent, is the ekklesia of God, capable of leading the army of heaven to conquest of the world for the King Messiah?

Our examination of their credentials would be simplified greatly, if there were no complications caused by divisions within the two, but unfortunately, such is not the case. We will deal first with those categorized as “instrument churches.” These are in turn divided into two major groups, which for lack of better terms, we will designate “The Disciples Church” and “The Conservative Christian Churches.” Although, not always known by those outside the party, these last are, to all intents and purposes, divided along other lines. A case in point is the Colorado Springs, Colorado, area, where there are at least four distinctive groups of those who use the instrument, among whom there is little, if any, real working harmony.

It is evident that there is widespread uneasiness and unrest over the teaching and attitude of some of the schools, as well as friction between them, and it is held by many, for example, that schools such as Midwest School of Evangelism, in Ottumwa, Iowa, are actually factional in their approach and outlook. It is significant that the non-instrument factions are generally designated by papers, and one may be identified as a member of the Gospel Advocate faction, Gospel Guardian faction, or Old Paths Advocate faction. Among the instrumental brethren the designation is by schools, and one may be judged by the institution he attends. A few weeks ago, a brother seeking to describe the status of a church, wrote me: “I suppose you’d say the congregation was midway between the Ottumwa group and Ozark Bible College.” He was not talking about location. Knowing both schools, I knew what he meant. The instrumental churches do not have as many divisions and parties as the non-instrumental churches, not having majored in that field, as have the latter, many of them being specialists.

What about the Disciples of Christ? Some of my good personal friends are affiliated with this denomination. I doubt not that there are many children of God in the number, and despite pronouncements such as the Sand Creek Declaration, I regard them as brethren, although I do not endorse their ideas on many things, and deplore some of their religious practices.

But, as a body, this group has abandoned the idea of the restoration of the ancient order of things. This was not accomplished in “one fell swoop” but came as the result of many contributing causes. Originally, the congregations growing out of the restoration emphasis were chiefly rural. Churches in urban centers were small. With the changing economic pattern produced by the Industrial Revolution, and the consequent exodus from country to city, churches in metropolitan areas became large and powerful. It might be a fruitful source of investigation to determine the effect of the Machine Age upon the restoration movement. Georges Bernanos, the French philosopher, in his “Tradition of Freedom” says, “One cannot understand the least thing about modern civilization if one does not first and foremost realize that it is a universal conspiracy to destroy the inner life. . . . None of the defenders of the Machine, howsoever brazen he may be, has as yet dared to make out that machinery has a good moral effect.” The changing pattern of life corresponded with the stress placed upon “the social gospel” which supplanted the idea of evangelism and the planting of new congregations. The Disciples Church was caught up in this new program of transforming the world by the good deeds of men, rather than by the regenerating message proclaimed to men from heaven.

This environment provided the setting for the inroads of so-called “Higher Criticism” and many of the younger preachers, supplementing their “ministerial courses” in an undergraduate school, with additional work in theological seminaries connected with great universities, returned home thoroughly saturated with the notion that the Bible was not what it claimed to be, and ready to label many of its narratives as fiction, and to discount the miracles as legendary stories. This is not to imply that all of the preachers connected with the movement were ready to discard the Bible as God’s revelation, but the more prominent ones in large cities frequently cast doubt upon it. The author personally heard one such preacher deny the resurrection of Jesus, and seek to account for the presentation by Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, as a vision conjured up in the minds of the disciples as the result of intense longing, coupled with deep grief and sorrow. The official Sunday School literature disseminated the idea that some things related in the Old Testament and acknowledged as factual by Jesus, were incredible, and the damage was done.

The practice of open membership, which is the acceptance of those into fellowship, who have not been immersed into the Lord Jesus Christ, was introduced in many places, and the significance of baptism was thus destroyed. It is not our intention to misrepresent the condition, for which reason we reproduce here the statement of membership policy drawn up for the Christian Church at Florissant, Missouri, the last one of the Disciples of Christ congregations to be planted in the Saint Louis area.

In order that there may be a clear understanding of the method of receiving members into the Christian Church now being formed in Florissant, the Steering Committee of the Disciples of Christ in the Florissant area recommends that the following become the membership policy of this new congregation:

For one who presents himself for membership by confession of faith in Jesus Christ, it shall be the policy of this congregation to follow the practice of the New Testament church of baptizing by immersion, symbolizing the burial and resurrection of our Lord.

For one who desires to transfer his membership from another congregation, he may do so by bringing a letter from the church of which he has been a member, or by stating where his previous membership has been.

Should any person come by transfer, not having been previously baptized by immersion, he shall be offered an explanation of the meaning of the practice of this congregation to baptize by immersion and shall be requested to be so baptized. However, if he does not find it in his heart to be immersed, membership shall not be denied him.

The congregation shall include him because it recognizes him as a Christian whom it welcomes to its worship, to its communion table, to its fellowship meetings, and, from whom it is willing to receive the benefit of his talents and his treasure. Since this congregation recognizes other churches in addition to itself as being Christian and expects to work interdenominationally with other communions, it believes that it should welcome every Christian who requests the privilege of transferring his membership into this congregation. This church considers itself to be part of the church universal. Consequently, it opens its door to all who desire membership in it as stated above.

At the time this was circulated among the membership, I drew up certain objections to the statement of policy, and these were read publicly, and later printed in Bible Talk. We offer them here as expressive of our thinking.

1. It substitutes a Steering Committee composed of uninspired men for the inspired ambassadors of our Lord, who were empowered by Him to reveal the will of the King relative to citizenship in His kingdom.

2. It substitutes a “membership policy” for the new covenant scriptures as a basis for determination of admission to the table of the Lord.

3. It affirms that the practice of the New Testament church was to immerse those who confessed faith in the Lord, and then proposes to accept those who repudiate the practice of the New Testament church, thus forfeiting any right to a claim of seeking to restore said church in faith and practice.

4. It employs misleading and ambiguous language, such as “It shall be the policy of this congregation to follow the practice of the New Testament church of baptizing by immersion” which is equivalent to saying “baptizing by baptizing” or “immersing by immersion;” and by use of such language implies that there are other means of baptizing.

5. It leaves the terms of admission to fellowship to the will of the individual and not to the will of God, and makes what one finds in his heart the law of obedience, rather than what he finds in the revealed will of God.

6. It recognizes as Christian those who are not in Christ Jesus in the fair import of that term in the revealed oracles of God.

7. It reverses the divine order by expressing willingness to receive talent and treasure from one who has not first given himself to God (2 Cor. 8:5).

8. It confesses that the Florissant Christian Church is merely another denomination, on which basis it forfeits all hope of uniting all believers in our Lord Jesus Christ in a non-sectarian and non-denominational sense, insofar as the Florissant Christian Church is concerned.

9. By confessing that it is a part of the church universal, it commits itself to the admission that it is a party or sect, and thus exists in contravention to the will of God, and not in conformity thereto.

10. In opening its doors on the basis of the membership policy as drawn up by the Steering Committee it has created a human creed, and will only serve to divide believers, rather than to answer the prayer of our Lord.

CONCLUSION

As I view the situation, the Disciples Church is merely another sect among sects. I say this charitably, with no intention of conveying hate or animosity, for I feel neither. This condition might not be so bad, if it were not by choice. A body of believers, like an individual, might be “overtaken in a fault.” Under such circumstances restoration might be effected by spiritual men working in a spirit of meekness. All of us have manifested some sectarian tendencies in these latter days, but the condition is not irremediable, if, like Nehemiah, we weep, mourn, fast, pray before the God of heaven, and confess, “Both I and my father’s house have sinned.” But these brethren have followed a calculated course, and a deliberate policy, which has led them to deny the restoration principles which called them into being, and the sufficiency of the revelation of God which alone can act as compass and pole star in the turbulent, storm-swept ocean of life.

I do not charge them with insincerity or hypocrisy. I do not question their honesty nor challenge their integrity. I doubt not that many of them feel they are rendering God service in their present course. Nor does my evaluation of the movement cause me to repudiate any truth that is held, or derogate any good work that is accomplished. I simply feel that these brethren have fallen victims to the spirit of this age, unwittingly perhaps, but nonetheless surely and truly so. And for that reason, I do not feel that we can rely upon the philosophy in which they trust as providing hope in these troublous times. I am sorry this is so.

What I have written has not been intended as an attack, but as an examination and expression of my personal convictions relative to a regrettable situation. If I have forgotten my purpose, or have misrepresented, I beg forgiveness, for it has not been intentional. No member of the Disciples of Christ should regard my observations herein as a personal thrust. I love and respect every member among them regardless of the terms upon which they received him. My relationship with all of them, even those in positions of prominence, has always been upon a very high plane. I have never been treated discourteously by any of them. (Our next treatise will express our views of the conservative groups among the instrumental churches).

Light and Fellowship

Mission Messenger (September 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

A good brother, somewhat disturbed by our writings on fellowship, enquires again about 1 John 1:7, “If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.” Our brother writes, “You say you are opposed to the use of instrumental music, and yet you say you are in fellowship with every sincere baptized believer in Jesus Christ, which would include many who use the instrument. If using the instrument is walking in the light, why are you opposed to it; and if it is not, how can you be in fellowship with those who use it and thus walk in darkness?”

This type of reasoning is characteristic of many in these days, and deserves consideration. Our brother faces a problem because he does not know the meaning of either “fellowship” or “walking in the light.” Fellowship is a state or condition into which we are called by God (1 Cor. 1:9). We come into that state by being immersed into Christ Jesus. We do not enter the fellowship of our Lord by agreement with each other on certain laws regulations, interpretations or practices, but by establishing a covenant relationship with Him. All who are in that covenant relationship are in a partnership of the Spirit, and they are in fellowship because of their relationship to God. Every child of God is my brother.

Some of God's children think they can please our Father by employing instruments of music in his public praise. I think they are mistaken. I think they presume too much. But that mistake does not cancel the relationship which was established by being born into the family. They would not become my brethren by ceasing to use the instrument, they did not cease to become my brethren by beginning to use it. They are my brethren because we have the same spiritual father. This is the basis of brotherhood!

It is evident that fellowship is not endorsement of the position or practice of another. I fellowship many persons who do things I cannot endorse; I endorse many things done by persons with whom I am not in fellowship. I endorse many statements and actions of President Eisenhower, but we are not in a state of spiritual fellowship. I love him and respect him greatly, but I do not consider him as my brother in the Lord. I wish that we were brethren in Christ Jesus.

John conditions our fellowship with one another on "walking in the light as he is in the light." Those who affirm they have fellowship with him and walk in darkness, lie, and do not tell the truth. What is the light here referred to? Whatever it is we can have no fellowship with each other unless we walk in it, and that to the same degree that God is in it, which means in perfection, for "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." Darkness is the opposite of light, and whatever the light is in which we must walk to have fellowship with each other, we can make no allowance or apologies for the slightest variation, for we must walk in the light as he is in it, and in him is no darkness at all.

Obviously, light is here used as a symbol, as it is throughout the revelation of God. It is so used because of its nature or character, which is invariable, but the application may be to various qualities or things. In Psalm 37:6, it is a symbol of righteousness; in Hosea 6:5, of God's judgments; in Matthew 5:16, of good deeds; in John 5:35, of the work of John the Immerser; in 2 Corinthians 4:4, of the gospel.

It is thought by many that 1 John 1:7 must refer to knowledge of God's will but this cannot be true, for none of us have perfect knowledge. If light, in this instance, is knowledge of the scriptures, and darkness is ignorance of them, then we will never be in fellowship with any one on earth, for none of us will know as much as God, and that is the standard. Neither can light refer to obedience, for that would require perfect obedience without a flaw, as a precedent to fellowship. It is possible that our problem can be resolved if we allow John to tell us what he means by the terms "light" and "darkness."

Before we do so, let us note a few things relative to 1 John 1:5-7. Light and darkness represent states in which men can walk, for we "walk in darkness" or "we walk in the light." It is possible for men to say they are in fellowship with God, while they walk in darkness. To have fellowship with each other we must walk in the light as God is in the light, that is, to a perfect degree. And whatever the light is, God is that state or condition, for God is light.

Let us now examine this epistle to determine what states are represented by the terms "light" and "darkness." When we find out what these represent, we will have the true foundation or basis of "fellowship one with another." In 2:9, we read, "He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now." Thus I learn that darkness is a state of hatred for the brethren. If that be true, then, since love is the opposite of hate, as light is of darkness, to be in the light, would be to love the brethren. In 2:10, John says, "He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him."

Does this mean that one who hates his brother is "walking in darkness"? Read 2:11, "He that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness has blinded his eyes.” But, if God is light, and light is love, would it be correct to say that God is love? Read 4:7, 8: “Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not knoweth not God, for God is love.”

How does this tie in with the statement “If we say we have fellowship with him and walk in darkness, we lie”? Does this mean that if a man claims to love God while hating his brother, he is a liar? Read 4:20: “If a man say I love God and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen.” In other words, “He that loveth him that begot, loveth those who are begotten of him.” Our love is based upon a single source of origin. We are all begotten of God!

The objection may be raised that since God is light and there is no darkness in him, and since we are commanded to walk in the light as he is in the light, this would mean that our love for the brethren must be perfect. That is correct. Read 4:12, “No man hath seen God at any time. If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us.” We have not seen God, but we have seen the manifestation of his love in Jesus (4:9). If, through Jesus, we begin to love our brethren (all of them), God will dwell in us, and our love will be perfected. “We will walk in the light as he is in the light” and this light of fraternal love will produce fellowship one with another which will encourage us to seek the good of each other, in spite of differences.

We are now ready to note again the query of our brother. “If using the instrument is walking in the light, why are you opposed to it; and, if it is not, how can you be in fellowship with those who use it?” This verse (1 John 1:7) has nothing to do with using instrumental music. Whether or not it is wrong to do so must be determined from other considerations. So far as this passage is concerned one who used the instrument would “walk in the light” if he loved the brethren; and one who opposed its use would “walk in darkness” if he hated the brethren. Walking in light or darkness, as here considered, is not determined by use of or opposition to instrumental music, but by our attitude toward the brethren.

A recently circulated treatise on fellowship, postulates salvation by legalism, and the very introduction lays down a premise which is fallacious, when the author says, “We would be safe in saying that perfect fellowship can be found only in perfect unity since any difference would make such a fellowship impossible for differences separate not unite.” We would not be safe in saying any such thing, but we would be dangerously in error. It is not true that any difference would make such a fellowship impossible. Neither is it true that differences separate us. They only separate those who do not love each other. My beloved wife and I have differences but we do not separate. I have never been in full agreement upon all points of scripture with a single person in this world, but I do not separate from all of them.

Differences between brethren do not make fellowship impossible! They may make it more difficult to love, but that is a test which love needs to determine its genuineness. There were plenty of differences between brethren in Corinth. Some of them differed so much they went to law against each other. But they constituted the church of God, they were called saints (1 Cor. 1:2); they were in the fellowship of Jesus Christ our Lord (1 Cor. 1:9); and they were designated “beloved sons” (1 Cor. 4:14); as well as being repeatedly referred to as “brethren.” The apostle said, “And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ.” Though they were addressed as carnal and as babes, they were also addressed as brethren, and they were babes in Christ!

Paul did not “withdraw fellowship” from Peter when they had their differences at Antioch. He withstood him to the face because he was worthy of censure, but their differences did not make fellowship impossible, unless we have “the apostle to the Gentiles” excluding the “apostle to the circumcision” after the latter had given him “the right hand of fellowship” (Gal. 3:9). Brethren do not separate because they have differences, but because they do not love each other enough to stay together. When a husband and wife separates it is not because they have differences, for then there would be no married couples. They separate because they allow their differences to become more important than their mutual love, so that love is choked out by bitterness and animosity. Small wonder that, beginning with such a fallacy, the author of the treatise should condition salvation on perfection of human works, rather than on grace, and by seeking to debar some from fellowship who are brethren, ends up with a system which will damn us all!

But back to our original question. I am opposed to instrumental music in the public praise service of the saints of God. I would to God it had never been thrust in over the protest of humble saints. I wish that all of us were big enough to agree to take it out, go back where we were, and start over from there. Then, in many places it would never become a problem again, for we would conquer it by love, since we now know how to treat each other in Christ Jesus. I trust to God that I may live long enough to see the day when, in many communities, the rift will be healed and the breach repaired; when saints of God who have been sundered and separated for decades may meet together with tears of happiness and mingle their voices once more in joint offerings of praise.

But, whether that day comes in my brief span of life, or whether we are destined to walk the sad and dreary road of suspicion and division unto its bitter end, thus paying the uttermost farthing of shame and sorrow for the heritage of schism received from our fathers, I shall still love my brethren—all of them—not merely in word or in tongue, but in deed and in truth. I shall go among them in love. I will not compromise my convictions, but I will walk in the light of love, so that it may be said, “He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him.”

Living in Fear

Mission Messenger (September 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

When the Emancipation Proclamation was read to the slaves of the southland, many of them trembled with fear, and shook with fright. So long had they been in bonds they recoiled from the responsibilities of freedom. They conjured up images of dire distress, and drew back from an uncertain future. Some of them requested their former masters to retain them in their previous status. They wanted the security afforded by dirt-floored log cabins, corn pone and hog jowl meals. They were unwilling to taste the privileges of free men and women. They were lost in liberty.

There is evidence that many who have been reared in the narrow confines of religious partisanship, and who have been shackled by the factional spirit, are motivated by the same fear today. They have grown up in the security afforded by traditional walls. In a little group of exclusivists some of them have been regarded as leaders; their word became law and their decisions went unchallenged. In a world of free men they could not hold their own. They would be lost among those who did not tremble at their every pronouncement. So they would prefer to maintain the status quo, and retain their position of respect among those who regarded them as champions and defenders of the faith.

The fear of loss of financial support holds many a man in chains to a partisan group. There are those who would like to breathe the pure air of Christian charity, but their jobs depend upon keeping in favor with the powers that be and that control the purse strings. Stark fear for their own wellbeing and that of their families makes the cold sweat pop out on them, for they realize they are selling a glorious birthright for a mess of pottage. But they must choke back the swelling of their hearts, for they dare not face what may be thought of them by those who have blindly followed them; they dread the whisperings, the malignant letters filled with false accusations, the boycott and the ostracism. It is easier to keep still, to go along, to continue to play the game, even while the world is on the brink of destruction.

The fear which is so powerful a deterrent to freedom of spirit is manifested in many of the questions of the day. Is there not danger that the church will lose its identity? This is but another way of enquiring if the party to which we belong can continue to maintain its separate status. What would our fathers say if they returned to earth? Can we not just go along as we are, and ignore those about us, and live right, and go to heaven? How does it happen that we did not learn about the party spirit in days past and gone? Do you mean to infer that we could have been wrong in the application of many of the scriptures we have used over and over?

The party spirit is subtle and tenacious. Satan is cunning! He does not want the children of God to pool their strength and efforts. He is opposed to them even discussing the possibility of unity. He wants them to believe that it is impossible to achieve. It is to his interest to keep brethren divided and warring with each other. "Cursed are the peacemakers," is the motto of Diabolos. But in spite of Satan, the party spirit, and the fear of men, there is a great tidal wave of Christian thinking and love which today is rolling wide and far. Men look up with hope who before were hopeless. The hate and bigotry of yesteryear are seen in their true light. The true meaning of love is driving out fear.

“God is love, and the man whose life is lived in love does, in fact, live in God, and God does, in fact, live in him. So our love for Him grows more and more, filling us with complete confidence for the Day when He will judge all men— for we realize that our life in this world is actually His life lived in us. Love contains no fear— indeed fully-developed love expels every particle of fear, for fear always contains some of the torture of feeling guilty. This means that the man who lives in fear has not yet had his love perfected” (Translation by J. B. Phillips).

Love fills us with complete confidence! We need to know that we have not the knowledge or ability to devise the means by which God’s purpose on earth will be achieved. All we are required to do is to fill our lives with love, and in that spirit, carry on the task He has assigned us, without doubt as to the future. God holds the future in His hand. He has not retired or abdicated. I am convinced that regardless of opposition or persecution, I need have no fear, if I serve Him in love!

The Conservative Party

Mission Messenger (October 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

Recently I read the poetry, prose and sermons of John Donne, a preacher who lived at the time the King James translation of the Bible was published, and who was appointed by James I as Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, in 1621. One of the best known quotations from his works is this: "No man is an island, entire of itself; every man is a piece of the continent, a part of the main; if a clod be washed away by the sea, Europe is the less, as well as if a promontory were . . . any man's death diminishes me, because I am involved in mankind."

I thought of that as I began this article in which I will deal with one segment of the Restoration movement. There are those who will criticize these articles as a waste of time. Many, wrapped up in their own partisan interests, and disowning relationship to all others, will censure the space devoted to analysis of the problems of the entire disciple brotherhood. But I am a part of that brotherhood. What affects any person in it, also affects me. I cannot be oblivious to any schism in the Christian fabric, remote though it may be from my personal sphere of life. My life, my soul, my very being, is related to every other who is in Christ Jesus. I am involved in mankind. I am an integral part of the totality of God's mercy.

It is not, then, in a spirit of carping criticism that I conduct these investigations. Rude and arrogant attack upon the members of any party or faction in the disciple brotherhood would, in its ultimate, reflect against me, and react against my hope and purpose. In our last issue we expressed our views of the Disciples of Christ; in this we shall concern ourselves with the conservative Christian Churches, a segment which resulted from a cleavage in the ranks of the churches endorsing instrumental music and societies. As usual, each faction blames the other for the schism, and each accuses the other of departing from the original spirit and purpose of the Restoration movement.

An editorial on page 346, of the June 3, 1950, issue of Christian Standard said:

There is one serious indictment of the United Christian Missionary Society, the various state societies, the colleges, in fact, the whole coterie of institutions associated in and with the 'International Convention of Disciples of Christ.' They may have started out to implement the Restoration ideal, but the very nature of their claims forced them to forsake that ideal and settle down to wall-building. Now after many years, they are used, ironically, as instruments to oppose the restoration of New Testament Christianity, both in principle and in practice.

In replication to such charges, Stephen J. Corey writes in Fifty Years of Attack and Controversy, on page 242, as follows:

The Standard has been instrumental in building up a group of churches and affiliated institutions which has become as exclusive a denomination as could be imagined and in which fellow Christians supporting our cooperative, organized work are unwelcome. What a tragic departure from the days of Thomas Campbell, Barton W. Stone, and the progressive founding editor of the Christian Standard, Isaac Errett.

Our intent is not to trace the history of the events which led to separation among these brethren. We shall only examine the claim of those who profess to be true to the original Restoration plea and who label themselves as “loyal” and “faithful.” Are these brethren sincerely striving for a complete restoration of the primitive church? Are their preachers and congregations free from all institutional domination and pressure groups? Are they committed to a program of evangelism, from a scriptural standpoint? They seek to justify their separation upon these bases, as well as others.

Within the past several years it has been my privilege to examine at close range the position and practices of these brethren. I have read their papers, attended their preaching conventions, visited their schools, discussed with scores of their teachers and preachers, and listened to hours of tape recordings of meetings I could not attend personally. I have a very deep love for all whom I have met; I respect and honor them greatly. But I am convinced that, as a group, they pay lip service to a restoration which they do not propose to implement, and that they generally constitute only an anti-UCMS party in which “loyalty” is measured by adherence to the party line, and a “faithful church” is one that conforms to the one test, regardless of failures and shortcomings in all other respects.

It grieves me to record these things, and in so doing, I do not mean to imply that all of the brethren in the movement are satisfied or content with the situation. Many of them are sick at heart, they are inwardly distressed and disturbed, but they are powerless to correct conditions. They realize that they have escaped the despotism of a universal society, only to be subjected, in many cases, to the tyranny of smaller units or district organizations which exercise compulsory power over those who do not conform. Unless there is a drastic change of perspective these brethren are destined to drift farther from primitive moorings all of the time. I will be thankful to God if I am proven wrong in such predictions, for I am not disposed to rejoice over such a prospect.

I shall very humbly and carefully set forth my views, recognizing that I must give account for every hurtful word, and remembering that all who are involved are my brethren in the Lord Jesus Christ. There are three areas to which I will confine my present explorations. All of these are vital because they represent grounds of objection to the Disciples of Christ. All of them contributed to the resultant division.

1. Evangelism

It is my conviction that the average member of the conservative Christian Churches, thinks of evangelism only in terms of a revival meeting, generally conducted by a preacher imported for the occasion. Exhorted by the local pastor, and aroused from a state of lethargy, the congregation puts on a special drive for the length of time allotted, before lapsing once again into routine ways. Such meetings are frequently accompanied by widely advertised entertainment features in the hope of enticing the people in the community to attend. Each service is preceded by a “warm up session” in which the local minister tells a string of jokes, often at the expense of the evangelist, and the audience is encouraged to respond with gales of laughter. This provides a proper introduction so the visiting speaker can retaliate with a recounting of some of the escapades of the local pastor, perhaps while in the seminary which both attended, and the flock howls with glee to learn how human their pastor is.

The simple, unadorned message of the cross, seems no longer to be sufficient to melt the hearts of sinners and reform the lives of the ungodly. It must now be embellished by resorting to all of the gimmicks, gewgaws, and gimcracks, of modern showmanship and hucksterism. I recently attended a meeting in which the preacher had a bunch of inflated balloons of various colors suspended by strings from the ceiling behind him. Each balloon had in it a piece of folded paper containing one of the points the speaker wished to emphasize. One member of an instrumental quartette, visiting as guest musicians from a seminary, was given a broomstick with a “frog-sticker” in the end of it, and at a signal from the preacher he would stab one of the balloons which would explode with a loud pop and send the paper fluttering through the air with the preacher in hot pursuit while the audience laughed at his antics.

There are “clinics” held in which those in attendance are briefed in all of the latest schemes to attract and hold audiences. During one convention I took occasion to sit in on a class conducted by a member of a successful evangelistic team, who was illustrating the tactics employed. To say the least, his suggestions would have astounded the apostle who wrote to Corinth, “For Christ did not send me out to immerse but to proclaim the News, and not with clever words either, in case Christ’s cross should lose all its potency.”

The emphasis upon sensationalism, the pandering to popular feeling, the excitation of emotionalism, these are filling the congregations with people, many of whom have no real consciousness of personal covenant relationship to God, and thus, no recognition of personal responsibility. Many remain spiritually helpless and uninformed of the word of God. They were “converted” in a time of feverish enthusiasm, and they feel bored and “let down” by the unemotional atmosphere of the regular service. The local minister must “ride herd” to keep the sheep in the corral, and is confronted with petty trivialities which demand his constant attention. There seems to be no knowledge of the primitive pattern in which every member of the body, even when driven from home, went everywhere preaching the word, or “evangelizing.” “Evangelism” is now limited to sporadic efforts of professionals whose greatest task is to arouse the membership for a brief period of time.

2. Restoration

On July 26, 1919, the Christian Standard published announcement of a Restoration Congress, dedicated to “the rescue of the Restoration Movement.” An invitation was issued to “all who are resolved to maintain the Restoration plea intact.” One of the objectives as stated, was “to take such action as may be found necessary to reassert the New Testament plea with clearness and increased vigor, and to insure its perpetuation unimpaired.” In the same paper, July 17, 1943, P. H. Welshimer wrote:

While unity is desirable, restoration of the church of the New Testament is more desirable, and in place of spending so much time in talking about unity we had better be about the business of having in every community, the restored church of the New Testament, and when we have that we will have unity, and we will never have without it.

I do not question that many sincere brethren actually long for restoration, but suffer from frustration because it can never be achieved under existing policy and conditions. Actually, after separating from The Disciples to rescue the Restoration, the movement has bogged down and is content to defend what it has. Too much money is invested in institutions unknown to the new covenant scriptures, too much prestige is involved in official positions in various other organizations, for the brethren to be satisfied with the role of the simple ekklesia of apostolic days. Like most of the non-instrument factions, the last thing really desired is real restoration in the spirit of early Christianity.

It has long been our belief that the acid test of desire to restore the church of God will be found in an attitude toward ministry among the saints. It was at this juncture the deviations first began which culminated in the great apostasy. To the original concept we must return before we can be called restorationists. This does not mean we can immediately slough off all the accumulated debris of the centuries. The work of restoring may be a lengthy and laborious task. It is a slow and painful process to remove the rubbish from the walls, but we must know where the walls were located, and we must be able to distinguish between walls and rubbish. We must have a correct view of the prototype.

The development of a professional caste to conduct worship of the saints for hire is a throwback to Judaism. The ideal of a community of saints with bishops and deacons, expressing corporate worship by the contributions of all who have the ability, is no longer retained. As a result a new vocabulary has been developed in which the language of the Spirit has been wrested and abused. The current implications of the terms “minister” and “ministry” furnish an excellent example of what we mean. As a result, there has arisen a distinction between clergy and laity, deny it as much as you please, and so long as this idea obtains there can never be a restoration of any consequence.

The hired minister to act for the saints in things pertaining to God, is no part of God’s arrangement in this dispensation. In that arrangement every child of God is minister and priest. One “enters the ministry” by being immersed into the Lord Jesus. He does not study to become a minister, but because he is one. Such expressions as “hiring a minister,” “firing a minister,” “trial sermons,” “minister’s home,” etc., are as foreign to the sacred scriptures as the idea they connote. Our brethren under review must admit that this is the case. In an article in Christian Standard, July 18, 1959, on page 397, Elbert T. Moreland writes:

The modern minister is not found in exact replica in the Bible. Because of changes in our way of life, because of development in church and society, and partly because elders and deacons have not functioned as they ought, we have developed a professional ministry.” This brother further says, “The modern ministry combines functions of the New Testament evangelist and elder.” These are grave admissions. Separation from The Disciples of Christ was justified on the ground that they had scrapped the plea for restoration of the pattern of doctrine and polity of the church of the New Testament. Now, those who claimed to be loyal to the Restoration plea, have not only created an officer for whom there is no exact replica in the Bible, but have vested in him the functions of two offices created as separate and distinct by the Holy Spirit.

Moreover, justification is sought on exactly the same grounds as employed by The Disciples of Christ to defend their deviations. The professional ministry has been developed: (1) because of changes in our way of life; (2) because of development in church and society; (3) because of malfunctioning of the scriptural offices of elder and deacon. The Disciples group has stated its view thus: "Believing that since the New Testament does not provide a completed, hard and fast structural organization, in all of its details, this group asserts that the church is left free to adapt forms of organization and cooperation necessary for the realistic needs and conditions of these times." Again, "The early church was a spiritual movement, this group contends, hardly affording an absolute blueprint in details of church polity." The same principle which will justify the addition of a new function for which there is no replica in the Bible, will justify departures in other areas than that of polity or congregational structure. The "conservative brethren" should abandon the "professional ministry" or apologize to the Disciples of Christ. Certainly, if they retain that for which there is no exact replica in the Bible, they can never restore the New Testament Church, for you cannot restore a thing by adding something that was never in it!

We do not believe these brethren can abandon the "professional ministry" for several reasons, a few of which we enumerate. (1) They have millions of dollars invested in schools and seminaries whose chief purpose is to turn out "professional ministers." It is not likely they will cancel this huge investment and dispense with these human auxiliaries which are turning out functionaries "not found in exact replica in the Bible." There is something about being president of a college, or being saluted as “Doctor,” which appeals to pride and worldly ambition. Those who are a part of the institutions will fight for them to the bitter end, even though that end may mark the end of the hope of real restoration. (2) These brethren have lost faith in God’s plan for this age. They feel that the simple structure of the primitive congregation, composed of the saints with bishops and deacons, will no longer work or succeed in this complex age. “Because of changes in our way of life” they must develop something for which the Holy Spirit gave no pattern. (3) The congregations have been formed around an admittedly unscriptural system and are nourished by it. The members have no appreciation or understanding of the scriptural program of ministry. They come not to minister, but to be ministered unto. They have hired a man as their minister, and he speaks of them as “my people,” “my elders,” and “my church.” They possess him by right of purchase, and are in turn possessed by him.

The situation will grow worse, drifting always farther from “the replica in the Bible.” In the July 18, 1959 issue of Christian Standard, page 399, Bro. Marvin E. Brewer writes: “There is definitely a need for more ministers to make themselves available for the pastoral needs of their congregations, and it is equally important that the constituents avail themselves of their minister’s services.” (Emphasis by editor). He repeatedly refers to the minister as “the pastor.”

I am sorry for many of the preaching brethren involved in this system. Some of them were pressed to “enter the ministry” as a vocation. They have spent several years in an attempt to prepare themselves to serve God by the study of homiletics, hermeneutics, exegetics, and pastoral psychology. They are hired by a congregation upon recommendation of the school, and frequently their dreams are shattered and their ideals deflated. They soon learn there are truths they dare not teach, for those who control the purse strings regulate the pulpit. In some instances they become virtual flunkies, subject to call at the whim of every eccentric; errand boys who must attend to trivial details lest someone get offended and complain. They are exposed to the ruthlessness of congregational politics and petticoat government. The “parsonage” becomes a virtual charitable motel, because an unconverted congregation having no sense of hospitality, directs all visitors to “our minister” who must arrange lodging and entertainment. After all, he is their servitor and retainer, they own the house in which he resides, they pay him to be their servant, so why not get value received out of the house and preacher both?

The idea of reforming such congregations is soon relinquished, and the preacher, trained only for this task and with a family to support, stays on to walk the weary treadmill for the check he is handed each week. His suggestions for betterment and spiritual growth go unheeded by the ruling clique. Soon his sermons degenerate into ineffective moralizing on generalities, and he is reduced from a crusader for Christ Jesus to a mercenary whose concern is to appease and conform.

This is not true of all, but it is true of many. They break their hearts and dash their hopes in a vain attempt to change the traditional patterns of congregations which have become set in their ways, and are no longer interested in the way of the Lord. And if the preacher demonstrates unconventional adherence to the word of God, or shows signs of singular non-conformity, pressure is brought to bear by his spiritual alma mater, as well as by the Men’s Fellowship of the district or county. All must be “kept in line” for the sake of the party. And that brings us to our third point.

3. Freedom

Are the churches and preachers in the conservative party among our instrumental brethren, really free? They broke with The Disciples of Christ to gain independence and liberty, but are they truly independent? Is congregational autonomy a reality? I grant they are free from the domination of the UCMS, but I believe that there are other forces of control at work which differ only in the degree of the usurpation. In many instances congregations are unduly influenced by seminaries and schools, especially when in proximity to these human institutions. I do not believe that it is possible for such church-supported and church-related institutions to exist long without exerting tremendous power over congregations in the area. They supply the preacher who fills the pulpit, and he is indoctrinated with the idea of “loyalty” to the school. If he does not conform to school policy the heads of the human organization can bring pressure to bear upon the church and fire him.

Alumni groups of some schools often lay down the law, and play first fiddle in some churches or districts. As a result some areas have been disturbed when preachers from other schools are brought in. The cause of Christ has been seriously injured by the “wars and fightings” to gain and maintain the lead. Frequently, this is encouraged by teachers jealous of the fortunes of other schools, and seeking to advance their own. It is generally but a short step from the school spirit to the party spirit. Many brethren have learned through sad experience that when they enrolled in a seminary, some of the professors considered it as a complete surrender to their power, so that they not only had a right to mould, channel and direct, but also to preside over the thinking of the enrollee.

“The Men’s Fellowship” exists as a pressure group in many sections. It is generally composed of a number of men from each congregation in the district, and exerts greater power than any single congregation with its elders. Local congregations must conform or boycott will ensue. The “Fellowship” works hand in hand with the extra organizations in the district, and throws its weight and power behind financial drives and institutional schemes. Often these are decided upon and then announced to the respective congregations who have no actual voice in the decision, but must simply go along, or be counted out. These groups, larger in scope than the local church, and smaller than the church universal, provide effective means of keeping dissidents in line. The preachers and congregations are not as free and independent as they would like to have. The Disciples of Christ think they are. We have personally seen and experienced too much of the machinations of partisan politics by pressure groups to be mistaken on these matters. We know whereof we speak.

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS

I have been frank and candid in this presentation. It is not a calculated assault upon any brother or group of brethren. It represents only one man's view of a faction that has grown out of the Restoration movement of the preceding century. I do not believe that faction is the primitive church of God restored to earth. I do not believe that as a unit, it can ever, with its present viewpoint, be transmuted into that body, or restore it. I am not motivated in this feeling by my personal views on the oft-disputed question of the use of instruments of music in the public praise service of the church. I am not a member of, nor a champion for a non-instrument party. I am not an apologist for any party or faction. This I will demonstrate when I write about the factions among us which oppose use of the instrument.

When I conclude that the Conservative Christian Church, as now constituted, is not, in a corporate sense, the one body of Christ, I do not imply that there are no members of the one body in it. They are all my brethren. Many of them are sincere, humble children of God. They, like the rest of us in the disciple brotherhood, have been made victims of the party spirit. Many are restoration-minded. They are hindered and hampered by party ties, traditions and tactics. They are torn by conflicting emotions. Experience has taught them that in many instances the slogan "No creed but Christ," is an empty phrase employed by those who demand party loyalty and rigid conformity to unwritten creeds, even as they voice these words.

I rejoice in every attempt at restoration and in every spiritual gain achieved by those who attempt it. I recognize the difference between restoration and revolution, yet I wonder if there must not be a revolution before we can seriously work at restoration. Certainly there must first come a reformation, whether it precedes along revolutionary lines, or otherwise. As of the present, our brethren under consideration in these articles are only defending what they have, and are often resentful of criticism and change. Yet these two elements are vital to restoration which in its finality will only be achieved by those who rise above all party considerations, and who dare to examine their own cherished practices and positions in the light of God's revelation, free from all restraints, restrictions, and compulsions of traditional and institutional ties.

Any attempt at restoration is hindered, hampered and postponed, in exact proportion to the extraneous and auxiliary human organizations that are created. The amount of time, money and effort expended in building up any organization except the simple ekklesia of God, is wasted insofar as true restoration of primitive Christianity is concerned. Such things may contribute to party growth, and be the means of gratifying party pride, but regardless of the ideals or motives of those who begin them, they will always stand athwart our real purpose. They will hinder, rather than help. It cannot be denied that when the apostle Paul left any community there was but one thing there which was not present when he came— a simple congregation of humble saints. He made no appeals for money and inaugurated no financial drives, except for the relief of the needs of suffering saints, and for administration of such funds, no board, charter, or special body was created. The money was laid at the feet of the elders of the congregations.

The simple, unadorned worship is no longer appealing.

The ministry of all the saints, dedicated to relieving the burdens of a troubled world, simply because each has entered into a personal covenant relationship with God through Christ will not now suffice. But if we are to be no longer restorationists in tongue and word, and become such in deed and in truth, we will have to completely revise our thinking and renew our faith in God's way and purpose. It will accomplish little for us to defend the revelation of God against "modernists" and then disregard it, and do as we please. We earnestly pray that the things said herein will not be dismissed as the ranting or raving of an intemperate fanatic, but will be examined as the conclusions of a humble brother whose love for all of the brethren is unabated. Your own comments, views and expressions are eagerly solicited, and regardless of how much you may differ with us, your letters will be read and given serious consideration. It is not necessary that you agree with all of our conclusions to be respected and regarded as brethren beloved in the Master.

The accusation has long been made that the religious world can hardly conceive of a person being a Christian and Christian only. They must try and categorize him with some sectarian body. On the same basis, the disciple brotherhood has arrived at the place where it cannot conceive of one being a child of God without being a defender of some party growing out of the Restoration movement. The idea is that he must belong to some faction. But this paper is not the organ of any faction, and its editor refuses to be partisan, to the extent God gives him to see the truth. Truth gains nothing by being made the football of a party to be kicked about on the field of life. It is our intention, God willing, to remain free of partisan alliance.

Schisms and Parties

Mission Messenger (November 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

This article is one of a series. To be fully appreciated it should be read in the context of those which preceded it. Unfortunately, there are no extra copies to provide readers who are just now being introduced to our thinking. It is, therefore, necessary that we briefly review. We began by pointing out the fact that we live in a world of turmoil and tension. Our way of life is threatened by corruption and decay. The tried and true values of yesteryear are being abandoned. At the same time we are subjected to the pressure of a godless ideology in the form of the dialectical materialism of the Marxian theory which contemplates the destruction of what we cherish most, and the universal enslavement of mankind. It is our thesis that we cannot survive through the use of raw force or armament, and our only hope lies in the implementation of the philosophy which can meet the enemy upon a rational battleground and overcome.

It is our contention that the rise of western civilization is the result of acceptance of certain great truths. Among these are the belief in one God as the creator of the universe, of the working and intervention of this Supreme Being in history, of the climax of such intervention in the sending of His Son, who entered our world clothed in human flesh nineteen centuries ago. The acknowledgement of Jesus as the Messiah and Son of God, entails a recognition of His code of ethics as the only source of happiness in this life and the one hope of blessing in the world to come.

We began a search to determine what religious organization now extant exemplifies the church of God on earth, in its original purity and power. We have studied the claims of Roman Catholicism and Protestantism and have stated our reasons for rejecting both. We next turned to the churches resulting from the Restoration movement sparked by Alexander Campbell and his contemporaries in the nineteenth century. We pointed out the schism which rent adherents of this movement at the beginning of our own century into the “instrument” and “non-instrument” churches. We investigated The Disciples of Christ and the Conservative Christian Churches, and expressed the view that these were but parties and factions, content to defend the status quo, and unwilling to rise up and pursue the ideal of true restoration.

We come now to a study of “The Church of Christ” which claims to be the kingdom of heaven on earth, and the one body exclusively for which Jesus gave His blood, and whose chosen champions affirm that the church of which they are members is identical in origin, name, doctrine, and practice, with the church of the New Testament scriptures. By the term “The Church of Christ” as used in this article we refer to the great body of believers, distinct and separate from those who use instrumental music in the public worship. Many congregations of the latter also call themselves “Churches of Christ,” but this review will not directly concern them. Actually, we are talking about those who would make, and do make, the use of instrumental music a test of Christian “fellowship” as they employ that term.

Is “The Church of Christ” as manifested in its strength in Nashville, Tennessee; Dallas, Texas; Lubbock, Texas; etc., the one body of our Lord, restored to earth in this day, and does it include within its confines and membership, all of the saints of God on earth? It makes this claim, identical with that of the Roman Catholic Church, and, like the latter, calls upon all those who are not affiliated with it to return to it as “the true church.” In my examination of these claims I will be treading upon familiar ground, for, having left the Lutheran communion at an early age, I have long been identified with one segment of the religious fellowship under review.

I shall try to be objective, at the same time admitting the difficulty posed when one looks at a group from the inside, rather than surveying them from a distance, or as a non-member. However, I have been criticized more severely by members of “The Church of Christ” than by others, for they allege that my strictures against them are too severe, and are unjustly strong, that I am not as fair with them as with others. I doubt that these accusations are correct. They stem from several factors. (1) “The Church of Christ” makes a claim generally made by no other group except the Romanists. Both claim to be the one holy, catholic, and apostolic church of God upon earth. Such a bold contention must be handled in a factual and straightforward fashion. (2) Members of “The Church of Christ” cannot stand criticism. They equate themselves with the elect of God upon earth, and thus can unmercifully castigate all other religious peoples, assailing them both publicly and privately, but they cannot accept criticism with grace, for, as they view it, to criticize them is equivalent to attacking the Bible and the church of our Lord. (3) By its very nature “The Church of Christ,” through an exclusivist attitude, has isolated and insulated its members from contact with the rest of the religious world, and any intimation that they may not be the only children of God upon earth, or that there may be members of God’s family scattered among the sectarian hills, is regarded as a personal insult.

We have no intention of being unnecessarily severe. We seek to be fair, equitable and honest. We do not desire to be prejudiced in favor of, or against anyone on earth. We are aware, that being allied with this segment of the Restoration movement, what we say will, in a sense, involve ourselves. The editor realizes that members of “The Church of Christ” merely reflect the philosophy and teaching of their leaders. If those leaders are correct “The Church of Christ” is represented by the particular faction they represent, and this faction is composed of the Israel of God, and those outside of its environs are pagans and Gentiles, members of other factions being apostates and heretics.

The first difficulty we face in analysis of “The Church of Christ” is to designate which “Church of Christ” we are talking about. There are more than eighteen separate and distinct groups among the non-instrument churches, and each one of these claims to be “the loyal church” or “the faithful church” with but few exceptions. Each regards all of the others as being in various stages of departure or apostasy. In some cities, such as Dallas, Texas, there are as many as ten different factions, no two of which “fellowship” each other, yet, each one claims to be the church as it was set forth in the New Testament. The tragedy of this century is the rape of the Restoration movement which was inaugurated to promote the unity of all believers, by the party spirit. Satan has again demonstrated his ingenuity by bringing about an adoption of the very status we sought to destroy. In our fervency to rid the world of religious division, we have become one of the worst divided religious movements; in our zeal to overthrow sectism we have become sectarian.

The first defection in the Restoration movement was caused by John Thomas, and the Christadelphians exist today as a result. The introduction of societies and instrumental music coupled with other things, produced a cleavage, and since that time, the brethren who use the instrument have divided into “The Disciples of Christ” and “The Christian Church.” There is disharmony among these latter because of lack of discipline and de-emphasis upon godly living, in many places, and there are at least three parties represented by as many publications: The Christian Evangelist—Front Rank; The Christian Standard; and The Voice of Evangelism. But sad as this condition appears, it is not nearly so conglomerated as the one facing non-instrument brethren, who have been plagued with divisions, defections and schisms. Time would fail us to enumerate all of the current factions and no good end would be served in doing so. We shall mention a few, and perhaps the best means of identifying them for the average reader is by the papers which, in most cases, are actually official party organs and mouthpieces.

1. Gospel Advocate. This is the largest and wealthiest group. It is pro-college, pro-church supported orphanages, pro-Herald of Truth, and for this reason it is described as “liberal” by the next faction, which attacks it in print and on the air in a constant barrage of propaganda.

2. Gospel Guardian. This faction is not opposed to extra institutions. It endorses Bible colleges, orphanages, etc., but objects to supporting these from the public treasury of the church. One of its leaders suggested as a compromise, an array of boxes labeled for the various institutions to be placed in the foyer of the church buildings, and into which contributions might be dropped. It opposes “The Herald of Truth” radio and television program because of centralization of support and control.

3. Firm Foundation. This paper originated as the mouthpiece of a faction championing the idea of re-baptism of those who came from sectarian bodies and who had previously been immersed, in opposition to the writers of the Gospel Advocate, who recognized that there were children of God in the various sectarian bodies. In the present controversy, it champions a “middle of the road” position which has actually resulted in a distinct third party in the institutional war.

4. Apostolic Review. This paper traces its origin to the American Christian Review published by Benjamin Franklin. The influence of the paper, also called Octographic Review, and published by Daniel Sommer, is still felt in many sections.

Originally the official organ of an exclusive party opposing Bible colleges, church orphanages, the hireling ministry system, etc., its scope of impact was principally in the northern states. It was Bro. Sommer who wrote the "Address and Declaration" read at the convention held at Sand Creek, Illinois, which declared that those who persisted in certain practices would not be regarded as brethren.

5. Macedonian Call. This paper, first started as a mimeographed periodical, well before 1932, by D. Austen Sommer, a son of Daniel Sommer, was used after that date to promote a division in the ranks of those previously adhering to the position of the Apostolic Review. Contending that the editors of the latter were guilty of a compromise movement, the editor vigorously opposed members of his own family, including his aged father, and built up a considerable following, swaying many congregations.

6. Spiritual Call. This paper, resulting from a change in the name of the Macedonian Call, was used by D. Austen Sommer, in what has since proven to be an abortive attempt to further split the movement which he built around his editorship of the Macedonian Call. This faction virtually disappeared upon the death of Brother Sommer.

7. Word and Work. Published by a segment of the brotherhood who hold to views of the pre-millennial and forthcoming earthly reign of Jesus, not generally acceptable to other factions among the non-instrumental group. The faction is pro-college. The attitude and spirit of the writers is generally less partisan than that of most anti-instrument groups.

8. Old Paths Advocate. The official organ of a large faction composed of those who oppose classes for Bible study, women teachers, individual cups, etc. Due to extreme legalistic attitude these brethren suffer from almost constant agitation and turmoil. The question of how to support foreign missionaries created a recent stir, and they are now torn asunder in many places over the problem of divorce and re-marriage.

9. The Truth. The only journal known to us within the Restoration movement whose editor contends that Acts 2:42 constitutes a divine mandate as a specified “order of worship.” Adherents of this segment are generally opposed to classes, individual cups, etc., and while some of the congregations persist in making “the order of worship” an actual test of fellowship, the editor asserts that he does not, and largely through his influence, congregations looking to him for guidance and counsel are divesting themselves of the intense party spirit.

10. Footprints of Time. A small monthly publication representing a faction of extreme legalistic views, whose members make a test of fellowship on the subjects of Bible classes, women teachers, colleges, orphan homes, etc., and who also recognize no congregation that uses individual cups, breaks the bread before passing, uses leavened bread or unfermented grape juice. It is possible that this faction is strongest in Texas, as most factions are.

11. The Church Messenger. This party is opposed to classes but believes in the use of individual cups. It is very dogmatic and arbitrary, exercising control of the membership to the extent that communicants are forbidden to attend elsewhere under threat of expulsion. This spirit has isolated a considerable segment who are branded as “liberals” because they do not seek to restrict the membership to such a degree as the original party.

12. The Christian Appeal. Members of this faction are among the “liberals” mentioned in the preceding group. In general they are in fellowship with those who support The Gospel Tidings, a Texas journal.

In addition to these splinter groups there is another which makes a test of fellowship out of the manner of breaking the loaf.

The one presiding at the table must break the bread in pieces and pass it to the assembled communicants before he personally eats of it. Another recent party has appeared among the no-class advocates, the break coming over the idea that there are no evangelists today, although there may still be elders and deacons. A considerable party is being built up among them on the question of whether there is any exception whereby the innocent party in a divorce case may marry again.

That our readers may see the real extremes to which the party spirit will carry men, we reproduce herewith an appeal from "The Warrior," published in the issue of August 1, 1959:

Brethren: We wish to compile and publish a list of LOYAL congregations. We want to make a directory of loyal congregations for the benefit of the traveling brethren who wish to worship with loyal congregations; secondly, for the benefit of brethren who are desirous of moving to a loyal congregation. To compile this directory we need the following information. Describe every act of worship in your assemblies. Describe your position on the Communion. Do you have one or two communions on Sunday? Do you use only one cup and one loaf? Do you fellowship the Sunday School or cups brethren? Do you fellowship the Old Paths Advocate? Or other digressives? Do you advocate any doctrine or act of worship that is called a hobby by most of the brotherhood? If you want to be counted among the honored few, give us correct answers to all of our questions, otherwise you will be left out of our directory. . . . Are you living in a state of division, having pulled off from another congregation? Please answer all questions. Do you contend that the cup must have a handle on it? Do you contend the cup must not have a handle on it?

While it may seem amusing to some of our readers that there are congregations which have divided over drinking the fruit of the vine from a glass, because a cup must have a handle, and Jesus took the cup, this is but a tragic demonstration of the extent of division. Perhaps members of some of the larger and wealthier factions will look down upon those who go to such extremes, but it is altogether possible that the same root evil has produced them all, great and small, and the difference is merely one of degree, rather than of nature. The fruits of strife, division, and separation are coming to the harvest, but the seed was planted long ago, and not one single group in "The Church of Christ" is innocent in the matter, as we shall some day prove!

Those who study this sordid picture portrayed by those who claim to be the only hope of the world for peace and unity, will enquire concerning Mission Messenger, and ask if it is not the journal of a faction. To this we reply that it is not, and we do not propose to allow it to become so. A "Ketcherside party" or a "Mission Messenger party" would be just as wrong and sinful as any other. For that reason, the editor regards as his brethren all immersed believers who belong to the various segments mentioned, whether among the instrumental or non-instrumental congregations. We are in fellowship with them, as the Holy Spirit uses the term "fellowship." They are a part of "the brotherhood" and we are commanded to "love the brotherhood." We propose to make nothing a test of our fellowship which God has not made a condition of salvation.

In these days of decadent Christianity we go even farther. Like Thomas Campbell, Alexander Campbell, Barton W. Stone, David Lipscomb, Tolbert Fanning, Benjamin Franklin, and Daniel Sommer, we believe there are children of God among the various sects. God has a people in Babylon. Every person who has been born of the water and of the Spirit is my brother. We do not equate the Restoration movement with the church of God. There may be hundreds of God's children who never heard of that movement. We do not endorse all of the practices of any of these, but endorsement is one thing, and fellowship is a wholly different thing.

We were reared in one faction of the Restoration

Movement. We grew up believing that faction was the kingdom of God, and that Jesus reigned over it and it alone, to the exclusion of all other people in the universe. We refused to regard as “brethren” those who were not in our party. We believed that the boundary of God’s kingdom was circumscribed by the spiritual lines we had drawn. Now we know that the party spirit is in the same category as adultery, idolatry, and drunkenness (Gal. 5:20, 21), and we would as soon try to excuse and justify one as the other. Any of these will keep one out of heaven. “I forewarn you, that they who practice such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God” (verse 21). Whether one can maintain such an ideal as ours in the face of pressure groups and opposition, such as we now experience, only time will tell. Of one thing we are convinced, that the Spirit of God and the party spirit cannot dwell together in the same heart. We also know that no man is a partisan or divisive or factious who recognizes and loves all of God’s children and refuses to allow human lines of demarkation to segregate him from any of them. Satan wants no man to “love the brotherhood.” He will threaten, misrepresent, and malign those who do. But our hope of heaven lies in the direction God has outlined and we must desperately try to reach that goal.

It will be charged that we over-state the case with reference to division, and make it appear worse than it really is. Only the naive and ignorant will so contend. Take, for example, the largest factions among the non-instrument churches, those whose views are expressed through the Gospel Advocate and Gospel Guardian. These parties are in open combat with each other, and representatives of both sides lash out at each other through the medium of bulletins, papers, and over radio stations, as well as from their respective pulpits. On the front page of Gospel Guardian, July 16, 1959, appears the following:

As these lines are written division within the church is becoming more apparent and widespread daily. The line of fellowship has been, and is being, drawn in many places.

Gospel preachers who were once united in the common cause are now engaged in pointed controversy. Men who a decade ago were in demand as gospel preachers throughout the brotherhood are not presently allowed in many pulpits. Sister congregations who have enjoyed the closest fellowship no longer announce each other's meetings. The civil courts have been employed in disputes over church properties. From the pulpit, over the radio, through the papers, on the streets and from house to house, brethren are engaging in sharp controversy. Many things point toward the final formation of a new and additional sect, as well as the eternal loss of innumerable humans.

Of course, the writer who fears the formation of a new sect, does not recognize that, in the sense of the New Testament scriptures, both parties are sects even now. On page 10 of the same issue, another writer declares:

"The Gospel Advocate and company of writers are determined to take the church into apostasy. If the Christian Church followed the "social gospel" route, The Advocate and supporters are on the "social gospel" route for their attitude is identical to the Christian Church."

The bitterness and animosity manifested by these brethren who "bite and devour one another" is revealed in almost every issue of their periodicals. In the July 30, 1959, issue of Gospel Guardian, the editor speaks of "the humiliating spectacle of Brother Reuel Lemmons groveling at the feet of the Gospel Advocate hierarchy." Bro. Lemmons edits Firm Foundation. In the same issue, a staff writer speaks of abundant "proof that a great host of timeservers and moral cowards will follow Goodpasture down the broad road of popularity regardless of how crummy his logic (?) may be." He further says, "To see turncoats like Earl West, John Cox, Rex Turner, and several others bow down in Goodpasture's 'confessional,' kiss his toe, and confess that such reasoning as displayed in his recent article has caused them to 'change' is more than nauseating."

In an editorial in Gospel Guardian, April 2, 1959, an associate editor replies to an article by Guy N. Woods, which appeared in the January 29, 1959, issue of Gospel Advocate. He charges that Bro. Woods is “the hired gun of the Gospel Advocate editor,” and informs him, “You and your boss are drunk on your own wisdom, power, and popularity.” He charges that Woods has “lied over and over again,” and is guilty of “deceitful hypocrisy,” and “full of conceit.” In the same issue, another associate editor accuses his own brother in the flesh of “monumental gall,” of “disturbing churches and alienating brethren over a theory which has become your hobby,” and of making “an ugly insinuation and a miserable misrepresentation.”

The editor of Gospel Advocate has not remained silent under the written and verbal barrage. An illustration is found in an editorial appearing in the July 23, 1959, issue. In this he is replying to a charge by James P. Miller that the Gospel Advocate was trying to destroy Florida Christian College. The editorial calls the college “a hotbed of hobbyism,” and says, “The churches generally are afraid of young preachers from FCC. They have heard of what goes on at the college; they have heard of the churches that have been disturbed or split by FCC preachers.” It is also said, “Now throughout the brotherhood is it generally known that the head of the college is pillowed on the uneasy and unsteady lap of the Guardian. The names of nearly all the Guardian ‘top brass’ from Cogdill down or up, as you care to view the matter, appeared on the FCC lecture program last spring.” The editor says, “We should like to add that some of the Florida churches are getting ‘fed up’ on what they call ‘college domination.’ Some of their leaders have recently so expressed themselves. They do not want the hobbies of the college in question, injected into the churches, either openly or ‘under cover.’” He accuses Charles A. Holt and Yater Tant of having “cast anchor in the murky waters of ‘Sommerism.’”

As to the character of some of his opposers, the editor of the Gospel Advocate asserts:

Sometime ago we cashed a 'cold check' in the amount of $40.00 for a 'Guardian angel', who was stranded in the 'Athens of the South.' His articles have appeared on the front page of the Guardian. Before long he was jailed for forgery, and soon thereafter another 'Guardian angel' 'skedaddled' with his wife. We have seen no repudiation of these men by their fellow-hobbyriders . . . The same papers which have given much attention to Pat Hardeman's lecture engagements have maintained a tomb-like silence on the delinquencies of these two Guardian henchmen.

Some will be in high dudgeon because of this issue of our paper. They will accuse us of flaunting the problems of the "New Testament Church" before the world. But the "New Testament Church" does not act like these brethren do. It is with no sense of pleasure we must spread these exhibits of the party spirit before our readers. We take no pride in doing so. Our only aim is to show the real spirit manifested toward each other by those who boldly assert they are "the one body of Christ" and "the faithful church." The modern segment of Christendom known by the term "The Church of Christ" is one of the most schismatic, factious, split, and divided movements of a religious nature, in this generation. The only thing in which they will unite is an attempt to crucify those who refuse to be sectarian. This institution, in spite of its great boasts and high claims, can never unite the world in Christ. It will only serve to divide and fragmentize wherever it goes. That this is true in mission fields is evidenced by what happened in Germany. After the second World War, missionaries were sent to that land by churches generally of the Gospel Advocate or Firm Foundation parties. Other men, who were opposed to Bible classes, but imbued with zeal to take the message of Jesus to others, also went, but not with "official sanction" of the predominant clique, who had staked out their exclusive claim on Germany. One of the brethren wrote:

Almost from the first our brethren who were already in Europe began opposing our work. They gave us writeups in their papers (not of commendation); they wrote on our posted signs of the time and place for prayer and praise, ‘Anti Brethren.’ They removed our signs more than once.

Thus was transferred to foreign fields the hatred, bitterness, littleness, animosity, and partisan spirit, of the American factions, which begged support upon the basis that they were going to preach the gospel of love, and “save” the poor benighted German people who had never heard “the truth” declared.

This is not an isolated case. The same condition exists in Africa. Preachers of the Gospel Advocate group have been working there for a number of years. This was more than the anti-class, pro-cups brethren connected with The Christian Appeal faction could stand, so they sent Bro. C. B. Head to that land to save little heathen children from the terrible blight of being taught the Bible in a class conducted by a sister. This move spurred the Old Paths Advocate anti-class, anti-cups group into frenzied effort. After virtually “splitting at the already bursting seams” over how to get the money to the missionaries, they finally devised a measure which enabled them to send two men. Before they went, one of them, Paul O. Nichols, wrote in the paper for August 1, 1958, these words:

Brethren, this is the month that C. B. Head of the ‘cups faction’ leaves for Nyasaland from the states. As far as I know that persuasion does not have a single congregation there, but evidently he believes he can establish some . . . Also next month a whole group of “Sunday School faction” brethren are supposed to leave for Africa— five adults and four children.

Of course, Bro. Nichols was not going to represent a faction. He was a representative of “the faithful church.” But that is what the others thought they were. Each party branded the others as factions, and in this, they were all correct! What a tragedy! It is conceivable that a community of African aborigines might have lived in the peace of simplicity until “The Church of Christ” came among them. Then, those who as heathen had dwelt in peace and unity, would be split into warring factions, and taught to unsheathe the sword of the Spirit and cleave each other in fratricidal strife. Not only do the factional missionaries refuse to recognize or to applaud the good, vast though it may be, done by those from various other communions, but they seek to undermine and proselyte from each other, and to confound and confuse the minds of the humble folk they came to “save.” Imagine the effect on untutored minds of the variant claims of belligerent factions to be “the one true church.”

What is the underlying cause for this condition? We think it is plainly seen. Each one of the parties in “The Church of Christ” considers itself as having arrived. All have lost the meaning of “restoration.” For them, nothing remains to be restored. Therefore, each is busy trying to bring forth congregations “in its own likeness and after its own image.” This is seen when “missionaries” enter northern cities where congregations have long been in existence, but which may differ in some respects from the “home congregation” which sent them out. Thus they seek to plant a “Southern-style Church of Christ,” modeled either after the Texas or Tennessee faction which supports them. The ideal of planting congregations of the ancient order is completely forgotten. A church must be of the party stripe and wear the brand of the faction which supplies the money for its existence. The only “unity” which is now proclaimed is “partisan unity” based upon conformity with the norm of the unwritten creed. The various factions in the “Church of Christ” are so many miniature sects, in the fair import of that term.

A couple of years ago the editor was invited to address several hundred preachers and others assembled for a debate between two factions. He announced this theme as the basis of his presentation: "The religious institution commonly called 'The Church of Christ' of which you are members, and of which many are preachers, is not a restoration of the primitive church of God, but is a twentieth century sect growing out of a non-sectarian restoration movement of the previous century, now employing all the means and methods of other sects, and should be regarded in that light." Ten valid points were given to sustain this thesis. Space will not permit a full discussion of all these, but it is our intention, God willing to develop this proposition in our next issue.

A word of caution is necessary. We do not intend to imply that every congregation designating itself "Church of Christ" is sectarian. We know of many that have steadfastly refused to become narrow, intolerant, and partisan. Their struggle to remain non-sectarian is great because of the constant efforts to "line them up" with this party or that. Moreover, we believe that there are brethren in every one of these factions who are not as sectarian as the faction with which they are allied. They hope, work, and pray for better days. They suffer much because of the isolation demanded by the party. They are bigger in spirit than the little group with which they are allied. There are hundreds whose hearts are galled by the bondage of the party spirit, and who sigh and cry over the fate of spiritual Jerusalem. Our hearts go out to them in their condition.

But it is our firm conviction that most of the ardent laborers in every faction enumerated are striving to build up a narrow, bigoted, exclusive party of conformity, and they have brain-washed themselves into thinking that the party of their allegiance is the kingdom over which our Lord reigns in an exclusive sense. Each of these has its own unwritten creeds, its clerical domination, its coercion and compulsion of membership by threat and mental force. "The Church of Christ" has entangled and enslaved the hearts of men and women in a welter of hate, and has thereby destroyed the dignity of the individual. There is no real attempt to restore the primitive ekklesia of God founded upon love for all. Representatives of each faction seek to plant a reproduction of their own party wherever they go. The non-sectarian spirit cannot be tolerated. One must be taught to hate, sneer at, ridicule and revile those who differ, regardless of their honesty and sincerity. These are the stock in trade of the party spirit. They are the brand marks and the stigmata of “the holier-than-thou attitude” which God denounced and decried as a smoke in his nostrils.

“The Church of Christ” in order to become the church of Christ must be saved from itself! It must first be seen in its true light, recognized for what it is, and evaluated in its true sense. Then, the humble, sincere, consecrated, and sanctified ones, filled with a spirit of love for the Master, can begin to work as leaven and produce a better world. The false tests of fellowship, the humanly-devised creedal barriers, the spirit of arbitrary dogmatism— these must be cast to the moles and the bats, and delivered from them we can resume our march toward Jerusalem. In the meantime, let no one think that our strictures upon “The Church of Christ” indicate any lack of love for the church of God, for it is only our love for the latter that prompts us to write as we do about the other. Better days can never come so long as men confuse these two!

To those who become angry because we make these matters public, and because the truth of their conduct and policy is exposed to those whom they call “sectarian” and whom they would like to have believe that things are different than they are, we simply point out that they rejoiced with “joy unspeakable and full of glory” when we were reviewing Roman Catholicism and Protestantism, and when we were dealing with our brethren in the instrumental music groups. But we propose to let the truth be known! We refuse to conceal our own faults while blasting at others! “The Church of Christ” desperately needs to be saved. It is very difficult to save those who do not know they are lost, and yet that is the condition of those who persist in a course of partisan spirit, for it is plainly declared that such cannot enter the kingdom of God!

It is our purpose in our next issue to show the deviations from God's purpose of the modern system calling itself "The Church of Christ." We propose to show that it is inexcusable, for in accusing others, it does the same things. Having done this, we propose to spend several issues discussing a remedy for the world situation. It will be our hope to appeal to all who love God in every branch of a divided Christendom. Upon completion of the current series, and starting early in 1960, God willing, we plan to begin an analysis of the basic underlying error which has led the whole Restoration Movement so far afield. We believe there is one great error in thinking which serves as the taproot of digression and which has betrayed us all into a spirit of factionism, nullifying our claim and stultifying our witness in this generation. If this seems to be too bold an undertaking for one whose talents are so meager, and whose scholarship is so limited, we rest in the hope that once more "He has chosen things of little strength and small repute, yes and even things which have no real existence to explode the pretensions of the things that are— that no man may boast in the presence of God." It is our feeling that what we have to say in the forthcoming series of studies, which will run the entire gamut of revelation, will commend itself to every honest heart on earth, regardless of sectarian affiliation. We can promise you that there are greater things ahead. Pray for us as we do for all of you! "May the God of peace make you holy through and through. May you be kept in soul and mind and body in spotless integrity until the coming of our Lord."

Thoughts on Fellowship (13)

Mission Messenger (November 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

In 1833, Alexander Campbell furnished a statement of the history and aims of the Disciples of Christ for inclusion in the Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge. The following is an interesting extract from that article.

The rise of this society, if we only look back to the drawing of the lines of demarkation between it and other professors, is of recent origin. About the commencement of the present century, the Bible alone, without any human addition in the form of creeds or confessions of faith, began to be plead and preached by many distinguished ministers of different denominations, both in Europe and America.

With various success, and with many of the opinions of the sects imperceptibly carried with them from the denominations to which they once belonged, did the advocates of the Bible cause plead for the union of Christians of every name on the broad basis of the apostles' teaching. But it was not until the year 1823, that a restoration of the original gospel and order of things began to be plead in a periodical, edited by Alexander Campbell, of Bethany, Virginia, entitled "the Christian Baptist."

He and his father, Thomas Campbell, renounced the Presbyterian system, and were immersed in the year 1812.

They, and the congregations which they formed, united with the Redstone Baptist Association; protesting against all human creeds as bonds of union, and professing subjection to the Bible alone. This union took place in the year 1813. But in pressing upon the attention of that society and the public the all-sufficiency of the sacred scriptures for every thing necessary to the profession of Christian character, whether in the private or social relations of life, in the church or in the world, they began to be opposed by a strong creed-party in that association. After some ten years' debating and contending for the Bible alone and the apostles' doctrine, Alexander Campbell and the church to which he belonged, united with the Mahoning Association, in the Western Reserve of Ohio, that association being more favorable to his views of reform.

In his debates on the subject and action of baptism with Mr. Walker, a seceding minister, in the year 1820, and with Mr. McCalla, a Presbyterian minister, of Kentucky, in the year 1823, his views of reformation began to be developed, and were very generally received by the Baptist society, as far as these works were read.

But in his Christian Baptist, which began July 4, 1823, his views of the need of reformation were more fully exposed; and as these gained ground by the pleading of various ministers of the Baptist denomination, a party in opposition began to exert itself, and to oppose the spread of what they were pleased to call heterodoxy. But not until after great numbers began to act upon these principles, was there any attempt toward separation. After the Mahoning Association appointed Mr. Walter Scott an evangelist, in the year 1827, and when great numbers began to be immersed into Christ under his labors, and new churches began to be erected by him and other laborers in the field, did the Baptist associations begin to declare non-fellowship with the brethren of the reformation. Thus by constraint, not by choice, they were obliged to form societies out of those communities that split upon the ground of adherence to the apostles' doctrine.

The above poses some real questions if we dare face them honestly and fearlessly. Since there was no separate religious group known as "The Church of Christ" when Alexander Campbell commenced his work of reformation, was the church of Christ in existence? If not, why did Daniel say it should never be destroyed nor left to other people (2:44)? If the church was in existence, where was it, what name did it wear, and who composed it?

Did God have any children from the close of the first century to the start of the nineteenth, or was Jerusalem from above sterile and barren for seventeen hundred years? Since there was no separate and distinct organization known as "The Church of Christ" during the Dark Ages, to what did the martyrs belong who were put to death by papal Rome, and who are described as "those who keep the commandments of God, and the testimony of Jesus Christ?" If those same people were on earth today would you fellowship them as children of God?

Was Alexander Campbell a child of God while in the Redstone and Mahoning Baptist Associations? If not, how did he become one? Was he a sectarian? If not, is it possible that other persons in such Baptist associations today on the same basis, may be non-sectarian? If Campbell was a sectarian then, when did he cease to be one? If it was when he "was obliged to form societies out of those communities that split upon the ground of adherence to the apostles' doctrine," he became non-sectarian against his will, for he says it was by constraint, and not by choice. He did not declare non-fellowship with the Baptist associations, but they "began to declare non-fellowship with the brethren of the reformation."

If Campbell were alive today would he be regarded as a Christian by any group of "The Church of Christ" which exists as a result of his pioneer efforts? If he preached among the Baptists, and affirmed there were some Christians among them, would not the “Church of Christ” now do as the Baptist Church did then, and “begin to declare non-fellowship with the brethren of the reformation?” If so, does this not indicate that “The Church of Christ” is a sect now, as the Baptist Church was then? It is not necessary to call to our attention that the church of Christ is not a sect. We know that. We believe that church was in existence before Campbell began his reformatory work. We do not think there has ever been a time in the Christian era when the church of Christ ceased to be. Our Lord has never been a head without a body, a ruler without a kingdom, or a shepherd without sheep.

But we are confident that, if those who composed the body of Christ on earth in 1750 A.D., were alive in 1959, they would not be recognized by “The Church of Christ.” Nor would Alexander Campbell find a welcome in any of the two dozen factions which grew out of his efforts to unite all believers in the Lord. What is the basic error in our present thinking? We think that it is very apparent. Until it is removed we will continue to drift toward sectarianism because of the spirit we manifest. We will divide and subdivide every time a brother learns a new truth. Study this statement very closely. We have confounded the Restoration Movement with the church of the New Testament, and we think of it as identical with the church of Christ! Perhaps no greater error ever plagued a religious people!

The church of Christ is unchanged and unchangeable. It is the body of God’s dear Son, who is ageless and timeless. In every century that body on earth has included every saved person, every surrendered soul. The Restoration movement is fluid and changeable. It is the attempt of honest and sincere men to recapture the spirit and form of primitive Christianity, believing it is the hope of the survival of truth. Men must alter their thinking and perspective as they learn more about truth. But the greatest and most tragic error in our generation has been calling that movement “The Church of Christ” and concluding that all who are in it are faithful to the church of Christ, although they may bitterly oppose restoration of that church.

The Revolution

Mission Messenger (November 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

In a noted restaurant in New York there is a mural depicting the famous slumber of Rip Van Winkle. It is in three sections. The first shows a colonial village under the flag of Britain. Van Winkle, with gun and dog, is climbing a hill leading out of the village. The second section shows him asleep in the Catskill Mountains. The third shows him coming down after twenty years into the same village. His hair and beard are long and unkempt, his clothing hangs in tatters. But the biggest change is in the village. It is now a thriving, bustling mart of trade. The flag of the colonies flies from the staff. Rip Van Winkle had slept through the Revolution.

Many brethren and congregations are doing the same thing today. Great changes are taking place in the religious world. Protestantism is being shaken to its foundations. Eminent theologians are rediscovering great truths concerning the church, baptism, the priesthood of all believers, and the ministry of all the saints. There is a tremendous stirring in the hearts of earnest men. What contribution is being made by the heirs of the glorious movement which sought to spark these very changes? Many are wholly oblivious to what is going on. They have shut themselves in and locked the door. They have closed their eyes and stopped their ears.

This is the greatest opportunity in more than a century to present a constructive program to those who ask for it. But most of the brethren are grinding grist from the same old traditional sermon outlines regardless of their inapplicability to the needs of this hour. Inside of partisan walls they feel secure and undisturbed as did Rip Van Winkle in the mountain forest. They even resent those who go as free men among all peoples, and look with suspicion upon those who move without fear in circles they dare not visit.

But the old days of partisan alignment and factional bitterness are doomed. The era in which the loyalty of men to Jesus was judged by the paper which they read is “gone with the wind.” The handwriting is on the wall. Satan will do all he can to maintain the strife, envy, hatred and bigotry of yesteryear, but God’s people can no longer indulge in the luxury of schism and division over men and parties. There is a revolution in our thinking that is long overdue. The children of the Father are learning the power of love and it is surging through their veins with a new spiritual vitality. They are learning how to treat each other. The tyranny and force once accepted in supine and servile obedience to men will no longer be the means of achieving spiritual ends. We feel sorry for those who are asleep in the Catskills while the battle for freedom is being waged in the valleys. Things will look different when they awaken from their slumber and return to the familiar scenes and find what a wonderful change God hath wrought!

“Like a mighty army moves the church of God! Brethren, we are treading where the saints have trod!” Let our hearts be filled with zeal, our tongues be aflame for God, and our lives a constant witness for truth. Did you enlist to serve or to slumber? Will grumbling and complaining achieve His purpose? The Master is calling! Arise!

Church of Christ Party

Mission Messenger (December 1959)

Volume 21

[Abstract]

At the outset of this article I want to share with you the following statement with which Alexander Campbell introduced the Christian Baptist.

It is a rarity, seldom to be witnessed, to see a person boldly opposing either the doctrinal errors or the unscriptural measures of a people with whom he has identified himself, and to whom he looks for approbation and support. If such a person arises in any party, he soon falls under the frowns of those who either think themselves wiser than the reprover, or wish so to appear. Hence it usually happens that such a character must lay his hand upon his mouth, or embrace the privilege of walking out of doors. Although this has usually been the case, we would hope that it would not always continue so to be.

It is generally presumed that a paper will soon fall into disrepute if it dare to oppose the views or practices of the leaders of the people addressed. Editors generally, too sensitive of this, are very cautious what they publish. Some of them are very consciously attentive to avoid giving offence; insomuch, that when an article is presented for insertion, the first objection to it sometimes is, "The people will not like this, and you know a man must please his customers."

All this may do very well when a writer proposes to please his readers, or when he pledges himself to support the tenets or practices of any people. But when the exhibition of truth and righteousness is proposed, neither the passions nor prejudices of men— neither the reputation nor pecuniary interest of the writer, should be consulted.

In the face of these predictions as to what will happen, I propose to analyze the status of “a people with whom I have chosen to identify myself.” I am affiliated with one segment of the Restoration movement. I am engaging in an investigation of a system which is known as “The Church of Christ.” My thesis is that, generally speaking, it is not a restoration of the primitive church of God, but rather exhibits the nature and characteristics of a party, or sect. My purpose is to arouse those who are members of it to visualize it in its true light, so they may divest themselves of their sectarian tendencies, rise up, and begin anew the restoration program which was abandoned in order to defend the status quo. As it now exists, rent, torn, and divided “The Church of Christ” can never unite the world. It will complicate, rather than solve the problems of a divided Christendom.

The task attempted in this little journal is a difficult one, for the reasons assigned by Alexander Campbell. It is inherent in the party spirit that it seeks to perpetuate itself. To do this it must evict and exclude that which opposes it. Since the party spirit is a work of the flesh, and is evil, that which is driven out must be good. It is characteristic of all sectism that it always drives out the purifying influence. Martin Luther was excommunicated by the corrupt Roman Church; Thomas Campbell was forced from the Presbyterian Church; Alexander Campbell was evicted by the Baptist Associations; and Roger Williams was driven forth in the dead of winter by the Puritan colonies. Those who prefer disunity, strife and party narrowness, will persecute and oppose the non-sectarian attitude, which opposes wrong because it is wrong, and not because it is done in or by another party.

These writings will never be read by hundreds in “The Church of Christ” because they will be debarred and burned by leaders, preachers, and elders, who control by suppression and boycott. Men who bitterly criticize and condemn others, regardless of their earnestness and sincerity, cannot stand to be condemned. Those who exercise thought control by prohibition and duress, think they are doing God service. They confuse “The Church of Christ” which they have constructed with the new covenant church of God, set up by the apostles of Jesus, and in their partisan zeal they consider themselves the exclusive recipients of God’s mercy and grace. To criticize their profession or practice is, as they view it, to condemn the church for which our Saviour shed His blood. In spite of the penalty one must pay for such daring and boldness, in the interest of truth and righteousness, I shall give my reasons for believing that “The Church of Christ” is a modern sect or party which has grown up out of a non-sectarian attempt to unite all believers in Christ, by a restoration of the primitive order.

This does not mean that every congregation designating itself as a “Church of Christ” is under the stigma of this accusation. There are certainly congregations which are not sectarian in outlook or spirit. What we say will not concern them. Neither does this article imply that all who are members of “The Church of Christ” are sectarian. Thousands are not, although many more thousands have been made the victims of a narrow, bigoted, spiteful and venomous party spirit by indoctrination with the belief that the party has arrived, and the church represented by their particular faction has fully restored the plan and program of the Master. Actually “The Church of Christ” appears in a false role or guise. It has frequently deluded and imposed upon the hearts of men through slogans and manipulations of the scriptures, which serve to conceal the reality of its practice. Such grave and serious charges ought to be carefully weighed and pondered at length before being committed to writing where all and sundry may view them, and once written or uttered, should be challenged. I write these things in fear of the Judgment of God, and I shall meet the challenge to present the proof.

“The Church of Christ” is under the condemnation of Romans 2:1, 2: “Now if you feel inclined to set yourself up as a judge of those who sin, let me assure you, whoever you are, that you are in no position to do so. For at whatever point you condemn others you automatically condemn yourself, since you, the judge, commit the same sins. God’s Judgment, we know, is utterly impartial in its action against such evil-doers” (Phillips’ Translation). “The Church of Christ” has set itself up as a judge of the sectarian world. It is in no position to do that. It automatically condemns itself by committing the same sins, and engaging in the same practices. Let us calmly investigate some of these points at which this great organization inveighs against others.

1. DIVISION

The sectarian world is condemned as being hopelessly divided. Radio speakers for “The Church of Christ” point out the number of divisions in the Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, and other Protestant sects. But there is no group more torn, rent, divided, and beset by schisms today than the non-instrument heirs of the Restoration movement. They engage in more bitter, acrimonious, and caustic debates among themselves than all the rest of the religious world put together. There are more than twenty distinct factions among them, each of which, with few exceptions, claims to be the one, holy, apostolic, and catholic church of God upon earth, while regarding all of the others as heretics and apostates. In some larger southern cities, there are as many as ten different “loyal” churches, each of which claims to be the “true church” with no two of these recognizing each other. Moreover, while the rest of the religious world is seeking grounds and means of uniting their efforts, the movement which began to show them how to do it, is preparing to divide even further, and to split, fragmentize, and splinter “that which remains.” Those who doubt this need only to read such journals as Gospel Advocate and Gospel Guardian. The chickens hatched from the eggs of the party spirit are coming home to roost, and we deplore the chickens and disown the roost.

2. CREEDS

While spokesmen for “The Church of Christ” assail the religious world for their creeds, no group of people now in existence have devised, employed or enforced more unwritten creeds. The word “creed” is from the Latin credo, I believe. Whatever a man believes is his creed. Certainly whatever is required by any group as a test of admission to its fellowship is the creed of that group. Not all personal creeds are made authoritative or binding, but whatever is demanded by any group for admissibility to its membership or fellowship, is its creed. All of the factions under consideration claim to have “no creed but the Bible.” A favorite slogan is “We speak where the Bible speaks, and remain silent where it is silent.” This claim is proven to be ridiculous in the light of events. How can there be twenty divergent and non-cooperating factions, if all follow the Bible as their only creed?

The truth is that it is not the Bible, but opinions of it, and interpretations of it, which constitute the real creeds of all the warring factions. Revelation is what God said; interpretation is what men think he meant by what he said. So revelation is an expression of the divine mind; interpretation is the application of human minds to it, to determine in the light of reason, what is required of us. But the exaltation of interpretation to the place of authority, not only supplants the divine revelation, but creates a human basis of belief and worship, and the demanding of unvarying conformity to such a basis is popery undisguised. There is nothing infallible about human reasoning, or interpretation.

“The Church of Christ” is divided over colleges, orphan homes, old folks homes, benevolent societies, Sunday schools, lesson leaves, quarterlies, women teachers, evangelists, pastors, communion cups, leavened or unleavened bread, breaking the bread, fermented wine or grape juice, the time of serving the Lord’s Supper, the coming of Jesus, whether pre-millennial or post-millennial, marriage and divorce, radio and television programs, the method of support of missionaries, re-baptism, fellowship, order of worship, and a host of other things, including such items as whether the cup for the Lord’s Supper must have a handle on it, or not. Every one of these has at some time or place been made a test of fellowship, and has thus been elevated as the creed of some faction.

3. THE CLERGY

Members of “The Church of Christ” have always castigated “the denominations” for having a special clergy, and for creating a distinction between “clergy” and “laity” which gave impetus to the Great Apostasy. But they also have a special clergy system. “The minister” in “The Church of Christ” is nothing more or less than a clergyman. These take advantage of reduced rates in travel fares and encomiums bestowed by business upon “the clergy.” They use “clergy certificates” on the bus and railroad lines, albeit most of them apply for such as “Ordained clergymen acting as evangelists,” in the hope the last word will cancel out the implications of the first. Most of them do not know how an evangelist should act!

“The Church of Christ” seminaries have special classes for “ministerial students,” and they talk of “entering the ministry” as a profession, just as others enter the medical or legal professions. In Firm Foundation, April 8, 1919, under the heading “A First Class College,” appeared this announcement of Abilene Christian College:

In addition to the College of Arts and Sciences we will have a complete, thorough seminary, in which work for preachers and others who desire to become efficient church workers will be given. This work will lead to the B.Th. and Th.M. degrees.

It is no surprise to read, therefore, in Abilene Christian College Lectures, under the heading “Our Educational Program,” this statement:

The church today demands and deserves a trained minister. Statistics show that our educated ministers received their early education in Christian colleges. The age calls for great preachers well trained. . . . The small college must train for the church Christian laymen; men who live above narrow prejudices and pettiness of spirit. Another great need of the church today is a large number of trained laymen.

Here is a distinction between “the trained minister” and “the trained layman.” You cannot create a laity out of the many, without creating a clergy out of the few. (See this point fully developed in the author’s book “The Royal Priesthood”).

David Lipscomb saw this in his earlier life, and it prompted him to write these words:

We think the most fatal mistake of Alexander Campbell’s life and one that has done much and we fear will do much to undo his life’s work, was the establishment of a school to train and educate young preachers.

Brother Lipscomb explained why he thought this was a fatal mistake:

Brother Campbell in his later life, when his great mind had much failed, was used by those around him to seemingly approve much that he had condemned in his early days of vigor. He probably conceived the idea in his vigor that he could have the Bible taught to men who would teach others also without them becoming a separate order of clergy. If so, the result proves how sadly mistaken the great man was. (Gospel Advocate, 1875, page 345).

What David Lipscomb and Alexander Campbell saw in their early years, J. N. Armstrong, president of Harding College, realized in his latter years, as the following indicates:

I feel distressed sometimes over the condition of the church everywhere. For instance I think that our schools are all in line to build up the clergy and that the church in general is tending toward denominationalism. I do not know what can be done, maybe nothing, but I do think there is a need for us to put on the brakes, and warn the brotherhood about the definite trends of these times. I am not pessimistic, but my optimism does not keep me from facing facts. I think, as I said above, that all our schools are set for the training of professional preachers.

4. THE PASTOR SYSTEM

Preachers of “The Church of Christ” once made much ado about “the sectarian pastor system.” For reasons which are quite obvious they do not say so much about it lately. They profess to believe that the elders are God’s pastors, but there is a great gulf fixed between their profession and practice. The one-man hired minister in a congregation with bishops occupies exactly the same position among them as the pastor in other religious organizations. He is hired by contract, often after competition in a trial sermon exhibition, he has an office, a secretary, and the special listing in all advertising. He is morals adviser, counsellor, consultant, business manager, program director, and front man. He has exclusive right to the pulpit. He is a hired specialist in management, and he does what he is hired to do. Woe unto the careless soul who questions his right to do so!

It was J. N. Armstrong, writing in The Living Message, 1924, who said:

It is useless, brethren, to oppose the “pastor system” when we are fast developing it, yea, when we have largely embraced it already.

Guy N. Woods, speaking on a lectureship program at Abilene Christian College, in 1939, affirmed:

It will not be seriously denied that there is an arrangement in operation in the church of Christ which bears a suspicious similarity to the pastor system of the denominations. It is idle to deny this. . . . We believe that the pernicious and church-destroying doctrine of majority rule is the outgrowth of the incipient pastor system now in operation among us. Other evils will result if a halt is not soon called.

In the same series of lectures, Roy Lanier voiced these sentiments:

The fact that these conditions exist is proof that our present trend is definitely toward the one-man pastor system. I do not believe preachers ought to be blamed for being the pastors of the churches. In many places they have found the elders incapable of doing the work, and in other places they were not financially able to take the time to do their work. So rather than see the work go undone, the preachers have done it for the elders. We have tried to justify ourselves in this by saying the elders are having the work done, overseeing it; doing the work by proxy. But the leading part taken by the average preacher silences this quibble.

L. L. Brigance was for years a professor in Freed-Hardeman College. He wrote in the July 24, 1941, Gospel Advocate, these words:

There is no denying the fact that the “pastor system” exists among the churches of Christ today. It is a growing evil. It constitutes a major menace to the cause of Christ. If it continues to develop as rapidly during the next quarter of a century as it has during the last one, the greater part of the church is going to be corrupted by it. “Brethren, we are drifting.”

The seriousness in this particular phase is found in the fact that it was made a basis of division in the church, in conjunction with instrumental music. The two were placed in the same category. In Attitudes and Consequences, page 191, Homer Hailey writes:

Although the major wedge which divided the body, as we shall show in the next chapter, was instrumental music, the controversy over the “located preacher” and the titles “reverend” and “pastor” contributed its share of the division.

This poses a few questions. If the located preacher was an issue of such magnitude as to contribute to the division from the Christian Church, and the non-instrumental “Church of Christ” has now adopted and defends the system, should not apology be tendered to the Christian Church, for all the trouble caused over this matter? Regardless of the continued problem relative to the instrument, do not the non-instrument churches stand condemned for promoting division by agitating over a thing which their leading preachers and teachers now admit they have adopted? Would it not be an act of gentlemanly courtesy for the “located preacher” in any community where there is also a Christian Church, to go on the air, and confess that whereas the non-instrument church once raised a ruckus over the pastor system, they are now sorry, and ask for forgiveness? If they once deemed the located minister and instrumental music to be in the same category, and they now use the scriptures to uphold the located minister, and the same scriptures the Christian Church once used, is it possible they may sometime re-examine the scriptures dealing with music, adopt the instrument as they have the located minister, and defend it on the same basis as those who now use it? The organ in the choir loft and the located minister in the pulpit were once viewed in the same light you know!

5. CONVENTIONS

“The Church of Christ” declares that it has no conferences, synods, or conventions to instigate procedures, or to formulate and influence policy. This is very misleading, for examination will show that it holds annual regional or district conventions which occupy the same place, and perform the same functions as the conventions it derides when held by others. In order to evade criticism these conventions are placed under the sponsorship of humanly-organized church-related institutions. The college “lectureships” have been converted into conventions for the church. There is not one phase of a “sectarian” convention that is not present in such lectureships.

Home and foreign mission statistics are revealed, with the missionaries being summoned from the field personally to make their reports. Special honorary dinners are arranged for the clergymen with extended service. Questions of church extension are discussed and committees appointed to further such. Choirs, glee clubs, and choral groups render special programs. Bands and orchestras give sacred concerts. There are pageants, plays, and junior theatricals for visitors. The faculty wives arrange teas for visiting women. There are exhibits and displays put on by various large and successful congregations, and other exhibits of wares by charitable, eleemosynary, missionary, and educational foundations and organizations. Publishers and suppliers of Sunday School materials have booths to display their latest offerings. There are classes for preachers, elders and women, as well as panel discussions on the problems and work of the church. Missionaries are selected and special funds raised for missionary and other endeavors.

The reality of the responsibility placed upon us by the great commission was emphasized by many of the speakers in harmony with the emphasis of Harding College class work. . . . On Thursday morning at the close of the service President Benson asked for those who had definitely decided to work in foreign lands to come to the front and eleven young people made their way through a packed auditorium to stand and make their intentions known. . . . One said it was in reality a unity meeting, bringing together so many preachers from so many parts of the brotherhood. Over five hundred dollars was given to the church building fund for Germany and eleven hundred and twenty dollars was given to build a school building in Africa. (Harding College Bulletin, Dec. 15, 1945, page 3).

That you may see that we do not misrepresent when we say that the college "lectureship" has been created to take the place of denominational conventions, we quote from an editorial by Joseph W. White, in Firm Foundation, April 14, 1959, page 226.

This is not stated to glorify Pepperdine College. The college is not the church, neither is it trying to do the work of the church. I do not believe that anyone there wants to "run" the church. However, for a people who have no sort of denominational connections, no headquarters on earth, and no conventions, the college lectureships have grown because they fill a need. Here a free, undenominational people can come together in huge numbers to share their joy, their faith, and their ideas.

The subject of this editorial was "The Spirit of California Churches." It is significant that under this heading a college would even be mentioned. It is more significant to learn that among those who have "no conventions" this type of lectureship has risen to fill a need. It is “Church of Christ” propaganda to refer to itself as undenominational, with no headquarters on earth, and having no conventions. Actually, this movement has been promoted into a huge denomination. Each faction has a headquarters in the United States, a center from which those in control can reach out and regulate congregations and force preachers into line. Most of these have a directory of preachers, a directory of churches, an official journal, and conventions disguised under terms more palatable to the constituency.

In an editorial in Gospel Guardian, April 16, 1959, page 772, occurs these statements:

The college lectureship has become a cut-and-dried propaganda forum for “our institutions,” “our colleges,” “our national radio program,” “our national advertising agency,” etc. We have a letter from a brother in Odessa, Texas, about the recent lectureship at Abilene. This man is telling us of the reaction of another brother who attended that affair: “He said there was more ballyhoo for various institutions and promotions than he had ever seen before. Seems like everybody had his own booth and was pushing, promoting, and ballyhooing their pet projects. Some of them had girls plugging their promotions, handing out circulars and pamphlets. He said rather than being what it ought to be it reminded him of a Roman Catholic bingo game.”

OTHER INCONSISTENCIES

“The Church of Christ” is inconsistent in the attacks made upon other religious organizations, and the censure of their practices. We cite a few instances which are undeniable. One of the causes of complaint against those designated “Digressives” was the use of special choirs. “The Church of Christ” contended that the singing must be congregational. Now, however, choruses and glee clubs from colleges and orphan homes regularly tour among the churches, presenting programs of sacred music, such programs being sponsored, arranged and advertised by the local churches.

In one of the church-related colleges in Arkansas, a certain professor was given free rein to oppose Christians bearing arms in time of war. Through him the school came to be recognized as a center of pacifism. His constant outpouring of printed propaganda strongly intimated that those who wore the uniform and engaged in combat duty were in the category of murderers. Yet the school eagerly enrolled every one of the returning servicemen who could be persuaded to take advantage of the G. I. educational bill which provided government financing for education in compensation for their time spent in the armed services. Consistency is not a virtue of these schools which boast a Christian atmosphere. Although they have made it appear that they have never taken money from the "church treasury" a field agent for one of them, said a few years ago, "They all do it, and they all deny it!"

It is a common thing for "The Church of Christ" to publish statements by Roman Catholics showing that these are enemies of the public schools. One such recent article began with this paragraph:

Since it is a very likely possibility that the Democrats will run a Catholic for the office of President in 1960, we believe that people are entitled to know about the Catholic attitude toward our country and its schools. After we have noticed this attitude, let us decide whether we are willing to accept Roman Catholic appraisal of our public schools. The following antagonism toward the public school system of America evidences the untrustworthiness of Roman Catholicism.

As to our country and its government, it is a well-documented fact that for years "The Church of Christ" in the southland has circulated the thesis of David Lipscomb that civil government originated with the devil in rebellion against God, the identical position, incidentally, of Jehovah's Witnesses. Thus there are thousands of members of the "Church of Christ" who dare not vote, hold office, or defend the country in time of attack, and whose sole responsibility of citizenship is discharged in the dubious practice of murmuring and complaining about the "powers that be."

The Roman Catholics are not more vociferous in many places than "The Church of Christ" leaders, in open antagonism to the public schools, which are labeled as "hotbeds of infidelity," "creeping cancers on society," and "contaminated fountains of moral putridity." Parents are urged not to send their children to public schools. They are threatened with dire consequences if they do. And, like the Catholics, "The Church of Christ" is now in the process of developing its own parochial schools from kindergarten through college, in order to teach its peculiar doctrine, and segregate its offspring from contact with other American children. Of course, like the Catholics, members of "The Church of Christ" are eager to get employment in the public schools as teachers, being willing to work in these "sink holes of infidelity and evolution" for the salary paid.

If the "antagonism toward the public school system of America evidences the untrustworthiness of Roman Catholicism," it exhibits the same untrustworthiness of Church-of-Christ-ism. We would be in a real predicament if the Democrats were to run a Roman Catholic for President, and the Republicans were to run a member of "The Church of Christ" at the same time. Those who desire to preserve their freedom could not conscientiously vote for either, and for the same reasons. Both favor parochial schools of the denomination to public schools. Both believe in suppression of thought by force. A consecrated brother was thrown into a filthy jail at Henderson, Tennessee, for no greater crime than talking about his convictions of truth with a group of students at Freed-Hardeman College. A clergyman at Paragould, Arkansas, waved a copy of Bible Talk before the eyes of his parishioners, and demanded that they refuse it at the post office. He kept his copies, though. In a congregation in the midwest, the preacher and elders conspired together to excommunicate two humble brethren for no greater crime than passing copies of MISSION MESSENGER to brethren in their homes and places of business. “The Church of Christ” clergymen would deny to others freedom of speech, freedom of press, and freedom of worship without duress. Those who read with indignation what happens to “The Church of Christ” in Italy need to remember what that church does to some of the members who live in the United States.

One seldom sees an article dealing with what is wrong with the “Digressives” as the instrumental factions are designated, that does not contain a scathing indictment of women preachers. It is always pointed out that when Christ called and sent forth the twelve and the seventy, not one of them was a woman. A look at any list of missionaries called and sent by “The Church of Christ” will disclose the names of many women directly supported by congregations. Apparently it is all right to send women as missionaries to the heathen, so if the “Digressives” would ship all of their women preachers to Africa, they could keep all of them. There is an indication of a growing tendency to use women speakers to address special meetings in this country. Perhaps in a few more years the objection to the practice of women preachers will be silenced as was that on “the located ministers,” and for the same reason. Apparently, any practice in which we engage is scriptural! A hobbyist is one who opposes what we have; a sectarian is one who has what we oppose! If we do it, it is right; if others do, it is wrong.

HOW DID IT HAPPEN

The Restoration movement began with wonderful prospects at the outset of the last century. What transpired to sidetrack it from its original purpose and to turn its heirs into rabid partisans? No simple answer can be given. Certainly any such result is the product of multiple factors. But it has been a case of history repeating itself. Every attempt at reformation or restoration has terminated in formation of another sect. This one is no exception to the general rule.

The first generation of reformers, possessed of vision and courage, make tremendous sacrifices of time and effort to remove barriers and clear away debris. Those who follow them, thinking that the clearing is the goal, settle down and proceed to erect walls and build a fortress about it to protect their gains and discoveries. Opinions are crystallized into tests of fellowship, and interpretations are welded into unwritten creeds. When other reformers arise who challenge the idea that the clearing is the promised land, and who regard it as but a temporary resting place in the wilderness, they are driven out into exile. Those who will not conform to the party norm, but whose eyes are lifted up to the far off hills beyond which lies the realization of our hopes, are considered dangerous, and regarded as mischief makers and seditionists. Unless they are possessed of an uncommon degree of love which transcends all partisan considerations they will form a faction of their own sympathizers, regard them as composing the “true church,” and, in time, proceed to do unto others as it was done unto them. This has happened repeatedly. It is the tragic history of religious reformatory movements.

The greatest error contributing to the sectarianizing of “The Church of Christ” occurred when adherents ceased to regard the Restoration as a movement and came to look upon it as the church. This marked the culmination of progress toward the ideal, and the beginning of the defense of the status quo. At this juncture men ceased to regard themselves as marching toward the primitive order, but concluded that they, and those who agreed with them, had arrived. From henceforth all truth was judged on the basis of past discovery. There was nothing else to be learned, no new veins or lodes to be uncovered. They separated, segregated, and isolated themselves from other believers in the Christ, and began to affirm that the church of which they were members was identical in name, doctrine, and practice with the New Testament church. This required manipulating and shuffling the scriptures to make it appear that what men had constructed upon the basis of their partial and finite knowledge was the system sanctioned by the New Testament scriptures.

As factions multiplied in the movement, the searching of the scriptures became a fine art of specialists who were rivals in the field of controversy and polemics, and whose purpose was to justify the party. The constant research to find flaws in others and to rationalize the partisan position could only result in self-righteousness and the thwarting of God's purpose among men. The criterion was not the meaning of the Holy Spirit, but the inability of an opponent to reply. Vital distinctions were glossed over and lost, and other distinctions were made where the Spirit made none. It is inherent in any religious party that it forms its own glossary of terms which are made to mean what the party wants them to mean. Each party has its own definitions.

No group is a greater offender in this than "The Church of Christ." These brethren use "loaded terms" calculated to mislead and deceive the unwary and uninitiated. To some of them, the background and context of a passage mean but little, if the passage can be utilized to bludgeon an unsuspecting foe. Of course, hundreds do this sincerely, having been taught the authorized or party-approved application. One can almost tell which school a preacher attended by listening to him on the radio for a little while. He bears the mark of his "alma mater" and the "cut of his jib" indicates where he was in dry dock. The cliches, spurious arguments, and glib replies, have been sanctified by several generations of partisan pulpiteers.

This issue of our little journal will bring down upon our head the anathemas of "the powers that be" in the institution called “The Church of Christ.” But, like the holy apostle, “We also believe, and therefore speak.” Our love extends to every member of every faction in “The Church of Christ.” It is our conviction that many in their partisan zeal have been betrayed into a false emphasis and are espousing a fallacious position. That does not arouse our hatred or animosity, but it does increase our compassion toward those who have been blind followers of the party.

We love the church of God. It is our conviction that it embraces within its borders every child of God in this world. We do not believe there is a single saved person outside of its environs. We regard it as the one body, of which every person who has been born again, is a living, vital member. The church of Christ is a divine fellowship. It is the holy, apostolic, and catholic church of God upon earth. Every person who is in the church of Christ is my brother and I am bound to him by spiritual ties, invisible and intangible, which have been forged by the cross, and sealed by the blood of the crucified Jesus. It is our desire to labor for a restoration to this earth of the primitive order which characterized that church from its inception. The party spirit is antagonistic to the Spirit of God, the Holy Spirit, through which God dwells in the church. It is for that reason I must oppose every attempt to factionalize the One Body, and must resist every invasion to capture it for the glory and aggrandizement of any party which would prostitute its high calling to further their selfish aims.

I thank God that there are many congregations composed of humble followers of the Christ who are seriously interested in divesting themselves of the sectarian attitude. There are no doubt those in every segment who are groping and climbing toward the light even as we seek to do. All of us, without exception, have been involved in factions. No one of us has been wholly free of the party spirit. It is a matter of encouragement that many are studying and doing research into their own failings and faults. They are not trying to justify sermon outlines of hoary vintage, or parroting notes copied from others decades ago, but they are stooping to drink directly from the fountain, and not from a cup handed them by their ancestors.

I was once a Lutheran. I left this human party with its creed, its spirit of exclusiveness, and its parochial schools established to perpetuate “the faith” and to regiment the minds of students, so they would “goose-step” in unison with the party music. I was attracted by the Restoration plea in its beauty, glory and freedom. I grew up in a segment of the disciple brotherhood which regarded itself as “the faithful church.” It is composed of wonderful people, humble, unassuming and sincere, except in matters of partisan defence. For years I was regarded as a champion of that party and “its position.” I felt there were no children of God outside of the fence inside which we stayed. We constituted the kingdom of God on earth. Jesus had no other subjects in the entire world. All others in the religious realm were either hobbyists or sectarians. We were neither. We were the elect of God, and besides us there were no other. The fathers of this party, before my birth, had declared that those who viewed things differently would not be regarded as brethren. We accepted their interpretation, declaration, dictum, and verdict, and began to fit the sacred scriptures to it, making “brotherhood” contingent upon agreement in opinion and interpretation.

We were inconsistent! There never was a congregation where all agreed. In some places class discussions were forums of dissenting views. But none of these things moved us so long as all had the correct position on the one thing that counted. The result of such legalism was that the elders often became legislators, demanding acquiescence to their edicts under threats of excommunication. Love for the erring one was no consideration; one must meekly submit even though intellect rebelled, or be forced out by cold, formal process of law. Preachers who proclaimed to others the autonomy of the local church, ignored their own teaching, and constituted themselves brotherhood regulators, sometimes ruining one with whom they took issue even before he knew what had happened. These are all symptoms of the party spirit, so in contrast with the fruits of the Holy Spirit.

When I became aware of how far we had drifted from the primary ideals of the Restoration movement, and saw how many misused and abused God's Word, explaining passages arbitrarily to justify a cherished position, I became convinced that no faction is the church of God. It is too little, too circumscribed, too exclusive, and too land-locked to confine God's mercy and grace. I was then forced to examine farther, and I reached the conclusion that as no one faction growing out of the Restoration movement is the church of God, so that movement as such, is not now, and never was the church of God. That church has always been in existence. There has never been a time since Jesus sat down at the Father's right hand that he has been a king without a kingdom; a shepherd without sheep; or a head without a body. The church was in existence when Alexander Campbell was born.

We feel that unless there is a complete revolution in attitude we will doom ourselves to become more sectarian. The world cries for leadership out of the gloom created by the foggy thinking of men. We cannot supply the help that is required by a holier-than-thou attitude. We must be ready to go where God opens up a door to testify of our convictions. It will avail little to preach year after year to the same people, and talk about those we never see. We must cease to trust for salvation in slogans, shibboleths, traditional sayings, or walls of our own construction. It is faith in God, and service to humanity coupled with love of mankind, that will keep us from being just a narrow, bigoted twentieth century sect.

It is possible that there may be hundreds of God's children on earth in the church of Christ, who are not in an American-style "Church of Christ." There may be thousands who have never heard of the Restoration movement. We know that the implication in such statements grates on the ears of many. Those who are more charitable toward us think we are growing soft, compromising, and becoming "liberal;" those less charitable think we are going crazy and losing our mind. So strange a sight is it in this world of sectism to see a non-sectarian; so rare in this era of hate for one to love all men; that such a person is regarded as mad or insane, even as the apostles on Pentecost were thought to be drunken when filled with the Spirit.

I have a very deep regard for those in every faction. In spite of their bitter divisions, fighting, schism, and strife, I do not dislike them. I pray for them. I know what wide divergency there is in the profession and practice of most of them. Many are unhappy, frustrated, discontent, and beset by fears. Their course can only lead to more contention, animosity and separation in the future. Their attitude will spawn other divisions. Each succeeding generation suckling the partisan breast and nourished with the pap of party spirit, will contribute its share of hostilities and rivalry. Every new truth learned will be the signal for an outbreak of internecine warfare. They will continue to stigmatize and recriminate. The world will not be made a better or more peaceful place, but the brethren will contribute more and more to confusion and consternation.

Why do I not abandon them? One does not desert those whom he loves. Does an arm desert the body? Moreover, I am convinced that the principles which gave birth to the Restoration movement were sound, and the premises upon which it proceeded were correct. The movement has run aground because of abandonment of those principles. We must re-affirm those premises. We must re-activate those principles. We must restore the Restoration. To do this, we must correctly evaluate our status in the Christian realm. We should neither over-estimate our importance nor underestimate the task to which we have been called in this decadent age.

The modern system denominated “The Church of Christ” cannot save us from the foes that threaten our civilization. With its emphasis upon big programs, big preachers, big money, and big buildings, it will only serve to obscure the program of God for mankind. In a wishy-washy world its arbitrary, dogmatic assertions made with the assurance of personal conceit, will appeal to the ignorant and unthinking, who seek for security in a creedal basis, but their souls will still be empty, and their spirits remain a vacuum except for disturbing and recurring doubts. It requires more than belief in water baptism and opposition to instrumental music to satisfy the deep hunger of a soul that pants for God as the deer does for the water brooks.

It is our hope in succeeding issues to point the way to better things, to suggest very humbly what we may do to again go forward. It will do us no good to count statistics, to compare the number of converts with those made by other groups. Unless we really grow toward God, numerical growth is of little value. The world will not be made better by a fast growing sect. We shall seek to delve deep into causes and conditions, and to write from the heart, fully aware that it is still true that the essence of our relationship to God is expressed in loving Him with all of our soul, heart, might, and strength, and to love our neighbor as we love ourself. We only ask a careful reading of what we write. Our love for you will not be lessened if you cannot agree with all of our statements and conclusions. We only commend you unto God and to the word of His grace which is able to build you up and to give you an inheritance among them that are sanctified. With malice toward none, with charity toward all, we pray that God may help us to help each other to a closer walk with Him.

MISSION MESSENGER ESSAYS (1960)

Volume 22

Covenants of God

Index to Volumes

- Searching for the Answer
- Harvest of Peace
- Facing the New Year
- Clergy and Laity
- Developing Our Aim
- Pride and Shame
- Size and Importance
- A Spiritual Adventure
- The Road to Gaza
- One Man's Faith
- The Covenant with Noah
- A Law of Life
- The New Humanity
- The Covenant with Abraham
- God's Two Books
- False Tests
- Flesh and Faith
- Our Special Mission
- A Muddled Movement
- Teacher and Disciple
- The First Testament
- The Bed of Procrustes
- A Good Question

- Indiana Trip
- Analysis of Legalism
- Cause for Concern
- Crossing the Frontier
- Stop, Look, Listen!
- The New Covenant
- The Title of the Church
- The Indwelling Spirit (1960)
- No Creed But Christ
- Opinions and Unity
- A Sincere Offer
- The Helping Spirit
- Old John
- The Sacred Quest
- The Horses of Glaucus

Searching for the Answer

Mission Messenger (January 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

For all those words, which were written long ago are meant to teach us today; that when we read in the Scriptures of the endurance of men and of all the help that God gave them in those days, we may be encouraged to go on hoping in our time. May the God who inspires men to endure, and gives them a Father's care, give you a mind united towards one another because of your common loyalty to Jesus Christ" (Romans 15:4, 5— Phillips' Translation).

Our world is filled with fear and frustration. We live in an age of tension and worry. The minds of men have become battlefields for conflicting ideologies. Our way of life is under constant threat. The dams which have served to hold back latent savagery are crumbling. In every corner of the globe there is seething unrest. We are reclining upon a rumbling volcano. The bulwarks of western civilization are straining under pressure. To what source can we look for help and succour in these "times which try men's souls."

For some months we have been examining what appears to be a failure of the Christian philosophy to stem the rising tide of paganism. We have analyzed the varied concepts which claim to be Christian, we have sought in unprejudiced fashion to weigh the merits of current religious organizations, and we have found them wanting. We come now to the more difficult task of suggesting a remedy. It is relatively easy to see the outward symptoms which betray weakness. One need not be skilled in every instance to diagnose an illness. But he who prescribes for the sick will subject himself and his credentials to examination and attack. This is as it should be, for it will cause us to proceed with more care and deliberation. I shall first state my convictions upon which my coming remarks will be based.

Our world is not the result of accident, experimentation, blind chance, or a survival of the fittest. It is a grand design, back of which is an intelligent Designer. The Eternal One who created the universe by divine fiat, has never lost interest in His creation nor retired from concern with its affairs. He made man but a little lower than the angels. He set him over the work of His hands. By the exercise of providence He has directed the affairs of men, until history serves only to mark the footprints of God. After revealing His will directly to the fathers in the childhood era of the world, when the various nations turned from Him to choose their gods, He chose to reveal Himself as the God of a nation. At Mount Sinai He gave that nation a constitution, the basis of which consisted of ten commandments which He personally engraved upon two stone tablets.

But He who made us knows our needs. He recognizes that it is easier for man to follow a personal pattern than to be guided by precepts and statutes. For that reason, nineteen centuries ago, He sent to this earth the Logos, the Word who was in the beginning, who was with God, and who was God. "The Word became flesh and dwelt among us, full of grace and truth; we have beheld his glory, glory as of the only Son from the Father." In Him dwelt all the fulness of Deity bodily. This earth, then, is the visited planet. It little matters that men set foot on Jupiter, Mars, or Saturn. These are material. They are a part of the creation over which man was given dominion. But it matters greatly that God visited this planet. Earth can never be the same again since "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself."

The Son, after being put to death by cruel men, was raised from the dead. He went back to heaven, and is even now seated at the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens. The task of reconciling the world unto God is now the responsibility of those who have been reconciled. These must beseech their own generation “on behalf of Christ, to be reconciled unto God.” Their message is the Good News of a person. It is the Good News delivered by persons, to persons, about a person! It is not the proclamation of a system, an organization, or an institution. It is not the recitation of a creed, a dissertation, explanation, or exposition of a doctrine. It is simply an announcement of Good News that “while we were yet helpless, at the right time Christ died for the ungodly.” It is the thrilling declaration that “while we were enemies we were reconciled unto God by the death of His Son.” Those who would share in the blessings of this Message are required to believe one fact in order to initiation into the benefits of God’s grace— that Jesus is the Messiah, the Son of God! The test of this faith is obedience to one act— immersion in water by His authority!

Why has the world not been won to His sovereignty on such a plea? Why are those who respect Jesus of Nazareth as the Son of God, such a small minority among the teeming millions who swarm over the surface of our planet? We should face up to these questions. We feel that it can be demonstrated that the enemy of righteousness has cleverly and subtly insinuated himself again into the paradise of God, and has sown the seeds of hate where flowers of love should bloom. He has separated and segregated the believers into warring camps. He has inveigled them into measuring loyalty by the ability to smite the sheep of the Great Shepherd and scatter them. He who pleads for unity is regarded as a traitor, while those are hailed as faithful who sow discord and seek to justify division. We put darkness for light, bitter for sweet, and evil for good. This is the work of Satan!

The Son of God, on the night of His betrayal, gave us the clue for benign conquest of the world. He first prayed for those envoys to whom the Message of reconciliation was entrusted. He said, "I do not pray for these only, but also for those who are to believe in me through their word." His prayer was that all who so believed in Him might be one. He declared the effect would be "that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." We feel the conclusion is inescapable. If the greatest force operating to convert the world is the unity of believers in Christ; conversely, the greatest force contributing to the unbelief and ultimate damnation of the world, is division among the believers. Jesus says, "He who does not believe will be condemned." He says that the world will be made to believe only when those who do believe are all one. Religious division must stand indicted before the world as the chief agent of its condemnation.

What, then, must be the attitude of those believers who are soberly and seriously concerned about the salvation of mankind? Does it not stand to reason that they must hate "enmity, strife, jealousy, anger, selfishness, dissension, and party spirit," which are listed as "works of the flesh," and which will keep those who do such things from inheritance in the kingdom of God? Are they not obligated to study, pray, and work for the repairing of all the breaches in the Christian wall? Must they not wholly and completely dedicate their lives to the eradication of schisms and the conditions which produce them? Is there any crusade in modern times of greater consequence than this? If the world believes that God sent His Son, and recognizes the fulness of the impact of His advent, wars will cease, swords will be beaten into plowshares, and the desert will blossom as a rose. Yet this can only transpire when those who believe are one.

The greatest problem of believers is unbelief! Because they cannot see how unity of all believers can be achieved they do not believe it can be. They forget that we are to "walk by faith and not by sight." Their fear causes them to settle for something much less than Jesus prayed for. They are content if they can have peace within the party to which they give allegiance. But partisan peace is a chimera, a will-o'-the-wisp, and destructive of true peace. The party spirit is antagonistic to peace. Like the moth, it perpetuates itself only by consuming the fabric in which it hides. If every party in the Christian realm had perfect peace within itself, that would not be the unity for which Jesus prayed, and under such a condition men would be content, and true unity would never be attained.

It is when men are dissatisfied with the narrow confines and unwritten creeds of the party that they lift up their eyes and look beyond. Parties should not be allowed to be at peace, but should be stirred up, agitated, and aroused. When a man is in a blinding snowstorm, his body becomes numbed, and he loses all sense of direction. He wants to slump down and give in to the unutterable weariness which takes possession of him and promises peace. He must be slapped into consciousness and forced to stagger on, else he will never reach home. So it is with those who are wandering befogged in the party spirit. They must be rudely jolted from their complacency or they will never inherit the kingdom. They may bitterly resent the one who jolts them, but he is their best friend on earth. We need men who will cuff our intellectual processes into activity and stimulate us to arouse and be on our way. Already "many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep."

I believe that our only hope rests with the church of God, the one body of our Lord Jesus Christ. When the envoy of Christ exhorted the saints to "be eager to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," he immediately declared, "There is one body" as the first item in a catalog of seven essentials to that unity for which we are pleading. The church of Christ is composed of all the saved on this earth. There is not one saved person outside of it, because to its number the Lord adds all the saved. The church of God is not an organization, but a divine organism composed of living, vital members.

It is not merely an association made up of those who voluntarily band together because of kindred interests. It is a company of redeemed persons who are “members one of another,” because they are in another person— Christ Jesus—in whom they lose their identity to the extent that they are neither Jew nor Greek, neither slave nor free, neither male nor female. They are all one in Him. They are so related to each other only because they are related to Him. It is not that one member is attached to another member who in turn is attached to the head, or that one is joined to someone who is joined to Jesus. Instead, all “hold fast to the Head, from whom the whole body, nourished and knit together through its joints and ligaments, grows with a growth that is from God” (Col. 2:19). “We are to grow up in every way into him who is the head, into Christ, from whom the whole body, joined and knit together by every joint with which it is supplied, when each part is working properly, makes bodily growth and upbuilds itself in love” (Eph. 4:15, 16).

Each member of the body sustains a direct relationship to Jesus through the Holy Spirit. Each one is attached to the head. “For by one Spirit we were all baptized into one body— Jews or Greeks, slaves or free— and all were made to drink of one Spirit.” Not all members are at the same stage of spiritual development. Some are weak, others strong; some are ignorant, others learned; some are conservative, others liberal in tendency. They vary in temperament, knowledge, and degree of maturity. They are held together by mutual love, not because they all agree on every point, but because their love for Jesus is greater than their differences with each other.

In our present state of decadent Christianity, which organization is the divine organism? Which party or faction embraces within its fold all the children of God on this earth? Which one is the body of Christ exclusive of all others? My answer, which will infuriate all partisans, is that no party now in existence can claim exclusive right as the church of God. The believers in our Lord have been shattered into splinter groups, and scattered over the hills Of sectarianism. It is a tragic error to think that all who are separated from us are severed from Jesus.

What shall we do to remedy the situation? It will do no good to create other parties. It will only aggravate the situation to further divide and leave a heritage of hate and animosity to damn the souls of our children and our children's children. The first thing we must do is to rid ourselves of the sectarian attitude. We must see sectism as God looks at it. We must recognize it as a grievous sin in the Christian domain. Why is that so? Here are a few reasons.

1. It fragmentizes that, which by its very nature, should be one, thus is subversive of the divine purpose and will.

2. It arrays against each other in partisan conflict those who should expend all of their joint energy and resources in opposition to the wicked one.

3. It arouses and stimulates the baser passions of covetousness, envy, jealousy and pride.

4. It elevates men to positions of eminence and rank in the spiritual realm, as party leaders, and thus provides for glorying in men.

5. It contains within itself the seed principle which carried to its fruition would destroy fellowship and thus make the eternal purpose of God of none effect.

It will not be easy to rid our hearts of the party spirit. We have been conditioned by past teaching and environment to regard the party as the church of God. This is true of all. Some have been less partisan than others, but none are wholly free from the taint. No party or faction as it now exists can accomplish God's full purpose on earth. There must be a revolution, a transformation, a metamorphosis. No transfusion of spirituality into the party, no artificial respiration of any party will meet the needs of the present crisis. The party must sink into oblivion that the church of God may replace it in our lives. Old things must pass away; all things must become new.

This does not mean we must relinquish any truth we have discovered, nor compromise any verity we have held. To do this would be to lose all and to banish hope of our salvation. But truth must cease to be regarded as a partisan possession or be defended as a private monopoly. We must recognize that those in Christ are at different stages in their acquisition of knowledge of truth. Those who are fortunate enough to have a superior knowledge of truth should not browbeat and assail the less fortunate. Those who have climbed higher should not kick those on a lower level. Those who have much need not feel obligated to deny the little that is possessed by another.

We should begin to manifest a philanthropic spirit, and create an atmosphere of love. The table of the Lord should be set in our meetings for all baptized believers whose lives are orderly and decorous. We should make it clear that we make nothing a test of fellowship that God has not made a condition of salvation. Jesus declares that he who believes and is baptized shall be saved. If one can be saved from all the sins of his past on that basis, and is thus added to the one body, we ought not to demand more of him to be welcomed into our hearts. The objection is made that on this basis we would be forced to welcome those who are allied with sectarian bodies in some instances. That is true, and we should welcome all of God's children who come among us, regardless of present affiliation. We should not be sectarian in our opposition to sectarianism.

We are confronted with a problem! It cannot be solved easily. There is no panacea which will fit every place or condition. But let us not bury our heads in the sand like ostriches. We should courageously face up to the issue, and be long-suffering, patient, and forbearing, as we try to work it out. It will serve no good purpose to become angry, exasperated, and filled with bitter resentment. We have observed with sadness the manifestation of irritation and passion even upon the part of some elders as we have sought to explore the possibilities of answering the prayer of our dear Lord. They have taken it as a personal affront that a brother in the Lord should have the audacity to question any practice of ours which has been sanctified by tradition. But we must not have the attitude of ancient royalty, "The king can do no wrong!" We have been wrong about many things! God still works in history and the chafing and choler of men will not prevent truth from triumphing. To Him be praise and glory!

Sectarianism is the order of our day. It exists without divine sanction and in contravention of the best interests and more advanced knowledge of mankind. But it embraces within its folds some of the most sincere and humble characters. Those who recognize sectism for what it is, a malignant growth upon the body spiritual, must exert every effort to offset its deleterious effects and to check its growth, at the same time giving care not to destroy the sound tissue. We must not root up the wheat with the tares! Not everyone in a sect is sectarian. Some of God's children are a dispersed, displaced, and exiled people.

The fleshly Israelites, in covenant relationship with God, were called his people. They were still his people when misled. "My people hath been lost sheep: their shepherds have caused them to go astray" (Jer. 50:6). They were still his people while in Babylonian exile, and the children born to them in Babylon were also God's people. In these days of spiritual Israel God has a people in Babylon. We have brethren who are scattered among the various sects.

The very thought of this infuriates some! The very suggestion that it may be true calls down upon the head of one who makes the suggestion the wrath of those who feel that their participation in the grace of God is dependent upon denying a share in it by others. It is labeled a "new doctrine." It is designated “liberalism” and “modernism,” by narrow exclusivists who would smite truth with a slogan and flail fact with fiction. If their evaluation is correct, then Thomas Campbell, Alexander Campbell, Walter Scott, David Lipscomb, Moses E. Lard, Benjamin Franklin, Daniel Sommer, et. al., were the rankest of liberals and the most pronounced modernists. Our brethren “garnish the tombs of the prophets” of restoration and denounce those who stand on the same ground they occupied.

Thomas Campbell addressed his Declaration and Address to the Christians in all sectarian bodies. Years later he wrote:

We speak to all our Christian brethren, however diversified by professional epithets, those accidental distinctions which have unhappily and unscripturally diversified the professing world. By our Christian brethren, then, we mean the very same description of character addressed in our Declaration published at Washington, Pa., in the year 1809— namely, ‘All that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, throughout the churches.’ If there were none such at that time throughout the churches, then Christianity was dead and gone. And if there be none such at present within the same limits, it still continues extinct.

Alexander Campbell, who did more than any other in his day to plead for a return to the ancient order of things, wrote thus:

A deep and abiding impression that the power, the consolations and joys— the holiness and happiness of Christ’s religion were lost in the forms and ceremonies, in the speculations and conjectures, in the feuds and bickerings of sects and schisms, originated a project many years ago for uniting the sects, or rather the Christians in all the sects, upon a clear and scriptural bond of union— upon having a ‘thus saith the Lord,’ either in express terms or approved precedent ‘for every article of faith, and item of religious practice.’

Moses E. Lard, writing in his quarterly for March, 1864, on the topic “Have We Become a Sect?” has this to say of those who are in sectarian bodies:

Against the individual members of these parties we cannot have even one unkind feeling. Many of them we regard as true Christians, and love them sincerely. But as long as they occupy a place in bodies holding traditional and other unsanctioned tenets; holding practices unknown to the Bible, and supporting humanly imposed names, we must tell them plainly that they stand on apostate ground.

Two years prior to this statement, Benjamin Franklin, in 1862, wrote in the American Christian Review, of which he was editor:

There are individuals among the sects who are not sectarians, or who are more than sectarians— they are Christians; or persons who have believed the gospel, submitted to it, and in spite of the leaders, been constituted Christians according to the Scriptures.

In the same year, Brother Franklin made the following statement in his paper:

That there are Christians among the sects, a people of God in Babylon, we have believed and admitted, and committed to print many years ago, and we believe the same now. That these have a right to commune, and, enjoy in common with all Christians, all the blessings of the house of the Lord, we presume is not doubted by any brother.

David Lipscomb, writing in the book, Questions Answered, page 582, expresses his views in this statement:

There are some in sectarian churches who will obey God and follow him in spite of the churches in which they find themselves. As examples, there are persons in the Baptist, Methodist, and Presbyterian churches who are baptized to obey God rather than to please the sects. In this they rise above the sectarian spirit, despite the parties in which they find themselves. They ought to get out of the sectarian churches, but they see so much sectarianism in the nonsectarian churches that they think they are all alike.

Daniel Sommer deposes as follows in his booklet entitled Religious Sectism Defined, Analyzed and Exposed:

What shall we say of those preachers who denounce all persons who happen to hold membership in a sectarian denomination with a sentence of sweeping impeachment, as though they were all under the influence of sectism? We should say that they are probably more sectarian than some whom they denounce. Their manner shows that they are unscripturally exclusive, and this is one of the elements of sectarianism.

Do these quotations prove there are Christians in sectarian bodies? Certainly not! Their authors are fallible men and uninspired. We have not cited them as authorities on that point. But they do prove the position I hold is not a “new doctrine.” Will our critics affirm that Campbell, Lard, Franklin, Lipscomb, and Sommer were “liberals” and “radicals” and “modernists”? Will they brand them as apostates? The truth is that all of the leading minds in the restoration movement were at a unit on this point. Benjamin Franklin labored under the presumption that the position we hold was “not doubted by any brother.” It was not doubted either, until the factions which grew out of the restoration crystallized into so many small sects, motivated by the narrow and intolerant spirit which is the mark of sectarianism.

Are you prepared for the logical conclusion? Since the position we advocate is the one held by all of the brethren from the inception of the restoration movement, then the opposite position is a “new doctrine.” Indeed, it is a modern doctrine that honest misunderstanding or error in interpretation of a scriptural teaching, nullifies and negates the spiritual relationship into which one enters by the new birth. Upon such a premise we can never gather the scattered flock of God, and all we can offer them is an opportunity to leave one sect and be initiated into another by submitting to baptism at the hands of a “Church of Christ preacher.” This is the new, novel and modern doctrine that is today called “gospel” by so many of our brethren.

Let there be no misunderstanding of my position. I believe that every sincere penitent believer in the fact that Jesus is God’s Son, who is immersed in water upon the basis of that faith, is God’s child, and my brother. He may not, at the time of his immersion, know all of the blessings accruing from the act or connected with it, but his standing with God is not determined by knowledge of such matters, but by faith in Jesus as God’s Son and the Messiah. I believe that sectarianism is sinful. It is condemned by God and must not be condoned by men. But many of God’s children have been ensnared and enslaved within its toils. I want to assist them to freedom. I am dedicated to unrelenting opposition to any form of tyranny over their hearts, regardless of the name under which it operates. The fight for unity of all believers is really a battle for freedom.

We live in an age of demonstration. Millions of dollars are spent for advertising with recognition that the best form of publicity consists of showing what a product will do. In the spiritual realm we must move from the theoretical to the practical. We need concrete manifestation of the unsectarian spirit. We cannot rely on mere discussion in the abstract. It is not the law in a code book or even discussed in forums which will make a nation better, but the spirit of the law exemplified in the daily conduct of the citizens which will make the difference. A few congregations of saints scattered throughout the world dwelling together in love, creating no test of fellowship which

God has not made, recognizing the rights and privileges of all, whose bishops govern in affection, will do more to usher in a better day than all of the writing and discussing can ever do. For that reason we submit the following to the concerned ones among us, as a basis upon which we can commence to operate in hope of transforming the world in which we live through love.

1. We should confess our sins, and the sins of our fathers, in respect to the factionalism and partisan spirit so widely manifest in our day. Let each intreat for forgiveness and all ask for divine aid that we may avoid the blighting effects of the party spirit in the years that lie ahead.

2. Let the “fellowship of the concerned ones” meet often and study the sacred truths, and strengthen each other in the Lord. “They that feared the Lord spoke often one to another; and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name.”

3. Avoid the idea that those who honestly differ with us are apostates or heretics. These two words are seldom used today as the Holy Spirit used them. A man is not an apostate because he thinks instrumental music is acceptable in corporate worship; neither is one a heretic because he sincerely believes that water baptism is not essential. All of us need to correct our language and cultivate a pure speech. It is not sound speech to brand men and women with terms that have been twisted or distorted from their true meaning. One may be wrong about a lot of things and not be either a heretic or an apostate.

4. Let us set the table of the Lord for all of His children, and make it clear that every immersed believer whose conduct is orderly and approved of God is invited to sit down with us in fellowship or communion. Let us make nothing a test of fellowship which God has not.

5. Banish the idea that you can win men to greater knowledge of the truth by giving them the “cold shoulder,” or by treating them as pariahs or spiritual lepers. One does not sanction or endorse every item of a person’s thinking when he calls on him to word a prayer to God. You do not agree with everything that is advocated by the members of your own party whom you call on to pray.

6. Do not be afraid to listen to anyone. Truth has nothing to fear. It cannot be banned by error. It shines better when seen in contrast with error. It is yourself you cannot trust, when moved by fear. Develop personal conviction based upon your own study of the revelation of heaven. Thousands in these days merely parrot a party line. They think a certain way because others— parents, relatives, or a favorite preacher— think that way. Their hope of reaching heaven is based upon the idea that someone else is bound to be right.

7. Study the word of God for yourself. Let every person who loves the Lord feed upon His word daily. Do not differ with others merely for the sake of differing. Do not be contentious, quarrelsome or argumentative. But learn to question and to doubt what men say until it is proven to you. It is a healthful sign when a group can differ and discuss their differences in an atmosphere of calmness and with mutual respect. It is not a sin to differ honestly and to say so. Differences, in and of themselves, do not create divisions. It is when men cease to love each other and allow their differences to become the rallying point of parties that they divide.

8. Let the bishops rule by love and example, and let the flock show due reverence for those who watch over and guide them. A community of saints, free from the party spirit, welcoming with open hearts, all the children of God who come among them, working in peace and harmony, not because of threats or fear, but because of affection for each other in the Lord, will do more to usher in a better world than all of the articles written in this, or any other journal.

If we are to contribute anything vital to the religious thought of our generation, if we are to point the way to peace and unity in Christ Jesus our Lord, if we are to be the humble instruments to help those who are struggling and groping their way out of the darkness of sectarianism today, we have no time to lose. The day is spent, the night is at hand. Dr. Elton Trueblood has said it in this way:

If faith is to be effective in undergirding civilized society, it must be given some concrete embodiment. Civilization will not be saved because there are men and women who make the mere affirmation that God exists. Life is not raised to new levels by the mere fact that we have been intellectually convinced by the cosmological argument. Our predicament is too great and too serious for our salvation to come in so academic a manner. What is needed is something that can set men's souls on fire. What is required is a vision of man's life under God's Providence which so thrills us to the centre of our beings that we are willing to commit ourselves, soul and body, to the incarnation of that vision.

Harvest of Peace

Mission Messenger (January 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

Men who expect peace to prevail by accident, expect what never was and never will be in a world of sinful beings. One could as logically expect a crop of corn without planting the seed. Peace is a result, and it must be preceded by a cause. It is created or made, and those who make it are called peacemakers. Peace must be waged, even as others wage war. It demands a campaign, a crusade of dedicated hearts. Those who propagandize for peace are working with God. They are companions of the angels who used peace as their theme in announcing the advent of Jesus to Judean shepherds. They are enlisted under the banner of that leader who is known as "Prince of peace." Peace comes by prayer, purpose and persistence. It is achieved by crucified ones who trust for strength in the Crucified One. "The harvest uprightness yields must be sown in peace by peacemakers" (James 5:18). More than anything else is needed in these days a genuine longing for peace, which will cause us to "sow by all waters."

Facing the New Year

Mission Messenger (January 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

Another milestone in the march of the ages has been passed. A new calendar hangs on the wall. We have survived another twelve months. The past year has been one of ardent study, deep meditation, and personal soul-searching. Our writings have jolted and jarred many from their complacency. Those who congratulated themselves that they had all of the answers have suddenly found life re-complexified. Some have deeply resented it, and while there have been many readers added, a few who read the paper from its inception have ordered us to stop sending it. They regard us as betrayers of God's Son, because we are humbly striving to answer his prayer for the unity of all believers!

It is a great surprise to some that we are still here! One good Kansas brother sent in his dollar last year, saying he merely wanted to see how far we would go, and predicting the paper would die before the year was up. From many sources we have received word of attempts by brethren to thwart our efforts and to kill our influence. "Out of all these the Lord has delivered us, and will deliver."

Our task has not been easy. We have had to hang on precariously from month to month. Nell and I must now raise $250.00 or more each month to put out this little journal. The subscriptions do not pay for its publication. Any journal like this one has to depend upon the heartfelt concern of those who believe in its mission. And there have been a few who sent each month to help. Without them we could not have carried on. They have held up our hands. May our God reward them richly according to His grace!

Our paper is not a factional mouthpiece! No party promotes it, or backs it as an official organ. Many who concur with us dare not mention it lest they be put out of the synagogue. The preaching brethren who secretly pray for us, cannot openly solicit readers for fear of reprisal. We must depend upon those in every faction who love truth more than the party. Thus far there has been just enough of them, with none to spare. We have always had just about enough to keep going for two months, but always, somehow, someone helped us through!

In our March issue we begin a new series of articles. These will represent our deepest thinking to be committed to print. We shall try to plumb the depths of the scriptures, exploring God's purpose for those of us who live in this day. Free from partisan bias, and liberated at last from any obligation to defend factional decrees, we can "with unveiled face, behold the glory of the Lord." We will acknowledge truth wherever we find it, not as a party possession, but as a divine gift to all men. It is our hope that we may be able to produce a paper which you can commend to the sincere and concerned ones in all segments of the Christian realm.

We will be searching for the divine basis of unity. This will require diligent examination of our past views and interpretations. The Christian world is divided! Why? Have our ideas of God, Christ, and the Holy Spirit, been correct? If so, why have they not worked through us more effectively to achieve the divine purpose in our generation? Have we understood fully our relationship with the Deity, and if so, why are not all of God's children walking together in love? All we ask of you is a careful, prayerful reading of what we write. If it commends itself to your heart as being correct, and you can in good conscience accept it, do so; but, if after weighing it sincerely, you cannot agree, we will still love you, respect and cherish you. “Let those of us who are mature be thus minded; and if in anything you are otherwise minded, God will reveal that also to you. Only let us hold true to what we have attained.”

We need your help and assistance, but we would not want you to violate conscience. If you cannot share our writings with others, but feel safe in reading them yourself, do that; if you do not care or dare to read them, then pray for us as we shall for you. For whatever degree of interest you manifest we shall be grateful to Him “whom having not seen we love.” It is in that attitude we enter the portals of a new year, and our twenty-second year of publication!

Clergy and Laity

Mission Messenger (January 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

It is significant that modern religious leaders are beginning to lay great stress upon the importance of “the laity.” There seems to be a spontaneous and universal re-discovery of the ideal of “the priesthood of all believers.” Perhaps the moral and spiritual decadence which is so prevalent points up the futility of trying to save the world by the ministrations of a top level echelon of professionals who are paid to assume the responsibility which belongs to all. The clergy system has been with us for centuries but has made little impact upon the world at large for the simple reason that it has been apart from the world of mankind, speaking its own theological jargon which is not understandable to the man in the street.

The real strength of the primitive church of God lay in the total commitment of the whole membership. Every member was a priest. Every member was a minister. Each one, in imitation of the pioneer and perfecter of the faith, came not to be ministered unto but to minister, and if need be, to give his life. Every one had enlisted as a soldier. All were active fighters. There were no gold bricks or mess hall loungers. There were no side line coaches whose only duty was to call out information to those who agonized in the heat of the day. They encouraged and strengthened one another, but they did that while running. There were no spectators among the saints. True, there were those who watched them, but these were in the world, and thus were in the bleachers and the grandstand. The church was the arena, and in the race course there were no stopping places. When one of the world, moved by the sacrifices of the Christians, left his place and joined the runners, he did not again retire to be seated in luxury or to bask in ease. He forsook all and followed Jesus. He looked unto Him, and not back at the place which he had left.

It was the taunt of the enemies of the faith once delivered, that there were no philosophers or learned men to propagate it. They spoke in derision of the shoe cobblers, tentmakers, and skin-dressers, who carried the Good News to distant climes. When the holy ones met for edification, plain men in plain garb, stood up among their fellows to exhort and comfort. The lessons taught were drawn from the field, the vineyard, the marketplace, or the shop. The hands lifted up in simple gesture were stained and blackened from daily toil, blistered and calloused by hard labor at an honest trade. There was no thought of speaking for gain, or of exploiting the many for the financial profit of the few.

Every home, even a lowly hut or a slave's hovel, was a "minister's home." Every such humble dwelling was a "minister's study" for here a servant of God sought the means by which he might instruct his brethren or share with them a nugget of knowledge. The whole realm of nature constituted a library from which the untutored mind could draw lessons of life, and these lessons, delivered in homely language, destitute of the embellishments of oratorical phraseology struck home to the hearts of the listeners and inspired them to imitation.

But a great change was wrought with the creation of the clergy. Now the majority no longer actually worshipped, but a ritual was performed in their behalf. The speaker's stand became a stage upon which a polished performer gave a declamation. The bulk of God's people became an audience. They were seated as spectators in a theater. They no longer gathered about a table as a family, they sat before a pulpit as observers and auditors. Their chief contribution became one of money. The scriptures were twisted and wrested to make a public donation a corporate “act of worship.” The threat of damnation hovered over those who would not conform.

The clergy stands as a monument of decaying spirituality and abandonment of the purity of the faith. It could never have arisen if men had not lost their first love. It can never be retained when they regain it. The system to which many point with pride is a testimony of shame. The body of Christ enveloped in the clergy system is like the body of man wrapped in clothing, indicating that once man sinned and now must hide his nakedness. God made the first clothes for man, but man developed the clergy system to cover up his spiritual defection and disgrace.

That which was started to strengthen the church of God has weakened it. Men can no more worship without a clergyman present in most places than an amputee can walk without a crutch. The body has become dependent, helpless and servile. Thousands of enlisted soldiers mill about aimlessly, in utter ignorance of their duty or of the proper use of their weapons. Thousands who have been called to the vineyard of the Lord sit on the fence and pay another to gather the fruit. The Ship of Zion has more paying passengers than crewmen. The majority did not come aboard to serve but to take a conducted tour or summer cruise to heaven. The church has more spectators than servants. The slaves now sit on cushioned seats and demand service.

It will not be easy for modern religion to remove the gulf between clergy and laity. The system appeals to the pride and ambition of the few, and pampers the spirit of indolence and indifference of the masses. It is easier to hire a skilled professional to do a job than by painstaking effort develop yourself to where you can do it. But there is an irony about doing this in the domain of the spirit, for the one who takes your money also gets the benefit. He grows while you shrink and shrivel through disuse.

The story is told of a stone aqueduct built centuries ago to bring water from the mountains into an Italian city. The inhabitants decided it should be retired from use and serve as a monument to the skill and artisanship of the ancients. An iron pipe was laid beside it and the water diverted to run through it. Soon the aqueduct began to crack from the heat of the sun. Widening breaches appeared in the masonry and the rocks fell apart. The structure was finally in a state of complete deterioration. When it ceased to serve it fell. Unless you personally carry the water of life to others you will also perish from disuse.

We need to make clergymen out of all the laity. The word “laity” is from laos, the people. The word “clergy” is from kleros, a lot, portion, or heritage. All of the people in Jesus are God’s portion, thus all are His clergy. Let us all serve in whatever capacity we can. Let us not do it for hire, but for love. “Freely you have received, freely give.” If some are able to bear the message to the world, and have no other means of support, let us share with them according to our means and their needs, but let us restore the ideal of a self-edifying, self-perpetuating church. God’s plan is person to person— not parson to persons! It is not necessary that we reduce the clergy to the status of the laity. Let us elevate the laity to the status of clergymen. That will free preachers to go into all the world, for there are few clergymen who would hire another preacher to preach to them!

Developing Our Aim

Mission Messenger (February 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

“Accept life with humility and patience, making allowances for each other, because you love each other. Make it your aim to be at one in the Spirit, and you will inevitably be at peace with one another” (Eph. 4:2, 3— Phillips’ Translation).

In previous issues we have pointed out the shame and sin of sectarianism. We believe that those who love the Lord can no longer indulge in the dubious luxury of factionalism and the party spirit. But how to free ourselves and our brethren from the labyrinth created by several generations of partisan indoctrination and traditionalism is a matter of no small concern. It is one thing to say that “The Church of Christ” must be transformed and become the church of Christ; it is an entirely different thing to suggest the means by which the change can be wrought. The problem is augmented by the fact that man is resistant to change. He clings by nature to the familiar and habitual, he resists alteration or conversion.

All of us in this generation have been affected and conditioned by circumstances we did not create. Our fathers divided and separated and bequeathed to us a perplexing and embarrassing legacy of animosity and dissension. We have been reared in factional fraternities which isolated and insulated us from contact with other believers. We sought security behind walls of human construction and judged faithfulness to God by conformity to the clan. It would be easier to dwell apart “in the peace of our self content,” but it is not safe to do so, since we must give account to God for the responsibilities we refuse to face. We have a definite and positive responsibility to wage peace among the discordant elements of God’s children. “Blessed are the peacemakers!”

One of our greatest difficulties is created by a false sense of loyalty to the party! Many whose deep sensibilities recoil from perpetuation of the narrow concept of a religious clique among believers, are deterred from any overt declaration, and continue to pay lip service long after they are convinced of the utter futility of converting the world to a partisan position. They are restrained by fear that those with whom they have always been associated will regard them as traitors and castaways. They cannot stand the thought of proscription and ostracism. It was this same spirit which kept alive the senseless feuds in the mountain areas, with each succeeding generation convinced that it must uphold the family honor by shooting down those whose only error was in being born to another family.

In such feuds it was frequently true that those who prolonged the conflict were regarded as heroes by the ignorant and unthinking, and there were always some who sought notoriety as leaders of the clan. The same spirit obtains in religious strife, and those who pose as champions of orthodoxy and guardians of the status quo, are praised as faithful and loyal. It is little wonder that so few have the courage to rise above the partisan connection when one considers the price so frequently exacted.

We need congregations today whose members will pioneer in exploring avenues of Christian unity! Pioneers are generally courageous and daring. They are but a small minority in any society. They are frequently dissatisfied with their present lot, and willing to risk everything to better it. Yet it is these trailblazers whose sacrifices make it easy for others to follow.

We should not regard the disunity existing in the Christian realm as normal or desirable. It is abnormal and deplorable. But it will not get better by sighing, wishing, talking, or writing about it. There must be those who are willing to do something tangible and positive toward ending the situation. So long have we taught unity and practiced division that it will be a new experience and a thrilling adventure to share with others in experiments leading to closer cooperation in the Spirit.

If a few congregations become truly non-sectarian in practice, as most of them claim to be in profession, we will then have living examples of the practicality of God's design for those who love Him. We must get it off the lips and into the lives of men and women, so we will have a vital demonstration that is visual. What is required of such a congregation of saints? What must the members think? What must be their attitude? We venture to suggest a minimum basis upon which such an effort must be undertaken.

1. There must be a thorough conviction that the party spirit and factionalism are sinful. There must be an abhorrence of that disposition which divides, separates, and segregates God's people!

2. There must be a recognition that all of us have been allied with a party or faction, and that not one of the congregations in such a party is "the faithful church," nor, are all of the congregations composing such a party, when taken in the aggregate, "the faithful church." So long as we defend, apologize for, and rationalize that our group is the church of our Lord, to the exclusion of all other persons, and that our brotherhood is the one body, no one else being a member thereof, we will only continue our own brand of sectism.

3. We must humbly and freely confess to God our sin and the sin of our fathers; their sin in cleaving the body into splinter groups, our sin in perpetuating the schism and division which they bequeathed to us. When Nehemiah learned of the trouble and shame of the survivors of Jerusalem who escaped from exile, and when he was apprised of the broken walls, he wept and mourned for days, and continued fasting and praying before the God of heaven. He said, "Yea, I and my father's house have sinned." It was his broken and contrite heart which prompted God to use him as his instrument in rebuilding the walls.

4. There must be a firm resolution to make the congregation a haven of rest for all of God's children regardless of color, nationality, economic status, or previous condition of sectarian servitude. To that end it must be made known that no test of fellowship will be made which God has not made a condition of salvation. Love for each other in Christ will be the cementing principle and will transcend and overshadow all differences of opinion. Unity will not be achieved as a program, but obeyed as a command.

5. The doctrine of the "priesthood of all believers" will be made a living reality, not a mere theoretical goal. Every Christian will be regarded as a minister, and when the saints assemble for edification, each will be allowed to contribute from his fund of knowledge and experience for the upbuilding of his fellows, as each will be expected to contribute from his funds for the relief of the needy. There will be no clergyman hired to "preach to the church," and to "lay down the law," but the brethren will be "full of goodness, filled with all knowledge, and able to instruct one another" (Romans 15:14).

This picture is not regarded as sufficiently practicable by most of the brethren. We are continually requested to "get down to cases" and to be specific. Concrete examples are demanded. But it must be remembered that no two congregations or communities are identical. What may work in one place may not in another. A great deal of patience and forbearance is required. We are seeking the way out of a condition of long standing. Brethren are at different stages of education and interest. What may be regarded as a mere charitable gesture in some places would be labeled as a symptom of “apostasy” in others. We must work together toward the goal of unity. Little will be accomplished by causing one division in an attempt to eliminate another. We must love all of our brethren, pray for them, and wait for them.

It has been my lot recently to work with several congregations where most of the brethren feel a deep sense of responsibility on these issues. They now realize that the church of God is a much greater and more majestic entity than the segment to which we have belonged, and they are seeking to “grow up in every way into him who is the head, into Christ.” They recognize that it is one thing to be built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets with Jesus as the chief cornerstone, but it is quite another thing for “the whole structure to grow into a holy temple in the Lord.” They regard growth as a continuing and continuous process, so they can never claim to have “arrived” or to be perfect.

These saints regard every sincere immersed believer in the Lord Jesus Christ as a child of God. They invite all such who come among them to sit at the Lord’s table and share with them in sweet communion, or fellowship. If an immersed believer is currently in the Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, or some other religious organization, they do not debar him from the communion of the body and blood of the Lord, but regard him as a brother unfortunate enough to be in a human party. They invite him as a brother, not as a Methodist, Baptist, or Presbyterian, to break bread with them. They recognize that God receives us as individuals when we are immersed upon our faith, and they receive others as God has received us. They believe that the new birth transcends all party lines, and while they regard it as a tragedy of the deepest dye that men who love Jesus should be separated into such parties, they do not consider that they would relieve the situation by creating another party under the title “The Church of Christ.”

We ought to be positive and plain, and not evasive, in an expression of our convictions. We will gain nothing for Christ by concealing our views in order to be popular with a particular segment or group. “We have renounced disgraceful, underhanded ways; we refuse to practice cunning or to tamper with God’s word, but by the open statement of the truth we would commend ourselves to every man’s conscience in the sight of God” (2 Cor. 4:2). Perhaps I can best make my own position clear by direct answer to a few of the multitude of questions which we receive in an ever increasing volume of mail. These opinions represent only my individual and personal views. I do not speak as the representative of any faction or splinter party. You do not need to accept or concur with my expressed views for me to love and respect you. My affection for you will not be lessened one bit if you cannot, in good conscience, agree with my answers.

As a prelude I may state that most of my readers know that I hold very firm convictions against the use of instrumental music in the corporate worship of the church of God. I even refrain from singing where it is employed because of my conscience. I am also opposed to every human organization created to do the work of the ekklesia of God. I feel that all such exist as a reflection against the wisdom of God, and are hindrances to the fulfillment of His work and purpose on earth. This brief statement will help our new readers to grasp the significance of the following questions which we have winnowed from the grain of many communications.

1. How do you regard members of the Christian Church? They are my brethren in the Lord Jesus Christ, as is every other person who has been immersed into Him upon the basis of faith, thus being born again.

2. Do you fellowship them? The word of God does not use the word “fellowship” in this manner. Fellowship is a state or condition which we have or hold in common with others. The fellowship in Christ is a state into which we are called by the Good News. All who are born again are in that state, and I am in that fellowship with them, having been called out of the world.

3. If a member of the Christian Church came to your meeting would you call upon him to pray, or otherwise participate? Certainly so, if it did not prove embarrassing unto him. I would not do so simply to make a show or demonstration of fellowship, for it seems to me that our worship of God should be on a higher plane than a mere public exhibition of our charity. But I do not have any half-brothers in the Lord. Abraham said of Sarah, “She is the daughter of my father, but not the daughter of my mother,” but those who are children of God are born of my Father, and Jerusalem which is above, is the mother of us all. I would not call upon such a person because he is a member of the Christian Church, any more than I would call on a person because he was affiliated with one of the many factions bearing the title “The Church of Christ,” but I would call upon either of them because they are brothers in the Lord, in spite of the various parties with which they are unfortunately affiliated.

4. Does this not constitute endorsement of what you deem to be an error in their position and practice? Not at all. Endorsement means sanction. No one sanctions what he disavows or disapproves. If I only recognized and called on those to pray whom I considered to be free from all error, I could not call upon any one that I now think of, and would have to quit praying myself.

5. Would you teach in a Christian Church if invited to do so? Indeed I would, and I do. Further, I will teach in a Jewish synagogue, a Roman Catholic cathedral, or anywhere else that God opens up a door for me to go. I would prefer teaching in such a place as to teaching among those with whom I am affiliated, because there are many among the brethren who are teaching these latter, but the others have no one setting forth the things we believe to be important. I will not go breathing fire like a twentieth century dragon, but remembering that “the Lord’s servant must not be quarrelsome but kindly to every one, an apt teacher, forbearing, correcting his opponents with gentleness.”

6. Does not such association actually constitute approbation of error? Of course not. Our questioner is like the scribes and Pharisees who made the mistake of thinking that Jesus endorsed the lives and practices of the publicans and sinners by associating with them, and even eating with them. No man can be charged with sanctioning what he does not approve. Paul did not sanction all the Jews taught in some of their synagogues, nor condone all of the practices of the philosophers at Areopagus, but he associated with them, and stated his convictions to them. One does not become a sinner merely because he teaches sinners.

7. Suppose that a small Christian Church and a small Church of Christ exist in the same village. The former decides to forego the use of the instrument for the sake of peace and to join forces with the latter for more effective witness in the community. What would they have to acknowledge? Nothing, except a desire to labor together for the sake of our blessed Lord, and both groups should acknowledge this. Such an arrangement would be the uniting of two groups of brethren, not the acceptance of aliens by one group, nor the converting of one group by another. Both groups would have to be very charitable until they became welded together in one cohesive unit!

8. Should not those who have used the instrument be required to acknowledge it is a sin, before being received? If so, the “Church of Christ” is guilty of making a test of fellowship where God has made none. No one should ever be asked to acknowledge a thing is a sin when he does not believe it to be such. A group who would willingly give up instrumental music in public corporate worship for the sake of unity demonstrates a greater degree of love for the brethren and for the unity of all believers than if they became convinced that the use of the instrument was sin. It ought to be easy to quit sinning, and there should be no other motive for doing so than the fact that one loves God, and recognizes that sin is an offense against His majesty and authority. But for brethren to give up a practice of long standing and traditional association which they do not see is a sin, and simply because they love the unity of all believers more than they love their practice is a demonstration of love in the first magnitude. We ought not to be little enough to reject those who are big enough to do such things!

9. Under such circumstances, will we not have some in our congregations who do not think instrumental music is wrong? We will no doubt have many such brethren, and in Saint Louis where I live, we do have a number of them.

10. Do they not cause you anxiety or trouble? No, because we love each other, and are happy to be able to work and worship together as one in Christ Jesus our Lord. We have not received them because they believe instrumental music is right, and they have not received us because we believe it is wrong, so the right or wrong of instrumental music is not, therefore, the ground of acceptance, and cannot constitute the ground of rejection. We have received them as the Lord has received us. We do not regard ourselves as either “The Church of Christ” or “The Christian Church” in the modern sectarian sense in which those terms are used by two rival parties, but we are the church of God, composed of saints, all of whom are weak, imperfect, and struggling to help each other overcome their imperfections.

11. Isn't this a kind of cheap and easy way to achieve unity? Really, that is a three-fold question. Unity is not something to be achieved, but is a command to be obeyed. We are under a divine injunction to “Mend your ways, heed my appeal, agree with one another, live in peace.” One does not achieve baptism, nor formulate a program of baptism. He is commanded to be baptized, and he either obeys the command or he does not. We have not achieved unity, or formulated a program of unity, but are just obeying the command to “agree with one another and live in peace.” We are doing so because of respect for the authority of Jesus who told us to do it. It is not at all easy, but requires more forbearance, restraint, and patience, than to be separated and divided. The reason many husbands and wives separate is because it is easier to live apart than together. But the alternative to spiritual peace in our world is so frightful that we feel we must work in unity regardless of how hard or difficult the task. It is not cheap. We are misrepresented and falsely accused by many, including preachers who once partook freely of our hospitality, but who are resentful that we refuse to be partisan spokesmen and champions any longer. Anyone who seeks to rise above party politics will pay a fearful price. No, it is not cheap!

12. Do all among whom you go reciprocate your feelings? Not at all. I visit many congregations, some of which use instrumental music, most of which do not. Many of these seem uncomfortable by my presence. They would not think of calling upon me to address the Father in their audience. But I feel nothing except a deep sense of compassion for them, and I can pray for them as did Hannah who “was speaking in her heart; only her lips moved, and her voice was not heard.” I know from experience what factionalism and the party spirit do to the heart, and while I am far from being free of all its residue, I am, at last, at the place where I can rejoice when truth is proclaimed regardless of the proclaimer or his motives. It was a long, hard struggle to arrive at that juncture, and required much meditation, prayer, and confession.

13. Do some with whom you have labored think you have become soft and compromising? Only the more charitable ones feel that way; others think I have lost my mind, gone insane, and betrayed the cause. One brother told me that he knew how the rest of the twelve must have felt when Judas Iscariot sold his Lord. He naturally felt that he was one of the rest of the twelve. A preaching brother in Colorado told me in the presence of a number of other brethren that if he had learned he was wrong on as many things in attitude and teaching, as I had admitted, he would retire from all public service in the church and never attempt to preach or teach again. He recommended I do that, but not being amenable to his discipline, I will continue in my weak way to advocate the unity of all believers as the sole basis for bringing the world under the benign government of our Lord and King.

14. The previous questions deal primarily with division in the disciple brotherhood, but is this view of the problem too limited? I think so. We must never forget that the Restoration Movement was launched by persons in the Presbyterian, Methodist, and Baptist parties, with a view to uniting all Christians, and when it began there was no “disciple brotherhood.” If we restore the Restoration, we will need to go back beyond the formation of the “disciple brotherhood” and take up where the movement was sidetracked, or derailed, and recapture the original spirit and purpose.

15. Do you honestly feel that God has children in the various sects today? If He does not, He probably never had, and if He never had, there was no church of God for centuries until Alexander Campbell arrived. It is inconceivable to me that for the greater majority of the time since He ascended to heaven, Jesus has been a shepherd without a single sheep, a king without a subject, a head without a body, or a Saviour who saved no one for seventeen hundred years. Yes, I think there may be many children of God scattered among the various sects.

16. If someone who had been immersed, but had been associated with a sect, presented himself for membership with the congregation where you worship, would you accept him? Indeed we would, and thus heed the divine injunction to “Receive one another, therefore, as Christ has received you, for the glory of God.” We would not demand that such a person be immersed again, even though at the time of his immersion he did not fully understand all of the blessings which accrued from the act.

Baptism is not a test of knowledge but of faith, and the faith which it tests is faith that Jesus is the Son of God, not faith in baptism.

17. Suppose an entire congregation of Baptists decided to divest themselves of their partisan tendencies, and join forces with you. What would you require of them? I would accept their decision in good faith and welcome them without further ado. I wish all of them would decide to become Christians only, and I wish my brethren would all allow them to do so, without constructing human barriers in their pathway. It is as wrong to make “Church of Christ” Christians as it is to make Baptist Christians, or any other brand. We need to let those who are called of God by the gospel be what God called them to be. “There let them remain with God” (1 Cor. 7:24).

18. Is not such a course revolutionary in the Restoration Movement? Indeed not! In 1804, Barton W. Stone made a trip to Meigs County, Ohio, for the purpose of immersing William Caldwell, a Presbyterian minister. He was invited to preach to the Separate Baptist Association. He reported, “The result was that they agreed to cast away their formularies and creeds, and take the Bible alone for their rule of faith and practice; to throw away their name ‘Baptist’ and take the name ‘Christian’; and to bury their Association and become one with us in the great work of Christian union. They then marched to the stand where we were preaching, shouting the praise of God and proclaiming aloud what they had done. We met them, and embraced each other in Christian love.”

In 1826, Sidney Rigdon was minister of a Baptist church in Mentor, Ohio. He read Christian Baptist and adopted its teaching on restoration. In the spring of 1828, he visited Walter Scott, at Warren. Upon his return nearly the whole church accepted cordially the doctrine of the Lord, exchanged their “articles” for the new covenant as the only divine basis for Christ’s church, and abandoned unscriptural titles and church names, choosing to be known simply as disciples of Christ.

19. Do you see any favorable indications leading you to hope for better conditions? Yes, I do see a great many! The whole religious world is being made acutely conscious of the sin of division. What was once condoned as an indication of spiritual strength is now vociferously condemned as a symptom of weakness. A very auspicious and encouraging atmosphere has been created for discussion. One who advocates the unity of all believers and the realization of the divine purpose in one body is no longer regarded as an agitator or a disturber. It has been my privilege to discuss the problem with some of the eminent clergymen in our area, and all of these interviews have been on a very high level. Even though we may disagree with the means proposed for implementing the ecumenical movement, we can thank God for the spirit of concern which gave it birth and we can utilize the opportunities afforded by it for mutual discussion of the tragedy of division, and also for suggesting some things which we hope will lead to better days.

20. Are you aware of the criticism leveled at you because of your emphasis upon these problems? Yes, I probably know more about that than anyone else! A few months ago a preaching brother wrote me that he had heard from one of “the most talented and dependable evangelists among us” who is alleged to have said about me, “He has ridden the fellowship hobby so long he has probably forgotten how to convert a soul to Christ.” The preaching brother who wrote me accused me of offering nothing spiritual, but only “long winded theses on philosophy, politics, and history.”

I discount such intemperate utterances, realizing that they are spoken in intensity of feeling. “Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.” These brethren are good men. They want to do right, but they are victims of the party spirit, which always places in the worst light one who will not conform. They are acting toward me exactly as I once acted toward others. I am merely being paid back in my own coin for the years of partisan littleness which characterized my life. They are frightened and fearful that if we succeed in restoring unity the faction with which we have always been allied will sink into oblivion in the greatness and majesty of the kingdom of heaven. They regard this as the church losing its identity. I regard it as the church regaining her homogeneity, and would gladly see every faction disappear to regain the oneness for which Jesus prayed. Indeed, I know of no other way to secure it.

With many brethren, nothing is spiritual unless produced under the party label. The apostle wrote, "Some indeed preach Christ from envy and rivalry, but others from good will . . . the former proclaim Christ out of partisanship" (Phil. 1:15, 17). The attitude and purpose of proclaiming Christ needs to be considered. I know of no better way to show my love for our blessed Lord than to labor diligently to try in my feeble way to help answer his prayer for the unity of all believers. I shall not be deterred from this serious calling by reckless and unfounded statements, "for it is all for your sake, so that as grace is extended to more and more people it may increase thanksgiving, to the glory of God."

21. What can those who love the Lord do to help in this great effort to restore the spirit of the Restoration movement? They can cultivate a spirit of philanthropy and benevolence toward all men; they can study their Bibles daily with unveiled faces; they can pray God to raise up men to help rebuild the walls of Zion and to repair the breaches; they can make available the plea for restoration to all of the honest hearts in the communities where they reside, by mailing them proper reading matter which will challenge their thinking and arouse them from sectarian complacency. The child of God need not be afraid to go anywhere that men talk about Jesus, or to read any thing, or discuss with any one. Indeed, he will seek opportunities to broaden his influence and extend his contacts. Salt and leaven can only work effectively when they directly encounter that which they are to effect. Neither can accomplish its purpose by remote control or through isolation. "Conduct yourself wisely toward outsiders, making the most of the time. Let your speech always be gracious, seasoned with salt, so that you may know how you ought to answer every one."

In closing, let me again state that these answers represent only my own thinking with reference to some of the problems we face. It may be that I do not fully comprehend the nature of the problems, and my proposals may not conform to the ideas of the readers. You need not agree with what I have written in order to be loved and respected. You will be my brethren in the Lord even though you may feel that I am mistaken about all of these matters under discussion. I do not have all of the answers, I know, and some that I think are correct may prove to be otherwise. But while I cannot plead infallibility or unerring judgment, I have resolved that I will be second to no one in my love for the brotherhood of those for whom Jesus died and who have acknowledged His sovereignty over their lives. Pray for me as I do for all of you. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all!

Pride and Shame

Mission Messenger (February 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

In his epistle to the saints of Philippi, the apostle Paul referred to some of whom he had spoken previously, and of whom he again wrote while weeping over their state. One characteristic of these people lay in the fact that their glory was in their shame. J. B. Phillips translates the passage, “Their pride is in what they should be ashamed of.”

It seems very difficult to continue to glory in the cross, that symbol of suffering and sacrifice. Those who begin in humility and poverty, seek to forget or disguise their beginning when they climb to heights of respectability and worldly recognition. Their set of values is altered. Their faith in God is supplanted by their trust in organizers. In a desire to lend glamor to the party they discard the raiment washed white in the blood of the Lamb, and substitute for it the stolen livery of Satan. The simple story of the cross is embellished and adorned with all of the trappings of the stage and theater. The “Good News” is presented in full color and rotogravure.

The modern party known as “The Church of Christ” is a good illustration of what we mean. It is one of several groups resulting from a restoration movement begun a century and a half ago. This movement was inaugurated by consecrated men in the Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist communions to promote the unity of the Christians in all sects by pleading for a restoration of the primitive order of things. It is a tragedy of this age that this noble experiment ran aground upon the rocks of human passion and was battered into fragments and splintered by the breakers of partisanship and animosity. As is ever the case "The Church of Christ" has now crystallized into a competitive sect, vying with other parties in a decadent Christianity for popular favor, membership and money.

This is a grave charge, but the proof is evident. It is observable in the publicity accorded movie stars, athletes and prominent figures in the political or business world. It would appear that one becomes the subject of spiritual growth by the ability to drive a golf ball, run a fast mile, or croon a love song. The huckstering of such talents, and the basking in the reflected glory of the world, is a symptom of deep seated spiritual illness.

The charge is sustained by the eagerness to get newspaper space for accounts of sumptuous banquets held in luxury hotels, at which prominent figures in church life are given special citations, and have plaques presented to them by church-related institutions. At such meetings political big-wigs are present, governors, senators and lesser lights, all speaking in commendatory fashion and lauding the attainments of the clergyman. There has been a recent rash of honorary degrees. Men are now accorded the title "Doctor of Laws," so they can hold up their heads among the theologians, although they know no more the day after they are marked as men of distinction than they did the day before. But "The Church of Christ" once regarded as a little insignificant group of dissenters, unlearned except in the Word of God, dare no longer play second fiddle in the mad race for modern recognition.

Once upon a time these congregations emphasized the spirituality, zeal and Biblical knowledge of the whole membership. In those days David Lipscomb wrote of a congregation in Nashville, Tennessee, in this fashion:

A church that has to send to others for help to conduct its services in worship or work is not a self-supporting and self-edifying church. This is true, no matter how great the number, the talent, or the wealth of the congregation. . . . We have scarcely a male member who will not lead in the worship if desired. . . . Such a hand of earnest, working Christians is much more effective for converting the world than a rich church of a thousand wealthy, fashionable members supporting one of the most learned and eloquent preachers in the land to study, teach, pray, exhort, and admonish for them, while they live at ease and support him. . . . The congregation is the school for educating and preparing men for any and all the work God has commanded to his church.

A great change has been wrought since the days of Lipscomb. The emphasis is now on the clergyman who occupies the pulpit. His name appears in all of the advertising on the church page of the newspaper. It is the only one on the sign in front of the meetinghouse. He alone of all the members has a house— a parsonage or manse— provided at the expense of others. He receives a salary with allowances for car and utilities. The day of “the pastor” has arrived and members who approved a candidate in a trial sermon or oratorical contest, speak loving and glowingly of “our new minister.” “The Church of Christ” has moved uptown. It is now on Main Street. It has wall-to-wall carpeting, cushioned pews, floral offerings and an educational plant with a fellowship hall. In short, it has at last “arrived.”

But there is an uneasy feeling. The speaker must use loaded terms such as “The Lord’s people” and “The Lord’s church” over and over, as if trying to convince himself and his auditors. Faithfulness is no longer equated with holiness or freedom from worldliness. The deacons who pass the emblems of the body and blood of the crucified Jesus may have yelled themselves hoarse at the boxing ring the night previous. Richly gowned women with gaudy jewels may have arranged a theater party on Saturday afternoon. Those who sit in the pews go where the world goes, talk like the world talks, act like the world acts. They are joint participators with the world in everything except matters of doctrine. Ah, there is the difference! That is what makes one “sound.” That is the criterion of faithfulness. They are loyal to the party. They will not compromise one “item of worship.” They have a form of doctrine and they will defend it come what may.

The members now approve themselves as ministers of God by flailing the sects, by bitterly lashing out at those who use instrumental music or seek to promote the spread of the gospel by societies. But still there is the uncomfortable feeling that the apostles of Jesus might not feel at home with them. The ambassadors of heaven might seem out of place, for this method of approving one as a minister of God would appear strange to them. It was one of those apostles who wrote:

I prove myself at all points a true minister of God, by my great endurance, by suffering, by troubles, by calamities, by lashes, by imprisonment; mobbed, toiling, sleepless, starving . . . amid honour and dishonour, amid evil report and good report, an “impostor” but honest, “unknown” but well-known, dying but here I am alive, chastened but not killed, grieved but always glad, a “pauper” but the means of wealth to many, without a penny but possessed of everything.

“The Church of Christ” should face up to the facts of life. It is not a reproduction of the primitive ekklesia of God. The things the brethren boast about are symptoms of their weakness. Orphan homes operated for profit and gain are living monuments to a lack of love in the homes of those whose hearts have grown smaller as their houses grew larger. Colleges to train servants for the local churches testify to a breakdown of congregational strength and function. Men must be sent away, out of the community, out from under the local eldership, to be reared by a handmaid, a foster mother, an alma mater. The hired clergymen, professional pulpiteers coming for a salary and departing when it is cut off, are eloquent witnesses to the infirmity and inferiority of the members who can no longer stand or walk by themselves and who must be spoon fed by another acting as a qualified baby sitter. Kermit Eby, a member of the Church of the Brethren, puts it this way:

Professionals are those we hire and pay to give religious expression, when we no longer believe anything enough to give expression to it ourselves. It is impossible for me to conceive of an individual believing something and not wishing to share it.

If the day ever comes that members become ashamed of their human organizations and professional clergymen; if they apologize for them and weepingly confess that they are crutches contrived because of weakness and inability there will be hope. If they regard these as stays and supports for a period of invalidism and sickness and have an urgent desire to walk without them and dispense with them as soon as possible, recovery may come. But so long as they brag about these symbols of spiritual deficiency and decadence, they will grow farther from God's ideal, for their pride is in what they ought to be ashamed of!

Size and Importance

Mission Messenger (February 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

The scientists and philosophers of an earlier day regarded the earth as the center of the universe. In that remote age it was thought that all the other planets revolved around this terrestrial sphere. We now know the earth is but a flyspeck on the face of infinity. The space probes of this generation have demonstrated how cosmically insignificant is our dwelling place. This provides another point of attack for the learned skeptic. The probability of the Incarnation of the Word is held up to doubt, if not to ridicule. It is argued that it is inconceivable that a diminutive planet such as this could have been the scene of such a unique and divine demonstration or visitation. That Deity would single out such a microscopic orb of whirling matter and make it the object of special purpose is conceived to be a triviality unworthy of a divine intellect.

That such thinking may undermine, and even destroy the faith of some, must be admitted. We must recognize that there is a personal bias against the doctrine of Incarnation. If it be true that God personally visited this earth, the responsibility of man in the moral and spiritual realm is great indeed. Those who confuse liberty with license cannot stifle conscience until they suppress the cross. The argument of our relative unimportance based upon a comparison of the size of our temporal abode with that of stars and moons is mere wishful thinking, slanted toward self-deception.

The fallacy in such rationalization should be immediately apparent. It makes material magnitude the sole measuring reed or criterion of worth. This is the equivalent of concluding that a man who lives in a one room house in an area surrounded by large dwellings (not even known to be occupied), should be regarded as an inferior and unworthy person. It is a good thing that Abraham Lincoln was not exposed to such imaginative speculation. It is not the size of the dwelling but the character and potential of the man who lives there that makes for moral stature. The Incarnation was not for the purpose of enabling divine inspection of the largest created area, but to redeem man!

By the very explorations upon which the skeptic bases his doubts, man demonstrates that his thoughts can reach beyond the limits of space. Too, it is a recognized fact that the love of man can outlast time. It would appear that man is, therefore, a creature destined to a life which is illimitable and unconfined by time and space. Otherwise the noblest of his attributes would never reach fruition or fulfillment. This being true, it is but natural that God would visit His creation to prepare them for such a life beyond the material realm and its confines. Man's aspirations are not confined alone to the planet toward which gravity constantly draws his material frame. He seeks to free himself from the power which clasps him to the bosom of mother earth. Gravity exerts no influence over the spirit. Shall that spirit never really be free from material limitations?

We regard it as absurd for the modern researchist who employs the scientific method in every other field to abandon it in an attempt to rid himself of the idea of personal responsibility to God. There is ample testimony that Jesus of Nazareth lived among men. He claimed to be the Son of God. His life was without reproach. His ethical standards were such as to show superiority to those of the wisest men of his earthly stay. But to substantiate his claim, he offered the only proof capable of demonstrating his divinity to man. He performed supernatural acts of such magnitude as to convince the distrustful and convict the unbelieving.

Men saw these signs, and motivated by them, acknowledged the claim of Jesus. So certain were they of the validity and truth of what they saw, that they suffered death by torture rather than deny it. It is now impossible, twenty centuries later, to examine or criticize the evidence. It was of such a nature that it would have to be seen to be evaluated. Visible demonstrations of power can be conclusive only to those who behold them. The modern skeptic cannot deny the evidence. He cannot successfully evade it. His only recourse is to shut his eyes to it, and this is the resort of the dishonest and prejudiced.

To argue that the Incarnation could not have taken place because of the relative insignificance as to bulk and size of this planet in the cosmos, is to ignore all the facts which testify and prove that it did occur. As the mind of man is greater than the material modes of calculation which he employs to express his own creativity, so these methods of measurement can never suffice to reckon value of the human creative personality. That God regarded it of such transcendent worth as to justify His being in Christ to reconcile the world unto Himself, should cause us all to ponder upon the fact that man may conquer space and lose his soul. It is only when the spirit of man is a satellite of Jesus that man is in his true orbit.

We believe that Pascal (Pensees 2-10-1) stated a fact worth remembering when he said, "If the entire physical universe conspired to crush a man, the man would still be nobler than the entire physical universe, for he would know that he was being crushed."

A Spiritual Adventure

Mission Messenger (March 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

We invite you to a new series of studies. In months to come, God willing, we shall walk with you through the aisles of divine revelation, stopping only to pluck the fruit of grace and knowledge. We shall act as guide on these strolls, not because of any extraordinary ability, but because of intense eagerness which will not allow us to postpone the journey any longer. It is our fervent hope that those who accompany us will point out salient features which we overlook as a result of personal shortcomings. As we share our observations we can strengthen and sustain each other. No one will be debarred from accompanying us on these adventures of faith. You are urged to solicit your friends and dear ones to go along, regardless of religious affiliation. Our prime objective will be a search for truth. This is the noblest pursuit to which rational beings may consecrate their lives. It pre-supposes an admission that there are still truths which we have not discovered, that there are vital areas unexplored. There are two classes who will not benefit by further reading: those who think they know all there is to know; and those who do not, but are unwilling to learn more. The first are blinded by conceit and egotism, the others are doomed by a spirit of unconcern and indifference.

As is true with all explorers equipping themselves for an adventure, there are certain things of which we must divest ourselves, and others which we must take along, to assure ourselves of a reasonable hope of success. We cannot afford to be impeded in our progress by dragging along excess baggage. We must “lay aside every weight.” As the leader in this current expedition which we are arranging, we suggest a few items which we will need to discard. Since this expedition is in the mental or intellectual realm, the hindering factors will be primarily in the category of attitudes.

We should leave behind our partisan spirit as it will warp our vision and cause us to view things in a false light. Truth is not a party possession. It is not a sectarian monopoly. It is the breath of the spirit as the atmosphere is of the physical body, given to all as the source of life by a beneficent creator. As the air becomes polluted by noxious gases so truth can be corrupted when mixed with sectarian bias. All prejudice and traditional allegiance should be deposited before we start, since these are encumbrances which will soon discourage our further progress, so burdensome do they become.

We will need to include a great degree of humility so that we not over-estimate either our ability or importance. An extraordinary amount of faith will be required to keep us from faltering when the going becomes hard. We must recognize ourselves as men and women of destiny, and must be content to allow our motives and findings to be questioned, misunderstood and attacked, while we await the judgment and verdict of history to vindicate us. The stones hurled at original thinkers and pioneers while they live are often made into a monument for them after they die. There will be required a good measure of fortitude and bravery for it is not easy to accept new ideas which run counter to our previous views.

I have long been affiliated with one segment of the Restoration Movement, a noble enterprise inaugurated one hundred fifty years ago with a view to uniting the Christians in all sects by restoration of the ancient order of things in the Christian domain. The disintegration of that effort into a multiplicity of antagonistic parties is a matter of grave concern, for while these expend their resources and energies in prosecuting war against each other, the Christians in other sects continue separated and segregated from each other with no one seeming to care. What happened to the idea of the Restoration Movement? Was its ideal false and impractical from its inception? If not, should we seek to reactivate it in our own generation?

It is the conviction of the writer that no more worthy crusade can engage the energies of the sons of God than to attempt to restore peace where chaos now reigns. Indeed it is the peacemakers who are blessed by being called the children of God. It may be urged that the pursuit of unity is a futile quest and impossible of realization. To all who decry our efforts we simply affirm that it is the will of God, and it is better to die fighting for his will to be done on earth as it is in heaven than to live useless lives in which there is no real endeavor to answer the prayer of Jesus.

We propose to examine for ourselves the reason for the distortion and dismemberment of the Restoration movement. Our analysis will be for the purpose of avoiding the pitfalls in the future. We should seek to elude the traps set by Satan for the unwary. The enemy of souls does not want believers in Jesus to unite. He will employ every stratagem to keep them alienated from each other. So long as he can enlist those who will thwart the divine purpose under the guise of loyalty or faithfulness, he can rest at ease. It must be a festal occasion in the nether regions when one of the demons can invade the precincts of the sanctuary and get someone to urge dividing over a plea for unity.

Believers in Jesus are divided and separated. They are a displaced and dispersed people. We must face up to this fact. We should not try to conceal it under finespun theories. We should not rationalize ourselves into believing that we have herded all the sheep into one earthly corral. Why does this sad and sorry state of things prevail? We could hardly be more divided if God had commanded it. It is evident that we are where our thinking has brought us. To continue in that type of thinking will lead us farther astray. If we are to be better off tomorrow, we must begin to think differently today.

It is not God's thinking that has produced our present predicament. "God is not the author of confusion but of peace." It is our own reasoning that is responsible. If we change our status we must think as God thinks. This demands a re-study of His revelation. Such an investigation must be made with unveiled face. We must not bend God's word to suit our theories, but abandon our ideas to accept His word. In the research which we now commence we will cut across the thinking of many of our readers. Some of what we say will be diametrically opposed to what you have previously thought.

Shallow reasoners will condemn us, preferring to remain in mental stagnation than to have the waters troubled. Only little minds and shrivelled souls cry out like the demons in the days when Jesus was upon earth, "Let us alone." We need the constant challenge of investigation. Truth does not fear the light of research. It welcomes the full glare of publicity. It has nothing to hide and knows no dread. It does not quail before the examiner nor shrink from the inquisitor. That we not prolong our introduction unduly, let us briefly state some of the principles which we propose to establish in our forthcoming issues. By enunciating them now you will have opportunity to examine and scrutinize them in advance and to formulate personal convictions relative to them before we proceed to establish them by inspired testimony.

1. The thirty-nine books from Genesis to Malachi do not constitute the old testament, or covenant of God. They contain in brief compass a statement of the covenant, but the greater part of these books were written to or about a covenant people. The covenant which established relationship was one thing, the scriptures or writings which grew out of it a totally different thing.

2. The twenty-seven books or letters from Matthew to Revelation, do not constitute the new testament. The new covenant which God declared he would make was not written with pen and ink at all, was never addressed to a church, or to the church, and thousands entered into covenant relationship with God years before one word of the new covenant scriptures was penned. The new covenant is one thing, the scriptures or writings which grew out of it a totally different thing.

3. The message of heaven calculated to enroll aliens under the sovereignty of Jesus was referred to as “the Good News (gospel) of Jesus Christ.” It was never addressed to citizens of the kingdom of God. It was good news, not a course of instruction. Romans, 1 and 2 Corinthians, Galatians, Ephesians, etc., are not a part of the gospel of Jesus Christ. They are not a part of the new covenant, but are letters written to a covenant people when circumstances warranted it.

4. A proper response to the Good News demanded belief of but one fact, that Jesus is the Messiah and God’s Son. The man who reformed his life because of the implications of this proclamation, and was immersed to fulfill the righteousness of God was thereby inducted into the Reign of heaven.

5. The church of God on earth is composed of all who sustain a covenant relationship with God, having had their sins washed away by the blood of Jesus, and enjoying the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. The church of God, as the family of God, is a fellowship of the elect, or called saints. Every one who has been born again is a member of that family, and is a brother to every other person who is in it. The church of God is a covenantal community of saints.

We believe there are breath-taking potentials and possibilities in these premises. A lack of understanding of these is responsible for many of the sectarian cleavages in our world today. It is ignorance of these truths which has caused the Restoration movement to flounder and fall upon the rocks to be lashed and battered by the waves of doubt and suspicion. A dogmatic demand for conformity in areas where God has never required it, combined with a disregard for the fundamental and essential truths of the first magnitude, has made of the sacred scriptures a partisan battering ram to buffet and browbeat honest hearts and wreak havoc upon the unity of the Spirit as well as severing the bond of peace.

We are certain that the casual reader will not recognize any tremendous significance in these statements, for such a reader sees little significance in anything he peruses, even the word of God. Some will bitterly resent the implications and will doubt the sanity of one who is so rash as to question that the thirty-nine books are the old testament of God. There may be those who labor under the delusion that the sacred oracles declare that the new covenant of God consists of twenty-seven books or letters. All such are in for a great surprise and a shock treatment if they do not cancel their subscriptions prematurely.

But what difference does it make? The greatest difference is truth as opposed to error. But on a practical basis the entire structure of “fellowship” will be altered if the suggestions we make can be proven. If the new covenant with God is a personal and individual relationship into which one enters as a result of his conviction of sinfulness and of utter dependence upon Jesus for salvation, and if this brings him into a state of fellowship with God and Christ prior to, and independent of his knowledge of citizenship requirements of the new testament scriptures, then it is not knowledge of or obedience to a certain proportion of these scriptures at any given time, but his attitude toward them, that determines acceptability with God.

That you may clearly understand what we mean let us use an illustration of current interest. A cleavage exists today over a pre-millennial interpretation of the sacred writings. There are those who conclude from a study of the Apocalypse, chapter 20, in conjunction with other scriptures, that Jesus will return to this earth and reign here a thousand years. These brethren are sincere and honest. So are many of those who differ with their exposition. But a millennial view of any kind is not essential to covenant relationship with God, and should never be made a test or basis of fellowship. The thousands on Pentecost entered into covenant relationship with God and had no position on the millennium unless they brought it with them from Judaism. There is every reason to believe that many of them held mistaken ideas about the imminence of the appearing of Jesus, and there are indications that some in the primitive church of God expected Jesus to return to earth. But these opinions did not create a division, and they continued in unity in spite of their differences. To them the redemption in Christ Jesus was greater than their personal views regarding his future arrangements. The test was not how he would come in the future, but that he had come in the flesh. "Hereby know ye the Spirit of God; Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God; and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God" (1 John 4:2, 3).

Those who are in covenant relationship with God do not all hold the same opinions. They do not believe alike about all things. But this does not necessarily affect their covenant relationship for it is not based upon their perfect knowledge of the apostles' doctrine but upon their firm conviction that Jesus is the Messiah and God's Son. We are told, "As for the man who is weak in faith, welcome him, but not for disputes over opinions." None of us has yet "arrived." We are all at different stages of knowledge. "If any one imagines that he knows something, he does not yet know as he ought to know. But if one loves God, one is known by him" (1 Cor. 8:2, 3). Our acceptability to God does not depend upon our knowledge of all the fine points of doctrine, but upon our love for him.

We are to welcome each other in spite of shortcomings, mistaken opinions and varied views. And we are not to welcome one who differs with us simply to maneuver him into a place where we can debate his opinions. We can differ in belief on many things and still be together if our love for each other is greater than our differences. “One believes he may eat anything, while the weak man eats only vegetables” (Rom. 14:2). To divide the church of God into pre-millennial and post-millennial parties is as sinful as to divide it into carnivorous and herbivorous parties. All such divisions are a symptom of carnality. All result from rationalization that is earthly, sensual and devilish.

But is not one of these opinions wrong? Let us grant that it is! Can we remain in fellowship with such wrong opinion? We are not in fellowship with opinions at all, whether they are right or wrong. We are in fellowship with persons, with fellows. Can we remain in fellowship with a person who holds a wrong opinion? If not, we cannot be in fellowship with anyone, not even ourselves. Could the man whose conscience compelled him to eat only vegetables remain in fellowship with the one who believed he could eat anything, and vice versa? Certainly so! Why? “Because the kingdom of God does not mean food and drink but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit.” By the same token the kingdom does not mean pre-millennialism, post-millennialism, or a-millennialism. Neither is it a theory as to the nature of Deity. Nor is it leavened bread, unleavened bread; fermented wine, unfermented wine; one container or multiple containers for distribution of the fruit of the vine. Let brethren believe whichever of these they honestly esteem as proper, but let them emphasize, all of them, “righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit.” “He who thus serves Christ is acceptable to God and approved by men.” He who pushes, drives and forces his brethren into a partisan position, who divides and rends the body of our Lord, is not acceptable to God. Such a course is not even approved by men who are thinking persons!

Is it humanly possible for a congregation of saints to continue as one when part of them hold a pre-millennial view and the rest do not so interpret the Scriptures? Not humanly possible, for it is the human tendency to be selfish, to bite and devour one another. But true children of God are not ordinary men. They are extraordinary men. They have something that ordinary men do not have—the indwelling Spirit of God. Thus they are not merely men. It is the unity of the Spirit which must be guarded in the bond of peace. Those who divide must first quench the Spirit, for division is an act of the flesh. It stems from men who are fleshly and immature. “For while there is jealousy and strife among you, are you not of the flesh and behaving like ordinary men? For when one says, ‘I belong to Paul,’ and another, ‘I belong to Apollos, are you not merely men?’” (1 Cor. 3:3, 4).

We have sought to base a superstructure of religion upon attainment to knowledge and wisdom. We have predicated the idea that unity is based upon conformity. But conformity in the absolute demands equal ability of perception, simultaneous arrival at perfection in knowledge, and universality of wisdom. If we begin retrenchment from plenary conformity we surrender the whole system and acknowledge that it is fallacious. For if conformity must not be absolute, then who is to determine in how many things we must conform, in how many leniency may be shown, and which things fall in each category? The one who attempted such legislation would usurp the room of God. Indeed that is exactly what has happened for the system has bred fallible beings possessed of a theocratic complex. For this reason the envoy of Jesus writes, “Who are you to pass judgment on the servant of another? It is before his own master that he stands or falls. And he will be upheld for the Master is able to make him stand.” A lot of us need to be brought up short by the pointed query, “Who are you?”

It will be our thesis in the months ahead that since Jesus was “put to death for our trespasses and raised for our justification,” we now personally and individually enter into covenant relationship with God in response to the Good News, and that such relationship is not created by conformity to a legalistic system, either human or divine, but that we ourselves become “letters about Christ, written not with pen and ink but with the Spirit of the living God.” We will expect to show that the new covenant is not written upon paper nor engraved in stone, but is inscribed on human hearts, and that the apostles were “qualified to be ministers of a new covenant not in a written code, but in the Spirit.”

Do we then overthrow the apostolic writings by this faith? By no means! On the contrary, we uphold the apostolic writings. We put them in the place which God has assigned them. They were written to a covenant people, to strengthen, encourage, warn and correct them. The new covenant is entered by birth, not by a legalistic arrangement, not by performance of good deeds or acts of righteousness. “When the goodness and loving kindness of God our Saviour appeared, he saved us, not because of deeds done by us in righteousness, but in virtue of his own mercy, by the washing of regeneration and renewal in the Holy Spirit, which he poured out upon us richly through Jesus Christ our Saviour, so that we might be justified by his grace and become heirs in hope of eternal life” (Titus 3:4-7).

But even though we were dead in sins God was so rich in mercy that He gave us the very life of Christ (for it is, remember, by grace and not by achievement that you are saved), and has lifted us right out of the old life to take our place with Him in Christ in the heavens. Thus he shows for all time the tremendous generosity of the grace and kindness He has expressed toward us in Christ Jesus. It was nothing you could or did achieve—it was God’s gift to you. No one can pride himself that he earned the love of God. The fact is that what we are we owe to the Hand of God upon us. We are born afresh in Christ, and born to do those good deeds which God planned for us to do (Eph. 2:4-10 —Phillips).

For there is no distinction; since all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God, they are justified by grace as a gift, through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus, whom God put forward as an expiation by his blood, to be received by faith. This was to show God's righteousness, because in his divine forbearance he had passed over former sins; it was to prove at the present time that he himself is righteous and that he justifies him who has faith in Jesus.

We do not enter into covenant relationship with the God of all grace by agreeing with our fellowmen upon the meaning of a code of laws, or by conforming to a set of opinions, nor yet upon the knowledge of the import and implications of a series of letters, but by faith in a fact— in one supreme fact. A much more able and talented writer than the author has phrased it thus:

When the Messiah appeared as the founder of a new religion, systems of religion consisting of opinions and speculations upon matter and mind, upon God and nature, upon virtue and vice, had been adopted, improved, reformed, and exploded time after time. That there was always something superfluous, something defective, something wrong, something that could be improved, in every system of religion and morality, was generally felt, and at last was universally acknowledged. But the grandeur, sublimity, and beauty of the foundation of hope, and of ecclesiastical or social union, established by the author and founder of Christianity, consisted in this— that the belief of one fact, and that upon the best evidence in the world, is all that is requisite, so far as faith goes, to salvation. The belief of this one fact and submission to one institution expressive of it is all that is required of Heaven to admission into the church (Alexander Campbell, The Christian System, page 130).

In elucidating further, Mr. Campbell says:

A Christian, as defined, not by Dr. Johnson, nor any creed-maker, but by one taught from Heaven, is one that believes in this one fact, and has submitted to one institution, and whose deportment accords with the morality and virtue of the great Prophet. The one fact is expressed in a single proposition that Jesus the Nazarene is the Messiah . . . The one institution is baptism into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. Every such person is a disciple in the fullest sense of the word, the moment he has believed this one fact . . . and has submitted to the above-mentioned institution; and whether he believes the five points condemned, or the five points approved by the Synod of Dort, is not so much as to be asked of him; whether he holds any of the views of the Calvinists or Arminians, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Methodists, Baptists, or Quakers, is never once to be asked of such persons, in order to admission into the Christian community, called the church.

Our entrance into the fellowship of the saints is not contingent upon a knowledge of, or a position on, the material composing the apostolic injunctions to the churches of God. The new covenant is a personal agreement with God based upon faith that Jesus is His Son come in the flesh, and ratified by our submission to the ordinance of immersion. Certainly when we thus enlist as disciples, we obligate ourselves to become familiar with our increasing responsibility and informed as to our duties, but this is to be done as a covenant person, as one who is in Christ Jesus. The responsibility of no two persons is identical at any given moment for no two have identical ability or opportunity. To set up a system by which fellowship is conditioned upon equality of knowledge and opportunity is to create a state in which strife, division, confusion and every evil work will inevitably result, and in which no one dares to express an original thought, until everyone else has automatically discovered it for himself, in which case it is no longer original, and does not need stating at all.

Experience should teach us that unity can never be achieved by coercion or forced conformity. The multiplicity of schisms, factions, sects, and parties, witness to the futility of that course pursued in the past. But if unity is not to be secured upon the basis of common opinion and understanding of all revelation, how can it be brought about? My reply is that it can only result from a mutual love for each other based upon a common relationship to Jesus. Unity is a command which we obey in love because of what has been done for us. We are not one in opinion, we are one in Christ! It is not that we are reconciled to all the views of each other, but that all of us have been reconciled to God that makes us one body. “And might reconcile us both to God in one body by the cross, thereby bringing hostility to an end” (Eph. 2:16). Our peace is not the result of mutual understanding of every scriptural passage. Our peace is personal. He is our peace! It is our agreement with God, our covenant, that brings us into relationship!

It is not our study, acquisition of knowledge, learning of the law, or ability as teachers or expounders, which makes us children of God. We become children by procreation, not education. We are God’s offspring because of what He has done for us, not because of what we have done for Him. Nothing creates itself. We could no more become a new creation spontaneously than we could have become men by that method. The very term “creation” indicates an action by a Creator who preceded that which was called into being. Creation implies transformation. Malice, envy, and hate belong to the carnal man. “We ourselves were once foolish, disobedient, led astray, slaves to various passions and pleasures, passing our days in malice and envy, hated by men and hating one another” (Titus 3:3). If we are no longer in this state or condition to what do we attribute the change?

The writer specifically says it did not result from “deeds done by us in righteousness.” He credits it to “the goodness and loving kindness of God,” to “the virtue of his own mercy,” and to “the washing of regeneration and renewal in the Holy Spirit, which he poured out upon us richly through Jesus Christ our Saviour.” He affirms that as a result we are justified by His grace and become heirs in hope of eternal life. We cease to hate and be hated because we are heirs in common. We share in the same hope. We no longer pass our days in malice and envy, but in love and service. We avoid those things which are divisive and dangerous, for we know how stupid and unprofitable it is to engage in contention and useless controversy.

I desire you to insist on these things, so that those who have believed in God may be careful to apply themselves to good deeds; these are excellent and profitable to men. But avoid stupid controversies, genealogies, dissensions, and quarrels over the law, for they are unprofitable and futile. As for a man who is factious, after admonishing him once or twice, have nothing more to do with him, knowing that such a person is perverted and sinful; he is self-condemned (Titus 3:8-11).

A factious man is one who is contentious, seditious, and party-spirited. He will sacrifice the peace and harmony of the body to have his way. He builds a clique about himself. He is the spearhead of a splinter party, the sachem of a segment, the chief of a confederation. He does not love the brotherhood, for to him no one is a brother who disagrees with him. No one is right with God who is not in good with him. No one is in the favor of God who falls under his disfavor. It is this spirit which has shivered, severed, and segregated God’s people into warring tribes.

If we can catch the true spirit of Christianity we will see that all of us who have come into Christ Jesus are members one of another by virtue of our covenant with God. This will not guarantee that we will see every point of sacred scripture alike, but it will at least put our disagreements in proper perspective.

It will emphasize the centrality of Jesus as the hope of our salvation. The emphasis will be upon Him. He will be the source of our strength and will become our peace. Heretofore, every viewpoint and opinion has been greater than Jesus in our thinking. In our pride and stubbornness we have not hesitated to fracture His body when we disagreed with others. This amounts to a virtual dethronement of Jesus and an exaltation of ourselves which is opposed to the very genius of the Christian way. It is not our varied concepts which have divided us but our attitude toward Jesus and each other. There will always be divergencies of viewpoint. We must choose whether we shall emphasize these, or Jesus. Every generation must make this choice. The tragic history of the choice in the past is all too obvious.

There are good brethren who are bitterly critical of our thesis. We urge them to think soberly, sanely, and seriously. Has our position in the Christian realm answered the prayer of Jesus for peace and unity? Will not God bless those efforts which are truly an exemplification of His purpose? Is it not true that our past theory and its implementation have only resulted in heartache, division and despair? Is there any reason to believe it will not continue to breed dissension and strife in the future? We do not hesitate to sit in judgment upon great Protestant bodies and affirm that they are in error in their concepts. If we were to sit in impartial judgment upon ourselves, is it possible that we would find that, being human, we who are heirs of the Restoration movement, have sought to make fellowship contingent upon that which was never intended to be its spiritual foundation? Can it be that the resultant confusion is the product of our own false concept?

It will not do to retreat behind partisan walls and blast all others as fickle, insincere and apostate. There are humble, God-fearing men in every party. They love God and they seek Him daily. They are not motivated by callous disregard for truth. They reverence the name of Jesus and bow their knees to Him as their king. It is among such men division seems to be most pronounced. Camp followers and casual hangers-on seem to maintain a fellowship of the unconcerned. But mere love for truth and knowledge of the sacred writings will not provide a buttress against disintegration. Have we misunderstood the whole basic philosophy of the Christian way?

We propose very humbly to investigate the nature of God as manifested unto man by revelation, and to attempt to fathom the reason for the decadent state of Christianity. If He sees fit to spare us, and to grant us the power of intellect in the months ahead, we shall address ourselves to the task which seems to us to be the most important to our generation. We solicit your prayers, your comments and your criticisms. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit be with you all.

The Road to Gaza

Mission Messenger (March 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

While Philip, the evangelist, was engaged in a successful mission in the city of Samaria, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him and instructed him to go toward the south, unto the way that led from Jerusalem unto Gaza “which is desert.” He obeyed the celestial messenger with the result that he was brought into contact with the Secretary of the Treasury, in the realm of Queen Candace, regnant in the wealthy land of Ethiopia. By preaching to him Jesus, Philip led the man to say, as they went on their way, “See here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized?”

For generations, those who scoff at this sacred rite, manifesting more brashness than sense, have sneered at the idea of finding enough water “in the desert” to immerse a man. And, with the irreverence characteristic of all who seek to detract from the truth which they cannot overthrow, these critics of God’s word have slightly referred to baptizing “in a camel’s track.” To thus speak demonstrates an unholy motive to keep men from submitting to God’s will at any cost.

The eunuch who was present, said, “See, here is water!” The inspired historian says, “They came unto a certain water.” We are told they went down both into the water. We are informed they came up out of the water. Certainly he would be a rash spirit, who flying in the face of testimony of eyewitnesses, and the inspired historian, derides what they saw or recorded. Will we accept the reasoning of prejudiced men who live twenty centuries this side of an event, and thousands of miles from its locale, or shall we believe those who being present at the time, relied upon their senses of sight and touch?

But an even greater ignorance is revealed concerning the expression “which is desert.” When the angel used the expression he was not talking about the road, nor about the country traversed by that road. He was not talking about the condition of the soil, but the condition of the city of Gaza. And in his words, there is given an incidental, and therefore, an authentic testimony to the fulfillment of an obscure prophecy.

Gaza was the capital of ancient Philistia, and one of her five principal cities, of which the other four were Gath, Ekron, Askelon and Ashdod (1 Sam. 6:17). Because of the inhuman persecution of Israel in her affliction, God decreed the downfall and desolation of these places. Ezekiel records, “Thus saith the Lord God, Because the Philistines have dealt by revenge, and have taken vengeance with a despiteful heart, to destroy it for the old hatred; therefore, thus saith the Lord, I will stretch out my hand upon the Philistines . . . and destroy the remnant of the sea coast” (25:15, 16).

Jeremiah predicted that baldness would come upon Gaza (47:5). Amos declared, “Thus saith the Lord, For three transgressions of Gaza, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof . . . but I will send a fire on the wall of Gaza, which shall devour the palace thereof” (Zech. 1:6, 7). Zechariah said that the king would depart from Gaza (9:5).

When these prophecies were uttered the city had flourished for centuries. It still had its palace, its walls and its king. Nevertheless, these men of God confidently predicted that because of their conspiracy to sell God’s afflicted captives to Edom (Cp. Amos 1:6) the doom of the inhabitants was sealed.

Did this come to pass?

Alexander the Great in the first flush of victory attacked Gaza. For two months it resisted all the force of the Macedonian siege. The great Alexander was twice wounded, and in his rage, when the city fell, he dragged the defending general twice around the walls at his chariot wheels, meantime boasting that he was a second Achilles (Quintius Curtius, Bk. 4, Chap. 26). By the beginning of our Christian era, Strabo, the geographer, declared, “Afterwards is the port of Gaza, and at a distance of seven furlongs of the city, formerly illustrious, which was destroyed by Alexander, and remaining desert” (Bk. 2, page 1080, Ed. Pd.).

Alexander Keith in his book “Evidence of Prophecy” says, “The writer, after having unconsciously rested a night on the site of ancient Gaza, as the smoothest place that could be chosen whereon to pitch a tent, was for the first time aware of the literal interpretation of the prophecy when he saw it on the spot . . . Before approaching Gaza, unconscious where the ancient city stood, it might be well asked what is meant by baldness coming upon it. But having traversed the place on which it stood, and beholding it as it rises naked and bare above the plain, its perfect baldness shows how truly the word of the Lord rests upon it” (pp. 254, 255). He adds, “Desert and desolate, as it has long been and still lies, not tenanted by either man or beast, Gaza is forsaken” (Ibid., page 256).

Thus does a casual reference by an angelic messenger to Philip, as recorded by the Greek historian, Luke, confirm the prophetic utterance of many of the ancient men of God, who with a prescience born of a closer walk with God, “spoke as they were moved by the Holy Spirit.”

One Man's Faith

Mission Messenger (March 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

The influence of a single consecrated individual is often undervalued. In Savannah, Georgia, in the first part of the nineteenth century, lived a singular man, S. C. Dunning. He was born in Connecticut, and reared in the Episcopal faith. Even as a youth he became an avid reader of the Bible. As a result he became dissatisfied with his religious upbringing, and convinced that he had not been baptized as the Lord required. There was not an immersed believer in Savannah, but he singled out a person of holy life and prevailed upon him to immerse him in the ever blessed Name. Then, with a large New Testament under his arm he “went everywhere preaching the Word.” In his own counting house, on the streets, in the stores of his business associates, “he ceased not to teach and to preach Jesus Christ.” For a long time he labored alone.

Thirty miles north of Savannah, was the community of Ebenezer, made up of a colony of Salzburger immigrants, all German Lutherans. Among these was Christian Dasher, an independent thinker who read the Bible for himself. He, too became convinced that he had not been baptized according to the divine requirement. Repeatedly he besought his pastor to immerse him, only to meet with stubborn and steadfast refusal. Having heard of the odd Mr. Dunning, he rode his horse to Savannah, located him and asked to be immersed. An elderly colored woman had also heeded the gospel call, and these three met every Lord's Day in the parlor of the Dunning home. The table of the Lord was spread, and they, with any others who chose to join them, sat about it and sang praises, studied the scriptures, exhorting and edifying one another in all soberness and solemnity.

It is interesting that the two men, eagerly searching for truth, and earnestly desiring to please God, would become fearful and disturbed as to the validity of their immersion each time they discovered another design. When they found that baptism was for the remission of sins, they questioned if they had fully understood this purpose, and lest they fail of God's grace, Dunning immersed Dasher, then Dasher immersed Dunning. When they found that baptism was to fulfill all righteousness, it required another trip to the canal, as it did when they observed that it was to "return the answer of a good conscience unto God." They had not learned that an inductive act, transferring a proper subject from one state into another, introduces such a person into all of the blessings, rights and privileges of that state, whether he had knowledge of them at the time, or not.

Christian Dasher returned to Ebenezer, and in the homes of his Lutheran neighbors, "taught them the way of the Lord more perfectly." "The word of the Lord grew mightily and prevailed." He led a colony of more than thirty to the fertile wiregrass lands in Lowndes County, where they constituted a congregation of saints at Valdosta. The Salzburger brethren, left behind at Ebenezer, made their way to Guyton, a nearby town on the railroad, planted the gospel flag, and began to spread the good tidings there. It is true that "large oaks from little acorns grow."

(The editor has relied for the historical facts above on records kept by J. S. Lamar, who was born in Gwinnett County, Georgia, May 18, 1829. He was admitted to the bar in 1850, but three years later, having been immersed into our Lord by a Baptist preacher, he entered Bethany College, from which he graduated in 1854, thereupon returning to Augusta. Bro. Lamar was author of “The Organon of Scripture, or, The Inductive Method of Biblical Interpretation.”)

The Covenant with Noah

Mission Messenger (April 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

The thought of our responsibility to God is one of the greatest ideas which can invade the conscious human intellect. That responsibility grows out of our relationship to the creative Deity, and stems from the very nature of God as manifested toward His creation. “For from him and through him and to him are all things” (Rom. 11:36). This indicates divine origin, divine agency, and divine purpose. We not only are creatures of the design and power of Deity, but we exist for God. We are to him as well as from and through him. “For us there is one God, the Father, from whom are all things and for whom we exist, and one Lord, Jesus Christ, through whom are all things and through whom we exist” (1 Cor. 8:6).

It is one thing to accept the fact that we have been created by God, and to defend that concept against the subtle and materialistic insinuations that we are creatures of chance; it is totally different to accept the implications contained in the notion that we exist to God and for him. The first entails only an acknowledgment sustained by the axiomatic law of cause and effect, the other requires research into the divine-human relationship to determine how it should affect and govern my individual life on earth. It is inconceivable that I exist for God merely as a cog in the machine of mass humanity. Such a thing would violate the testimony of my own personal consciousness as well as the witness of the Son of God. He taught that a thing so insignificant as a sparrow could not fall to the ground unnoticed by God. He declared that the very hairs of the head are numbered, by which oriental imagery he enunciated the comforting, yet startling truth that not one aspect of the individual life escapes the scrutiny or knowledge of God.

I am obligated to know God, and not merely to know about him. One may believe in the existence of a person and yet not know that person. The fact that I am a product of the creative energy of God, that I am made for him, and must sometime give account to him for my use of the time he allots to me, provides a powerful motivation to me to ascertain all that I can about my relationship unto him. Being a creature I am subject to limitations, not only of time and space, but of imagination and perception. My mind is finite. God is infinite. His ways and thoughts are not those of men (Isa. 55:8). I cannot by sheer use of reason attain unto the mind of God, “in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge” (Col. 2:3). “No one comprehends the thoughts of God except the Spirit of God” (1 Cor. 2:11). “O the depth of the riches and wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments and how inscrutable are his ways!”

I am dependent for my knowledge of God upon what he has seen fit to vouchsafe or reveal unto me. My scope of attainment in this regard will be circumscribed by his disclosures. He is the father of lights, and the mental eye, like the physical, can only respond to the light he affords. There are three sources of information available to me— creation, revelation, and incarnation. In a sense all of these constitute revelation, and all are associated with the word of God. Creation resulted from the spoken word, revelation embraced the spoken word, and incarnation embodied the living Word. “The Word became flesh and dwelt among us.”

Creation not only attests to the existence of God, but reveals some of his attributes. “The heavens are telling the glory of God, and the firmament proclaims his handiwork. Day to day pours forth speech, and night to night declares knowledge” (Psalm 19:1, 2). There is a constant telling, a proclamation, a daily pouring forth of speech, a nightly declaration of knowledge. The planetary system and the firmament are constant witnesses of eternal power and deity to men. “For what can be known about God is plain to them, because God has shown it to them. Ever since the creation of the world, his invisible nature, namely, his eternal power and deity, has been clearly perceived in the things that have been made. So they are without excuse” (Rom. 1:20). They are without excuse because the witness of the heavens is universal. “Their voice goes out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world” (Psalm 19:4).

Not all we need to know about God can be learned from the volume of nature. But “what can be known is plain.” It is “clearly perceived in the things that are made.” By the use of our reasoning faculties we can determine that there is a creative intelligence, that it is an expression of Deity, and that this intelligence possesses power, and such power is eternal. This inspires within us a sense of reverence and awe, but it does not necessarily establish the degree of personal relationship existing between the intelligent Creator and the rational creature. Since this cannot be learned by mere application of logical processes, and since it is essential to one who exists for God, it was necessary that God reveal his divine mind in such a manner as to make man comprehend. The history of mankind demonstrates that reason can be relied upon to prove the existence of God, but it is not a reliable guide to form correct concepts of the nature of God. This is understandable when we recognize that the unknown can only be understood in the light of the known. Man is sinful, weak and addicted to prejudices. He tends to rationalize in favor of what he wants to do. Accordingly, if left to reason unaided, he creates gods in his own image, then justifies his actions by regarding them as characteristic of the gods. The wish is father to the thought!

God has spoken! He has spoken in time past to the fathers by the prophets. He has spoken to us by his Son. Fortunate indeed are we to have an account of what he said. It provides for us a genuine source of life. “Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God.” The sacred scriptures are not so much an account of man’s discovery of God, as of God’s uncovering of his divine nature to man. This is the story of God seeking for man, rather than of man searching for God. In that story we have pictured for us the manner and method by which God and man came into agreement and sustain fellowship with each other. Two great principles are recognizable by every consecrated student of the sacred oracles.

1. In his dealings with mankind God reveals himself as a covenant making personality.

2. He has arranged that those blessings and privileges bestowed upon men shall be enjoyed by them in conjunction with ordinances of his own appointment. Why this is so we do not know! However, we are sure that God always reveals himself in the way best adapted to man’s need and state. His grace always operates for our best interest. The covenants which have been made in the various ages of history have all contributed to our elevation and ultimate glory. In this is seen the beneficence and undeserved kindness of heaven in demonstration. It is enough that we have a record of these and can study them for our own spiritual growth. Let us continue our theme.

THE COVENANT WITH NOAH

The ante-diluvian world became saturated with iniquity. There were two strains of mankind then in existence. The descendants of Seth called themselves by the name of the Lord. They were sons of God. The progeny of Cain were loose and dissolute men. These became intermingled in marriage.

Wickedness became great in the earth. Every imagination of the thoughts of human hearts was only evil continually. The Lord was sorry he had made man. It grieved him in his heart. He declared, “I will blot out man whom I have created from the face of the ground, man and beast and creeping things and birds of the air, for I am sorry that I have made them.”

There was one man who merited God’s favor. Noah was a just man and walked with God. A direct descendant of Seth, he had kept his association pure, he was “blameless in his generation.” God disclosed to Noah that he was determined to make an end of all flesh, for the earth was filled with violence through them. Probation was extended for a hundred and twenty years, and during this time Noah was to construct an ark. It should be remembered that at this time Noah, had no children. His oldest son was not born until twenty years after God’s decree, for “after Noah was five hundred years old, Noah became the father of Shem, Ham and Japheth” (Gen. 5:32).

The means chosen to purge the earth was a cleansing bath of water. Since every nation of antiquity has its tradition of the flood, this may account for the almost universal ritual employment of water as a symbol for purification. After more than a year, Noah and his family stepped forth into a new world. His first act was to construct an altar. In the role of patriarchal priest he offered sacrifices of every clean beast and bird. The sacrificial odor pleased the Lord, who vowed never again to destroy every living creature as he had done. The lifetime of the earth would be an undisturbed continuity. In the march of the centuries, seedtime and harvest, cold and heat, summer and winter, day and night, would not cease.

Noah and his sons now constituted God’s sole representatives for the population of the new world. Accordingly, they were given the identical responsibility conferred originally upon Adam, “Be fruitful, and multiply, and fill the earth.” Since their tenure upon earth demanded that they subdue it, and take dominion over the animal kingdom, it was next declared, "The fear of you and the dread of you shall be upon every beast of the earth, and upon every bird of the air, and upon everything that creeps on the ground and all fish of the sea; into your hand are they delivered." The success of men in exercise of this dominion is attested to in James 3:7.

For 1657 years, man had been a vegetarian in accord with God's arrangement in Genesis 1:29. Now the ban on eating flesh was lifted, and man became carnivorous as well as herbivorous. With the permission to eat flesh, however, there was one restriction which has prevailed in all ages. Blood, as the life of the flesh, was not to be eaten. It was never to be an article of human diet. In view of the fact that this was one of the prohibitions placed upon the Gentiles, in the letter sent from the apostles, elders, and congregation at Jerusalem (Acts 15), I shall digress from my principal theme, and say a few words with reference thereto.

The admission of Gentiles into the fellowship created by belief in the Messiahship of Jesus, created some grave problems in the primitive community of saints, which was composed at first of Jews. When the question of circumcision had to be resolved, and appeal was made to the brethren in Jerusalem, James stated the decision thus: "That we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles have turned unto God; but that we write unto them, that they abstain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood." These four prohibitions constituted what were known as "The Precepts of Noah." Some of the Talmudists (e.g., Aboda Zara 64b, Sanhedrin 56b) regarded these principles as seven in number. It was conceded by others that there were four. The Book of Jubilee is witness to the fact that the rabbis regarded God's covenant with Noah as including all the laws of humanity. It was considered that those outside of the family of Abraham fulfilled God's requirements by observation of these four universal regulations. It is not strange, then, that the Jewish brethren in Jerusalem resolved not to bind upon Gentiles any other than “these necessary things” and to that decision, the Holy Spirit gave consent.

Capital punishment for wilful murder was announced by God to Noah and his sons, as a means of preventing return of the reign of violence which characterized the ante-diluvian era. The basis of the decree was centered in the fact that man was made in the image of God. The sanction of judicial taking of human life for murder, germinated the seed of civil government, inherent in man’s social nature, for the multiplication of men on the earth would complexify the problem of assessing guilt and exacting the penalty. Man is a social being, and no society can exist without government. Civil government is an outgrowth of man’s need, and has been provided by a beneficent God to protect the good and execute his wrath on the wrongdoer (Rom. 13:1); appointed by God (Rom. 13:2); and is God’s servant (Rom. 13:4). The authorities are “ministers of God” (Rom. 13:6).

After these preliminary disclosures, God informed Noah and his sons, that he would establish his covenant with them and their descendants, and with the birds, cattle, and every beast of the earth, that had come out of the ark. The terms of the covenant were plainly announced. “I establish my covenant with you, that never again shall all flesh be cut off by the waters of a flood, and never again shall there be a flood to destroy the earth.” The duration of the covenant was fixed for “all future generations.” For this reason it was designated “an everlasting covenant” (Gen. 9:16).

The Hebrew word translated “everlasting” is olam. It is one of several terms signifying duration. Its Greek equivalent is aionios. The basic meaning is “age—lasting.” To determine the extent of the duration one must study the limitations appearing in the context. In this instance they are clearly given. The covenant is to stand while the earth remains, or while the descendants of Noah for all future generations, remain upon the earth. The termination of the earthly age would mark the end of the covenant.

A visible sign of the covenant was given which would be observable for its duration. God said, "I set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be a sign of the covenant between me and the earth." It is noteworthy that God nowhere says that the bow is to bring to man's remembrance a flood will never again destroy the earth. Instead, God said, "When I bring clouds over the earth and the bow is seen in the clouds, I will remember my covenant." Again he says, "When the bow is in the clouds, I will look upon it and remember the everlasting covenant." Thus the bow is not so much a reminder to us of the agreement, but is a sign of God's covenant faithfulness. As such a symbol we may expect it to recur in any circumstances where that divine fidelity is to be displayed. For this reason the rainbow is used in conjunction with the throne of God (e.g., Revelation 4:3).

Inasmuch as this is the first covenant God made with man, we should study it carefully for any indication of the manner of his dealings on a covenant basis.

We can readily see that God arranged no prior consultation with man as to the content or terms of the covenant. The proposal was not, therefore, an outgrowth of reasoning between the divine and human minds. The covenant was an arrangement conceived by God in His infinite and infallible mind, and revealed or disclosed to man. This is important since we tend to think of a covenant as growing out of mutual arbitration or consultation.

The Hebrew word for covenant is berith. Every time the word "covenant" appears in our Authorized Version of the old covenant scriptures, it is a translation of this word. The Greek diatheke is the equivalent term. When the seventy learned Alexandrian Jews, under the patronage of Ptolemy Philadelphus, began their translation, B.C. 285, of the Hebrew scriptures into the Greek language, they universally employed diatheke as the translation of berith, with two exceptions. In Deut. 9:15, they employed marturion, testimony. However, our English version has “covenant.” In I Kings 11:11, the LXX has entole, commandment, but again our English version has “covenant.”

Robert Baker Girdlestone, M.A., in his “Synonyms of the Old Testament— Their Bearing on Christian Doctrine,” has this to say:

Translators have found much difficulty in giving a uniform rendering to the word berith, even in the O. T. Expressions answering to the words alliance, bond, compact, covenant, disposition, treaty, have been resorted to, but none of them are perfectly satisfactory, and for this reason, that while they represent the nature of the covenant between man and man, none of them are adequate for the purpose of setting forth the nature of God’s gracious dealings with man. The translators of the LXX evidently felt the difficulty, and instead of using suntheke, which would be the natural word for covenant, used diatheke, which means a legal Disposition, and hence a Testament.

Since the purpose of this series of articles is to elicit and expose truth to the consecrated and concerned student, rather than to write for the popular mind or the casual reader, we inject at this point, in which we are dealing with the definition of our central terms, a rather lengthy statement from the pen of Alexander Campbell:

Amongst men we have covenants. In these there are parties. One may sometimes be the covenanter— the other the covenantee. The former propounds— the latter accepts the stipulation. These terms are, however, seldom used. Both parties are most generally covenanters and covenantees. They both stipulate and re-stipulate. Such covenants are agreements or bonds entered into between two or more parties on certain terms. Such the Greeks called a sunthekee— the Latins a foedus— we a covenant, because that word literally means a coming together— an agreement. With us, indeed a constitution, or a form of government, because an agreement on certain principles between the government and the citizens, is, to all intents and purposes, a covenant.

The Hebrew term berith, derived from barar, to purify, indicating a purification, usually by sacrifice, is that used to represent these transactions in the book of Genesis and throughout the Jewish Scriptures. This word is represented in the Septuagint, or Greek version, by the term diathekee, and never by sunthekee. In a sunthekee, or covenant between man and man, the parties are or may be equal. They are always human beings. But in a diathekee one of the parties may be so far above the other in rank and nature, as to propound all the items of the institution or covenant to the other party; to which that party must accede in order to the participation of the blessings or benefits proposed in the institution. Hence, precepts as well as promises are called covenants when they emanate from God, and have any benefits annexed to them. When any service is exacted, or any duty commanded, by an offended party, and made the condition of friendship or agreement with the offending party, it may be called a diathekee in the Jewish acceptation. Divine covenants having always been founded upon sacrifice is indeed the best reason for their having been called berith. It is very obvious that without sacrifice to purify the party taken into covenant with God, no transaction of this sort was ever valid, or regarded as ratified.

If God disposes of His grace to mankind upon a covenant basis, it is to our spiritual interest to understand the nature of his covenant with us. We hold that one of the best sources of information available is in the things which were written aforetime. These are distinctly declared to be written for our learning. The revelation of God has been on an ascendant basis. All education and instruction must be presented according to the ability of the student to assimilate it. The very nature of the learning process demands progress from the lower to the higher, step by step. This is as true in the spiritual as in the social realm. Alexander Campbell wrote:

Everyone then who would accurately understand the Christian institution must approach it through the Mosaic, and he that would be proficient in the Jewish, must make Paul his commentator. While the mere politician, moralist, or religionist contemplates the one without the other, though he may find much to admire in both, he will never understand either. A veil thick as that which concealed the glory of the face of Moses from the Israelites, will hide the glory of the Jewish and Christian institution from his view.

There is another important reason why, in pursuit of our object, we should carefully and meticulously consider God's covenantal relationships of the past. Since Campbell was far more qualified to state that reason, than the present writer we introduce his words once more.

A third object of the Jewish institution, of paramount importance to the world, was the furnishing of a new alphabet and language (the elements of heavenly science) without which it would appear to have been almost, if not altogether, impossible to learn the spiritual things, or to make any proficiency in the knowledge of those relations which Christianity unfolds. The language of the new institution is therefore explained by that of the old. No one can understand the dialect of the kingdom of heaven who has not studied the dialect of the antecedent administrations of heaven over the patriarchs and Jews.

To these statements of truth we give our assent, and upon this basis we shall proceed. But what do we expect to prove by this research? We shall show that the thirty-nine books do not constitute the old testament or covenant. They are not the diatheke of God with Israel. They contain the history of a covenant people, the song book and sacred literature of a covenant people, and the words of warning and instruction to a covenant people. But the covenant is one thing, and these books of history, poetry and prophecy, written at various times and under various circumstances are a wholly different thing.

We shall prove that the twenty-seven books do not constitute the new testament, or covenant, of which God speaks. They contain letters written to individuals and groups among the covenant people, and one contains the history of the struggle of the covenant people to free the Message from the prejudices of their day. Still another contains the divine prophecy of the future of the covenant people given to reassure them amidst the problems of an alien world. But the new covenant was not inscribed upon stone, neither was it written with pen and ink, as were these epistles. It was written upon human hearts with the Spirit of God. We will demonstrate that not one of the books from Matthew to Revelation is actually a part of the new testament or covenant. Thousands had entered into the new covenant with God before a single word of these was ever written. In truth, the only books the new covenant people had at first, were the books of the old covenant.

What is the purpose of such a study? The prime objective is to arrive at truth and establish it in our generation as far as we can see and understand it, for the benefit of mankind. The secondary purpose is, through a recognition of the responsibility accruing from a knowledge of that truth, to save ourselves and them that hear us. The tertiary purpose is to eliminate false concepts and errors of opinion as to the basis of our covenantal relationship with God, so we may regain and defend the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. It can readily be seen that if man postulates fellowship on a basis of covenant relationship, and at the same time regards the covenant with God as embracing the entire gamut of revelation, and if he conceives of a prior correct knowledge of all revelation based upon an infallible interpretation of such revelation in its entirety as essential to fellowship; whereas, covenant relationship with God is an individual surrender based upon the belief of but one fact and that only, the religious realm will be thrown into utter confusion, chaos and division!

Under such circumstances those who claim to be most ardent workers for the Lord will instead be the promoters of dissension and strife. We believe that in this series we will be striking at the very taproot of our abnormal and deplorable condition in these days. That condition is the result of our thinking. We are exactly where our thinking has brought us. If God's purpose in sending His Son was to achieve unity, and our thinking has produced division, there is something wrong with our thinking. The overwhelming result demonstrates that it is not a mere deviation of trifling import, nor a minor defect. The whole philosophy is wrong! It will do no permanent good to tinker around with this little part or that, in the hope that we may stumble upon the secret of success. Polishing the finger nails will not save the body when the "whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint." The Christian world is sick! The divisions which exist prove the carnality of the professed believers. It is time to face up to facts and do something! It is later than you think!

We dare not be deterred by the idea that some are not ready for the teaching. We must face up to the solemn realization that many will never be ready for the truth. They do not want it. They prefer error. They heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears. They want to be stabilized in partisan seclusion. Time is passing! We are getting no younger! There is no need to let the patient die while getting ready for the operation. It is no time to nail shingles on the garage when the house is on fire. Let the truth be known! Truth is unaffected by emotion. It is no less truth because some wring their hands in morbid fear and others shed tears and grit their teeth in frustrated anger. Truth is not contingent upon past teaching, former ideas of what was good or bad, or traditional viewpoints of fallible men. If truth dashes my idols to the earth, let them fall, and let truth have the victory. If the pursuit of truth brings persecution and crucifixion let them come. The price is not so great as the blessing to be sought.

New occasions teach new duties; Time makes ancient good uncouth;

They must upward still, and onward, who would keep abreast of Truth:

Lo, before us gleam her camp-fires! we ourselves must Pilgrims be,

Launch our Mayflower, and steer boldly through the desperate winter sea,

Nor attempt the Future's portal with the Past's blood-rusted key.

In our next issue we will advance to consideration of the covenant made with Abram and confirmed unto his posterity. In the meantime, may the grace of God abide with you all. Pray for us!

A Law of Life

Mission Messenger (April 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

The study of biology has revealed an axiomatic rule of life that “what does not function dies.” Living organisms are created with a purpose and unless they fulfill that purpose death is inevitable. Because all forms of life are products of the same divine Creator, and all are related to an orderly universe, lessons for higher forms of life may be drawn from the lower. On this basis, Agur, the son of Jakeh, in his discussions with Ithiel and Ucal, made reference to four things which he affirmed to be wise in spite of miniature size. The ants teach the value of preparedness for future needs; the conies demonstrate the advantage of defensive positions; the locusts the power of cooperative effort and unity; and the spider the results accruing from habits of industry in the proper places (Proverbs 30:24-28).

The wise monarch, Solomon, who was universally famous as a naturalist in his day, also used the ant as an exemplar for his subjects, in order to arouse them from lethargy, and thus avoid their becoming public charges and poverty-ridden through laziness and neglect. “Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise, which having no guide, overseer or ruler, provideth her meat in the summer and gathereth her food in the harvest.” The implication is that the ant works diligently and does so without the prompting or prodding of an overseer or ruler, and furthermore, her labors are not postponed, put off, or delayed until the time of distress. Having no guide, she instinctively fulfills her role in life. She is not conscious of the rule that “what does not function dies,” but the result would be the same whether she knew the facts or not.

Recently, certain companies have been producing small containers with a glass on one side, each of which contains an ant colony. These are filled with dirt and arranged so the subterranean tunnels are exposed. They are not advertised as mere toys but as educational projects. A tiny door permits the observer to drop small bits of food inside, and then watch the efforts of the ants to gather it, and store it for use in special chambers which they have provided as granaries. The developers of these instructive media are only proving once again that the Bible is not out of date, and those who purchase them out of interest are but heeding the ancient word of wisdom, “Go to the ant, consider her ways and be wise.”

Another excellent example of community activity with preservation of life at stake is the bee colony. Not only is it necessary that nectar be gathered, wax storage bins built, and bread made for the young, but heat is required to keep from freezing in weather extremes. Accordingly, all of the inhabitants of the multiple dwelling, called a hive, must exercise themselves diligently in wing vibration in unison. This serves a dual purpose. The activity protects against creeping cold, and the air generated and circulated by hundreds of wings beating in rhythmic pattern reduces the chance of accumulation of deadly frost. “That which does not function dies.”

Recent laboratory experiments have been made with small kittens. The right eye of each of these was blindfolded or bandaged until no light could filter through. After a number of weeks in this condition, the animals were sacrificed to research science, and the optical nerves were carefully examined. It was determined that in every instance the nerves regulating the right eye were greatly weakened or atrophied. A similar experiment was performed on rats, all of which were reared in complete darkness. Upon being released in the light, they were helpless, nor did they ever regain the ability to see where they were going. The optical nerves had been rendered useless because they were not used. "That which does not function dies."

What is true in the natural realm also obtains in the spiritual. God never bestowed a useless gift. Jesus likens his disciples to the salt of the earth. In his day among men, this was the only known preservative. If meat was not salted, it deteriorated rapidly. If the world is not salted, it will perish. It tends always to decay and disintegrate when righteous lives are not brought to bear upon its tissues. Most great past civilizations were not destroyed from without. They fell apart at the seams. The only hope of survival lies in the disciples of Jesus. What happens when they lose their saltiness, when the strength-giving qualities are lost in world conformity? The world is consumed by its own rottenness. And the salt is good for nothing. It is discarded, thrown out with the garbage. It has failed to achieve that for which it was created.

Make no mistake about it, we face grim eventualities in these days. All we hold dear hangs precariously in the balance. Lurking in the shadows are sinister forces of evil waiting for the right moment to slink in upon us. The dialectical materialism of Marx and Lenin is slowly but surely engulfing within its gaping and insatiable maw, millions of men and women for whom Jesus died, but who know it not. Secularism, like a dark and foreboding cloud, issues its poisonous fumes to choke out the power which has made our nation great under God. What is being done by those who profess to be disciples of the Nazarene?

Their lives are weak, inspirationless and powerless! They have a form of godliness but deny the power thereof. Beguiled by the tempter into making bread of the golden stones dug from the hillside; lured into worshiping him by promises of the kingdoms of this world; busily employed in proving that they are sons of God by high-flying tactics, having cast themselves away from the temple, they are conformists with, and not transformers of the world. Ritual is substituted for worship, programs for power, the spirit of the world for the Holy Spirit of God. No longer does the salt seek to preserve. It must now be preserved. No longer does it try to minister. It must now be ministered unto! God's royal priesthood has abdicated its function. And that which does not function cannot live!

The community of saints is no longer an army of well-equipped soldiers. It is an organized mass of humanity sitting in the grandstand watching trained gladiators do battle in the arena. The church buildings are now theaters with ushers, carpeted aisles, cushioned seats, printed programs, and trick lighting arrangements for varied effects. The pulpit is a stage where a polished professional exhibits his dramatic talents. God's children no longer gather to sit around the family table; they are spectators gathering for entertainment. If the performer is not up to expectations, they drift off, float about, going here and there until they find one who has the flair they want.

Do not be deluded! Do not be misled by supposedly optimistic reports in partisan journals. Christianity is not gaining ground in the world. It is losing, losing, losing! And it is losing out precisely because of the existence of what most of its adherents think is its greatest strength. The salvation of men—and the preservation of the world—lies not with majestic programs, huge physical plants, a well trained and polished professional class. It is a great question whether, in the final analysis, these things will not be in the other pan of the balance, weighing against the plan and purpose of God. The only real hope is that there may still be a sufficient remnant of the humble, poor, hardworking, but committed and dedicated souls, whom God can use in this age of luxury and vice “to shame the wise” and “to bring to nothing the things that are!”

It is not how well men function for us when hired to do so that will determine our right to enter heaven. It is not how beautiful the program designed by the leaders, how luxurious the temple where we attend, or how much is sent by the group to fields foreign and domestic, that means life for us. Men can die amidst the luxuries and in the downy bed of a palace. We are created spiritually, as we are physically, for a function, and we must either function or die! We cannot grow strong on what another eats; we will not be preserved by the mental attainment or accomplishment of someone else. The apostle said that he who would not work, should not eat! If one does not eat he will die. But it was not the apostle who decreed such death; it was the man who chose not to work who sealed his own death warrant. That which does not function must die.

Any system created by men which militates against every man utilizing the gifts God has bestowed upon him, is detrimental and harmful. It is useless to point to the success of such a system as the world estimates success. It will, in its ultimate, destroy those whom it proposes to save, and damn those whom it purports to rescue. We must give account for what God has given us. Whether we possess one talent or five, the Lord must be faced and an account rendered! He who does not function will die!

The New Humanity

Mission Messenger (April 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

“As, therefore, God’s picked representatives of the new humanity, purified and beloved of God himself, be merciful in action, kindly in heart, humble in mind” (Colossians 3:12— Phillips’ Translation).

The new humanity is made up of humans. Neither angels nor demons can enter this fraternity. The new humanity is composed of the same persons who were once part of the old humanity. The transformation was wrought by divinity. In order to effect it, divinity had to be clothed with humanity. “It is plain that for this purpose he did not become an angel; he became a man, in actual fact a descendant of Abraham” (Heb. 2:16). There have been angels who sinned, but for them there was no redemption. The Saviour only “tasted death for every man.” The transformation wrought is so complete that it is called a new creation. It is not a mere continuation of previous life on a higher moral plane. It is a beginning of life. The old humanity has been crucified. It is dead. Old things have passed away. All things have become new.

Those who are a part of the new humanity are in the world, but not of it. “As far as this world is concerned, you are already dead, and your true life is a hidden one with God in Christ.” The picked representatives are sent into the world by Christ as he was sent into the world by the Holy Father. Just as he came into a new state when he was united with humanity, so these have come into a new state by being united with divinity. They are translated from a carnal to a spiritual state. "But you are not carnal but spiritual if the Spirit of God finds a home within you." The indwelling Spirit is the secret of the new humanity. "Once the Spirit of him who raised Jesus from the dead lives within you he will, by that same Spirit, bring to your whole being new strength and vitality."

There is an awe-inspiring sense of responsibility connected with being "God's picked representatives of the new humanity." When divinity became clothed with humanity, the apostle testifies, "It is in him that God gives a full and complete expression of himself (within the physical limits that he set himself in Christ). Moreover, your own completeness is only realized in him." Christ came as God's picked representative of divinity. Being in him, we are now his picked representatives of the new humanity. He said, "I do not live to please myself but to do the will of him that sent me." We, too, must make the choice as to whether we will live to please self, or do the Father's will. This is the very essence of the new creation!

Thousands are practicing self-deception. They are guilty of misdirected faith and trust. They are placing their confidence in intellectual attainment and ability to quote passages from the Bible, in the observance of certain formalities and rituals, in a specific title that poses over the church door or on the sign in front, in the scrupulous adherence to modes of breaking the bread, or distributing the fruit of the vine. On any of these subjects they are profuse and verbose. Often they are self-righteous, dogmatic, intolerant, filled with the bitterness of party spirit.

They are the Israel of God because of what they do not have— Bible classes, instrumental music, orphan homes, individual cups, or a host of other things that are criteria of "faithfulness" and "loyalty." They are the elect, not because they have the Spirit of God, but because of what they do not have in their service. Many know little about the Holy Spirit. Some even deny his personal indwelling. They have debated and fussed and wrangled, searching the scriptures to find passages to sustain their partisan positions, until they have forgotten that Jesus said, "These are they which testify of me." Matthew, Mark, Luke and John have been gone over with a fine tooth comb by adherents of various factions created over how to serve the bread and fruit of the vine. Each purports to find his own practice clearly set forth, and each belabors and clubs the other, as if these accounts were designed by heaven to be the searching ground for lawyers and legalists, although the beloved John said, "These are written that you might believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God, that by believing, you might have life through his name." But, as it was said of the law, so it may be said of the biography of our Lord, "That which promised life proved to be death unto me."

One may be wrong about many things, as all of us are, but if he is right about Jesus, the grace of God can be exercised in his behalf. On the other hand, one may be right about many things, but if he is wrong about Jesus, nothing avails. This does not justify our wilful and deliberate error about anything, but it places our trust for salvation where it can only be effective, not upon our own attainments or goodness, but in Him. Our life, in its final analysis, can never consist of what we have or do not have in this world. Our life is personal and centered in a person. He is our life!

The new humanity is not created to hate brethren but to help them. Hatred of brethren belongs to the old humanity. Our purpose is not to debate with brethren but to develop them; not to ridicule but to relieve them; not to scoff at them, but to share with them; to regard them as mutual heirs of the grace of God. In this spirit, and motivated by the Holy Spirit, we can work out the problems created by our varied backgrounds and enhanced by our shortcomings in knowledge and attainment.

The characteristics of the representatives of the new humanity are given in the translation under review. They are three in number, dealing with mind, heart and action. This is but another way of saying “in thought and in deed,” or “in will and in work.” We are to be humble in mind. This is the fundamental or foundational attitude for all spiritual achievement. We are to be kindly in heart. The grace of God is simply the undeserved kindness of God activated in our behalf and manifested through Jesus. As recipients of that grace, we are to bestow it upon others.

In the third place, we are to be merciful in action. Mercy is not justice. Justice, in the absolute, is opposed to mercy. Mercy implies compassion of such degree as to enable one to forbear punishing even when justice demands it. One who is merciful recognizes mitigating circumstances. He regulates his decisions by consideration of every contributory factor. He does not pass mass judgment but respects the rights and temperament of each individual. Free from prejudice, interested only in the welfare of those about him and not in personal vindication or vengeance, he acts toward others as God has acted toward him.

We need to develop a consciousness of what it means to be “God’s picked representatives of the new humanity” in order to enable us to rise above the narrow bigotry and the stifling influence of the party spirit. The world needs the impact, the force and power generated by the lives of those who are “purified and beloved of God himself.” Here is the greatest challenge to confront us in this age of decadence and demoralization.

The Covenant with Abraham

Mission Messenger (May 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

In preface to this and succeeding articles in this series, let me explain that we are writing for serious students of the word of God. We recognize that these things will not commend themselves to the attention of the average nominal churchmember of our modern world, and that the casual reader who belongs to the fellowship of the unconcerned will cast them aside with hardly a glance, but we are impelled to write soberly with the hope that those who are the true leaven will be inspired to drink deeper of the water of life and affect for good the society in which we are forced to move while on our earthly pilgrimage. If you are reading this material for the first time, we urge you to secure copies of the initial articles.

History is a record of the footprints of God in the life of humanity. The two most outstanding events of divine interposition in the affairs of this world were the flood and the Incarnation. Of such significance was the first that it stands as a constant rebuke to those skeptics who deny the possibility of a termination of the present world order based upon a false assumption of continuity in the natural realm since creation (2 Peter 3:3, 4). The second made such an impact that it changed the calendar, as if time itself stood still, then resumed with an utterly new meaning. The first recorded covenant of God began with the cessation of the deluge; the last was made in conjunction with the advent of the Messiah.

In the flood God demonstrated his wrath; in the coming of Jesus he manifested his love. “Behold, therefore, the goodness and severity of God: on them which fell severity; but toward thee, goodness” (Rom. 11:22). The first event was a visitation of destruction; the second of salvation. The one was to terminate life; the other that it might be granted more abundantly.

Both covenants were given in and through a comforter; the first through Noah, whose name means “comforter” (Gen. 5:29); the second through the Holy Spirit as a Comforter from the Father. Because of the original covenant we need never fear the destruction of all flesh by water; because of the last we need never fear the second death. The covenant with Noah produced the rainbow spanning the clouds of heaven; the covenant of grace has its rainbow round about the throne of Him who cometh in the clouds of heaven (Rev. 4:3). The God of the universe is revealed as a covenant making God. Our relationship with him is on the basis of a covenant. As finite creatures seeking to please him, we must investigate and become aware of the implications growing out of this fact. It is for that reason we continue our research in covenantal revelation after the flood.

The divine injunction to Noah and his sons was to populate the earth. “Be fruitful, and multiply, and fill the earth” (Gen. 9:1). In the oldest ethnological chart in existence (Genesis 10) the origin of nations is attributed to the posterity of the sons of Noah. Here it will be observed that those generally designated Gentiles are Japhetic in ancestry (10:5). The Semitic peoples trace their beginning to Elam, Asshur, Arpachsad, Lud, and Arameans. The sons of Ham were Cush, Egypt, Put and Canaan — the ancestors of the Ethiopians, Egyptians, and Canaanites. There was a population explosion in those primitive times, but it posed no problem of “lebensraum” for the earth was new and everywhere men looked they saw unbroken vistas beckoning them to settlement.

BEGINNING OF BEBEL

Man is a gregarious creature. He tends to congregate, to flock together with others of his kind. This is especially true when there are no language barriers and communication is without difficulty. "Now the whole earth had one language and few words" (Gen. 11:1). Accordingly, "as men migrated in the east, they found a plain in the land of Shinar and settled there." There is some evidence that they were motivated to do this by a great leader, a grandson of Ham, whose name was Nimrod. Of him, it is said, "He was the first on earth to be a mighty man. He was a mighty hunter before the Lord; therefore it is said, 'Like Nimrod a mighty hunter before the Lord'" (10:8, 9).

Since the settling in one locality was in direct contravention of the design of heaven for universal occupancy of the earth, and in view of the fact that this was done at a place which is specifically declared to be the beginning of the kingdom of Nimrod in the land of Shinar, the statement with reference to his character and qualities deserves some attention. What is meant by the expression, "he was the first on earth to be a mighty man"? It was said of the period before the flood, "The Nephilim were on the earth in those days, and also afterward, when the sons of God came in to the daughters of men, and they bore children to them. These were the mighty men that were of old, the men of renown." There is reasonable ground for supposing that the term Nephilim is not so much one denoting physical stature as it is a description of state or character. It literally means "the fallers," that is apostates. It would refer to those who fall away from God and fall upon their fellowmen with ferocity and lust. If this be correct, the antediluvians were giants of wickedness, renowned for the enormity of their profligacy, rather than their size. This would serve to explain the qualifying verse, "The Lord saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." In any event, these were called "mighty men" and if the expression denotes size, degree of iniquity, or both, Nimrod was not “the first on earth to be a mighty man” in the sense in which the Nephilim were called mighty.

Once more, we may derive some assistance from a qualifying phrase. “He was the first on earth to be a mighty man. He was a mighty hunter before the Lord.” This last was so outstanding that it became proverbial among the ancients who said, “Like Nimrod a mighty hunter before the Lord.” Can this refer to special skill in pursuing animals with the type of weapons of bronze and iron long before forged by Tubal-cain? We doubt it. It would seem rather incongruous to inject such an item of information in a catalog of nations. Surely the expression must in some manner be related to the subject at hand.

The word “Nimrod” is from the root marad, to rebel, and is supposed to be equivalent to “son of rebellion.” It may not have been bestowed by his parents but by succeeding generations, as a means of designating his nature. The words “mighty man” are not in this case from the same form as Nephilim, but from the Hebrew gibbor, a giant. Is this a term of size, or character? It is here the term “mighty hunter” will serve to enlighten. The Arabic translation is “a terrible tyrant.” The Syriac is “a warlike giant.” This seems to correspond with the usage of the original elsewhere in the sacred scriptures. It is not generally applied to pursuit of game, but to violence applied to men. In reference to the iniquity of his people, God says, “I will send for many hunters, and they shall hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks” (Jer. 16:16). The same original is used in Lamentations 3:52, “Mine enemies chased me sore.”

It appears that Nimrod was a “hunter of souls” or one who pursued, and slaughtered not animals, but persons. Josephus writes, “He was the grandson of Ham, the son of Noah, a bold man, and of great strength of hand. He persuaded them not to ascribe it to God, as if it was through his means they were happy, but to believe it was their own courage which procured that happiness. He also gradually changed the government into tyranny, seeing no other way of turning men from the fear of God, but to bring them into a constant dependence on his own power.” The Targum of Onkelos says, “He began to be a mighty man in sin, a murderer of innocent men, and a rebel before the Lord.”

If this be the case, Nimrod was the first man to seek to become great by prosecution of war, and his kingdom was founded by force and brutality, by compulsion and threat. Through him Satan introduced on earth the cruel doctrine that “Might makes right.” In view of the fact that the term “might” is later applied to armed aggression, it may be that we are here informed that Nimrod was the first man on earth to seek universal dominion by force, and Babel (Babylon) which was the beginning of his kingdom was from its inception an enslaving power. Of course, this Babylon of Nimrod in Shinar, was the early Babylon, but it was the site of the later Babylon which was constructed by Nebuchadnezzar (see Daniel 1:2).

These facts lend interest to the attempt to thwart God’s intention by building up a huge concentration of mankind in a central location. The announced purpose was two-fold. The design was to gratify pride— “let us make a name for ourselves”— and to prevent dispersion and consequent world settlement. The method was to build a huge tower, or citadel, which could serve as a rallying point, and to construct a city in which housing would be provided for all of the inhabitants of the earth, who could thus better be kept under surveillance and domination. It is strange indeed that God allowed Nebuchadnezzar to succeed in the world dominion which his predecessor, Nimrod, attempted, but only to demonstrate the superior power of heaven. “You, O king, the king of kings, to whom the God of heaven has given the kingdom, the power, and the might, and the glory, and into whose hand he has given, wherever they dwell, the sons of men, the beasts of the field, and the birds of the air, making you rule over them all— you are the head of gold” (Daniel 2:37, 38).

The primitive migrants proposed to make bricks of fired clay, and to cement them with bitumen, or asphalt. The Lord recognized that because of their unity in relationship and language they would accomplish their design if left to themselves. He said, “Behold, they are one people, and they have all one language; and this is only the beginning of what they will do; and nothing that they propose to do will now be impossible for them.” Is there not here the secret to success? If the God of heaven had to confuse the language and thus scatter the people to keep them from acting in opposition to His will, does it not stand to reason that if those who love Him are one people, and speak the same thing, they will be able to accomplish His present will? Will anything be impossible for those who are united and speak the same thing?

Certainly God employed the most effective way of scattering mankind. Nothing else is quite so potent a factor to accomplish this as a confusion of language. God said, “Come, let us go down, and there confuse their language, that they may not understand one another’s speech.” Inability to communicate, failure to understand one another, brought about a universal dispersal of the people. It is not too much to say that all real unity depends upon our ability to communicate and to understand one another. Because of the confusion of tongues, the incomplete city was called Babel, confusion. And because this occurred in the days when a son was born to Eber, a descendant of Shem, he called the name of that son Peleg, division. Babel and Peleg— these names may well be descriptive of our religious world today.

THE CALL OF ABRAHAM

The descendants of Arpachsad and Eber, journeying from Shinar, settled in that area along the Euphrates which came to be designated “the land of the Chaldeans.” Soon the tribes of mankind degenerated into idolatry, worshiping natural and artificial gods. The idea of one God, as creator of heaven and earth, was fast disappearing beneath the weight of superstition and tradition. It became apparent that, if the concept of monotheism was to survive, it would have to be made the sacred trust of a particular nation, around which such safeguards could be constructed as to segregate it from the rest of humanity, with its contaminating influence. So when every nation had chosen gods for itself, the God of heaven chose for himself a nation. To sire this select people, he selected an Arpachsadean from the city of Ur, whose name was Abram. The word ab is the Hebrew for “father” and ram is the word for “high, or chief.” The very name signifies that its bearer was a man of destiny, one who was to be an outstanding progenitor.

Abram was the son of Terah, an idol worshipper, whose father Nahor, before him had also served other gods (Josh. 24:2). Abram was instructed to go from his country, his kindred, and his father’s house. While he obeyed with alacrity the command to go, he did not, at first, fully comply with the conditions. He and Sarai his wife, accompanied his father and nephew, “and they went forth together from Ur of the Chaldeans to go into the land of Canaan; but when they came to Haran, they settled there.” This delayed Abram until after the decease of his father. Then, “Abram took Sarai his wife, and Lot his brother’s son, and all their possessions which they had gathered, and the persons that they had gotten in Haran; and they set forth to go into the land of Canaan.” Entering Palestine from the north, the band of nomads wandered southward, with Abram building an altar unto the Lord at every principal stop. Driven into Egypt by famine, they sojourned until sustenance was again found in Canaan. “So Abram went up from Egypt, he and his wife, and all that he had, and Lot with him, into the Negeb.”

A quarrel between the herdsmen of Abram and Lot, was settled by an agreement to go their several ways. Lot chose the verdant plains of Jordan, and removed to Sodom. This divested Abram of the last of his relatives, and he was now separated from his kindred. It is significant to note the words of the Lord immediately forthcoming. "The Lord said to Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, 'Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward, for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever.'" It is now time for us to think about the covenants made with Abram.

Why did the Lord select this one from the multitude of men upon the earth, to be the progenitor of his mighty nation? Every nation began with one man, whose offspring became a clan, then a tribe, and eventually a nation. What was the outstanding characteristic of Abram which made him the subject of God's choice? Concerning this choice it is affirmed that God "callesh those things which be not as though they were" (Rom. 4:17). James declares, "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world" (Acts 15:18). It appears that God knew that Abram, of all men on earth in his day, possessed that one quality which commended him to the Lord, as the progenitor of a covenant people, whose relationship would be established upon the principle of faith.

But in order to bring mankind unto the state of maturity where a covenant based upon faith could be effective, it became necessary to make another covenant with Abram, which would provide the background and setting for the last and greatest agreement to be made with man. Thus, there were two covenants made with Abram. One was fleshly and temporal. Its token was a sign in the flesh, its promises were carnal. The other was spiritual and lasting. Its promises were of a better and more enduring nature. One of these was not a continuation of the other, although the first provided a frame of reference for the second. But they were addressed to different persons, for different purposes. A confusion of these is the basis for a false philosophy which underlies most of the major sects in Protestant Christendom, and has introduced practices and ordinances unknown to the sacred scriptures, but valiantly defended by those who wrest the scriptures to sustain their theories.

COVENANT AFTER THE FLESH

In his beautiful allegory to the vacillating Galatians, the apostle says, “For there are two covenants” (4:24). He distinguishes the subjects of the two by the expressions “born after the flesh,” and “by promise.” It is true that he was dealing with the covenants made at Mount Sinai and Mount Sion, but the covenant at Sinai was a national one conferred upon the physical seed of Abram, and was merely a ratification on a national basis of the original one given at a time when Abram had not one child. Before the Lord could make “a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation” (Exo. 19:6) he had first to provide seed for the primal covenantee. This was a remarkable arrangement in itself considering that Abram was “about an hundred years old,” and reproductively his body was “now dead,” and also “Sarah’s womb was dead” (Rom. 4:19).

When God called Abram, he assured him, “I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing. And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee, and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed.” Here, at the very outset, we have the germ of both covenants, and it will be noted that both are to be realized through the seed of Abraham. National greatness and universal blessing— these are the achievements to be attained. The apostle declares “Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many, but as of one, And to thy seed which is Christ” For this reason he calls this “the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ.”

To those who are of the opinion that these words were spoken in Haran, we merely remark that Stephen says, "The God of glory appeared unto our father Abraham when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran." The same speaker also says relative to Canaan, "He promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child" (Acts 7:5). This last fact presented a concern to both Sarah and Abram, although their reactions were different.

Sarah devised an expedient, suggesting that Abram have sexual congress with Hagar, an Egyptian maidservant, saying, "It may be that I may obtain children by her." Hagar bore a son to Abraham, who was named Ishmael, and who became the illustrious head of twelve tribes, now represented by the Arabs. Almost from the time of the birth of Sarah's own son, enmity existed between these two, and still makes the headlines of our metropolitan newspapers almost weekly.

Abram had concluded that his trusted homeborn servant, Eliezer of Damascus, would be adopted and become his heir, in lieu of natural seed, and he so informed the Lord (Gen. 15:2, 3). But the Lord assured him that was not the case, but his heir would be an offspring of his own body. Then Abram was taken outside his tent before dawn, and directed to look toward heaven. He was told that his progeny would be as innumerable as the stars. It was at this juncture the record declares, "And he believed in the Lord; and he counted it to him for righteousness." To this important fact we shall again make allusion.

The Lord said to Abram, "I am the Lord that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees, to give thee this land to inherit it." When Abram asked by what means he could be certain of the inheritance, the Lord told him to provide a heifer, a she-goat and a ram, each three years old, and also a turtle-dove and young pigeon. It will be recognized that these constitute the representative categories of sacrificial animals and birds. Abram killed all of these and split the animals in two, laying each half over against the other with a passage way between. In Jeremiah 24:18 we are informed that this was a solemn way of ratifying a covenant. The parties to the covenant killed an animal, dividing the carcase lengthwise, then placed the pieces opposite each other, and walked between them to meet in the middle where they took the ritual oath. In effect the oath was a plea for the one who broke the covenant to meet the same fate as the slain animal.

Abram kept the birds of prey off the slain beasts all day. At sunset he fell into a supernatural trance. He heard the voice of God speaking, and saw a smoking furnace and burning lamp pass between the pieces of animals, symbolizing that God was entering into a covenant. The record says, "In that same day the Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land." A description of the boundaries, and the names of the nations inhabiting the territory, is then given. This closed a memorable day which began before dawn and lasted until after dark. Abram had learned that his heir would be personally begotten, and that his seed would be granted the whole land of Canaan. All history after this was affected by this arrangement.

THE DIVINE PURPOSE

It would be well for us to study God's purpose in the covenant related to fleshly seed and land inheritance. The divine intent was to constitute a nation for the preservation of the great truth of the existence of one God. To accomplish this it was essential to establish that nation in a territory of their own, and to segregate them by law, custom, practice and geography from other nations, steeped in polytheism. However, it is difficult, if not impossible, to build a strong central power out of nomadic wanderers and herdsmen, whose tendency is to be ever on the move. Accordingly, God ordained for these people to become slaves in the most enlightened nation of that day. Here the wanderlust was burned out of them. They were taught by compulsion to make bricks. They learned to construct great cities such as Pithom and Raamses. So effective was the attempt to make them a settled people, that, when they were finally led forth into the wilderness, they longingly sought to return to the land of serfdom.

Since every nation was idolatrous, during the period of slavery the seed of Abraham were exposed to idolatrous practices, but these were made abhorrent by virtue of an edict of the Pharaoh that all of their male children should be sacrificed to the maw of the chief god, the Nile River. Moreover, when the time of deliverance came, great catastrophes fell upon both the inhabitants and their gods of lower animal life. The superiority of the God of Israel was clearly demonstrated. God promised, “For I will pass through the land of Egypt that night, and I will smite all the firstborn in the land of Egypt, both man and beast; and on all the gods of Egypt I will execute judgments: I am the Lord” (Exodus 12:12). Deliverance began with fearful judgment from the Lord wreaked upon the helpless gods of mighty Egypt. This night which was memorialized for all future generations by a feast, served as a constant rebuke against idolatry.

The land of Canaan was peculiarly adapted to fulfillment of the divine purpose. It was selected from the lands of the earth, as Israel was selected from the nations. As the seed of Abraham became the people of God, so Palestine became the land of the Lord (Psa. 85:1; Isa. 8:8). The land could not even be sold on a permanent basis, for it did not belong to man to convey. As Israel became a holy people, so this became “the holy land” (Zech. 2:12). This territory was situated in a strategic position to accomplish the will of God. Bounded on the north by the towering Lebanon Mountains; on the east by the Jordan River, and more remotely sealed in by the Arabian Desert; on the west by the Mediterranean Sea; and on the south by the wilderness of Zin; it provided for compact dwelling of a people around the center of their worship. Yet it was also on the main trade routes, which constituted the arteries along which flowed the commerce of the ancient world.

Jerusalem, whose mother was a Hittite, and whose father was an Amorite, was virtually at the geographic center of the known world. “His holy mountain, beautiful in elevation, is the joy of all the earth, Mount Zion, in the far north, the city of the great King” (Psalm 48:2). “Jerusalem, built as a city which is bound firmly together, to which the tribes go up, the tribes of the Lord, as was decreed for Israel, to give thanks to the name of the Lord” (Psalm 122:3, 4).

The purpose of God with regard to the seed of Abraham was to keep intact the notion of one God. The Shema became the very foundation of all Jewish worship, “Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one, and beside him there is no other.” The ultimate design was to bring all nations to acknowledgment of this truth by the coming of the Son of God, and through him to extend salvation unto all the earth. By the time Jesus was born among the chosen people, Palestine had been made in turn a pawn of Assyria, Babylon, Persia, Greece and Rome. This very fact made it possible for truth to be circulated to the ends of the earth, and although these successive cultures had left their mark on the Jewish homeland, there was no idolatry among the Jews when Jesus was born.

Of all the sins for which he condemned the people this was not one of them. In the Babylonian furnace of affliction idolatry had been burned out of their consciousness until they fanatically piled their bodies up in death, rather than allow the Roman eagle carried by a standard bearer of the legion, to be planted in the sacred temple precincts. And this same temple whose courtyard had been the scene of idolatrous orgies, was defended by a mob which threatened to tear a Cilician Jew limb from limb, because they thought he had corrupted the temple by spiriting a Gentile into it. For all their prior deviations and defections, it must be admitted that when he came who was “the end of the law for justification,” the descendants of Abraham had preserved inviolate the sacred oracles and the elemental truth which was the foundation of Judaism.

The relationship of the covenant of promise made with Abraham, as it especially relates to ourselves will be noted in our next issue. Until that time, we commend our readers unto God and the word of His grace, with the hope that our continued meditation upon that word may strengthen us for our own responsibility to the God of Abraham, for “if you are Christ’s, then you are Abraham’s offspring, heirs according to the promise” (Gal. 3:29). Let us not forget these two great truths concerning God, as derived from his revelation to man:

1. God, in his association with mankind, has revealed himself to be a covenant making God, and our relationship to him is created by adherence to such covenant as obtains in the generation in which we live.

2. God has revealed that the blessings which he confers are bestowed in conjunction with ordinances enjoined, therefore, a share in such blessings must be obtained through conformity with such ordinances as the grace of God has provided in any given age.

God's Two Books

Mission Messenger (May 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

Man is a dual being. But he is not so much a body with a soul, as he is a spirit with a body. He is physical because he exists in a physical universe, but this phase of existence is only temporary. Those who are motivated by faith acknowledge that they are strangers and exiles on the earth. "Those who thus speak make it clear that they are seeking a homeland." Man is both worldly and otherworldly. The flesh is nourished by bread, but man shall not live by bread alone. He must, if he would truly be man and not mere animal, feed upon every word that proceeds from the mouth of God.

For the guidance of man, God has written two great volumes. One is the book of nature; the other that of revelation. One is to nurture creation, the other to instruct the new creation. The book of nature reveals what God has done. It demonstrates his wisdom, power, and majesty. The book of revelation contains an account of what God has said and done. It transmits the thoughts of the divine mind in human language. It conveys the thoughts of the infinite One to finite minds.

The book of nature has its own dialect. The poet expresses it thus

To him who, in the love of Nature, holds

Communion with her visible forms, she speaks

A various language . . .

Go forth under the open sky, and list

To Nature's teachings, while from all around —

Earth and her waters, and the depths of air —

Comes a still voice.

The inspired psalmist, recognizing the voice and hearing the words whispered by the created universe, wrote

The heavens are telling the glory of God; and the firmament proclaims his handiwork.

Day to day pours forth speech, and night to night declares knowledge . . .

Their voice goes out through all the earth and their words to the end of the world.

The harmony of the planets, the singing of the spheres, the murmur of the pines and the hemlocks, the whisper of gentle zephyrs, the roar of thunder, the hum of bees, the songs of the birds— all of these are parts of the “various language.” God speaks to us by the babbling brook as well as in the sacred book! The scientists, explorers, and researchists, are all interpreters, constantly providing for us revised versions of the lore collected from a study of nature. They are not creators. They are discoverers. They publish their findings, but one cannot find something that was not already there. There is no indication that a single atom is now in existence which was not present when God finished His creation and rested on the seventh day. Matter is indestructible by man. He can rearrange it, change its form and alter its appearance, but he can neither create nor destroy in its ultimate sense.

Nature is adapted to man's needs. He requires water and the earth contains water in almost the same proportion as man's body. He requires food, and seed-time and harvest combine to produce it. But it is not just the belly that must be filled. Man is a rational animal. He must have food for thought as well as for the body. A wise creator has ordained that Nature relinquish her secrets gradually, and then only to those who diligently pry, probe and dig. There is no reason to question that the brain of Adam was equal in size to that of Einstein, but the latter had the accumulated knowledge of the ages to assist him, whereas the first had to learn by direct revelation and personal experience.

The mind of Abram was as capacious as that of Medaris or von Braun, our missile experts, but when God told him to look into the heavens and count the stars, he knew nothing of the galaxies beyond the Milky Way. Each person learns from birth on an ascending scale. The experience of yesterday becomes the foundation of today. What is true of the individual is also true of the race. Each generation uses the collected wisdom of the past as its own stepping-stone to climb to further heights. If God had arranged for nature to yield all her bounties to one generation, there would have been no further development. Progress would have stopped, the incentive to live would have vanished, humanity would have retrogressed and sunken into oblivion. The body cannot live long on the food it has already assimilated. There must be a constant replenishment with new food or death is inevitable. What is true of the tissues is also true of the thoughts.

In the natural realm there seems always to be a conflict between reactionary and progressive elements. The former are sometimes moved by fear, the latter often motivated by mere love of change. The first want to have nothing to do with the future; the second to be wholly divorced from the past. Both are wrong in attitude. The true scientific mind will retain all truth that has been uncovered in the past, and be ready to accept all additional truth as it is discovered. Such a mind will resent and resist categorization as either reactionary or progressive, in so far as these terms designate parties or groups. One needs to love truth for truth's sake, and be willing to acknowledge it regardless of cost or personal consequences. He needs to react against every attempt to offset truth; he needs to progress in acceptance of every newly discovered truth.

When Nicholas Copernicus discovered that the sun is the center of our system, he was reluctant to announce it for fear he would meet the hostility of the Roman Church. Previous astronomers all held the Ptolemaic idea that the earth was the center of the universe. It was believed that the Bible taught this, since man was the highest order of creation and the earth was his dwelling place. Copernicus dedicated his published works to the pope, but he only incurred wrath for daring to question the teachings of the past.

Galileo, a great student of medicine and philosophy at Pisa, discovered the law that all falling bodies, regardless of weight, travel through the air at the same rate of speed. He demonstrated it by dropping balls of different weight from the Leaning Tower. But his success brought him into disrepute with the followers of Aristotle. They would have had to reject their past contentions and acknowledge their errors. Rather than do this, they contented themselves with circulating the story that Galileo had lost his reason, and was a dangerous man.

When Galileo published a treatise on the sun's spots in which he announced his concurrence with the theory of Copernicus, that the earth revolves around the sun, he was hailed before the Inquisition. After a long and weary trial in which he was hounded and harassed, being accused of denying God's Word, he was ordered to renounce his theory, and sentenced to an indefinite term in prison. This is the inevitable fate of all independent and original thinkers who dare to challenge the perfection of the past, and to question the traditions of the fathers— any fathers!

The book of Revelation is like the book of Nature. It is so written that it relinquishes its great truths on an ascending scale. Revelation was thus given and it will be thus unravelled. The studies and probes of the past constitute only a foundation for present studies. If this were not true we would no longer need reasoning power at all. The faculty of retentiveness, or memory, would serve our every need. We could but parrot the lore of yesteryear. But as God has hidden in the book of nature those elements which will challenge the thought of mankind as long as the earth remains; so he has concealed in the book of Revelation the infinite wisdom which will still be an object of research “when time shall be no more,” or until faith is lost in sight.

Men make the serious mistake of thinking that because God perfected the revelation, man's knowledge of it has been perfected. This has been the refuge of shallow reasoners in every generation. They think that by deriding a thing as “new truth” they can scoff it out of existence, or that truth can be thwarted by ridicule. No truth is new to God, but it may be newly discovered by man. In the natural creation, God made every atom that now exists. But man is still discovering truths about the atomic theory, and they are new to him. In the new creation, God revealed His divine mind in the book of Revelation, but there are still unexplored depths of it. Those who face backward would slam the door in the faces of those who search for greater things. The spirit that persecuted Copernicus and Galileo is still rampant in the twentieth century, although its cruelty is more refined, and its claws are now sheathed in velvet. It still operates on the basis that faithfulness to God is conditioned only upon loyalty to past traditions!

The followers of Luther, assuming he had gathered all the gems of God's wisdom, embodied them in a creedal world of their own and sought to palm it off as the spiritual universe, so that from then on all research to be done with their sanction must be done only through their telescope. Thus did also the adherents of King Henry the Eighth, Calvin and Wesley. And thus also would act many of the present day heirs of Campbell, Scott, Stone, Lipscomb and Sommer, and other more recent worthies. Loyalty to God, faithfulness to His word, these are conditioned upon viewing everything through orthodox spectacles. God made the universe, but man invented spectacles, and spectacles are only for those who have defective vision. He is twice blessed who can read either the book of nature or of revelation without them.

In the domain of nature, our scientists are indebted to discoverers of truth in all generations. No less is this true of those who would do research in the realm of the spirit. We owe much to men like Jerome, Augustine, Wycliffe, Huss, Luther, Calvin, Wesley, Campbell, and many others. But if we pitch our tents about their shrines we are unworthy recipients of their heritage. It is absurd for us to search the heavens through the perspective of Luther or Lipscomb, Stone or Sommer. Space probes do not scan the sky through the telescope of Galileo. Let us retain every truth these men discovered, and thank God for their enrichment of our existence. But let no skeleton hand reach from the sepulcher to hold us to a partisan concept of truth. It is better to stand upon the shoulders of those who preceded us than we may widen our horizon, than to allow them to stand upon our necks.

No one nation owns the natural universe. The Russian scientist as well as the American, can search for answers to age-old riddles, and each must learn from the other or both may perish. No sect, denomination, faction, party, or segment, has any copyright on spiritual truth. All may learn from each; each must learn from all. And, as in the international arena, peace will come, if come it does, from those in every nation who love peace and their fellowmen, so it will be in our divided, distressed, and distracted religious world. Let men of good will share their discoveries while rising above all partisan alliance and prejudice. We need not engage in the heated rivalry of a mad arms race in either the natural or spiritual realm. In each of these we have something tremendous which we hold in common. In the first, we are all products of Gods creation, for He made of one blood all nations. In the second we all share in divine grace, for He has made us possible citizens of one nation through blood!

None of us know it all. All of us have much to learn. We are frail, feeble, and ignorant of much of divine truth. There are depths in its ocean that have never been explored. There are mountain peaks of revelation still unchallenged by human thought. We cannot create mountains, but we can climb them. Let us not be either Liberals, Conservatives, Reactionaries or Progressives. Let us belong to no party whose exclusive tenets we must defend. Let us be merely humble seekers after truth, holding on to any truth already found, grasping for every new truth to be uncovered. A party man is a partial man, even as a sect is only a section, and a fragment is but a portion. It is enough to belong to God and thus be added by Him to the one body of our blessed Lord.

False Tests

Mission Messenger (May 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

“Examine yourselves, to see whether you are holding to your faith. Test yourselves. Do you not realize that Jesus Christ is in you? — unless indeed you fail to meet the test!” (2 Corinthians 13:5).

The church of God was filled with the party spirit. It suffered from schisms and cleavages. The members could not be addressed as spiritual men, but as men of the flesh, as babes in Christ. They were puffed up for one against another. The carnal spirit was prevalent. It is characteristic of all who are in such a state that they judge others continuously. The test employed is party allegiance. No one is considered to be in Christ Jesus who is not allied with the particular faction, or who is not approved by headquarters.

Here was a congregation which actually carried their party prejudices to the extent that they judged the apostle who begot them through the gospel as being unworthy. Motivated by their narrow, legalistic, egotistic, self-righteous attitude, they actually concluded the apostle Paul was not “faithful” or “loyal.” He wrote, “Look at what is before your eyes. If any one is confident that he is Christ’s, let him remind himself that as he is Christ’s, so are we.” Paul would not align himself with any party at Corinth. To him, they were “called saints,” they were all “brethren,” they had all been called by God “into the fellowship of his Son.” In spite of their carnal nature, the jealousy and strife among them, he never once doubted that they composed “the church of God which is at Corinth.”

However, such magnanimity of spirit, such wideness of mercy, such breadth of love, can never be tolerated by the conceit and exclusiveness of the party. So Paul was accused of instability and compromise. He wrote, “Was I vacillating when I wanted to do this? Do I make my plans like a worldly man, ready to say Yes and No at once?” The party spirit is proud of a man’s position. It is not always concerned too much about his heart. If he lines up with the faction it is not required that he live up to the standard of Jesus. That is not the measuring reed. So Paul writes again, “What we are is known to God, and I hope it is known also to your conscience. We are not commending ourselves to you again, but giving you cause to be proud of us, so that you may be able to answer those who pride themselves on a man’s position and not on his heart” (2 Cor. 5:11, 12).

We have many “Corinthian congregations” today. The Corinthian epistle was written to a church of Christ, a church of God. It stands as a constant warning of the tragic aftermath of the party spirit. It proves that a congregation planted by the gospel can become filled with such bitterness and animosity, such a spirit of judging and testing of others, that it will not recognize anyone as being in Christ Jesus who does not condone its narrowness. Even the apostle Paul was concluded to be out of Christ, because he refused to countenance any party. His heart-rending plea is the cry of the reformers of all ages, “Open your hearts to us; we have wronged no one, we have corrupted no one, we have taken advantage of no one.” But such a plea stirs only a hollow echo in the closed hearts of those who dare not receive men upon the basis of purity of life and motive, but who must measure loyalty to Jesus, by faithfulness to the party!

The party spirit has not altered. It will never change. It conceals itself under new masks. It devises new yardsticks. It invents more modern tests. But if Paul were alive today, “The Church of Christ” would again disown him if he regarded the members of every splinter party his brethren as he did at Corinth. Once more he would be forced to write, “For I fear that perhaps I may come and find you not what I wish, and that you may find me not what you wish; that perhaps there may be quarreling, jealousy, selfishness, slander, gossip, conceit, and disorder.” I challenge my brethren to name a single one of these not prominent in “The Church of Christ” in this age.

Let every true laborer for unity of all believers take courage. Paul’s life is a testimonial to the fact that men can read you out of their parties, but they cannot separate you from Christ. Only you can do that, and a very effective means of doing it is to start disowning and hating your brethren— any of them! Remember, the party spirit, being evil always purges out that which is pure!

Flesh and Faith

Mission Messenger (June 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

Abram was summoned from Ur, in the land of the Chaldees, to be the progenitor of God's elect nation. It was essential to keep alive the concept of one God, until the Logos, who was in the beginning with God, could be made flesh and dwell among men. The nations had embraced many gods, when the one true God decided to embrace a nation. One man was selected from the multitudes then dwelling upon the earth, and with him God made a covenant. This covenant was dual in nature. It was both national and universal in import. It proposed to bless the seed of Abram by making them a nation, and then bless all of the nations by the seed of Abram. The covenant was both fleshly and spiritual. The first conveyed a blessing to his seed; and the second through his seed.

This complex covenant eventually produced and merged into two great social institutions, partaking of the nature of the embryonic arrangement with Abram. One of these was introduced at Mount Sinai, where the leader and deliverer from physical bondage, Moses, acted as mediator. The other was announced at Mount Sion, and its mediator was the pioneer and perfecter of the faith, Christ Jesus, who delivered the people of God from spiritual captivity. Thus, Abraham became the father of two families, one born of the flesh, the other of faith.

These two families were separate and distinct from each other. They entered the relationship of Abram and God by different processes. Their promised patrimony or inheritance was not the same. They were made participants of divergent covenants, and the token of covenant relationship was not the same. The covenant in the flesh had its fleshly mark; that of faith had its spiritual token. One was imprinted on the body, the other written in the heart.

In Genesis 17, is recorded the establishment of the physical covenant. Abram was now ninety-nine years old: More than two decades had elapsed since he forsook the land of the Chaldeans. Previously the Lord had appeared under the title of Jehovah. He now introduces himself as El Shaddai, God Almighty. This was assurance that whatever He promised He had the power to perform. In view of this majestic name, he began by instructing Abram, "Walk before me, and be thou blameless." The Lord said, "As for me, my covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be the father of a multitude of nations."

Frequently in history God memorialized an event of great significance by bestowing a new name, or by altering a previously existing one. In this instance the name of Abram was changed to Abraham. We have previously mentioned that Abram is formed by combining Ab, father; and ram, chief. To this was now added the word hamon, multitude; so that the abbreviated form of Abramhamon, or Abraham, means "chief father of a multitude," in line with the promise, "for the father of a multitude of nations have I made thee." The change of the form of address was accompanied by the words, "I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee throughout their generations for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee and to thy seed after thee." It was for this reason Simon Peter referred to him as "the God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers" (Acts 3:13).

In conjunction with the foregoing, the land where Abraham had sojourned as an exile from his homeland was promised to his seed after him, for an age-lasting possession. It was then enjoined upon Abraham and his posterity to keep the covenant inviolable. "This is my covenant which ye shall keep, between me and you, and thy seed after thee; every male among you shall be circumcised." The seed by which the ova is fertilized, thus causing conception, is manufactured within the body of the male. It is deposited in the body of the female through the external organ of procreation. Thus, this was regarded as the very instrument of life, the channel of physical seed. It was provided that the foreskin of this organ would be clipped or cut off, leaving a permanent indication of covenant relationship directly connected with the begetting of offspring, who were, in turn, to be brought into covenant relationship. The operation was to be performed when the male child was eight days old.

A SACRED COVENANT

The Lord declared, "My covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting covenant." So sacred did the mark of circumcision become that when one took a solemn oath affecting future seed, he was required to place his hand on the procreative organ, exactly as one taking oath of office today may place his hand on a copy of the holy Bible. Thus when Abraham was preparing to dispatch his faithful servant to secure a wife for Isaac, he said, "Put, I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh: and I will make thee swear by Jehovah, the God of heaven and the God of the earth, that thou wilt not take a wife for my son of the daughters of the Canaanites, but thou shalt go unto my country, and to my kindred, and take a wife for my son Isaac."

It was furthermore declared, "And the uncircumcised male who is not circumcised in the flesh of his foreskin, that soul shall be cut off from his people; he hath broken my covenant." It is evident that the blessings of the covenant applied to the individual only when he had obeyed the ordinance of circumcision. The ordinance was not the covenant, but it was essential to bring one into the privileges and prerogatives of the covenant. It was not enough simply to be born into the physical family of Abram. If one so born, either through neglect or irreverence, was not circumcised, he was cut off, because he had broken the covenant. God made choice that those who would share the benefits and blessings of a covenant people would do so in conjunction with an ordinance. It was not the ordinance, nor physical obedience to it, which conferred the blessings, but compliance with the ordinance brought the subject into such a state or condition that the blessings of the covenant became available unto him.

When the seed of Abraham had multiplied in the land of Egypt until the reigning tyrant feared they would revolt and escape in time of war, the Lord decided the time had come to liberate them and give them national status in the land of promise. Accordingly these serfs were given an emancipation proclamation sealed with the blood of the firstborn in every home in Egypt. The motley group of former slaves was led to the foot of Sinai, which God used as a rostrum from which to announce a covenant, which was intended to make of them “a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation” (Exodus 19:5, 6) As a sign of the covenant, abstinence from work on the seventh day was commanded, and it was decreed as a holy day unto them: “Verily ye shall keep my sabbath: for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations, for a perpetual covenant. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever” (Exo. 31:13-17). This sign, which was a constant test of faith, and proof of a life free from greed, love of material things, and indifference, was adapted to a social institution such as the state of Israel.

But since the covenant which created this state merely augmented on a national level the one given to Abraham, it did not militate against circumcision which was the external attestation of that filial relationship. Thus the rite was enjoined in the code of laws and statutes given to the covenant people (Cp. Lev. 12:3). But when the original covenant sign came into conflict with the sign of the social economy, the former took precedence. This is evident by the words of Jesus when condemned for healing a man on the sabbath. “Moses therefore gave unto you circumcision; (not because it is of Moses, but of the fathers;) and ye on the sabbath day circumcise a man. If a man on the sabbath day receive circumcision, that the law of Moses should not be broken, are ye angry at me, because I have made a man every whit whole on the Sabbath day?” (John 7:22, 23). The full import of this statement will be seen when one realizes that the Jews regarded circumcision as a means of curing a man from the taint of uncleanness which they associated with the uncircumcised non-Jews. It was as if Jesus had said, “If on the sabbath day you cut off a little bit of flesh to make a man conform to the law, why are ye angry at me when I completely restore a man’s fleshly vigor who has been a cripple for thirty-eight years?”

Since we propose later on to deal at length with the nature of the covenant at Sinai, we merely summarize at this juncture and pass on to more important matters.

1. God made a covenant with Abraham, relating to his posterity, which was dual in nature, and intended to expand into two separate covenants, one with his fleshly seed, the other with his seed generated by faith.

2. To the fleshly seed were given fleshly promises involving physical health, increase of cattle, fruits, and worldly possessions, as well as victory over attacking enemies.

3. To these also were granted a physical territory, a geographical location, surveyed and marked out by natural boundaries.

4. They were given a visible and external mark or sign in the flesh, attesting to their right to share or participate in the blessings accruing to the fleshly descendants of their illustrious ancestor.

5. When they had sufficiently multiplied and matured to be granted national status among the idolatrous peoples of the earth, they were given a covenant intended to set them apart, sanctify and segregate them for the implementation of God's purpose with reference to them.

THE SPIRITUAL COVENANT

The covenant of the flesh of which we have spoken above was not intended to be a covenant of freedom. It was exemplified by a law given to restrict and restrain the people of God during a time of spiritual adolescence. The apostle regards it as in the same category with guardians and stewards appointed by a father to supervise his offspring until the age of maturity is reached. He says, "We were kept in ward under the law, shut up unto the faith that should afterward be revealed" (Gal. 3:23). The exercise of liberty requires certain capabilities and entails responsibility. Those not qualified for it must be kept in ward and shut up.

All true freedom is spiritual in its essence. It is a liberty of heart and conscience. Without this, those who are physically unconfined are still in servile bondage. "When the fulness of the time came, God sent forth his Son . . . that he might redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons." It was through Jesus, as the seed of Abraham, that all nations were to be blessed. "Now to Abraham were the promises spoken, and to his seed. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ"

(Gal. 3:16). "And if ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, heirs according to the promise" (Gal. 3:29).

If the promise in its fulness could have been reaped through the fleshly covenant, the record would have declared, "If ye are Abraham's seed, then ye are Christ's," but it is the reverse. Christ was the seed through whom the blessing would be bestowed. One must come into covenant relationship with Christ to be made the seed of Abraham by promise, and not come into the physical covenant to be made one with Christ. It is at this juncture that many of the Jews in the primitive congregation of disciples went astray. For this reason they demanded that those who came into spiritual affinity with God through Christ, be circumcised. In refutation of this error which grew out of confusion concerning the promises of God, the apostle pointed out that Abraham was justified, and his faith reckoned for righteousness, prior to his circumcision.

Is this blessing then pronounced upon the circumcision, or upon the uncircumcision also? for we say, To Abraham his faith was reckoned for righteousness. How was it then reckoned? when he was in circumcision, or in uncircumcision? Not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision: and he sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had while he was in uncircumcision; that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be in uncircumcision; that righteousness might be reckoned unto them; and the father of circumcision to them who not only are of the circumcision, but who also walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham which he had in uncircumcision (Rom. 4:9-12).

Flesh and faith! These are the distinguishing characteristics of the two covenants. One was ordained by angels in the hands of the mediator Moses. The other was established by the mediatorship of the Lord from heaven. The first was ratified by the blood of bulls and goats, inferior animals. The second was validated by the shed blood of the Son of God. The mark of one is in the flesh, the token of the other is in the heart. To a covenant predicated upon faith residing in the heart, an external brand is of no avail. "For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision; but faith working through love." "Was any man called being circumcised? let him not become uncircumcised. Hath any been called in uncircumcision? let him not be circumcised. Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing; but the keeping of the commandments of God."

"If ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed." The Israel of God is a new creation. "For neither is circumcision anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creation. And as many as shall walk by this rule, peace be upon them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God." The Jew of old bore a mark in his flesh which men could see. This was appropriate to distinguish a physical relationship. But, as is so often the case, men came to revere the symbol more than the relationship of which it was the visible attestation. When this happens, the symbol is exalted and becomes an object of superstitious reverence. Those who bear it look upon it as the hope of their salvation. They trust in it, glory in it, and feel that it alone makes them superior to others. "As many as desire to make a fair show in the flesh, they compel you to be circumcised." "They desire to have you circumcised, that they may glory in your flesh."

The mark of the new covenant is invisible to men. Accordingly it does not receive the praise of men. "For he is not a Jew who is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh: but he is a Jew who is one inwardly; and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God." Under the regime of the fleshly covenant, men could determine the number of those in covenant relationship by inspection of the outer man. When Thermuthis, daughter of Pharaoh, looked upon the circumcised infant whom she later named Moses, she said, "This is one of the Hebrews' children." Men no longer can take a census of the Lord's people, for they cannot inspect the mark upon the heart. "Howbeit the firm foundation of God standeth, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his: and, Let everyone that nameth the name of the Lord depart from unrighteousness.” It was no doubt a surprise to Paul at Corinth when God told him, “I have much people in this city” (Acts 18:10).

But is baptism not a circumcision, or, is it not given in the place of circumcision? My answer is in the negative. Spiritual circumcision is of the heart. It is not made with hands. It is purely a divine procedure. It is conditioned upon faith, for the simple reason that this is the basis of our heritage through Abraham. “For this cause it is of faith, that it may be of grace; to the end that the promise may be sure to all the seed . . . to that also which is of the faith of Abraham who is the father of us all before him whom he believed, even God, who giveth life to the dead, and calleth the things that are not, as though they were.” Our relationship by grace must be conditioned upon faith. It is of faith that it may be of grace. If it were conditioned upon anything else it could not be by grace. The corollary of grace from the divine, is faith in the human. That which is offered through grace, must be accepted through faith. That which may be attained through any other means is not of grace.

Faith is personal. One can no more believe for another than he can eat for another. The religious world generally, mistaking the implications of the two covenants, has either ignored the fact that there are two and regarded one as a mere continuation or extension of the other; or, if they make a distinction, conclude that baptism has been given in the room of circumcision. There is a great difference! A covenant based upon the mere circumstances of physical birth, thus independent of any choice or volition upon the part of the subject, may be ratified in the individual by the father who begot him. Indeed, such a covenant must be so ratified, for the responsibility belongs to the parent and not to the offspring.

Not so a covenant based upon faith. We can have a baby circumcised but we cannot have our children baptized. Baptism is an expression of faith, not of our parents, but of ourselves. We are no longer children under tutors and governors. We are treated as mature persons under the covenant of grace. Since faith is the deciding element, we do not contend for adult baptism as opposed to infant baptism, but for believer's baptism as opposed to baptism of those incapable of belief. This eliminates the necessity of setting an arbitrary age boundary for determination of adulthood, and places the matter where God left it, in the realm of faith. The question is not then, "Do you not think you should be baptized, seeing that you are old enough?" but, "Do you believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God?"

"In whom ye were also circumcised with a circumcision not made with hands, in the putting off of the body of the flesh, in the circumcision of Christ; having been buried with him in baptism, wherein ye also were raised with him through faith in the working of God, who raised him from the dead" (Col. 2:11, 12). The circumcision of the heart is not by human agency. The expression "not made with hands" always indicates a divine operation. "Circumcision" literally means, "a cutting around," thus "a cutting off." In the fleshly covenant a small piece of the flesh was cut off and discarded. In the spiritual covenant, the entire "body of flesh" is excised. The body of sin is done away, so we should be no longer in bondage to sin (Rom. 6:6).

Baptism is not circumcision. It is performed by hands. It is the knife by which God has chosen to perform the operation. All of God's blessings are made available to man in conjunction with divine ordinances. This is true in both the natural and spiritual realms. It is not faith in baptism, but faith in the working of God that makes us undergo the operation. When we prepare for physical surgery, it is not faith in the knife but in the surgeon, that prompts us to submit. If the surgeon has given previous demonstrations of his skill, we are all the more assured in heart. God has demonstrated his power by the greatest feat of all, the raising of Jesus from the dead. Accordingly I need have no fear about allowing my “old man to be crucified,” knowing I also will be “raised with him through faith in the working of God who raised him from the dead.” We exhort all who believe in the Lord Jesus, and in the working of God, to delay no longer, but to be buried with him in baptism, thus entering into covenant relationship with the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit.

Having written at length, we now commend our readers to the grace of God and ask all to read our next issue in which, God willing, we shall analyze the “old covenant” made at Sinai, in preparation for future investigation of the more glorious new covenant which was based upon better promises. We thank God and take courage that our hope is based upon the covenant relationship through faith in a blessed Redeemer. Let us exalt and praise His name that, like the cripple of old, through faith in his name, we can stand before God whole! Please pray for us as we do for all of you who love Him. Feel free to write your criticisms, for we want truth. If you have it and we do not, please share it with us, that through such willingness upon your part we, too, may grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. May God be with you all!

Our Special Mission

Mission Messenger (June 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

Everyone who accepts the new covenant scriptures as containing the revelation of the will of God, must admit the following:

1. That sects and schisms are contrary to the divine purpose, that factions are works of the flesh, and the party spirit is a sin of such magnitude as to debar one who is guilty of it from entrance into the everlasting kingdom.

2. Those who separate themselves from other believers unjustifiably and create parties, are sensual, and stand condemned for thwarting the intent of God.

It is my conviction that the only basis upon which any group in the realm of modern Christendom can justify a separate existence is by doing a necessary work which is not being done by any other. By “necessary work” in this area, I refer to work approved of God, work in fulfillment of his purpose, not mere sectarian activity which is intended to exalt the party or gain prestige for it.

If this utilitarian criterion were the measuring reed to determine the right of religious denominations to continue, the number would soon be greatly diminished. Specific titles, names, rituals and forms can never constitute a sufficient reason for separate existence. This is conceded by those who employ human names or titles, for they affirm “there is nothing in a name.” This being true, then to maintain a separate party to preserve a particular name is to divide believers over nothing. The primitive church had no specific name as a title. It is possible that the very basis of the desire for such is an exhibition of exclusiveness which is a symptom of sectism.

If it be admitted that rituals and forms are but means of expressing or demonstrating worship, and are not worship in and of themselves, it is folly to sever the body of our blessed Lord over these. Yet these are the means of distinction for countless sects, and a discarding of them would make it virtually impossible to tell one from the other. Many denominations are perpetuated to propound certain doctrines. These constitute their only claim to distinction. The parties espousing them seem to feel they are called of God to propagate and propagandize these doctrines far and wide. They live for that purpose. To this end most of their finance is employed, and to this vocation the whole of their talent is devoted. But this does not constitute a justifiable basis for maintaining a separate party. No doctrine that is the peculiar property of any one sect is the truth, or scriptural. This does not say it may not be true, for a doctrine may be true, and not a part of the truth which makes men free.

Divided as the Christian realm is in our day, it is nonetheless a fact that the truth is not the exclusive monopoly or private possession of any sect, denomination, or party. Any doctrine that is such is unworthy of our consideration. Only that is the truth today which was the truth in the beginning. There is a difference between the truth as revealed by God, and speculations, interpretations, ideas and inferences drawn from it by men. Revelation is divine, interpretation is human. Revelation is what God said, interpretation is what men think he meant. It is incongruous for those who contend that we enter relationship with God on the basis of faith (and this embraces the great majority of Christendom) to then sever relationship with each other on a wholly different basis of opinion, speculation, or doctrinal interpretation.

The only justification, then, for the existence of a distinct group, in the face of the warning against the sin of division and separation, is that such a group of believers is carrying on a work which is not being done by any others. Such a work must not be merely a sectarian program, worthy as it might be and good as its result may prove. A careful study of the various segments of our contemporary religious scene will reveal that they do not have a great deal that is distinctive which is part of the truth. If you were to divest them all of that which was distinctive to each it would only be removing the chaff from the grain.

Suppose that we could remove from the Roman Catholic Church all that was peculiar to it; and do the same with the Methodist, Presbyterian, Lutheran, Episcopalian, Reformed and Baptist churches. What would be lost? It would not be as much as you might think, and would consist only of that which is sectarian and divisive in nature. What would you have left? What remained would be the truth, the revelation of God, that which has been held in common by believers in our Lord Jesus Christ in all generations since the apostle went forth to sow the seed of the kingdom. Nothing that is vital to the Christian faith is the exclusive possession of any sect. Destroy that which is essential to sectism and you do not harm Christianity one bit. Admittedly, you abolish that which is essential to sectarianism, but sectarianism is a sin, and you thus only remove that which feeds and nurtures sin. If you destroy what is peculiar to Roman Catholicism you do not harm Christianity, for what remains is all that is vital to Christianity. If you remove the foundation from under Roman Catholicism, Christianity will not topple. Neither will it fall if you cut the foundation from under Calvinism, Lutheranism, Unitarianism, or any other partisan philosophy that has taken shape in the realm of Christendom. Christianity is older than any of these, existed independent of all of them, and can still exist when all are removed.

The Methodist Church holds much that is the truth and not Methodistic; the Roman Catholic Church holds much that is the truth and not Roman; the Episcopal Church holds much that is the truth and not “Episcopal.” But it is not the truth each holds that distinguishes it. If each adhered just to the truth there would be no partisan differentiations. All sects are distinguished by party principles. Their peculiarities are not found in the truth, for to this all claim to accede. Not a single one of these is doing a distinctive work. Each one is merely trying to build up a human party, and in spite of pious platitudes and general expressions of mutual good will, each composes its own set of statistics for comparative purposes and lauds its partisan gains.

Thus, the work that is being done is actually opposed to the very genius of Christianity. Candor forces us to say that it is in actual defiance of the expressed will of God, and in direct contravention to the prayer of Jesus. We do not question the motive nor challenge the sincerity of those who engage in it. Many of them are noble characters. They are without doubt fully convinced that they are doing God service. But the extension of religious sectism is not the same as the advancing of the Christian way, and in its ultimate is opposed to it. We do not overlook the works of charity that are done, the care of the sick and distressed, the feeding of the hungry and clothing of the naked. We rejoice in all such. We thank God for every sacrifice made to share with the distressed and unfortunate, whether such sacrifice be made by Roman Catholic or Protestant. But these are not distinctive. It is not the giving of alms that makes one a Roman Catholic, a Methodist, or an Episcopalian. These things done for the helpless are not opposed to God’s will. They are part of the truth. They are not the exclusive deeds of any party. But the things that create the parties themselves are not God’s will. The party spirit is condemned of God. It is a work of the flesh. It is carnality in action.

This is not to suggest that none of those allied with human parties are children of God. We do not question but what many are, and this is the tragedy of division. If only the children of the wicked one were rent and splintered, we should not be surprised. Satan is the author of confusion. But when God's spiritual offspring are torn asunder and constitute bickering sects, pitting brother against brother in unholy civil war, it is enough to make angels weep and strong men bow themselves in grief. It is not division among aliens from God, but sectarian rivalry among the sons of God, which is one of the great problems of this age.

I am asked if I am allied with a body of believers in the Christian realm. I freely confess that it is so. On what ground can we defend a separate existence? In the midst of all the denominations now so prevalent, are we doing a distinctive work? Are we prosecuting an endeavor not being carried on by any of the various denominations? If so, is it a work of God? If not, we have no right to exist as a separate body. If we are merely trying to accomplish that which is the goal of a denomination, or which all denominations in the aggregate are seeking to do, we should fade out and merge with them, for we will be but another sect among sects, and exist simply to duplicate the aims and functions of others. It is no excuse to urge that we are seeking to do in better fashion what they are doing, for if we united our efforts with theirs more could be accomplished.

Unless we recognize a mission that is not being accomplished by any denomination, or by all denominations in toto, we should not clutter up the religious landscape with another party. That many of those who are affiliated with the movement in which I labor are sectarian, can be easily proven. They are motivated by a spirit of rivalry, they profess an exclusivism in areas where such is sinful, they make boastful and arrogant claims that are products only of their own wishful thinking. Such members who proclaim the loudest that they are the only chosen ones of God would perhaps be as well off in any sect, for they are motivated by the sectarian spirit. Converted especially to some ordinance, form, or religious title, and resting their hope of glory in it, they have no real distinctive mission. They are content to build up another sect, believing that if they call it “The Church of Christ” it will not be a sect. Theirs is the same naivete which causes one to think that if he labels a malignancy by the word “tumor” instead of calling it “cancer” it will not consume the flesh.

But on what ground can a sincere student of God’s holy word, free from partisan bias and prejudice, and longing for His will to be done on earth as it is in heaven, justify allegiance to a distinctive body? The movement of which I have the honor to be a very humble part is a reformatory movement. This is not distinctive for there have been many reform movements. Its unique character lies in the fact that it was born of a spirit of Christian unity. It was not inaugurated to reform, purge, or purify any sect, or coalition of sects, but to unite the Christians of all sects, thus decreeing the ultimate death of sectarianism by purifying the hearts of all God’s children from the blighting, chilling, stifling effects of the party spirit, and inaugurating a reign of agape, love, in their hearts.

All sectism is a manifestation of the party spirit. That spirit prompts men to labor diligently to build up the sect. Regardless of what doctrinal, formal, or creedal basis may be offered as an excuse for the existence of any sect, the root of it is the party spirit, and this spirit invariably strives to perpetuate the sect which stems from it. No sect, as such, would legislate itself out of existence. Any such legislation would come as a result of triumph over the party spirit. But the movement to which I refer has as its goal, not the uniting of sects, but the uniting of all God’s children in the bond of peace.

Is this the work of God? Nothing is more clearly affirmed in the new covenant scriptures than the evil and carnality of factionism and sectism. It is the eternal purpose of God to gather together all things in one in Christ. It is his will that his people be united in the same mind and judgment. Was any denomination accomplishing this work? The history of the nineteenth century will show that instead of such being the case, the various parties were bitterly opposed to the attempt to unite all Christians in the several sects, and sought to consolidate them more firmly in their respective organizations. Calling the attempts of those who pleaded for restoration of the primitive order unorthodox, labelling what they propounded as “new doctrine,” branding those who advocated it as Campbellites, the only unity manifested by the sects was their concerted attempts to defend and maintain their disunity. So the task of pleading for unity of all Christians in the numerous sects upon a return to the primitive order, while it was the work of God, was not being done by any existing party.

What have been the results? Many of the currently existing sects have come to see the folly of allowing Satan to wage a war of attrition by the familiar tactic of “divide and conquer.” There are now genuine attempts to re-evaluate sectism in the light of God’s purpose. Many of those principles which were enunciated by leaders of the restoration movement are now being accepted and adopted. In the meantime, those who are the more direct heirs of the restoration movement, have crystallized into numerous factions and parties, and have adopted unwritten creeds. Forgetting their original purpose they have forfeited their right to exist, for they are now but adding others to the already heavy burden of sects. It is necessary that there be a restoration of restoration ideals.

It is my conviction that any separate and distinct group existing in the Christian world to plead for a unity of all believers in Christ, that is in one body, must, in the very nature of things, have but a temporary existence in that state. If it accomplishes its own purpose it must eventually blend into the growing unity of the body of Christ which it promotes, and lose its own identity in the recaptured homogeneity of the one body which has been so seriously fractured and fragmentized. Unfortunately, history attests to the fact that this seldom happens. Instead the partisan spirit captivates the hearts of those who claim to oppose all sectism, and they build up a super-organization to perpetuate and prolong their exclusive existence. The church of our Lord is not an organization at all. It is a divine organism. It is possible that “organized religion” is the greatest foe to the real purpose of God for this age. Certainly, it is now the persecuting force which has supplanted pagan and papal Rome, conspiring to defeat the return of apostolic purity and simplicity.

The ideal for which we strive will only be kept alive by hardy souls who dare to think for themselves. For this they will be misrepresented, maligned, and harassed, but the history of the struggle for the freedom of the Message, will chronicle their feeble efforts when the machinations of the party spirit will have been relegated to oblivion. It is in the strength of conviction that he who works with God, and for God, motivated by universal love, by love for all mankind, and mortifying the party spirit in a crucified heart, will be blessed of God, that we work inside our present frame of reference while we look for a more glorious day. God’s children will not always be divided. There will not always be civil war inside the walls of the kingdom of heaven! So “with malice toward none, with charity toward all, and with faith in the right as God gives us to see the right,” we press forward with Jesus Christ our Lord.

(Note: On a snowy afternoon in March 1951, while working with the consecrated saints in Belfast, North Ireland, I went to the humble meetinghouse on Berlin Street, to read, meditate, and pray alone. In a dingy back room I discovered a small volume, bound copies of “The Old Paths,” edited in the previous century by that British stalwart in the faith, David King. A brief article “Our Distinctive Mission” set me to thinking of how very sectarian in attitude I had become, and how far afield I had gone from the original purpose of the Restoration Movement. I jotted down brief notes, intending to write on the topic, and to confess my own shortcomings, inadequacies, and previous partisan tendencies. But years kept passing, and now on another snowy day in March 1960, thousands of miles from the little meeting place off Shankill Road in Belfast, and almost a decade later, my thoughts have sufficiently crystallized as to be presented to our serious readers in this article. Streams from many places converge to form the surging river of human thought, which must sometime burst into expression.

You will not need to agree with the above for me to love you sincerely in Christ Jesus. You are dear unto me because you are dear unto Him, and not because you concur in my own reasoning. So whether you agree with what has been written or not, may the grace of God sustain you, may you love Him, serve Him to the best of your ability, and may all of us meet some day where the question of unity will have been finally resolved in the light of his countenance, and the coldness of heart that has kept us apart be melted through the impact of the Sun of righteousness who has arisen with healing His wings).

A Muddled Movement

Mission Messenger (June 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

It was my good fortune recently to conduct a study in Odessa, Texas. This is a thriving city in the rich Permian Oil Basin. A few years ago it was a small western ranch town, but in two decades it has had a mushroom growth. It is just now becoming somewhat adjusted after a period of “growing pains.” My purpose, however, is not to describe the region, but to point up a condition among those who are heirs of the nineteenth century restoration movement. Odessa presents a sad picture that is becoming typical of many regions. It illustrates graphically what happens when the party spirit invades the hearts of those who are the religious descendants of a movement inaugurated to unite all believers in our Lord Jesus, upon a common ground.

The disciple brotherhood is represented in Odessa by two groups, one of the instrumental, and the other the non-instrumental segment. Those who use the instrument in their public praise service, are in turn divided into three congregations, neither of which has any real fraternization with the others. The First Christian Church is allied with “The Disciples of Christ.” It is accused by the others of being a Liberal group. The other two, for want of better descriptive terms, and for purpose of distinction, could probably be labeled as Conservative and conservative Conservative, the degree being somewhat greater in the latter. I deplore labels among brethren, but it is difficult to write about such a situation without employing them.

There is no recognition of common ground or heritage upon the part of the non-instrument groups toward the aforementioned. One minister of the Christian Church told me he immersed a young man who later married a “Church of Christ girl.” Since the bride could not conscientiously attend with the husband, his preacher suggested to the latter to go with her. The husband was informed that “The Church of Christ” did not recognize “Christian Church baptism” so the man was forced to come forward and confess in the presence of “The Church of Christ” that he believed Jesus was the Christ, and God’s Son, whereupon he was immersed with “Church of Christ baptism.”

Another Christian Church preacher informed me of a consecrated young wife whom he immersed, but who later moved with her family to a nearby town, where she began to attend “The Church of Christ.” The minister of this congregation visited her and convinced her that since the Christian Church was a sect, they could not baptize for the remission of sins, so she made the confession once more and was immersed “according to the Bible.”

A preacher for “The Church of Christ” volunteered to me that he had a great burden upon his heart for the Conservative Christian Church preachers, and felt the time might come when many of them could be “converted.” I asked him if he regarded them as brethren, and he hastened to assure me he did not, and would as soon call on a Methodist or Baptist preacher to lead prayer, as to call upon one of them. I asked why, and he said it was because of the practice of instrumental music. Since brotherhood is the result of birth and common parentage, I concluded that to be a brother to these men, one would need to be “born of the water and of the Spirit and of opposition to instrumental music.” And, while I am opposed to the latter, I have not been able to see how it negates brotherhood which is not based upon it, but upon a common Fatherhood.

However, it is among the non-instrument churches that the blighting influence of the party spirit is really rife. In Odessa there are at least five different segments or factions, most of which regard the others as apostates. Each looks upon its own party as being the one holy, catholic church, and apostolic church of God on earth. There is a division into what is known as “Sunday School” and “anti-Sunday School” churches. These are again divided into “one cup” and “cups” churches. One is opposed to Bible classes but uses individual containers to distribute the fruit of the vine to the communicants; the other opposes both classes and cups. Neither regards the other as in its “fellowship;” both brand and stigmatize each other as “unfaithful” and “disloyal,” each using its party prejudices as the criterion of faith and loyalty to the Lord Jesus.

As is usually the case, the “Sunday School churches” are the largest and most flourishing. They are in position to show some contempt for the “antis” as they label those who oppose classes. Each of the larger congregations has hired a pastor to minister to the flock, and in one instance, at least, there is an assistant minister, so that the “servant” in the first degree, has in turn a servant of the second degree, to assist him. Since these occupy a position identical with that held by the Christian Church pastors, except that the ones in “The Church of Christ” usually draw bigger salaries, the differences on that subject have been dropped by adoption, and the primary emphasis is on instrumental music.

A growing divergence is manifest among the non-instrument, individual cup, Sunday School, anti-missionary society churches, however. To all intents and purposes, another split is imminent, and in some places has already occurred with such vehemence as to fracture them into splinters, and rock “the brotherhood.” The occasion of the latest schism is the Herald of Truth radio and television program, and orphan homes existing as charitable societies. These diverse factions use as their principal propaganda organs the Gospel Advocate and Gospel Guardian, with those who claim to advocate the gospel also advocating these other things and those who claim to guard it, opposing them. The outstanding defender of Herald of Truth at Abilene, told me they did not “fellowship” the Guardian group at all!

Adherents of the Guardian position denominate the others as “Liberals” and are, in turn, denominated “Antis.” In conversation with two preachers of the latter faction, we learned there were three groups in this period of transition. These can be described as sound, shaky, and seditious. Both factions acknowledge the existence of the three, but each reverses the constituency. It is interesting to note that every party, instrumental and non-instrumental, has its “Liberals” and “Antis” depending upon the party test.

Among the instrumental groups, those who oppose the United Christian Missionary Society are “antis.” Among those who oppose it, those who decry the use of instruments are “antis.” In the Gospel Advocate faction those who oppose the orphan homes are “antis.” Among these, those who oppose Bible classes are “antis.” These regard those who oppose individual cups as “antis.” This chain reaction continues down to the final count, where no doubt the last person is “anti-Anti.”

The bigger fleas upon the dog,

Have smaller fleas that bite ‘em;

And these, in turn, have lesser fleas,

And so on, ad infinitum!

Even the casual reader must recognize the fearful plight of those who are “the New Testament Church.” There is no prospect of improvement. The future holds out for these factions more strife, division, and multiplication of self-righteous partisanship. This is the fruit of carnality and spiritual immaturity, of legalism and unwritten creedalism, of pride and the party spirit. How can they unite the world in Christ, while carving His body into bits? It is time for those who can do so to rise above this wicked spirit and demonstrate a love that transcends all human walls and barriers, so its warmth may dispel the chilling frost of hate.

I taught in Odessa by invitation of a little group which, by choice and conviction, does not have classes or individual cups. They do possess a freedom which they extend to others in a manner which proves them to be true restorationists at heart. They recognize every consecrated immersed believer in the Sonship of Jesus of Nazareth as a brother in Him. They are capable of distinguishing between fellowship and endorsement, so they place brotherhood above “party lines.” Our studies together were unmarred by any untoward incident. We labored together in mutual love! My home was with J. T. Brose and wife. He is a gospel preacher of ability. I feel very close to him and the little group of saints meeting at 30th and Golder Streets. I trust that all who love the Lord will pray that the twentieth century sectarian movement denominated “The Church of Christ” which grew out of a glorious nineteenth century restoration attempt, will return to its former purpose and intent.

Teacher and Disciple

Mission Messenger (June 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

We are disciples of Christ. He is our teacher. This state of things can never be reversed. We cannot teach him; we can only learn from him. Nor do we ever arrive at the place where we know it all. There are no graduates from his school. We never cease to be disciples while on this earth. We are also servants. He is our master. This relationship must ever be sustained. We can never arrive at the place where we tell him what to do, or tell him what we prefer to do. “A disciple is not above his teacher, nor a servant above his master” (Matt. 10:24).

Because we are all disciples and servants we should share with each other.

We are all frail, fallible, and liable to err. No one of us is immune to mistakes. With an eagerness to know the truth, we earnestly solicit your analysis and criticism of the views we express. We urge you to write and point out where you think we are in error. We read carefully, prayerfully and studiously every letter or article of disagreement. We prefer that you write in love, free from rancor and the party spirit. But if you cannot so write, and if your criticisms must be submitted even in a spirit of hatred, send them to us, and with love for you, we shall endeavor to separate what you say from the spirit in which you convey it. We are interested in and concerned about principles, and we are not so vain as to reason that only those friendly to ourselves have correct principles.

It is not necessary that you agree with us to be loved and respected by us. Our heart reaches out to embrace many who do not see all things as we do, but who love the same Jesus we try to serve. It is dangerous for any fallible man to set up his reasoning as a criterion by which to judge the worthiness of any of his fellows. We do not stand or fall to our fellow slaves. "To his own master he standeth or falleth." But since we are disciples, you may help us to learn, and since we are servants you may help us to serve. Feel free to question, to doubt, to disagree with, and to censure what we write. You may be right, and if so, we wish to know it. There is nothing to be gained by continuing in error when one can learn better. While all of us sit at the feet of the same great teacher let us share what we glean from a study of his words.

The First Testament

Mission Messenger (July 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

It was God's original intent when he called Abram, to make of his seed a great nation. To accomplish His purpose he allowed the descendants of Abram to be cradled and conditioned in the most advanced culture of that day. In Egypt they were confined in slave status until the seventy souls who went down to that country with Jacob had multiplied in number until they probably exceeded two million. When the proper time came, they were freed from bondage and started on the way to the land which was to be peculiarly theirs, according to promise.

God reveals himself in a manner adapted to the state of things existing when the revelation is given. Since the cardinal purpose was to make a nation which would keep alive the idea of the existence of the one true God, it was necessary to impress upon all nations the significance of His selection of Israel as a nation separate and apart from others. At that time when "every nation made gods of its own" (Cp. 2 Kings 17:29), the feeling was universal that the power of a god could be determined by the state of the people over whose fate he was alleged to preside, and by works of wonder performed in their behalf. If a nation prospered materially, was strong in battle, and triumphed over others, it was conceded that the god of such a nation was a powerful deity.

To gain a proper degree of respect and reverence for Himself and the chosen people, God accepted this criterion, and proceeded to demonstrate His superiority. Since His people were slaves in Egypt, the first manifestation of power was against that nation and its gods. Selecting as an ambassador one who had been reared and educated in the king's palace, but who had become a political exile under charge of homicide, He sent him to the royal court with a positive ultimatum to let His people go. When the haughty monarch denied any knowledge of the God of Israel it became necessary to show His divinity. Now any proof of divine power to be effective to mankind, must be supernatural, and capable of being fully perceived and apprehended by the senses.

Ten different demonstrations were manifested in Egypt. The first three were simply to prove that Jehovah was the Lord. "And the Egyptians shall know that I am the Lord, when I stretch forth my hand upon Egypt" (Exo. 7:5). The next three were to demonstrate that he was also God in Egypt and the deities of that land were impotent before Him. To this end He drew a line of demarcation between Goshen, the province where Israel dwelt, and the rest of Egypt. Goshen was unaffected by the succeeding disasters which paralyzed the remainder of the country. "But on that day I will set apart the land of Goshen, where my people dwell, so that no swarms of flies shall be there; that you may know that I am the Lord in the midst of the earth. Thus I will put a division between my people and your people. By tomorrow shall this sign be" (Exo. 8:22, 23).

The third series of three catastrophic events went one step more. They proved that there was none like Him in all the earth. "For this time I will send all my plagues upon your heart, and upon your servants and your people, that you may know there is none like me in all the earth. For by now I could have put forth my hand and struck you and your people with pestilence, and you would have been cut off from the earth; but for this purpose have I let you live, to show you my power, so that my name may be declared throughout all the earth" (Exo. 9:14-16).

The final blow was destined to prove at the very birth of the nation, that this God was a master of all gods. He proposed to deliver these bond slaves without revolt, clash of arms, or loss of a single life among them. At this time Egypt was the mightiest nation on earth. The Pharaoh was feared above every other earthly monarch. On the night appointed, the slaves demanded of their masters jewelry of silver and gold. At midnight the death angel passed through the land with terrible execution, and smote all of the first-born, “from the first-born of the captive who was in the dungeon, and all the first-born of cattle” (Exo. 12:29). Yet “against any of the people of Israel, either man or beast, not a dog growled” (11:7). There was a great cry in Egypt, for there was not a house where there was not one dead. The agonized Pharaoh did not wait until morning. He summoned Moses and Aaron by night, and said, “Rise up, go forth from among my people, both you and the people of Israel; and go, serve the Lord, as you have said. Take your flocks and your herds, as you have said, and be gone, and bless me also.”

When the full realization of what he had done dawned on Pharaoh, he changed his mind, and decided to pursue the Israelites and return them to bondage. The Israelites trembled when they saw the approaching Egyptians, but Moses said, “Fear not, stand firm, and see the salvation of the Lord, which he will work for you today; for the Egyptians whom you see today, you shall never see again. The Lord will fight for you, and you have only to be still.” Lifting his rod over the waters of the Red Sea, he caused them to part by the power of God. The people of Israel marched through on dry ground, and the Egyptian cavalry attempting to follow were all drowned.

So mighty was this feat that many years later Moses asked, “Has any god ever attempted to go and take a nation for himself from the midst of another nation, by trials, by signs, by wonders, and by war, by a mighty hand and an outstretched arm, and by great terrors, according to all that the Lord your God did for you in Egypt before your eyes? To you it was shown that you might know that the Lord is God; there is no other besides him” (Deut. 4:34, 35). The expression “take a nation for himself” is a key one in any study of the relationship of God to Israel. In fulfilling His design God showed His superiority to the gods of the most prosperous and flourishing nation of the day.

NATIONAL CONSTITUTION

But it is one thing to lead a group of serfs from the land of bondage, and a wholly different thing to weld them into a nation. To accomplish the latter, the first thing required is a constitution. Such a constitution in a theocracy would certainly be in the nature of an announced covenant. Accordingly, after God had freed them, He did not allow them to take the direct route to Canaan which led by the way of the Philistines, but turned them southward toward Mount Sinai, around which they established their camp. Here God made known His intention to submit to the people en masse the question of whether or not they would be willing to enter into covenant relationship with Him, accepting such responsibility as would be entailed. Thus, the Creator preserved the dignity and respected the will of the creature, although under no obligation to do so.

The mediator was summoned to come up into the mountain in the presence of the people. The proposal of God was committed unto him to convey to the entire multitude. It was conditioned upon one great act of deliverance in which the Egyptians had suffered frightful retribution and Israel had been miraculously reclaimed. Moses was told, “Thus shall you say to the house of Jacob, and tell the people of Israel: You have seen what I did to the Egyptians, and how I bore you on eagles’ wings and brought you to myself.” This was deemed of sufficient power to make Israel recognize an indebtedness unto God and to inspire them to trust in His might for the future.

For that reason the proposal was made, “Now therefore, if you will obey my voice and keep my covenant, you shall be my own possession among all people; for all the earth is mine, and you shall be to me a kingdom of priests and a holy nation. These are the words which you shall speak to the children of Israel.” Since there was no central means of communication available, and no mass media through which one person might speak to more than two million souls, Moses summoned the elders, relayed to them the message of God, asked them to ascertain the will of the people and report back the results of their poll.

The people unanimously agreed, saying, “All that the Lord has spoken will we do.” Moses reported their decision to God, who then informed him he would personally address the people on the third day in a manner they could not forget. As a preliminary for the occasion, the mountain was to be regarded as sacred, with a boundary line drawn, across which the people were not to set foot. The death sentence was decreed for any man or beast crossing the line. During the three days the people were to wash their garments and abstain from all sexual commerce. The blast of a heavenly trumpet would signal the beginning of the public announcement of the covenant.

On the morning of the third day there were thunders and lightnings, a thick cloud upon the mountain, and a very loud blast upon the trumpet. Sinai was enveloped in smoke, and the entire mountain shook and trembled. The startled people were brought forth to stand gazing at the awesome spectacle and wondering what the future held for them. Moses spoke, and God answered in the rumbling of thunder. “So terrifying was the sight that Moses said, ‘I tremble with fear’” (Heb. 12:21). He never forgot the inauguration ceremony for the covenant, and shortly before his death addressed the people as follows, “For ask now of the days that are past, which were before you, since the day that God created man upon the earth, and ask from one end of heaven to the other, whether such a great thing as this has ever happened or ever was heard of. Did any people ever hear the voice of a god speaking out of the midst of fire, and still live?

. . . Out of heaven he let you hear his voice, that he might discipline you; and on earth he let you see his great fire, and you heard his words out of the midst of the fire” (Deut. 4:32, 33, 36).

ANALYSIS OF THE COVENANT

Because men have labeled the thirty-nine books constituting the Jewish scriptures, as “the old testament,” virtually the whole world has been led to believe that this entire compilation constituted the covenant with God. No idea could be more incorrect, none is fraught with greater possibilities for error in understanding the unfolding of God’s purpose. Laboring under this delusion, many have completely missed the purpose of God which is expressed in the new covenant, and have merely substituted one legalistic code for another as the basis of their service to God and communion with each other, in spite of the fact that the inspired prophet wrote, “The days will come, says the Lord, when I will establish a new covenant . . . not like the covenant I made with their fathers.”

In view of this, we humbly submit that any understanding of the new covenant must be approached through a proper concept of the old. If the second is not like the first, a correct survey of the first will prepare for a rational investigation of the second. What was the nature of the old covenant? Why was it given? What did it embrace? What were its bounds and limitations? A proper evaluation of these matters will make it possible for us to place the Jacob’s staff of our spiritual survey at the exact spot from which to look at the better covenant based upon better promises. Because this has generally been ignored, the world is filled with religious teachers talking about the old and new testaments, “who know not what they speak or whereof they affirm.”

At the very outset, let us remember that nowhere in all of the sacred writings does God ever suggest that all of the holy scriptures from Moses to Malachi constitute the “old testament.” No inspired writer ever hinted that the old testament contained thirty-nine books. Some of these recount the history and chronicles of a covenant people, some are the literature and song books of the covenant people, some the prophetic warnings and promises to the covenant people. But the history of such a covenant people is no more a part of their constitution than a book on American history is part of the Constitution of the United States. Such a history may refer to our constitution, detail our departures from its principles, and urge our return to its original spirit, but it is not “the Constitution” or national covenant.

A nation is a social unit created when a number of clans or tribes associate themselves together for mutual progress and protection. In the very nature of things, the first requirement is a compact, or agreement. Such an agreement is called a covenant, or constitution. When God calls a nation out for himself, it is evident that such a nation must constitute a theocracy. Being such, and not a democracy, God must announce the terms of the relationship involved. As soon, therefore, as God separated his people from the enslaving power, he led them to a mountain of sufficient height, about which they could congregate, and from which he could address them as from a divine rostrum. He first proclaimed the testament orally, then wrote its provisions on two tables of stone with his own hand, these in turn being deposited by angels with his chosen ambassador acting as mediator.

The preamble of the constitution was a proclamation of what God had done for them. God never enjoins a covenant upon the human family except upon the basis of prior deeds in their behalf. In this instance, the preface would serve for all ages to identify the people involved and the God whom they were to serve. In solemn tones, the words were uttered, “I am the Lord your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage.” There followed ten commandments, which, with the preamble, constituted what the inspired writers call

“the old covenant” or “the first testament.” Since a nation is a social unit, its people sustain a dual relationship— to God and one another. The ten commands are divided into two classes. The first four pertain to the responsibility to God; the last six to the responsibility to man.

PERTAINING TO GOD

The initial commandment was the keystone in the arch of national purpose. It struck at the very heart of polytheism, and forever made monotheism the foundation of covenant relationship on the part of Israel. “You shall have no other gods before me.” This made the worship of idols an act of treason, a revolt against the sovereign power, and an overt manifestation of conspiracy to overthrow the nation, by subverting it from its original purpose and intent. By statute it was made a capital offense.

The second and third statements were directed against treasonable intent. Knowing the tendency of man to worship what he creates, it was forbidden to make any graven image or likeness of any creature in the universe. To bow down before the work of the sculptor or graver, or to give any homage or reverence thereto was also a capital offence. The third command was designed to forbid any lessening of respect or awe for the name of Jehovah. “You shall not take the name of the Lord your God in vain.” To “take the name of God” meant to call upon him to witness to a promise or vow. This was generally done by saying, “As the Lord liveth I will do this or that.” To do so in vain, meant to take such an oath in the name of God to perform an act, which the one thus vowing had no intention of performing. “Men indeed swear by a greater than themselves, and in all their disputes an oath is final for confirmation” (Heb. 6:16). Since this was the final appeal for confirmation, reverence for the name of God would soon disappear if he was called upon to sanction a falsehood or empty promise.

The fourth command stipulated the percentage of time to be accorded the Lawgiver and King. One day in seven was to be assigned to him in honor of two great events. His creative work ended and he rested on the seventh day. On that same day he brought the people out of Egypt. The creation of the earth and the creation of the nation to honor the God of the universe, were to be commemorated by hallowing the seventh day, and the method of consecration was the same which God himself originally employed, absolute cessation from creativity, and rest, or relaxation.

PERTAINING TO OTHERS

Before we mention the fifth commandment, a few words are in order about the method of perpetuating the knowledge of the covenant. There was no provision made for propagandizing people of other nations, and no recruiting program was inaugurated. If one who dwelt among the people desired voluntarily to enroll with them, he could do so by allowing himself and other males in his family to be circumcised. There was no solicitation for him to do so. True, in a decadent age, and after they had been scattered among all nations, the descendants of Abram, having burdened their law with cumbersome traditions, crossed land and sea to enlist Gentile philosophers whom they transformed into fanatical zealots worse than themselves, but this was not the original intent.

Carrying forward the patriarchal procedure, the fathers were directly charged with the responsibility of instructing their children. The solemn duty was enjoined immediately following the Shema, the watchword of Israel, for after pronouncing it, Moses said, "And these words which I command you this day shall be upon your heart; and you shall teach them diligently to your children, and shall talk of them when you sit in your house, and when you walk by the way, and when you lie down, and when you rise." Each home was to be a school, upon whose gates and doorposts these things were written.

This implies that the Torah was simple enough in essence for the fathers to expound, and for the children to understand. It was only when professional teachers arose, and eventually divided into representatives and defenders of various schools of thought, or sects, that the word became obscured by vain janglings. Inasmuch as the parents were ordained as the sacred teachers, it is not surprising that the next command following those relating to the proper attitude toward God, enjoined reverence for them. "Honor thy father and mother." The parent stood in the room of God to the offspring, giving them the Torah as God gave it originally.

The remainder of the ten commandments constituted the great moral or ethical code intended to set the people apart from the degenerate worshipers of other gods. Taken together, they compose "the old testament" or covenant. All other laws, statutes, and judgments, grew out of a relationship to these. While other laws carried a penalty for violation, the national existence was not necessarily impaired or destroyed by disregard for them. But the ten commandments constituted the national covenant, the constitution, and upon this the nation had been formed, and by it would continue to exist. A disregard for the covenant would bring about the dissolution of national sovereignty unless the breach were repaired firmly and decisively.

The ten commandments and their preamble are "old testament." The books of history, poetry, and prophecy, are not a part of the covenant. They are scriptures, or writings, which grew out of the relationship created by the covenant, but they are not "the first testament" as God employs that term. That which established covenant relationship was one thing, the sacred books written to the covenant people constituted a wholly different thing. Because we have familiarly and unthoughtedly spoken of the thirty-nine books as composing "the old testament,” and have subscribed to this popular error as we have to so many other traditional views, it is necessary to reexamine the scriptures related to this matter.

One may ask what difference it will make. This is the refuge of those who prefer to continue in error than to discover truth. Does it not make a difference whether we have a correct or an incorrect view of what constitutes a covenant of God, seeing that we have already established that God’s entire relationship with man has been revealed as being on a covenantal basis? Can any professed preacher of the gospel be respected who ridicules, derides or scoffs at a matter so grave that it strikes at the root of our very approach to the Deity? Is one deserving of reverence as an instructor in holy things who deliberately chooses to ignore truth and continue to teach error? Such may be worthy of those who place the sect above all else, but surely it has no place in the life or thought of truth-loving men and women.

There is an even more serious and sobering aspect. The covenantal relationship of old was the school of instruction for those who live under the new. If we mistake the nature of the old covenant, its scope and breadth, we can as easily be wrong about the new. I am prepared to prove, if God spares my life, that as a people, we have done this, and in doing so, we have merely substituted one system of legality for another, as the ground of justification, and are again binding a yoke upon men which neither we nor our fathers were able to bear. As a result, we have developed a Pharisaical attitude. Conditioning our relationship unto God upon the basis of knowledge of a compilation of sacred writings, and not upon faith in Jesus, we have actually in many cases made the Bible our God. As a result, we are of all men most inconsistent. Every interpretation, exegesis, or opinion produces a new division, sect, or party, because we have made an agreement with men, not a covenant with God, the basis of our hope. When the apostle of liberty wrote about the two covenants, he declared, “To this day when they read the old covenant, that same veil remains unlifted, because only through Christ is it taken away.” What was true of them with regard to the old covenant has been true with us as regards the new. We have been looking at the matter through a veil. It is time that the veil be lifted! Only through exaltation of Christ can that be done.

The lifting of veils is a thankless task. One who thus writes will experience the hatred and animosity of every partisan who prefers to maintain the status quo and who would resent even an angel “troubling the waters.” Even now I am feeling personally the brunt of opposition of many whom I love in the Lord, but reverence for truth impels me to speak for I know that “the night is coming.” I must give account to the Judge of all the earth if I deliberately condone error and stifle truth. I dare not face Him, if I enter into a conspiracy to strike truth down in the streets.

I am reminded that a short time ago, while discoursing on the difference between the covenant by which we enter into relationship with the Eternal One, and the writings which were necessitated by the failures and errors of the covenant people, a preacher publicly remarked that I relegated the scriptures to a secondary place, yet quoted from them to establish my position relative to the covenant. I realize it will be more difficult for preachers to acknowledge the truth of what we say or write on this topic, than for others to do so. So many sermon outlines will be wrecked, so many scriptural passages will be seen to have been misapplied. It is harder for one who has been the idol of some segment or splinter party to admit error. Having taught the word of God for years, having come to the realization of how many mistakes I have made, having been humbled before God by confession and penitent prayer for forgiveness and greater light, I know the bitterness and gall one tastes before he has the courage to admit, “I have been wrong all my life about this matter or that.” They are fortunate whose influence may not have been so widespread, or who were never exalted as party champions. When one is the leader of a great party there will always be more people to hate him, and to count him as a traitor, when he can no longer conscientiously defend the narrow, intolerant party line.

I can thus sympathize with such a preacher as the one mentioned, even while deploring his lack of understanding. We do not at all relegate the sacred scriptures to an inferior position. Only a spiritually blinded man could so conclude. Every sacred scripture is inspired of God. The prophets, holy men of God, spoke as they were motivated by the Holy Spirit. But they spoke to a covenant people. What they spoke was not the covenant, neither is it now the covenant. The covenant by which man comes into relationship with Deity, and thus into fellowship with all others who are joint partakers of that same relationship is one thing; the scriptures written to such a people a wholly different thing. This is not the first time a man has been accused of overthrowing the law. My defence is the same as another and far greater than myself. “Do we overthrow the law by this faith? By no means! On the contrary, we uphold the law” (Romans 3:31).

The “old covenant” was contained in the sacred writings; the “new covenant” is revealed in the sacred writings. Certainly we must appeal to the record for any knowledge of what God has said in relationship to the covenants. But a reference to them to discover the nature of our relationship to God, no more concedes that all of these writings are “the covenant” than to argue that a knowledge of family history is essential to becoming a child of your parents. One does not need to read all of the letters written to his family before he can be born. An examination of my “family tree” may reveal the extent of my relationship, but it does not create that relationship.

THE OLD TESTAMENT

Having digressed so far, in order to demonstrate the importance of our theme, I now propose to prove that “the old testament” or “old covenant” was written on two tablets of stone, and on the basis of that covenant, the chosen people were constituted a nation. All prior and subsequent writings were no part of the testament itself, although all sustained a relationship to it. Moses is our first and best witness, having received the original draft of the constitution. “And he was there with the Lord forty days and nights; he neither ate bread nor drank water. And he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten commandments” (Exo. 34:27, 28).

Thirty eight years later, in the plains of Moab, Moses rehearsed in the ears of the surviving children of the original covenantees, the things that transpired. “And you came near and stood at the foot of the mountain, while the mountain burned with fire to the heart of heaven, wrapped in darkness, cloud, and gloom. Then the Lord spoke to you out of the midst of the fire; you heard the sound of words, but saw no form; there was only a voice. And he declared to you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, that is, the ten commandments, and he wrote them upon two tables of stone” (Deut. 4:11-13).

More explicit yet is the account in Deuteronomy 5. “The Lord our God made a covenant with us in Horeb. Not with our fathers did the Lord make this covenant, but with us, who are all of us here alive this day.” Certainly then, the first sixty-nine chapters of the Bible are not a part of “that first covenant” mentioned in Hebrews 8:7, for they deal with the fathers before Sinai. But, just as Moses eliminates the sacred writings dealing with prior history from the covenant, so he also eliminates all future writings from it. He repeats the ten commandments as the covenant, then concludes, “These words the Lord spoke to all your assembly at the mountain out of the midst of the fire, the cloud, and the deep gloom, with a loud voice; and he added no more. And he wrote them upon two tables of stone and gave them to me.” Although God “added no more,” men have added some thirty-seven books, of history, chronicles, poetry, songs, wise sayings, prophecies and apocalyptic writings to the covenant made at Horeb. When my brethren speak of the “old testament” they include all of these in their concept. Worst of all, they carry that same concept over to the new covenant, and make our very relationship to God and each other dependent upon their idea, and even upon their interpretations and speculations about the meaning of certain portions of the sacred writings, denying that any one can be in covenant with God who disagrees with them in any particular.

A consideration of the following points will help us to realize that “the first testament” did not include all of the scriptures now called “old testament.”

1. The two tables of stone, are distinctly said to be the tables of the covenant (Deut. 9:11). They are called “the tables of stone, the tables of the covenant which the Lord made with you” (verse 9).

2. The sacred chest, or coffer, containing the tablets of stone was called “the ark of the covenant” (Num. 10:33; Deut. 10:8). When Solomon erected the temple, he said, “There have I set the ark, in which is the covenant of the Lord which he made with the people of Israel” (2 Chron. 6:11). The ark had disappeared before many of the books of prophecy were even written.

3. The covenant was distinctly said to have been made and given in Horeb (Deut. 5:2). The apostle Paul identifies this as Mount Sinai in Arabia (Gal. 4:25). But the rest of the old covenant scriptures were all written in Palestine, in Babylon, or in Persia, during the exile.

4. The covenant was said to have been made when God “took them by the hand to lead them out of Egypt” (Jer. 31:32). The scriptures were written much later and in many other places.

5. Certainly the prophecy of Jeremiah was no part of “the first testament” for by the time Jeremiah wrote, the people had already broken the covenant of God, and the prophet predicted a new one would be made (Jer. 31:32).

It is our intention to examine the new covenant and its nature as carefully as we have the old testament. We will be asked the question whether or not the scriptures, when written, constitute a law by which we must be governed, and if so, why all the furore about the exact identification of the covenant? It is our intention to deal with this fairly and conclusively, but in the interim, we affirm that it makes a great deal of difference upon what basis we predicate our relationship with God, for this will determine what constitutes fellowship and brotherhood. It may yet be that the great battle over justification by law or by faith in Christ Jesus must be fought over again, to secure once more the liberty from legalism which is our only hope in Christ Jesus. To that task we humbly and sincerely dedicate our feeble talent.

The Bed of Procrustes

Mission Messenger (July 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

Procrustes was the ancient champion of enforced conformity. In Greek antiquity he was a legendary highwayman who lived in Attica. He had an iron bed which he regarded as the standard of length. Because it just fit him, he concluded that every one should fit it. He stopped every traveler and tied him to the bed. If the person happened to be too short, Procrustes stretched him until he attained the correct length; if he happened to be too long, his legs were cut off until he met the proper requirement. Thus was everyone made identical in size.

The iron bed on the highway of Attica has been supplanted by one on “the highway of holiness.” It operates now in the field of religion, rather than in the physical realm. It is used to measure spiritual attainment, and is the test of partisan fellowship. Every faction has its own bed, and all who would sojourn among them must be expanded or contracted, distended or diminished, enlarged or compressed, according to the unwritten creed which forms the bond of union for the particular group. Each of these claims to be the one holy, apostolic, and catholic church of God on earth, a contention they make in common with the Roman Church. Yet each has a different criterion of “faithfulness” or “loyalty” than all the others, and “the root of bitterness” in each case is the standard around which the partisans rally.

It is a figment of imagination that we must all think alike on every point of interpretation, or that we must be united in all our opinions and differences, before we can be one in Christ. Our minds differ even as do our faces. We can no more all think alike than we can all look alike. No two of us have identical abilities, capabilities, or responsibilities. Any system of religion based upon uniformity of knowledge, or conformity in opinion, at any given time, is doomed to division and failure. It is a humanly devised, not a divine system. The very ones who demand absolute agreement in order to fellowship disagree with each other. There are no two people in the church of God today, or in any faction which arrogantly assumes it is the church, who see everything exactly alike, so if fellowship is conditioned upon agreement or endorsement, there will be no fellowship. Recognition of this very thing causes each party to settle on some point of doctrine, and arbitrarily demand conformity on that particular. It is as if these modern Procrustians have agreed to accept all whose noses measure exactly three inches in length, regardless of their many deviations otherwise.

Take eight members of the same family, and feed them upon exactly the same food, and there will be variations among them. One will be fair, another dark; one light, another heavy; one short, another tall. What produces these variations? It cannot be their parentage for all have the same father and mother. It cannot be their diet, for all eat the same thing. In the physical realm we are not worried about such differences. We regard them as natural and normal. We would think it odd if we could not tell the eight apart. In spite of their differences in appearance all have much in common. They are all part of one family. We would not think of dispossessing one who had a physical defect.

The same God who made our bodies created our intellects. His revelation constantly emphasizes we are not alike. This is the very essence of the parable of the sower, of the talents, and of the pounds. We not only have “gifts differing” but we have mental capacities differing as well. We have the same spiritual father and mother, we feed upon the same spiritual food, but we do not all think alike. The inner man has its individuality the same as the outer man. We are not an indeterminate, indistinguishable mass in the spirit. If men thought alike in all matters there would be no inventions, industries, discoveries, progress, development, or even life. Why do we think it a matter of worry and concern when God's children do not all agree in opinion? Why must we devise Procrustean beds to elongate or abbreviate them to conform to our partisan norms? This is the basis of all sectism! Much of our present predicament stems from ignorance of the real teaching of God's word. It is thought that fellowship and unity are contingent upon perfect knowledge and conformity of thought. Nothing could be farther from the truth. We are in fellowship with God, but surely we do not know as much as God knows, nor are our lives as perfect as His existence. If God deigns to fellowship us in our imperfections and shortcomings, who are we to set up a different standard for our fellows? Are we not like the unjust debtor who, having been forgiven so great an amount, try to throttle one of our fellowservants and make him pay us a negligible amount?

But does not the apostle command that we "all speak the same thing"? Certainly he does. But an examination of the context will show that he was dealing with the schisms in Corinth. One was saying, "I am of Paul;" another, "I am of Apollos;" another, "I am of Cephas;" another, "I am of Christ." That is what they were saying. Paul told them to speak the same thing, that is, to stop their party cries. He did not mean for them to parrot the same words! They were not all to be like the tape recordings which start when you dial the wrong number on your telephone. Men are not recorded robots. The only way all could speak the same thing about all things at the same time, would be for all to know all things about the same things at the same time. Not even the preachers who postulate fellowship on absolute conformity will affirm that such is now the case, for they are constantly traveling about trying to teach all about some things, and they know there will always be some who will not know all things— including themselves!

God has not established the divine fellowship on the basis of the amount of acquired knowledge of his revelation, nor upon reasoning, opinion, or interpretation, but upon faith. This is the majesty and glory of the Christian system. It takes sinful men who need a Saviour and brings them into proper relationship with God in spite of varied degrees of knowledge, divergencies of opinion or interpretation, or vagaries of reason. It employs none of these as the foundation of the Christian hope. It substitutes facts for opinions, and demands faith in the testimony of credible witnesses as to these facts. And because there are many frail, ignorant helpless victims of sin, denied the opportunities for intellectual training, but still loved by God, He conditions His requirements to their state. He makes salvation and entrance into fellowship contingent upon the belief of just one fact, validated by obedience to just one act. Faith and obedience! These are the requirements in all ages. And because of the simplicity of the Christian system, the most erudite philosopher must enter the fellowship on the same basis as the jungle pygmy.

Every sincere believer in the fact that Jesus of Nazareth is God's Messiah and Son, who is immersed in water upon the basis of that faith, is God's child, and my brother. He is in my fellowship, because fellowship is the state or condition into which we are introduced by the new birth. There are variations among God's children as there are among mine. We should cease to regard such as abnormal. A person is not necessarily a freak because he does not look like me; and by the same token he is not a freak if he does not think as I do on all things.

Wherein we differ, let us reason together as brethren, not cleave the skulls of each other as enemies. Unity of opinion is a goal to strive for, not an essential to fellowship. We come into fellowship first and then study to see things alike; we dare not reverse the divine process and insist that we all see everything alike before we can come into fellowship! If we come closer to each other it will only be because of a mutual regard for Jesus as a perfect model for us all. We will gain nothing by setting up our iron bedsteads on the highway.

A Good Question

Mission Messenger (July 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

A good brother in the southland writes:

I am troubled by your statement in the last issue in the article “Our Special Mission,” to the effect that if the church accomplishes its purpose it must eventually lose its identity. How can that be possible?

We deeply appreciate the interest which prompted the query. We wish the writer had noted a little more carefully what we actually said. Here it is:

It is my conviction that any separate and distinct group existing in the Christian world to plead for a unity of all believers in Christ, that is in one body, must, in the very nature of things, have but a temporary existence in that state. If it accomplishes its own purpose it must eventually blend into the growing unity of the body of Christ which it promotes, and lose its own identity in the recaptured homogeneity of the one body which has been so seriously fractured and fragmentized.

Our brother confuses “The Church of Christ” as he knows it, with the church set forth in the new covenant scriptures. They are not necessarily the same. The first exists as the abused offspring of a great restoration movement inaugurated more than a century ago to unite the Christians in all sects. It is no longer a movement. It has crystallized into an organized party, which has been splintered into some two dozen warring segments, separated and segregated from each other by various unwritten creedal tests of fellowship.

The church of God contains within it every saved person on earth. Every one who has entered into covenant relationship with God is a member of the one body, added to it by the power of God. Not all of these are identified with one of the factions of "The Church of Christ." The flock of God is scattered over the sectarian hills. The church has been in existence since the good news was first proclaimed at Pentecost. Jesus has never been a shepherd without a sheep, a head without a body, or a king without subjects. The church was here before Alexander Campbell was born, although there was no religious party then in existence designated "The Church of Christ." It was not the intention of the reformers to start a separate and distinct party under that, or any other, title. Their heirs have forgotten the original design of restoration and now contribute more to disunity among themselves than to unity of all the believers.

But let me answer the question of my brother. I will give an example. In a small community, three religious organizations, each having about fifty members, meet for worship. They are known as The Methodist Church, The Baptist Church, and The Church of Christ. The sincere and scholarly men among the first two are deeply troubled by the sectarian division which exists in the world and begin a study of the sacred writings to see what they can do in a small way to eliminate such. After several years of mutual exchange of thought they resolve to sink into oblivion their local units, and come together to constitute a single congregation. They covenant together to accept the scriptures as their only rule of faith, and to create no barriers or tests of fellowship which God has not authorized. Those who were previously sprinkled among the Methodist party are immersed in conformity with the original meaning of baptism. All resolve to meet each Lord's Day to gather about the table of fellowship.

They decide to accept no particular designation, but to simply employ any descriptive term found in the divine oracles for the people of God.

In their initial meeting, they draft the following resolution:

Resolved, that the undersigned, having previously been members of several diverse parties in the Christian domain, but having concluded that the party spirit is a sin, and having decided to constitute ourselves a church of God in this community, wearing no distinctive title, but welcoming every immersed believer whose character is in harmony with the moral standard of Jesus, shall continue to study together to grow in grace and knowledge of the truth, and to help make it possible for the will of God to be done on earth as it is in heaven, and to this end we mutually pledge ourselves in the grace of God.

Now, what should “The Church of Christ” in that community do? Should it remain aloof, and demand that these others come and “make acknowledgements” unto them? Should they insist the only scriptural name is “The Church of Christ” and attack these godly, consecrated neighbors who refuse to sectarianize any term or title? My reply is that if they do so they will be a “sect” in that area, as they are now in so many places.

Since our purpose is the unity of all believers in the Lord Jesus, by a restoration of the primitive order of things, we should lose our identity as a distinct group and blend into the growing unity we claim to promote. We need not worry about the church losing its identity. It cannot do so, for there is but one church, and never has been but one. The church was created by God according to an eternal purpose. It is impossible for the church to cease, die, or be lost. You might as well fear that Jesus will pass away as to worry about his body dying. Most of my brethren confuse a faction with the church. They fear the dissolution of the party will be the end of the church. That is why we need a restoration of the Restoration.

Indiana Trip

Mission Messenger (July 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

Recently I journeyed to Sullivan, Indiana, where I spoke four times by invitation of a little group of consecrated brethren meeting on North Court Street. I was privileged to meet at least ten preachers, and members of some eighteen congregations, representing various segments of the disciple brotherhood. I discussed in their hearing mutual ministry, individual responsibility, fellowship and the unity of all believers. The interest and attention were all that could be desired. There are three divergent groups in Sullivan among the brethren who do not use instrumental music, and all favored us with their presence, and were kind and forbearing toward our presentation. During our brief series, Bro. Norman Wilkey immersed his eldest son, Carl, into the ever blessed name.

When I boarded the train to go to Sullivan, there was but one vacant seat. I introduced myself to my seat companion, only to learn he was a Lutheran missionary to India, home for a year of study at Concordia Seminary, before returning to his distant post. For three hours we discussed the problem of reaching the peoples of the Far East with the message of God's Son. My friend readily agreed that one of the greatest barriers was that of sectarian division in all of its confusing aspects. He conceded to my contention that most of us regard the Christian faith as a product of the western world, to be imported to the East. We forget that Jesus and the apostles were all from the Middle East, and the message was exported to us. Those who go out as missionaries now, seek not to reproduce the new covenant ekklesia of God, but to plant a replica of the congregation in their own home towns. Such a westernized version of the church of God may not be adapted to the people of an alien country, for it stresses theological disputes which are American in their origin, and not a part of the primitive church at all.

Upon boarding the train to return to Saint Louis, there was again but one vacant seat, and this time I found myself seated beside a Negro clergymen from Virginia, the newly elected bishop in the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church. He was en route to inspect and hold conferences in his newly assigned territory, and being thrown together for three hours, I sought to redeem the time by discussion of problems kindred to all who are concerned about the Christian faith. We explored the problems of school and church integration of the races, of the recent uprisings in Africa and their effects upon missionary endeavors in that land, of the divided state of Christendom, and canvassed our various approaches to the attempt to solve the question of disunity. I suggested to the Negro bishop, who was a man of considerable learning, that we have probably weakened Christianity by our careless use of such terms as the word "church." We speak of the Methodist Church, The Baptist Church, The Lutheran Church, etc. The word "church" was employed by the Holy Spirit to designate the called out ones, the covenantal community of God. As such, it could never rightly apply to anything except the one body of which our precious Lord is the head. To call any and every human sect or party a church, serves only to disturb the minds of simple, primitive peoples. There is a difference in "a church" or "the church" and parties created by men on the basis of their philosophies.

I have been musing over why it happened that on this one brief trip I should twice be thrown into the presence of men interested in the subject of the religion of Jesus Christ, from whom I learned a great many things of value, and with whom I shared some of my own thoughts and ideas. Is it possible that in ways which we do not know, God opens up for us doors of opportunity to make known our witness as to the necessity for restoration of the primitive order, or are these things mere accidents and unrelated incidents? We may not know, but I am thankful to Him whom I love for such contacts as I go through life.

Analysis of Legalism

Mission Messenger (August 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

In the land of Moab, with the sentence of death resting upon him, Moses spoke to all Israel. Forty years had elapsed since the exodus from Egypt. Those who were rebellious at Kadesh-barnea had all died in the great and terrible wilderness. This farewell address was delivered to their children, now mature men and women. Reminding them of the day they stood before the Lord at Horeb, Moses said, “And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, that is, the ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone” (Deut. 4:13). The covenant consisted of the “words the Lord spoke to all your assembly at the mountain out of the midst of the fire, the cloud, and the deep gloom, with a loud voice; and he added no more. And he wrote them upon two tables of stone and gave them to me.”

This is a significant declaration. From it we learn four things: (1) The covenant consisted of that which was announced orally to all Israel; (2) It embraced the ten commandments with their preamble; (3) It was written upon two stone tablets; (4) It was limited to the content of the oral message which was subsequently engraved upon the two tablets, for the Lord added no more. When they had heard the words of God the people were so frightened that the heads of the tribes approached Moses and besought him, “Go near, and hear all that the Lord our God will say; and speak to us all that the Lord our God will speak to you; and we will hear and do it.”

The Lord agreed to this, and instructed Moses to go and tell the people to return to their tents. However, he told Moses, “You stand here by me, and I will tell you all the commandments, and the statutes and ordinances which you shall teach them.” There was a difference between the covenant which established their relationship as the elect of God; and the statutes, commandments and ordinances, which regulated them within that relationship. The apostle recognized this when he wrote, “They are Israelites, and to them belong the sonship, the glory, the covenants, the giving of the law, the worship, and the promises” (Romans 9:4).

The covenant made at Sinai, by which national theocratic status was conferred, was of such a nature, and to fulfill such purposes, as to require a definite written legal code to accomplish its design. The law is personified as a child conductor or custodian (Gal. 3:24), and as a guardian or trustee (Gal. 4:2). Those who were under its jurisdiction were regarded as children, or minors, and thus possessed of no more freedom or independence than slaves (Gal. 4:1). Now, just as one would not intrust children to the care of another who was immature, so the law had to be complete from the inception of the nation. Accordingly, the Lord revealed the law in its fullness— precepts, commandments, statutes and judgments— to the initial mediator. “For the law was given through Moses” (John 1:17).

AN IMPORTANT DIFFERENCE

In this is found a great divergency as respects the Christian economy. The first covenant was based upon justification by law; the second upon justification by faith in a person. “At the present time . . . he justifies him who has faith in Jesus” (Romans 3:26). Since the “new covenant is not in a written code but in the Spirit” (2 Cor. 3:6), no law was given at the creation of the covenantal community on Pentecost in Jerusalem. Men simply heard an announcement of good news and accepted its implication in their lives. Those who were thus inaugurated as priests unto God had no distinctive writings of their own for many years. It was two decades before the first apostolic epistle, the one to the Thessalonians, was penned.

The epistles addressed to the followers of Jesus were written to individuals or communities as circumstances arose which called for them. Some were letters of thanks for favors received; others were letters of correction, admonition, and warning. One was written as a baptismal certificate for a runaway slave and to make a room reservation. In others occur personal notes as to the health and status of the writer, a prescription to correct stomach distress in the recipient, a request to pick up and return an overcoat, or to bring along books and writing materials. These letters do not always contain all the writers wished to say. "Though I had much to write to you, I would rather not use paper and ink, but I hope to come to see you, and talk face to face" (2 John 12; 3 John 13). "About the other things I will give directions when I come" (1 Cor. 11:34). This is not the language of legalism.

No congregation had access to all of these epistles for more than a hundred years. There was a considerable dispute as to which ones should be included in the sacred canon, and they were not collected, collated and compiled until a century after the royal priesthood was instituted. The primitive community of God had nothing to weld and cement it together but the fellowship of the Spirit. It was not a community based upon a written code; it was a community composed of believers in the Living Word. Its rule of action was a personal faith in a personal Lord; its motivating force was love. The governing message of ancient Israel consisted of the words of the law written in a book by the hand of Moses (Deut. 31:24). Not so, with us, "For this is the message which you have heard from the beginning, that we should love one another." Such a message befits a covenant graven not upon tablets of stone but upon tablets of the heart.

AN ECONOMY OF LAW

We must not digress further from our study of the first covenant. It was a legalistic arrangement to keep in confinement and under restraint those who were its subjects. Thus the covenant itself was legalistic. It consisted of law. The covenant given through Moses was law, but not all law given through Moses was part of the covenant. This will explain such statements as that of Paul, “Yet if it had not been for the law, I should not have known sin. I should not have known what it is to covet if the law had not said, ‘You shall not covet’” (Rom. 7:7). It is obvious that this statement is a part of the covenant. And because of this, other portions of the scriptures are referred to as law, being a part of a legal system.

It is important that we understand the nature of a system of law as opposed to a system of faith for justification. Failing to do so, we will but substitute one law for another, and this is a fatal error. Any person who seeks to be justified by law must keep such law to perfection. The slightest deviation from it brings condemnation. One cannot set up in his heart a system of justification by law and then expect God’s grace to rescue him in his failures, for grace operates through faith, and not through law. If we are now under a law, any law, for justification, our only hope, if hope it can be called, is to live in constant fear and dread and to keep its every provision and condition without fail. Few of us realize the full import of the hope inspiring statement, “But now the righteousness of God has been manifested apart from law, although the law and prophets bear witness to it, the righteousness of God through faith in Jesus Christ for all who believe” (Rom. 3:21, 22). Please observe that in this dispensation the righteousness, or justification, of God is manifested apart from law. Not “the law” but law!

The question naturally arises, “Why then the law?” It is not a new query, being first propounded in Galatians 3:19. The inspired answer is found at the same place. “It was added because of transgressions, till the offspring should come to whom the promise had been made.” But justification did not come by the law, “for if justification were through the law, then Christ died to no purpose” (Gal. 2:21). It is plainly said, “By works of the law shall no one be justified” (Gal. 2:16), and again, “Now it is evident that no man is justified before God by the law” (Gal. 3:11). The law was powerless to make alive. It could only, in its ultimate, produce death. Since justification by law demands absolute conformity to the minutest degree, and since no man could to this extent fulfill the law’s demands, “the very commandment which promised life proved to be death to me” (Rom. 7:10). “For if a law had been given which could make alive, then righteousness would indeed be by the law” (Gal. 4:21).

THE WEAKNESS OF LAW

What is true of the law given by Moses is true of any law as a basis for justification. The law given by Moses was of divine origin. “He received living oracles to give to us” (Acts 7:38). “It was ordained by angels through an intermediary” (Gal. 3:19). It was not unholy or unjust. “So the law is holy, and the commandment is holy and just and good” (Rom. 7:12). It was not an unhallowed or unspiritual arrangement for “we know that the law is spiritual” (Rom. 7:14). How could that which came from God, was furnished by angels, and was holy, just, good and spiritual, fail to produce life? The answer is that it failed, not because of its origin, means of transmission, or character, but simply because man being what he is, it is impossible for him to be justified by law. The very essence of such justification is absolute and unvarying conformity. This requires perfect knowledge and understanding from the very moment one comes under the law. If he makes one mistake he becomes guilty under the law, and all of his good deeds in the future can never purge that guilt.

The law arouses carnal desires or passions. We must deal with man as he is. Filled with curiosity, the urge to experiment, and the ambition to learn by experience, that which is forbidden often lures him toward destruction. The very commandment intended to restrain all too often incites. The law identifies sin, points it out, and locates it as surely as a “Wet Paint” sign on a park bench warns the passerby. The apostle says, “If it had not been for the law I should not have known sin. I should not have known what it is to covet if the law had not said, ‘You shall not covet.’ But sin, finding opportunity in the commandment, wrought in me all kinds of covetousness.” The tragic feature is that the penalty is death, for there is no mercy in law— only justice! “For sin, finding opportunity in the commandment, deceived me, and by it killed me” (Rom. 7:11). This is the inexorable fate of the legalist. He cannot escape it. His own testimony as to his imperfection will condemn him.

It would do all of us good to prayerfully, thankfully, and tearfully ponder the tremendous force in the following. “While we were living in the flesh, our sinful passions, aroused by the law, were at work in our members to bear fruit for death. But now we are discharged from the law, dead to that which held us captive, so that we serve not under the old written code but in the new life of the Spirit” (Rom. 7:6). I take it that the “old written code” was the law given through Moses. But I am just as convinced we do not serve under any written code. “We are not under law, but under grace.” Certainly the “new life of the Spirit” did not include the book of Romans, for Paul was just writing it, and those whom he addressed had already been serving in the new life of the Spirit, before he wrote them. They would have been doing so if he had never written them. “The new life of the Spirit” is contrasted with “the old written code.” We are discharged from the latter which held us captive. We serve under the other regime!

It is here that the legalist, motivated by fear and trepidation, childishly depending upon fences and barriers to mark the bounds beyond which he dare not walk, timidly enquires, “But will we not lose a lot of brethren if they become convinced they are not under law?” Such a question only reveals the emptiness of his own soul. He is not so much afraid of what will happen to others. He dare not trust himself. In reality, he is affirming that Jesus is inferior to law; that the magnetic power of the divine example is weaker than a code of jurisprudence. The sad feature of it all is that such a person turns back in theory to the former dispensation and voluntarily seeks to place himself again under “guardians and trustees.” Of such the apostle wrote, “Are you so foolish? Having begun with the Spirit, are you now ending with the flesh?” (Gal. 3:3).

ATTITUDE TOWARD SCRIPTURES

But what will be the attitude of one who shares “the new life of the Spirit” toward the book of Romans, and the other writings of the apostles? If he does not regard them as “a written code” how will he consider them? He will certainly not worship them. It would be as wrong to worship the Bible as to worship nature. God reveals Himself in both. Bibliolatry and pantheism are both in error. We must worship the God whom the book reveals, and not the book which reveals God. Nor will one whose heart is attuned to the personality of God, a partaker of the divine nature, confuse the Source of life, with that which is provided to nourish and sustain him. One is not born by eating bread, either in the realm of nature or of grace. God had children under the new covenant long before one word of the new covenant scriptures was written down.

One will continue in the apostolic teaching as he learns it. He will study and do research therein all his life. He will alter and amend his life as he finds truths he had not discovered. He will not approach the scriptures as a lawyer goes to his statute books, but as an eager disciple to a school taught by a loving Master. Nor will he beat and belabor other students who are not so far advanced as himself. He will regard all who seek to learn from the great teacher as his fellow-disciples.

He will search what is written that he may approach closer to the ideals of Jesus, not to castigate others. Thus it can be said, “And we all with unveiled face, beholding the glory of the Lord, are being changed into his likeness from one degree of glory to another, for this comes from the Lord who is the Spirit.” Is it too much to say that “the new life of the Spirit” is intended and designed to “change us into his likeness” and that, as we walk and live with him, we rise from one degree of glory to another? Many a man who boasts of his knowledge of the Bible, and his ability to quote whole chapters, reveals by his life that he has never really found Jesus. Many an attorney pleading law before the bar is inferior in moral integrity. It is not “a new law” but “a new life of the Spirit” that makes men really free.

We will do no good to turn over a new leaf. We must turn over to a new life. And “this comes from the Lord who is the Spirit.”

The law could not give life. It could and did bring knowledge of sin. “For no human being will be justified in his sight by works of the law since through the law comes knowledge of sin” (Rom. 3:20) The law could and did bring wrath. “For the law brings wrath, but where there is no law, there is no transgression” (Rom. 4:15). It made nothing complete or perfect. “On the one hand, a former commandment is set aside because of its weakness and uselessness (for the law made nothing perfect)” (Heb. 7:18, 19). These features did not militate against the law fulfilling its assigned role. “Now before faith came, we were confined under the law, kept under restraint until faith should be revealed. So that the law was our custodian until Christ came, that we might be justified by faith” (Gal. 4:23, 24).

BASIS OF DIVISION

It is a misconception of our relationship to God under grace, and a lack of comprehension of the role of the new covenant scriptures in that relationship which is the basis of much of our grievous condition in the religious world of today. My heart reaches out in sadness to those brethren who have convinced themselves that they best serve God by brutally castigating and verbally stoning their fellows. Humble men who cannot violate their own consciences, nor pay lip service to that which their hearts do not condone, are driven forth by those whose passions are aroused by the thought that they do the will of Him who died for all by attack upon some for whom He died. The body of believers is splintered and fragmented in the very name of Him who is “our peace, who has made us both one, and has broken down the dividing wall of hostility.” We have lived to see the day when an appeal for unity of believers is branded as heresy!

I am personally exercised in this matter because of my own culpability. Many who now regard themselves as administrators of divine law have been influenced by my own past teaching and example. For years I regarded no one as God’s child, or my brother, “who walked not with us.” Faithfulness to God was measured by loyalty to the party. The milk of human kindness curdled in our hearts, humanitarian love was squeezed into a narrow compress embracing only those affiliated with the party. “The brotherhood” was composed of those who took the right paper, or could obtain clearance from the right key man. All others were outside, regarded as apostates, pagans, and unbelievers. They were treated, or mistreated, as pariahs and untouchables. We were the church, the kingdom of heaven, the elect of God. Such was the bitter caste system of our factional creation.

All of this proceeded from a false philosophy, a rationalization which was Judaistic in concept, a belief that God had merely switched to a new law for justification in this age. Convinced that we were still under law I sought to be “educated according to the strict manner of the law of our fathers, being zealous for God as you all are this day.” There is a sense of pride in being right, in knowing that all who disagree are either sectarians or hobbyists; in realizing that those who dare oppose you are fighting against God because they oppose you. It brings an inward glow of satisfaction to realize that you are sound in the faith, a defender of the truth, while all others are dishonest, insincere, disloyal and unworthy of notice. “My manner of life from my youth, spent from the beginning among my own nation, is known by all. They have known for a long time, if they are willing to testify, that according to the strictest party of our religion I have lived as a Pharisee.” There are Pharisees among the spiritual seed of Abraham, as there were among his fleshly seed. I know whereof I speak!

But I now know that Jesus did not die for a party in the realm of Christendom. No faction is the one body. The members of no exclusive fragment constitute “the brotherhood.” No splinter party is “the loyal church.” This is a figment of minds distorted by ignorance of God’s purpose.

The one body is a covenantal community composed of all the saved. It is a fellowship, a communion of immersed believers in the Lord Jesus, whose lives are attuned to the harmony of the divine nature. Every person in whom the Holy Spirit dwells is my brother. To all such, by the same Spirit abiding in me, and ever seeking its own, I am drawn by a love which having embraced Him, reaches out to embrace all of His. The answer to the problem of division is the indwelling Spirit of God. Those who possess the Spirit, or rather, are possessed by the Spirit, “endeavor to guard the unity of the Spirit.” All who separate from their brethren, who seek to segregate, isolate and divide them do so because they do not possess the Spirit. “These be they which separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit” (Jude 19. AV). “It is these who set up divisions, worldly people, devoid of the Spirit” (Jude 19. RSV). “These are the men who split communities, for they are led by human emotions and never by the Spirit of God” (Jude 19. Phillips).

FUTILITY OF LAW

No law can possibly bring men together in heart. It is not within the power of law to do so. Law may provide for men being in proximity and its enforcement may maintain a degree of physical contiguity, but beyond this law cannot go. Our prisons are illustrations of this fact. The ineffectuality of law to accomplish the greater ideal is demonstrated in the turmoil in our own nation over integration. A Supreme Court decision can place white and colored children in the same classrooms, and soldiers may stand guard to see that the decision is heeded and obeyed, but the law of the land, and no interpretation of that law, can ever produce that quickening of conscience which alone can cause a re-evaluation of the rights and dignity of our fellow-citizens.

Even the divine law, ordained by angels in the hands of an intermediary, was “weak through the flesh.” And all law, either human or divine, must fall into that same category. The only hope of the fulfillment of the divine purpose, is for fleshly men, through some great transforming experience, to rise above the pale of law, to transcend the very domain of law, that is to be on a purely spiritual plane, and not in the flesh. How can this be possible? “But you are not in the flesh, you are in the Spirit, if the Spirit of God really dwells in you. Any one who does not have the Spirit of Christ does not belong to him” (Rom. 8:9)

Fellowship and unity present no problems to the Spirit of God. They are problems only to those who seek to solve them by law. There is one Spirit. If that Spirit dwells in me, He will seek out all others in whom He dwells, and being thus united in one Spirit, we can work out the knotty problems of interpretation.

The legalist disdains and discards the divine helper. To him the holy Spirit is the written word, and his only approach to unity is through debate and argument. But what saith the word? “So if there is any encouragement in Christ, any incentive of love, any participation in the Spirit, any affection and sympathy, complete my joy by being of the same mind, having the same love, being in full accord and of one mind” (Phil. 2:1, 2). Note that agreement and full accord do not come by laying down the law to each other, but by encouragement in Christ, the incentive of love, fellowship in the Spirit, affection and sympathy. Fellowship in the Spirit is not a fruit of agreement, but precedes and produces it. The legalist always reverses this process. He demands that we be of the same mind and in full accord (with his position) as a prelude to fellowship, but God establishes a fellowship or participation in the Spirit first, and in that atmosphere we labor to complete or grow toward a unity of mind and heart. We have been training lawyers, instead of developing disciples!

MAN AND LAW

Jesus has revealed to us that man is superior to law. Man is made in the image of God. He was made but a little lower than God. He was not made for law, nor fashioned to be under it, and some day will be free from its restraints. Law was given because of the fleshy propensities. “Yet we all know that the Law is not really meant for the good man, but for the man who has neither principles nor self-control, for the man who is really wicked, who has neither scruples nor reverence” (1 Tim. 1:9). Our relationship with Jesus and each other on earth is designed to prepare us for the fellowship in heaven. In the glorified realm there will be no law, for the characters of those who are there will not require it. Under the beneficent rule of the Messiah, through the power of the indwelling Spirit, we are being fitted for the eternal abode. If we have principles, self-control, scruples, and reverence, we require no law, for the law is given for those who have neither. But to turn the dispensation of grace into one of law, and appoint ourselves as judge, court, interpreter, bailiff and executor, to hound and harass those who cannot honestly agree with our every interpretation is to do evil and not good, regardless of how high our purpose, or how glorious and exalted our motives.

That we be not misunderstood, let us give a clearcut case of how the legalistic spirit operates in defiance of the intent of heaven. Remember that this spirit always first places an interpretation upon some portion of revelation, then exalts the interpretation to the status of revelation. Our blessed Lord, upon the night of his betrayal, instituted the Lord's Supper. Since the act of eating and drinking together was considered a visible manifestation of fellowship by the world of mankind; in conformity with that view, he took bread, blessed it, gave it to his disciples and told them to eat it. In like manner he took the cup, and having given thanks, told them to drink of it. A supper required two acts, eating and drinking. These require two ingredients, a solid and a liquid. The solid selected was bread, the liquid was the fruit of the vine. The divine requirement was to eat bread and drink the fruit of the vine in communion or fellowship, "For as often as you eat this bread and drink the cup, you proclaim the Lord's death until he come."

It was not the eating and drinking which made them members of one body, but because they were members of one body, the covenantal community, they ate and drank together. This did not create fellowship or establish them in the fellowship. It demonstrated that they were in the fellowship because they jointly participated in the body and blood of Jesus. "The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not a participation in the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not a participation in the body of Christ? Because there is one loaf, we who are many are one body, for we all partake of the same loaf." One purpose of Jesus in giving the Supper was to guard the fellowship against disintegration, by making it possible for his disciples to come together, or assemble as a church (1 Cor.

11:17, 18). Is it not peculiar that men have taken the very ordinance given to exemplify our fellowship and used it to destroy the communion it was intended to preserve? What an appalling and tragic picture it is to see the disciples of Jesus quarrelling over how to eat and drink, driving each other forth, creating factions and multiplying schisms, in defiance of the very purpose of the Supper!

Jesus gave no orders as to what kind of bread must be used, or how it should be broken or served. He gave no law as to the state of the fruit of the vine, or how it should be distributed. His only commands respected action— they were to eat the bread, drink the fruit of the vine, and do so in remembrance of Him. But men are not content to allow it to remain so. Those who depend upon law for justification must make laws where God has not made them. To them, the only way to serve acceptably is to serve legally. They must thus prescribe in every minute detail. Those who do not conform are not “loyal” nor “faithful” to God. These brethren are not, by nature, mean, uncharitable, or illiberal. They are not so much vindictive as they are victimized by their philosophy of salvation by law through partisan conformity, rather than by grace through faith. But this does not negate the terrible butchery in which they indulge on the body of Jesus. Those who first killed our Lord, said, “We have a law, and by our law he ought to die.” The law they referred to was the one given by God. Thus the Son of God was condemned to die by an interpretation of the law of God; and His spiritual body is now mangled by exactly the same procedure.

There are those who make the law that the bread must be unleavened. They would actually refuse to eat with children of the Father who use leavened bread. They reason that Jesus chose unleavened bread, then make this a law. But Jesus did not choose unleavened bread. He had no choice. Being a Jew, he simply took the kind of bread in common use in every Jewish home at that particular time, the bread which was their staple fare for seven days. And the reason the Jews ate it was to remind them of the haste in which their fathers fled from Egypt, their speedy exit allowing no time for the yeast to rise. Not once does the sacred scripture use the word azumos, unleavened bread, in connection with the Lord's Supper. It is always ortos, a loaf, whether leavened or not. Then to draw apart from those who use leavened bread, to refuse to eat with them, and to count them as unfaithful to God, is to create "an unleavened bread party" on the basis of a man-made law! "Who made thee a judge and a lawgiver?" "These are they which set up divisions, worldly, having not the Spirit."

But this is merely "the beginning of sorrows." Congregations of believers have been riven into splinters even over the method of breaking the bread. Leaders have meticulously searched and scrutinized their "law" to determine the exact technical procedure to be followed. Like the scribes of old they have searched the scriptures, and built up traditions out of their interpretations. Some have concluded that the one who presides at the table must break the loaf in two parts before it is distributed. Others have contended fiercely that each participant must break off his own portion as it is passed to him. Parties have been formed, challenges issued, and debates held. A sin-sick world has been treated to the sorry and sordid spectacle of a house filled with bitter partisans, separated physically by the center aisle, and in heart by their legalistic interpretations, fighting over how to break off a piece of bread representing the unity of believers in one body. In my library at this time is a book containing propositions for public debate, offered to the world as if salvation depended upon the settling of such technical and labored questions. Read these.

1. For a church to be Scriptural in its Communion service, the one serving at the table should, after thanks, break off a small portion of the loaf and eat it, before the other disciples partake. We affirm.

2. For a church to be Scriptural in its Communion Service, the one serving at the table should, after thanks, break the loaf in two at (or near) the middle and both pieces should be passed to other disciples. We deny.

In such a discussion both disputants use identically the same scriptures. They quote the same passages. Each claims his own interpretation is the only correct one. Each demands that his interpretation be accepted as the holy will of God. All who do not concur with this canon and subscribe to this rubric are branded, labeled and laughed out of court in scornful derision. They are driven out into the cold, unwept, unhonored, and unsung. This is the frightful length to which men will go under the guise of orthodoxy. They call such action “contending for the faith once delivered to the saints.” This is the effect of legalism, carried to its logical culmination, used to destroy and not to save!

In some cities there are “fermented wine” and “unfermented wine” parties. These have nothing in common except their zeal to fight and destroy each other. Childishly they call each other “fermented wine brethren” or “grape juice brethren.” But the term “brethren” is drowned either in the wine or the juice. Both search the scriptures diligently with the supreme purpose of bolstering their partisan positions. Men who know nothing of Greek and who could not tell a Hebrew character from a chicken track in the mud, learnedly sound off about the originals for wine. They batter and attack each other with such venom as to make it appear the purpose of God in sending His Son to suffer on the cross was to make our hope of entering heaven dependent upon how long the grape juice had been made before being used to participate in the communion of His blood.

Others are variously designated as “cups brethren” or “one-cuppers” depending upon whether the assembled saints drink in memory of the Lord from one container for all, or one for each. Again the partisan champions all quote the same passages. All force the entire gamut of holy writings to pay tribute to their respective views and the positions they uphold. From the figurative “cups” mentioned by the prophets, to the incidental reference of the Samaritan woman regarding drinking from the well of Jacob, there is a great furore created, and the fellowship of the saints is hinged upon metonymical usages, with a goodly number of those present in debate, neither knowing or caring what the term means, since they have already chosen up sides, and are backing “our preacher.” All of this is the result of a false concept of our relationship to God, a failure to recognize the people of God as a covenantal community of believers, and an attempt to convert it into a regimented combine in which original thinking is treason and a divergent opinion is the unpardonable sin.

MY POSITION

To me, this covenantal community is not a product of law, but of faith, hope, and love, the abiding and enduring factors. Our faith in Jesus has led us together. Only unbelief or lack of faith can separate us. At the table of the Lord I do not examine the bread, to see if it is leavened or unleavened. I do not examine the cup to see if it is fermented or unfermented. I do not examine the mode of breaking the bread, or of passing the cup. I examine myself. I can discern the Lord’s body whether the bread is leavened or unleavened, or whether the fruit of the vine is passed in a goblet or on a tray. In so doing I do not eat and drink judgment upon myself, and I am not to be judged by my brethren! I do not love leavened bread or unleavened bread. I do not love grape juice or fermented wine. I do not love any particular method of breaking bread. I do not love one container or multiple cups. I love Jesus, and I love my brethren— all of them! And I do not propose to allow any of them to shove me into a party where I shall have to hate the rest of them. I do not belong to a leavened bread party or an unleavened bread party.

I do not belong to a grape juice party or a fermented wine party. I do not belong to a cup party or an individual cup party. I am not a lawmaker or a judge. I belong to Jesus. He alone has my allegiance. He ransomed me, delivered me, and saved me. “He is the source of your life in Christ Jesus, whom God made our wisdom, our righteousness and sanctification and redemption” (1 Cor. 1:30).

I can eat the bread and drink the cup with my brethren regardless of their modes or methods, means or manners, because my approach to God is through Christ Jesus, not through law! I will not disown a single one of God’s children because of my personal opinion or interpretation. If one group sets me at naught because I love all the rest and regard them as brethren, I shall not be tempted to hate those who thus judge. I will still love them in spite of their action, kindled though it may be by the narrow spirit of partisanship. My evaluation of brotherhood is upon the basis of common Fatherhood. I shall not allow myself to put it upon any other basis.

It is in this spirit I now propose to examine the new covenant which establishes our relationship in this dispensation. It is my conviction, that the new covenant is no more written with pen and ink than it is upon two tablets of stone. It is written on fleshy tables of the heart with the Spirit of the living God. All whose hearts are so inscribed are a part of the covenantal community which God purchased with the blood of His Son. There is not a saved person on earth outside of this community. It is the one body. Besides it, there is no other. Every honest believer in the fact of the Sonship and Messiahship of Jesus of Nazareth who has been immersed on the basis of that faith, has been inducted into that community. “For by one Spirit we were all baptized into one body— Jews or Greeks, slaves or free— and all were made to drink of one Spirit.” That those who have been brought into this majestic relationship with Deity have allowed themselves to be divided into factions and sects is one of the most regrettable features of this age. But I cannot be of service to them by being the spokesman for another faction. I must keep myself free in heart and mind, to love them all, to serve the best interests of every one of them, for all of them are my brethren in Him, regardless of the unfortunate circumstances which hold them aloof from each other.

Cause for Concern

Mission Messenger (August 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

By invitation of a consecrated little band of believers, I recently spent three nights in a rural area of our state, during which I addressed respectable audiences assembled in a modest meeting house located at a crossroads. On every side spread fertile fields. The drone of tractors plying back and forth between rows of corn could be heard throughout the day. The community was composed of genial, hospitable and friendly people. They shared with their hard working neighbors, exchanging labor in critical times, and visits when crop conditions would permit. It was a privilege to be among them.

There was one disturbing feature which troubled my heart. Within a very small radius, three congregations maintained their separate buildings, and carried on their worship services, isolated and aloof from each other. They could all participate in the same social and community affairs. All belonged to the same farmers association; all sponsored the same 4-H Club, all were members of the same Parent-Teacher Association. In the realms of physical, moral and mental development, they could combine their efforts and their varied talents. It was only in the spiritual domain they went their several ways, with even families divided and rent asunder religiously.

The situation was worsened in my view, by the fact that all three of these small groups were descended from the great restoration movement of the previous century which had as its goal the uniting of the Christians in all sects. For years now they have been rivals, and although the harshness of the past has been partially dissipated, they still have no combined witness in the community, testifying to the power of the Spirit as a unifying force in their lives. I sought to ascertain the history of their division. It revealed the same tragic picture still found in so many localities.

Sixty years ago there was one congregation of disciples. Each Lord's Day the hitching rack outside the meetinghouse was lined with the teams and vehicles which transported happy neighbors to worship together in the Lord Jesus. Aged elders taught the word to the flock. Freedom to exhort was extended to all of the qualified brethren. Each Lord's Day night the whole community gathered again to sing the hymns of praise in unison, except when the time was given over to a visiting preacher to address them.

However, this peaceful condition was not to obtain always. "The instrumental music question" which had begun to disturb the tranquillity of congregations in the larger urban centers was introduced by one or two families. It became the sole topic of conversation in many homes and at private gatherings, as the pros and cons were voiced. The elders, regarding the instrument as a human novelty and innovation, requested that it not be agitated any further to the disruption of the harmony which had prevailed. One of the chief advocates of the instrument regarded this as an attempt of reactionaries and old fogies to stem the tide of spiritual progress. He made a personal canvass of the membership to put the leaders out and the instrument in. Feeling that he had sufficient backing to accomplish his purpose, he went to the home of one of the aged protestants, and losing his temper, shook his fist and announced they would have the instrument if they had to sue in the courts for possession of the property.

The same man claimed the floor on a certain Lord's Day and made the announcement publicly, telling those who did not propose to worship with the organ that it would be an opportune time to leave. The great majority arose, to the surprise of all, and followed one of the aged brethren to his home. There it was agreed to meet in a schoolhouse temporarily. Meantime the other brethren put the organ in, and continued to meet for several months, but lacking spiritual instructors, their services gradually dwindled away, and six months later the building which once resounded to hymns of love and praise was becoming the haunt of bats and pigeons.

Those who left, amalgamated their efforts with those of another small band, and soon began to grow, as peace and harmony prevailed. Then, once more, "a root of bitterness springing up" created dissension. A nearby congregation received into their membership one who came from the Baptist party. Hearing of this, a couple of brethren made mention of it to an elder, who replied that he would have done the same thing, being perfectly willing to recognize as valid, immersion in water of a believing penitent, even though such a person might be mistaken about the time when the judicial act of heaven took place in the remission of sins in connection with such immersion. The two immediately began an assault, in public and in private, denouncing the leader as unsound and disloyal. He requested that the matter be allowed to drop as the congregation might never be confronted with the problem, and, if so, it would be the time for resolving the question. He was informed that he would have to make public acknowledgment of his wrong in holding such an opinion, and renounce what was termed "sect baptism." This he declined to do, inasmuch as he could not renounce his personal conscience and conviction. Charges were formally filed against him and he was driven out. Once more a goodly number went with him, and another congregation was formed.

Today, there are three small groups meeting in the area. One bears the name "Christian Church," the other two the name "Church of Christ." All are good people of high moral integrity, but there is little fraternization between them. I am convinced that God wants us all to be disturbed and troubled about such conditions and to do something about them. Such division exists in contravention of the divine will and of the prayer of Jesus. It weakens our testimony to the world. We live in a world of division and distortion. If the Holy Spirit cannot draw us closer to an adjustment of our difficulties and a settlement of our differences, we may doom our children and our children's children to a fate worse than death. We can never achieve unity by talking about our brethren who differ with us—we must talk with them and to them. We must have the breadth of vision, the love for God, the zeal for the cause of Christ, which will not rest or be quiet until God sends forth judgment unto victory.

Our problem is not so much one of our differences, great as they may appear, but of indifference, of unconcern, of love for the status quo. That is what makes men froth and fume when someone proposes to do something about unity instead of merely preaching sermons on the subject. I do not agree that these issues were settled in finality fifty years ago, and that all we can do is continue to go our separate ways. Nothing is settled until it is settled in harmony with God's will, and it is not His will that we be divided. Nothing is settled so far as I am concerned while I am cut off, alienated, separated, and segregated, from any of God's children and my dear brethren in the Lord. Building a wall higher does not solve the problem when the wall had no right to exist in the first place.

We have inherited conditions we did not create. We were not present when they were created. But we need not perpetuate the feuds of our fathers. We need not reproduce the passions which produced them. We need not rekindle the animosities which aggravated them. So long as the present state of division continues in the disciple brotherhood, none of us can be guiltless, none can be wholly free from blame. While one is in schism all are in schism! A schism is a rent or a tear, as in a garment. When a rip exists in a coat, no one can jealously clutch the part he holds and regard it as the whole garment. No party is “the faithful church.” No faction or segment is “the loyal church.” There are some in each group who are as faithful as they know how to be; there are many in all who disgrace our calling!

But what can be done to alleviate the condition handed over to us by those who have gone before? What practical steps may be taken in such a community as the one to which we have alluded? No one can give an answer that is universal in application. The problem differs in each locality. The method used effectively in one place might not work in another. Men differ in their manners, modes and methods of tackling a problem. We must be free to labor as best we can in a spirit of love. We must adapt ourselves to varying situations. We must become all things to all men, so that we may win some. But there are certain things that are essential and basic. We humbly suggest a few of them.

1. We must cultivate a deep love for all of God’s children, not merely for those who are members of our party or group. We must yearn for the presence and fellowship of all who have made a covenant with God. Our love must not be a narrow, confined and regimented affection for those who see things as we do, but a demonstration of the divine agape, reaching forth in an unquenchable philanthropy to embrace all who have come to regard Jesus as King.

2. We must cease to regard ourselves as “the loyal brethren” to the exclusion of all others. The prophet declares that the “holier-than-thou” attitude is a smoke in the nostrils of God. Self-righteousness is not the key which unlocks the door to heaven. Let us then evaluate men as God judges them, allowing each individual to stand on his own merits.

3. We must pray for open doors through which we can catch a greater vision and through which spiritual enlightenment will stream in a continuous flood of light. What might be accomplished if two groups of estranged brethren were to meet for an hour, just to pray together on bended knee! What could be lost by any one in such a season at the throne of mercy?

4. We must no longer consider and regard as apostates those who differ with our interpretations and opinions. Let us credit others with being sincere and honest, even though they may be in error. None of us are perfect, so we can afford to meet as equals in the presence of God.

5. We should cultivate the wisdom to discern between things of primary and lesser importance. We emphasize some things far beyond their value and importance. Jesus said that there were “weightier matters of the law.” To him, mercy was greater than sacrifice, even though the latter was commanded. It is difficult to elevate the trivial and incidental features of life, without relegating the weightier matters to a secondary place.

6. We must be content to labor and to wait. Many of us will die long before our feeble efforts bear fruit. The situation in which we find ourselves is one of long standing. It is complicated by ancestor worship, and tribal taboos. Tradition hallows things, whether they be right or wrong, good or bad. So we can only sow the seed and pluck up an occasional thorn or thistle. The Holy Spirit must produce the fruit of peace, joy and unity. It must be enough for most of us that we merely plant the shrubs along the highway, so that our children can pluck the blossoms and breathe the perfume.

7. We must not regard all those who differ with us as causing division. It is a common thing to apply such passages as “Mark them which cause divisions and offences . . . and avoid them” in wholesale fashion. I suspect that the passage is generally misapplied to start with, but not all who are in factions with which we are not allied have caused division. Many of them, like the rest of us, grew up in conditions they did not create. There is a difference between one in the driver's seat who causes an automobile wreck and the innocent victims who are passengers in the vehicle he is guiding.

8. We must guard against confusing the world pattern by new areas of division. There will arise among us prophets of dissension and apostles of schism. They will do their best, under guise of orthodoxy, to sow discord. They will misapply what we say, attack us behind our backs, seek to turn brethren against us. This is the real test of our thesis on fellowship and brotherhood. Can we make it work in our lives? Can we still pray for and labor to help those brethren who, in misguided zeal, try to poison and envenom the minds of others? Let us firmly resolve that we will never encourage another division among God's people in any manner, and that we will labor incessantly to do something of a positive and definite nature to lessen the tensions created by past divisions. "Let us follow after peace and things wherewith one may edify another."

The above suggestions are simple. No doubt they appear trite statements. They may seem too humble to accomplish a great deal. But God will work with those whose attitudes change to conform with his love. Our hearts will throb with joy through the love shed abroad in them by the Holy Spirit. Remember that those who work for peace work with God. The angels in the annunciation to the shepherds, proclaimed peace on earth to men of good will. Those who take up that refrain and herald it to the divided realm of Christendom today will be the companions of the angels. The Spirit can accomplish what the flesh fails to do!

Crossing the Frontier

Mission Messenger (August 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

All of us have read the personal stories of those in our day who are refugees from the tyranny of Communism. One of the sternest and most eloquent indictments of this evil system which conceives of man as a mere cog in the Machine of State, is found in the number of people who plan and plot to escape into the protection of the free world. Literally thousands have asked for asylum in neighboring countries where the sanctity of individual rights is a cardinal feature of political concepts.

Many of the escapees gain their freedom only after enduring almost intolerable suffering. To such there can be, on this earth, no greater relief than that which comes when, perhaps in the darkness of the night, they suddenly realize they have crossed the frontier. Behind them lies a world of persecution and privation, ahead there looms up a future of freedom and opportunity.

The Christian is also one who has escaped from enslavement and terror. His life was once haunted by fear and failure. The heavy links of the fetters of sin chafed his spirit, until every movement became a dread, and existence became an agony within itself. Guarded by the watchdogs of Satan, surrounded by the barbed wire of sin, his state seemed hopeless. But then came the Good News that one could escape the corruption that is in the world through lust. How can such a person be sure when he has crossed the line into friendly territory? How can he be certain that he is in that area where spiritual asylum awaits his jaded soul?

J. B. Phillips, in his translation, has a happy rendering of 1 John 3:14. "We know that we have crossed the frontier from death to life because we do love the brothers." The other side of the frontier is the death side. It is filled with desolate swamps of selfishness, giving off a miasma of hate. Here each man seeks his own welfare, oblivious to and unconcerned about the needs of others. It is a black belt of greed. It is a region of death. "The man without love for his brother is living in death already."

When the heart overflows with love for the brethren one has crossed the frontier. Some settle down too close to the border and are again captured and returned to slavery. We beg of you who have escaped to go on unto perfection. Do not camp too close to the frontier.

Stop, Look, Listen!

Mission Messenger (August 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

A good brother, whom I love in the Lord, and who is greatly distressed by my plea for the unity of all believers in Christ, writes thus:

I would to God you would stop, look and listen before it is too late . . . If you continue on the course you are on you will do more damage to the brotherhood than anyone has ever done before. I would to God you had never started a paper.

I have a deep sympathy for brethren who thus write. Through the years we build up a traditional pattern of thought. We erect walls and barricades about it, and hedge ourselves in. We feel secure on the inside with those who conform and who thus constitute “the brotherhood.” We worship as our heroes those who are aggressive champions of the partisan position. We honor an editor who creates a journal which can be used as a mouthpiece to defend our views. We are happy, content, and sometimes smug, in our little realm. Eventually we come to regard it as the kingdom of heaven. It is the one body. The sovereignty of Jesus extends only as far as its walls.

All goes well until someone scales the wall, and rising above partisan views, glimpses the fields beyond, and realizes that truth can no more be contained within walls of our construction, than sunlight can be caught in cans, or the atmosphere confined to bottles. When such a person advocates that fellowship is brotherhood in Jesus, that it is the result, not of agreement or endorsement, but of a common spiritual parentage, he is regarded by the party as a traitor, and the truth he proclaims is branded as heresy. But, brethren beloved, we ought to realize that the walls we build cannot keep truth out. They merely keep us shut up and shut in.

God's purpose will be accomplished on this earth. His will must be done. If this little journal had never been started, or if it ceases to exist now, God will raise up other and nobler men than this editor to send forth greater and better papers. "The brotherhoods" we have constructed need to be shaken. The walls we have erected need to fall down. The party spirit is sinful. Sectarianism is wrong. We need to awaken to our sense of destiny. Let us stop only where God tells us to stop. Let us look on the fields where he has told us to look. Let us listen to His voice, regardless of cost. Let us crusade for unity with Christ our Lord!

The New Covenant

Mission Messenger (September 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

In previous articles in this series we have shown that God has revealed himself to be a covenant-making person in dealing with intelligent creatures. The sacred history is simply the story of the covenants made with mankind, and the relationships growing out of them. In this essay we begin the study of the new covenant ratified by the blood of Jesus. No more important topic can engage the attention of this, or any other generation. We approach the investigation in a spirit of humility and reverence. And we begin with a prediction made by Jeremiah, recorded in chapter 31 of his prophetic scriptures.

The background of this utterance was a time of crisis. Jerusalem had been attacked by the Babylonians who were fast developing into world conquerors. Prophets, priests and people had been carried into exile. The king and the queen mother had been seized and deported. As if this were not enough, the forces of the superstitious Nebuchadnezzar were again knocking at the gates of Judah. I doubt not that the words of Jeremiah had a primary meaning related to the return from exile, but the Holy Spirit used them in a far more extended sense with which we are especially concerned.

Behold, the days are coming says the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and the house of Judah, not like the covenant which I made with their fathers when I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt, my covenant which they broke, though I was their husband, says the Lord. But this is the covenant which I will make with the house of Israel after those days, says the Lord; I will put my law within them, and I will write it upon their hearts; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. And no longer shall each man teach his neighbor, and each his brother, saying, Know the Lord, for they shall all know me, from the least of them to the greatest of them, says the Lord; for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more.

The writer of Hebrews quotes this passage from Jeremiah and identifies the new covenant as the one which Jesus mediates. In view of the fact that his priesthood is confirmed by divine oath, it is affirmed that “This makes Jesus the surety of a better covenant.” Since this covenant was sealed “by his own blood, thus securing an eternal redemption,” it should be carefully examined by those of us who seek a covenantal relationship with God. For this reason we propose a careful investigation of the words of the inspired prophet.

1. The covenant was to be new. It was not a continuation or perpetuation of a previous covenant. It was not a revised or amended version of a former one. In nature, purpose, method and results, it was to be distinctive.

2. It was to be made with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah. At the time when Jeremiah spoke, the people of God were divided. The ten tribe kingdom of Israel, with its capital at Samaria, had actually long since been carried away by Assyria. But the new covenant was not to be made with one segment of God’s people. It was to embrace all of them. It would destroy the spirit of hostility which had persisted and constitute a unifying force. Every one of the called ones would be a part of the same covenantal community.

3. The new covenant was to be different than the one made at Sinai. It was to have a different mediator, a different purpose, and be validated by different blood. The first covenant was national. It was engraved upon two tablets of stone, and the central location where these were kept was holy. It was the sanctuary. The new covenant was individual. It was written upon human hearts. Wherever a child of God chanced to be, with the Deity dwelling in his heart through the Spirit, that was consecrated territory. The human heart, the repository of the new covenant, was to be the only sanctuary on earth. Men who seek to consecrate buildings, or certain portions of earthly edifices, reveal that their lives are regulated, not by the new covenant but by the old. Such men are Judaistic, seeking to be perfected by the flesh.

4. The people of God violated the first covenant and trampled its specifications underfoot. In this, no blame was attached to God. He was a faithful husband. He sustained an intimate and pure relationship through the centuries. The deviations were the devising of the people. While the covenant was being written they forsook the first two requirements, and set up a golden calf. This stubborn and speedy disobedience was characteristic of the nation throughout its career.

5. The great difference in the covenants is pointed out. The first was written on tablets of stone. The statutes, judgments and laws growing out of it were written in a book by the mediator. It was a legalistic program and all the laws were given at the very inception of national status. The new covenant was not to be a written code. It was not engraved upon tablets of stone. It was not written with pen and ink. It was engraved upon the hearts of the chosen ones. The mediator of the new covenant wrote not one word, except what he traced in the dirt upon one occasion (John 8:6). The covenantal community had no sacred writings for many years. The message they heard from the beginning was to love one another (1 John 3:11). With such love they needed no laws, statutes, or commands, for "he who loves his neighbor has fulfilled the law” (Rom. 13:8). “The commandments . . . are summed up in this sentence, ‘You shall love your neighbor as yourself’” (Rom. 13:9). “And this is his commandment, that we should believe in the name of his Son Jesus Christ and love one another, just as he has commanded us” (1 John 3:23). The epistles were not written to establish covenant relationship, or to constitute the testament, or agreement. They were written to those in covenantal relationship, so they would “know how life ought to be lived in the house of God, which is the Community of the Living God, the prop and stay of the truth” (1 Tim. 3:15 Authentic Version).

6. Under the former covenant, those who were born of the fleshly seed of Abraham, were circumcised at the age of eight days. This brought them under the covenant, but, of course, they knew nothing of their relationship. They had to be taught to know the Lord as they grew up. The entire nation was in covenant relationship by fleshly birth and a physical mark, not as a matter of volition, but simply by virtue of the circumstances of birth. However, under the new covenant, justification is based upon personal faith. This requires a knowledge of the identity of the Lord prior to making the decision to commit one’s self unto him. Thus it is no longer required that those in the covenantal community teach each other to know the Lord, for all, from least to greatest, must know him, as a requisite to admission to the community of the holy ones.

7. Those who constitute the covenantal community are those whose iniquity has been forgiven, and whose sins will be no longer remembered. Since “the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin,” it is obvious that those are a part of the covenant whose hearts are sprinkled clean from an evil conscience and whose bodies have been washed with pure water. That this is correct is evident from the quotation by the writer of Hebrews of this part of the prophecy of Jeremiah in the very context of the statement we have transcribed (Cp. Heb. 10:16-22).

Since the new covenant consists of the writing of God's law upon the hearts of those who know him, and since this involves forgiveness of iniquity and blotting out of sin from the divine memory, it is obvious that whatever is essential to forgiveness of sins, is essential to entering the covenant relationship. All therefore, who obtain remission of sins under the economy of the new testament, are thereby brought into covenant relationship with God, and are entitled to all of the rights, privileges and prerogatives accruing from such relationship.

The covenantal community at Corinth consisted of "those sanctified in Christ Jesus, called saints." This implies the issuance of a call and a response to it. The call of heaven is motivated by love. What motivates the human response to it by sinful men? All religion derives from a sense of need. This creates a recognition of dependency upon a power or force outside of self, but interested in and concerned about the individual and his ultimate attainment to the fullest expression of his personality. Each of us must realize a feeling of helplessness and the utter futility of our own efforts through the flesh to attain our ideal. This is exactly what happens when the soul has an encounter with the Christ and his own sinlessness compared with the divine estimate of our sin, is borne into our consciousness.

"For God has done what the law, weakened by the flesh, could not do: sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh and for sin, he condemned sin in the flesh." The enormity of sin is thus demonstrated by the greatest act in the drama of the ages. The malignity of sin is manifested by the fact that Deity had to interpose in human affairs by assuming the likeness of human flesh. The death of Jesus for sin, and its condemnation in the flesh, forever impresses upon the heart the guilt of sin until it is removed by an experience so great, it can only be called a death, and the recovery from it a resurrection. That experience brings us into covenant relationship with God. It makes possible that agreement through divine grace which is called the new testament. We speak of one owning, or having, a testament, referring to a volume originally consisting of letters written with pen and ink. Actually, we are a part of the new testament. It is written upon our hearts by the Holy Spirit. It is the result of a personal and individual encounter of the human spirit with the Son of God. We conceive that there are four related aspects by which we enter into the Great Agreement with God. No one can really reach that state where God “has put his seal upon us and given us his Spirit in our hearts as a guarantee” (2 Cor. 1:22) until he passes through these phases of soul response to God’s call.

1. Conviction of Sin

Only one who faces the stark reality that he is lost can ever know the real crying need of a Saviour. He must correctly evaluate sin in all of its hideous magnitude. He must see it as a cancer devouring his spiritual life and producing death. “It was sin, working death in me through what is good, in order that sin might be shown to be sin, and . . . might become sinful beyond measure.” There must come the recognition that such a person is “carnal, sold under sin.”

The covenant with God is based upon unreserved trust in the power of God, and utter negation of human ability to rescue self from sin. The apostle states it thus, “For I know that nothing good dwells within me, that is, in my flesh. I can will what is right, but I cannot do it.” The Authentic Version renders this, “The intention is there, but the capacity to carry out what is right is not.” With this feeling of futility comes a realization of the inevitability of death, in a spirit of slavery and fear. There is the feeling of being hopelessly trapped with death awaiting at every turn. The helpless victim cries out in anguish, “Wretched man that I am! Who will deliver me from this death?”

(Rom. 7:24). Now it was precisely at the time when the world was in a state of helpless agony that Christ brought hope through his death. “And we can see that it was while we were powerless to help ourselves that Christ died for sinful men.” What was true of the universe of mankind is true of every individual in it, for we are saved as individuals. It is only when we touch bottom that we can begin the upward climb. With pride and arrogance crucified, and emptied of all thought of ambition, grandeur and power— there is then no other way to go but up!

2. Consciousness of Grace

It is those who sit in darkness who appreciate the light. The wanderer who knows he is lost appreciates the call of the searching party. When the hapless soul, languishing in his own guilt, trembling in the presence of a just God from whom he is alienated, hears the Good News that “while we were his enemies, Christ reconciled us to God by dying for us,” he then realizes the value which heaven attaches to his soul. He is drawn by grace, the undeserved kindness of God, toward the Christ, as if by a powerful magnet. He dare not minimize the enormity of sin which has enslaved him, but now, for the first time he is aware that there is something more potent than sin. “Though sin is shown to be wide and deep, thank God his grace is wider and deeper still! The whole outlook changes— sin used to be the master of men and in the end handed them over to death: now grace is the ruling factor, with righteousness as its purpose and its end the bringing of men to the eternal life of God through Jesus Christ our Lord” (Rom. 5:20, 21).

The sense of being unwanted, resulting from a guilt complex, fades away in the glorious revelation that grace operates through love for the best interest of every man on earth. “For while as a result of one man’s sin, death by natural consequence became the common lot of men, it was by the generosity of God, the free giving of the grace of one man Jesus Christ, that the love of God overflowed for the benefit of all men.”

The troubled soul, now conscious of God’s love, and stimulated by it to love, eagerly reaches out to appropriate to itself the benefit accruing from grace. The testimony relating to the “one man Jesus Christ,” who was the very embodiment of divine grace, accomplished what no law could ever do. God put him forward to be received by faith, for in the receiving of him we become sharers of the promise of the ages. “That is why it depends on faith, in order that the promise may rest on grace, and be guaranteed to all his descendants” (Rom. 4:16). “But now the righteousness of God has been manifested apart from law . . . the righteousness of God through faith in Jesus Christ for all who believe . . . they are justified by his grace as a gift, through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus, whom God put forward as an expiation by his blood, to be received by faith.”

The wonderful thing about God’s grace is that it places everything in proper perspective. It admits that sin is deep and wide. It acknowledges the weakness of law which can never give life. It recognizes man’s inability to save himself by sheer will power. It asserts the futility of human effort and works to earn or to achieve justification. It is axiomatic that justification cannot be obtained as payment for duties performed. It must be a gift, and a divine one. “Now if a man works, his wages are not counted as a gift but as a fair reward. But if a man, irrespective of his work, has faith in him who justifies the sinful, then the man’s faith is counted as righteousness and that is the gift of God. This is the happy state of the man whom God accounts righteous, apart from his achievements” (Rom. 4:4, 5). This in no wise affirms that those who are justified need not serve God, nor does it suggest they are not required to work. The key is found in the expressions “irrespective of his work,” and “apart from his achievements.” There is work and there are achievements, but justification is not based upon these.

The Holy Spirit conditions our hope on the rich mercy, great love, and tremendous generosity of God's grace "expressed toward us in Christ Jesus." This lifts salvation out of the domain of wage or reward and places it in the realm of divine kindness, where it is available through faith in the Lord Jesus. "But even though we were dead in sins God, who is rich in mercy, because of the great love he had for us, gave us life together with Christ — it is, remember, by grace and not by achievement that you are saved. . . . Thus he shows for all time the tremendous generosity of the grace and kindness he has expressed toward us in Christ Jesus. It was nothing you could or did achieve— it was God's gift to you. No one can pride himself upon earning the love of God. The fact is that what we are we owe to the hand of God upon us. We are born afresh in Christ, and born to do those good deeds which God planned for us to do" (Eph. 2:4-9).

3. Crucifixion of Self

A consciousness of the exceeding sinfulness of sin, and of the majesty and holiness of God, emphasizes the great barrier between God and man living in the flesh. "Those who are in the flesh cannot please God" (Rom. 8:8). It is evident that the flesh must be disposed of with such finality that we no longer live according to it "for if you live according to the flesh you will die" (Rom. 8:13). But the sinful body will resist destruction. Sin will not easily relinquish its captives. Jesus demonstrated that the only possible answer to sinful flesh is the cross. While he was crucified for all, it is true that all who would live must be crucified with him. Two crosses are essential to our deliverance, his cross and ours.

Crucifixion was cruel, agonizing, shameful and debasing. Every moment on the cross was one of torture and torment. It is essential that we remember that those enslaved by sin cannot choose some polite, respectable and easy way to rid themselves of the sinful passions which produce fruit unto death. There can be no new life without a resurrection, no resurrection without death— and that death must be crucifixion. The old man of sin must be nailed to the tree that a new creation, all that counts for anything, may result. “But far be it from me to glory except in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by which the world has been crucified to me, and I to the world. For neither circumcision counts for anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creation” (Gal. 6:14, 15). “And those who belong to Christ Jesus have crucified the flesh with its passions and desires” (Gal. 5:24).

The new creation is the work of the Spirit of God. Man can no more create himself anew than he could create himself originally. We put the body of sin to death by the Spirit. “For if you live according to the flesh you will die, but if by the Spirit you put to death the deeds of the body you will live” (Rom. 8:13). To be truly in covenant relationship with God, one must destroy his wicked self. The corpse must be removed from the tenement, so that a new tenant can move in and abide. So long as we toy with the idea of having both we deceive ourselves and are of all men most miserable. “I have been crucified with Christ; it is no longer I who live but Christ who lives in me; and the life I now live in the flesh, I live by faith in the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me” (Gal. 2:20). “It is no longer I who live.” “The life I now live.” What does this paradox imply? Simply that faith in the Son of God is so powerful that it actually causes the complete personality to be merged into and identified with its object, until the believer no longer lives except as the object of his faith, Christ Jesus, lives in him. That is why the new covenant is not at all based upon faith in a system of doctrine, a theological concept, or a series of creedal interpretations— but upon faith in a person, the transforming person of the Son of God.

We must be united with Jesus. Fellowship is a sharing. It is a joint participation. It is not merely a sharing of good things. It is the sharing of a life with all that life entails. “We are heirs of God and fellow heirs with Christ, provided we suffer with him in order that we may also be glorified with him” (Rom. 8:17). But Jesus died and his death was by crucifixion. To be united with him we must experience a like death. “For if we have been united with him in a death like his, we shall certainly be united with him in a resurrection like his. We know that our old self was crucified with him so that the sinful body might be destroyed, and we might no longer be enslaved to sin. For he who has died is freed from sin” (Rom. 6:5-7). “For you have died, and your life is hid with Christ in God” (Col. 3:3).

4. Culmination of Compact

All relationship to God is upon a covenant basis. The new testament, or covenant, is not a compilation of epistles. It is not a law, or written code. “Our sufficiency is from God, who has qualified us to be ministers of a new covenant, not in a written code but in the Spirit; for the written code kills, but the Spirit gives life” (2 Cor. 3:6). The new testament is a personal, individual compact or agreement entered into with God. The human heart is now the holy of holies where the tablets of the covenant are kept. It is the sanctuary. It is now the dwelling place of Deity. It is inscribed by the Spirit. “You show that you are a letter from Christ, delivered by us, written not with ink but with the Spirit of the living God, not on tablets of stone but on tablets of human hearts” (2 Cor. 3:3). Each man is his own priest daily ministering in the sanctuary of his own heart. This is holy ground where no other man has any right to intrude.

We have learned that in all ages God has made his blessings available to mankind upon the basis of ordinances. This is true in both the domains of nature and of grace. The ordinances of God are always designed to accomplish His purpose. They are always adapted to the needs and conditions of those to whom given. Separated from the divine enabling power the ordinances would be useless, empty and futile, and would appear merely superstitious. It is the investment with divine authority which makes the ordinance meaningful, the fact that it is an ordinance of God.

Since the relationship of the new covenant is established by grace through faith, any ordinance of God in conjunction therewith must act as a test or measure of the quality of faith. The conditioning of blessings upon such a test does not imply that they are granted on a basis other than faith, but upon the basis of faith perfected, that is, demonstrated and proven to be effective. Religion involves both the will of God and the will of man. The authority of the first and the freedom of the second must be preserved in order that the proper relationship be unimpaired. Any subjection of man to God must be voluntary, a willing surrender, rather than a forceful capture. This surrender must be a commitment to Jesus, the result of sincere faith or wholehearted confidence in Him as the revelation of God.

God proposes and man accepts through faith. This necessitates the providing of proper motives to induce man to act. Such motives must be worthy of the dignity of Him who offers them, and commensurate with the blessings to be bestowed. Inasmuch as the conferring of divine blessings or benefits is the result of God's grace through man's faith, it is but reasonable that such faith be tested to determine its worth or merit.

The fairness and impartiality of this procedure is indicated in the fact that God authorizes man's faith as a test of his own integrity. He promised Israel abundant material blessings, conditioned upon their willingness to surrender unto him a tenth of such blessings as they already possessed. This could be nothing less than a test of faith. One does not surrender what he now has in order to secure something greater upon the basis of a promise, unless he has confidence in the one who promises. God said, "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be food in my house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it" (Mal. 3:10). Man tests God's promises by his faith; God tests man's faith through his promises.

In every dispensation God has tested the faith of man. In every instance such a test has obviously been made by a positive, rather than a moral ordinance. In no case could man see the connection between the requirement and the result. If he had been able to do so, his obedience would not have been a matter of faith, but of rationalization from the law of cause and effect. God tested Adam with a command not to eat a certain fruit; Abraham with the command to offer the son of promise upon an altar; Israel with orders to march around a walled city thirteen times before sounding a blast on trumpets of ram's horn and raising a shout.

The greatest need of man is freedom from sin and reconciliation with God. It is only when the guilt and penalty of sin are borne away that we can enjoy covenant relationship with him who is holy. Our whole being cries out for cleansing from the guilt of sin; justification from the nature of sin; and remission of the penalty of sin. God has proposed a universal proclamation of good tidings as a basis of salvation from sin for every person who believes. That proclamation, by its very nature, must concern facts. These facts, in order to be believed, must be well-defined and attested to by credible witnesses. The belief of those facts places man in position where the amnesty of heaven can be granted unto him.

Reconciliation implies restoration of peace with God. This peace is the result of justification, the declaring of the sinner free from guilt, and justification is by faith (Rom. 5:1). "Being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood" (Rom. 3:24, 25). "Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ” (Gal. 2:16). “Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus” (Gal. 3:26).

In view of the enormity of sin and the magnitude of the blessings to be conferred by justification and reconciliation, what type of test could be proposed and arranged in harmony with the divine purpose and majesty, which would provide adequate proof of man’s faith and thus his worthiness to be recipient of the promises? We very humbly submit that such a test in connection with the new covenant should possess the following characteristics.

Nature of the Test

1. It should consist of a single, simple overt act, so no complex relationship of a series of acts, can create any question or confusion as to when obedience is completed and the result obtained. This is very essential because of the varied states of those who need reconciliation.

2. It should be revealed in language, the meaning of which is easily ascertainable according to accepted rules of interpretation, that no doubt be entertained as to the exact nature of the requirement.

3. It should be a public act, easily discernible by others. This we predicate upon the fact that such an act of obedience must initiate the one submitting thereto into the community of the sanctified ones, and for the perpetuity and preservation of the rights and privileges of that covenantal community, all must know who are the members thereof, and when such membership became valid.

4. Any material element employed in the fulfillment of such test must be universally distributed, that no man on earth be required to submit to that which is impossible by virtue of lack of an essential natural element.

5. In view of the fact that a man must die to his previous life, the act which tests his faith must be one in which the subject enacts the role of the dead, that is, it must be one of passive submission to an action performed in his behalf by another.

6. Since it is for induction into the fellowship of those who have humbled themselves by complete commitment and unreserved surrender to the will of another, it should be personally humiliating from the standpoint of the unbeliever, and destructive of all pride.

7. It should also be universally recognized as a symbol of cleansing, to be appropriate to its relationship to sin.

8. So that its connection with the facts of the good tidings which must be believed may be clearly perceived it ought to be a re-enactment of those facts, so that the subject may experience a sense of personal participation in those facts, and all others may be made aware of the impact of those facts upon his heart.

9. It must be an act in which the doer can see no connection between the thing done and the blessing to be received as a result.

Identifying the Ordinance

What test does God propose under the economy of the new covenant, to determine if our faith is of the quality which deserves a bestowal of the magnificent blessings of forgiveness of transgressions, the indwelling of his Holy Spirit, and the hope of eternal life? The simplest way to answer this is to determine what the inspired apostles required of those who believed, in order that remission of sins might be granted. No better occasion could be afforded than the first proclamation of the glad tidings which constitute the power of salvation. This proclamation of facts must take place after the acts which constitute its content. Since those acts involve the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus, we must come this side of his resurrection from the dead. On the first Pentecost following that event, the first public proclamation of the Good News was made by Simon Peter at Jerusalem.

Those who heard, were convicted of the fact that Jesus of Nazareth was the Messiah, and that he had been elevated to the right hand of God, having been made both Lord and Christ. This conviction caused them to cry out and ask what to do. Theirs was a plain question. It demanded an unmistakable reply. That reply is positive and incisive. “Reform, and be immersed every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins” (Acts 2:38). Note that they were to be baptized in the name, that is, by the authority of Jesus Christ. Here was a genuine test of their faith in that authority. There are certain things recorded by Luke which cannot be denied as relating to this occasion. Men may, in order to justify certain creeds and opinions, quibble about the meaning and applications of these things, but the facts are unalterable and undeniable. Consider these things. The people asked what to do. They were told to reform and be immersed. They were told to do this by the authority of Jesus Christ. They were instructed to do so by an ambassador of the absent King. That ambassador was under the direct influence, yea, was filled with the Holy Spirit.

Regardless of what may be entailed in baptism as here commanded, and irrespective of its antecedents, consequences, or relationships to the new covenant, sinners were told by divine authority to be baptized and this applied to Jews, their posterity, Gentiles—that is, all who were subjects of the call of the Good News. This is the test of faith proposed by divine authority. The scholarship of the whole world is in agreement that the word “baptism” in its original import meant “immersion, submersion, burial, dipping, overwhelming.” This is substantiated by the universal practice of the primitive church when closest to the time when the command was given. That this was immersion in water is evidenced by Peter himself in Acts 10:47.

Does immersion of the believing penitent in water constitute a proper and valid test of the faith of such a person? Let us examine the suggestions previously enunciated and consider them as numbered, so that you may make proper comparison.

Examining the Ordinance

1. Immersion in water is a single, simple open act, to which one can submit purely upon the basis of faith in the authority and Lordship of Jesus, and without being possessed of great philosophic ability.

2. Baptism can be misunderstood only by those who want to do something other than what God has authorized, and by the very act of beclouding the meaning of the term, show that they lack the first essential— faith! The same rules of interpretation applied to any human document written in the same age as the account of Luke, will establish beyond any doubt what baptism involves.

3. Immersion in water is not a secret, personal, private or internal act, but is an open act which may be witnessed by many, and must always be witnessed by at least one other, the person who performs it, thus constituting an initiation ceremony into the covenantal community, which can be established in the mouth of two or more witnesses.

4. The material element is universally obtainable. Man's body is three-fourths liquid, and water covers the globe in approximately the same proportion. This one item alone goes far toward establishing immersion in water as a test reflecting divine mercy, and when considered in conjunction with the other attributes of such a test will conclusively demonstrate it.

5. The role of the one being immersed is passive. The one who immerses acts in the role of a mortician, merely burying one who is dead. One could no more scripturally immerse himself than he could physically bury himself after his decease. All divine communication relative to the action of baptism is given to the one performing the act, never to the one submitting to it. What other arrangement could the divine intelligence have commanded which so aptly fits this requirement?

6. Only humble souls can be recipients of God's blessing. Any test, therefore, which would admit the ones who are worthy, by the same token must bar entrance to those who are not. Rebellion and pride are the twin evils of the human heart. Faith dethrones the first; humility destroys the second. Baptism is proof of our triumph over these. In baptism one submits to authority simply because it is authority. No reasoning process known to man can figure any relationship between what he is required to do and what he seeks to obtain. Rebellion is crushed in baptism. And what could be more humbling than for one who has exhibited pride in dress and grooming, to be led into a pool, and there be plunged beneath its waters, to be lifted up with wet garments clinging and water dripping from the whole person?

7. The immersion of the body or any part thereof in water has been recognized as a means of cleansing, and is universally practiced for that purpose. So true is this, that special instruction had to be given, that in the performance of the act as a test of faith, it was not for "the putting away of the filth of the flesh."

8. Baptism is a re-enactment of the facts of the glad tidings which constitute the power of God unto salvation. "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection” (Rom. 6:3-5).

9. It is here that baptism proves its worthiness as a real test of faith. Remission of sins takes place in heaven. It is a judicial act of God, and not of man. But baptism is performed on earth by man and for man. No one can see any connection between one man immersing another in water on earth, and the remitting of the sins of that person in heaven. There is but one reason why any accountable being on earth would submit to baptism of his person in water as a religious act, and that is because of faith in the authority of God.

Baptism and the Covenant

Baptism is not the covenant we make with God. It is not a work of merit by which the covenant is secured. It is an expression of faith, an open manifestation to the world of our complete surrender unto Him in our hearts. The new covenant is embodied in Christ Jesus. It is in him and through him that we sustain a relationship and have communion with God. “He is our peace” (Eph. 2:14). Our covenant of peace is not a law or legal arrangement, it is not a series of documents, dogmas, or decretals. It is not a creed, confession or constitution. Our creed is Christ. Of him the Lord spoke thus, “I am the Lord, I have called you in righteousness, I have taken you by the hand and kept you; I have given you as a covenant unto the people, a light to the nations, to open the eyes that are blind, to bring out the prisoners from the dungeon, from the prison those who sit in darkness” (Isa. 42:6, 7).

The riches of the glory of the mystery hidden from ages, but now revealed is “Christ in you, the hope of glory” (Col.

1:27). The blood of the new covenant was his own blood. Our covenant is personal. Our covenant is a person. He is engraved upon our hearts as our signet. He dwells in our hearts by faith. Faith is always active. It seeks expression. Divine wisdom has made it possible for us to prove our faith in the Son of God at the very entrance to our relationship as new creatures. Baptism in water of a believing, penitent is merely that faith expressed. So the apostle affirms, "For in Christ Jesus you are all sons of God through faith. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ" (Gal. 3:26, 27).

The divine design of baptism is a test of faith. Does someone immediately affirm that the design is remission of sins? In our view this is incorrect, and has been the cause of developing a creedal system which has crystallized those who so affirm into a narrow and bigoted sect. Baptism is unto the remission of sins, and such forgiveness is one of the fruits of baptism, as is the gift of the Holy Spirit to dwell in the one forgiven, and the hope of eternal life. These are consequents resulting to the one immersed.

There is nothing in water which has the power to remit sins. There is nothing in the act of being submerged which can remit sins. Forgiveness is an act of the divine mind operating in behalf of man. It is conditioned upon the faith of man. We are justified, that is, declared to be guiltless, by faith. Forgiveness of our iniquities is an act of undeserved kindness bestowed upon the basis of belief in a person or in the supreme fact that the person was the Son of God and the promised Messiah. Baptism is a test of that faith. By submitting to that test man places himself in the position where the grace of God can become operative in his behalf.

God has not eliminated the will of man in redemption. He only tests the willingness of man to bow unto his authority. Can a man have remission of sins if he refuses to be baptized? Certainly not! When God proposes a test of faith as a condition to reception of certain blessings, it is an act of unbelief and rebellion to ask him to grant those blessings while deliberately ignoring or intentionally refusing to submit to the test.

Any person who becomes convicted of his sin, who earnestly desires to appropriate the grace of God unto his salvation, who crucifies the old man of sin, and who then is immersed in water upon the basis of his faith and trust in Jesus as the Son of God, receives the remission of sins, and is adopted into the family of God as an heir. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." These are the words of him who is our covenant. But some man adds, "That is, if he understands at the time that baptism is for remission of sins." But God does not say that. That is a human rider attached to divine revelation. It is an unwritten creed.

It proposes to allow men to sit in judgment upon earth and determine who of those who believe and are baptized shall be admitted to God's grace. When there is a believing penitent and the proper action, it is beyond the power of any man to affect the design, whether the subject fully comprehend the design or not. The design of baptism has to do with God's part. When man does what God demands, God will do what he has promised. The falsehoods of men will not frustrate the grace of God. It may surprise many to know who all have misunderstood the design of baptism.

In any ordinance of induction or translation, a proper subject complying with the ordinance is inducted into that state to which the ordinance is intended to induct, whether he understands the design or not. A slave who is ignorant of the design of the papers intended to secure his freedom, will be just as free when he makes his mark in lieu of a signature, as one who fully understands all that is involved in the whole legal procedure. The sacred scriptures nowhere teach that the design of baptism is contingent for its fulfillment upon a knowledge of that design by the subject of baptism. Such a requirement cannot be a matter of faith. It is arbitrary, dogmatic, and a mere creedal opinion. Men have confused a fruit of baptism with a knowledge of the design. Thus they make remission of sins dependent not upon obedience to the act that God authorizes, but upon the degree of human knowledge of the divine purpose. That which God ordains as a test of faith, men have changed into a criterion of knowledge at a given time, and have supplanted the divine requirement of faith perfected, with perfect knowledge! This is legalism in its worst form, and makes of those who are its practitioners, judges of the hearts of men!

There is but one question I have any right to ask of one who has been immersed, and that is, "Were you prompted to be baptized by faith in Jesus?" Every person who believes that Jesus is the Son on God, and who was immersed in water in conformity with and motivated by that faith is God's child and my brother. He may have a lot of mistaken ideas, and may be in error on many points of sacred writ. He may be in the Babylon of religious confusion, but God's people did not cease to be such when carried into Babylon, else Daniel and the three Hebrew children became pagans under the compulsion of Nebuchadnezzar. It is my task to plead with all to forsake Babylon that we may unite our efforts to restore the ekklesia of God in this age in its purity. But our call to baptized believers is not a call to aliens and pagans, but a call to children of God, separated and segregated from each other by the party spirit which has prevailed through the instrumentality of Satan over our lives.

Conclusion

A great many sincere and consecrated persons, as they grow older and thus mature in their concept of our covenantal relationship with God, become greatly exercised in mind as to their spiritual standing. They are aware that, at the time when they were immersed, they realized but little about the tremendous import of entering into partnership with God and Christ. Now that they have learned what it means to be led by the Spirit of God, they react with fear that they may never have “received the spirit of sonship” (Rom. 8:15). Some conclude that now, having learned more, they ought to be “baptized over” as they frequently express it.

In many instances this stems from a false view of baptism and what it was intended to accomplish. It predicates our relationship upon our degree of human knowledge of the divine purpose, rather than upon faith in God and His promises. Frequently those who torment themselves inwardly about this matter do so because of an idea that we are justified by conformity to a purely legal system and they want to be sure they have done everything right, so they are baptized “to remove all doubt.” This is a negative approach to a positive ordinance. Doubt is the opposite of faith. We are not to be baptized to remove doubt, but because we have no doubt we are to be immersed.

One of the things which contributes to the problem is a misunderstanding of conversion. Many have thought that this was an instantaneous effect resulting from our encounter with Christ when we first became convicted of sin, and heard the Good News of promised deliverance. Not having been able to detect any great change in life or thought, and having been plagued by temptation and failure, in spite of sincere efforts to live a good life, such persons feel there must have been something wrong about their initial response to the Spirit’s call.

We need to distinguish between being begotten by the word and conversion. The last is a continual and never-ending process in the lives of those who are led by the Spirit. Conversion is a change, and we must be transformed daily by renewal of our mind. “And we all, with unveiled face, beholding the glory of the Lord, are being changed into his likeness from one degree of glory to another; for this comes from the Lord who is the Spirit” (2 Cor. 3:18). A sculptor who has an image in his mind may purchase a piece of marble in a few minutes, but may require years of patient and painstaking toil to bring out the likeness. The process of converting the rough stone into the beautiful figure is one that requires time and labor.

Those who were conscious of their sins, and who felt the need of a Saviour and Deliverer, who also trusted in him as demonstrated by their obedience in baptism, should not be immersed again, when, in later years, they once more respond more anxiously to the Spirit’s urging and prompting, under the hallowed influence of their maturing thought. Instead, let all who believed in Jesus and who were immersed into him on the basis of that faith, trust in him fully and completely. God loves us and cherishes us. Let us serve him more seriously and soberly. Let us love him and all of our fellowmen. Let us help all who need him and hinder none.

In our next issue we propose, God sparing us, to discuss with you the designations of the covenantal community. What should God’s people in the aggregate be called? Is there a specific title given by the Holy Spirit which must invariably be used to refer to the church of God which is in Christ Jesus, and if so by what means can that title be kept free from encroachment of others in this day of sectarian strife and partisan division? You will want to read the next issue over and over and study it carefully, if you love truth and seek it. If you do not, you will want to cast it aside, where it will not trouble your conscience. In any event, we trust that you will reserve your judgment until you have seen the article.

The Title of the Church

Mission Messenger (October 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

Have you entered into a covenant with God? Are you “a letter from Christ, written not with ink but with the Spirit of the living God, not on tablets of stone but on tablets of human hearts?” Are you a participant in “a new covenant, not in a written code but in the Spirit?” realizing that “the written code kills, but the Spirit gives life.” If your answer is in the affirmative, you can truly say, “For the love of Christ controls us because we are convinced that one has died for all; therefore all have died. And he died for all, that those who live might live no longer for themselves but for him who for their sake died and was raised.” And it can be said of you, “For you did not receive the spirit of slavery to fall back into fear, but you have received the spirit of sonship.”

Those who have received the spirit of sonship are thereby proven to be the children of God. “When we cry, ‘Abba! Father!’ it is the Spirit himself bearing witness with our spirit that we are children of God.” Those who have the same paternal origin are brothers. “For he who sanctifies and those who are sanctified have all one origin. That is why he is not ashamed to call them brethren.” We are not brethren because we agree on all matters of opinion or interpretation, but because we are born of the same parents. Brotherhood is the result of a common fatherhood. Fellowship is the result of sonship.

Every person on this earth who has entered into a covenant relationship with God is my brother. All such have been “chosen and destined by God the Father and sanctified by the Spirit for obedience to Jesus Christ and for sprinkling by his blood.” Of them it can truly be said, “He has put his seal upon us and given us his Spirit in our hearts as a guarantee.” This is the criterion by which the covenant relationship is determined. Those who sustain that unity with Deity are indwelt of the Spirit. Those who have not the Spirit are not his. “By this we know that we abide in him, and he in us, because he has given us of his own Spirit.” “But you are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if the Spirit of God really dwells in you. Any one who does not have the Spirit of Christ does not belong to him.”

The children of God constitute a fraternity of those in whom the Holy Spirit dwells. Every person in whom the Spirit abides is in that brotherhood. It is obvious that we can no more choose our spiritual brethren than we can those of our physical families! We enter that relationship irrespective of previous national or social differences, through agency of the Spirit. “For by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body— Jews or Greeks, slaves or free— and all were made to drink of one Spirit.” “For through him we both have access in one Spirit to the Father.” We are kept together in that one body by that one Spirit. Our unity is the unity of the Spirit. “Eager to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body and one Spirit . . .”

We come now to study the designation of this one body, composed of all those on earth who “were made to drink of one Spirit.” We approach the subject with mingled emotions. There is the thrill of probing God’s revelation for truth, and searching with unveiled face, knowing that “where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is freedom.” But there is reluctance to grieve the brethren whom we love. Experience has shown that no teaching is calculated to arouse more unbridled resentment and unjust accusation than that which we now propose. Were it not for the far-reaching spiritual implications involved one might be tempted to stifle his own conscience and be persuaded to allow the brethren to go their inconsistent and illogical way. But the consequences of the sectarian spirit are so frightful to contemplate, and the damage to the one body is so terrible, that we must speak, with faith that the Lord will again say, “You have seen well, for I am watching over my word to perform it.”

That there may be no misunderstanding of the views we hold, let us summarize them at the very outset. Briefly stated they are as follows. The covenant people in the aggregate have no official name or title. The terms used by the Holy Spirit to describe them, are merely common nouns. To select one of these as the exclusive title, discarding all others given by the same authority, and to elevate that one as the recognized designation of a group is to sectarianize that term. To denominate simply means to name. To choose a title such as “The Church of Christ” makes of those doing so a denomination as certainly as such terms as “The Baptist Church” or “The Methodist Church” designate denominations. Any religious group wearing a specific name is a denomination in the true meaning of that term.

Reason for Concern

There would be little concern about this matter were it not for the party spirit which invades the hearts of many who want to maintain that exclusivism which shuts out other children of God. Satan is clever and calculating. Every attempt at restoration of God’s original order has ended in the formation of another sect, or group of sects, generally more hateful and intolerant than those which preceded them, and which they proposed to reform. By sowing the seeds of partisanship in any movement, the arch-enemy knows the fruit will eventually be used in his service to divide and confuse. It is his strategy to keep God’s children separated and alienated from each other, and encourage them to bite and devour one another. So insidious is the party spirit that once it begins to flourish it continues to divide and fragmentize those who were members of the same brotherhood until all semblance of unity is destroyed and they become implacable enemies of each other.

The very multiplicity of sects in the modern Christian domain intensifies the problem of remaining unsectarian. Many who claim to be so, only deceive themselves and seek to decoy others by claims which are easily proven to be absurd in the light of profession and practice. The intensity with which men rise in defence of a special name or designation shows how very “denominational” they are in their thinking. It is easy to become so in the midst of the complexities of our current religious scene. I speak from my own experience.

A good many years ago, while working in Nebraska, with a beloved younger brother in the Lord, I succumbed to the urge to show the fallacies of “the sects” by producing a folder entitled “Whose Name Shall The Bride Wear?” Some twenty thousand of these were eventually printed and given wide distribution. As a result of subsequent study and maturing judgment I am thoroughly convinced that my venture was about as sectarian in nature as were the actions of those in other groups whom I sought to “smite hip and thigh.” In these latter days I have come to analyze my former errors, and I seek to determine the background factors which contributed to them, so that I may not only correct my thinking, but also eliminate the basic elements which produced the fallacies. I list herewith a few of the items which seem to me to have prompted my mistaken ideas.

1. A false concept of the elect of God which led me to defend the segment of which I was a member as the kingdom of God on earth to the exclusion of all other immersed believers in the Lord Jesus Christ.

2. A partisan or factional spirit engendered and sustained by sincere and consecrated men in the group with which I was allied, men who mistook loyalty to the group for loyalty to Jesus, and who imbued me with that philosophy.

3. Reliance upon sermon outlines handed down through several generations of those who had hallowed certain views and interpretations and invested their errors in reasoning with the sanctity of tradition.

4. Study of God's word from a slanted viewpoint. I can readily see how I once investigated the sacred oracles to prove what I believed, rather than to believe what I could prove. The result was a misuse and misapplication of many scripture texts wholly unrelated to the application I made of them. Of course, I did this sincerely believing that it was "contending for the faith once delivered to the saints." I just did not know it all, and I was mistaken.

5. Insufficient data on which to base conclusions on matters of such grave import. One needs to pursue to the end every avenue of research and be certain he has all the facts before he passes judgment.

6. An attitude of dogmatism which generally accompanies the belief that one is a spokesman for "the loyal brethren" as opposed to all others who are regarded as unfaithful and unworthy. While one feels a sense of personal shame because of his own past ignorance, and the littleness and factional tendencies produced by it, he can rise above these, and serve God with greater humility. He can be more charitable and tolerant toward those who pursue the same course in which he once walked. I have only the deepest sympathy for any who put their trust in "church names" and titles, for salvation. I know exactly how they feel. I am fully aware of the interests which motivate their reasoning.

The restoration movement begun by noble men who were members of the Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist parties, a century and a half ago, is already advanced far on the road to sectism. It has broken from its original moorings and is adrift on a sea of controversy. There are now more than two dozen separate and distinct factions wearing the name "Church of Christ." With few exceptions each of these feels that it alone is the kingdom of God, the one body of our Lord Jesus Christ, the only hope of salvation for mankind, and the sole possessor and guardian of the truth of heaven. Each is "the loyal church" and its membership constitutes "the faithful brotherhood." All others are apostates, sectarians, hobbyists and heretics.

Not only has this movement completely forsaken its original intent, but it adds to the confusing and confounding tendencies of the sectarian world about it. We have long been of the opinion that the root of our difficulty lies in confusing the restoration movement sparked by the Campbells and their contemporaries, with the church of our Blessed Lord. They are not the same, and by the same token there is a difference between "The Church of Christ" and the church of God referred to in the new covenant scriptures. At the risk of being repetitious, we wish to note some things we have said before, but which need to be recalled by all of us who love the Lord.

The church existed before Alexander Campbell was born. It lived in the days of John Wycliffe, John Huss, John Calvin and John Wesley. There was no separate party in their day known as "The Church of Christ" but the church of Christ was on earth. There has never been a time when Jesus was a shepherd without a sheep, a king without a subject, or a head without a body. When the dragon persecuted the woman until she was forced to flee into the wilderness where God nourished her for twelve hundred and sixty years, he was "angry with the woman, and went off to make war on the rest of her offspring, on those who keep the commandments of God and bear testimony to Jesus." Yet there is not one line of history that even suggests there was a separate party known as “The Church of Christ” to which these belonged.

When papal Rome, described as the great harlot, arrayed in purple and scarlet, bedecked with gold, jewels and pearls, was seen by John, he declared, “And I saw the woman, drunk with the blood of the saints and the blood of the martyrs of Jesus.” To what church did these saints and martyrs belong? There was no group calling themselves “The Church of Christ” such as we have today in Nashville, Dallas and Lubbock. The truth is that members of the modern “Church of Christ” would not recognize these saints and martyrs as brethren. They would have to be re-baptized by a “Church of Christ preacher” before they could even “take membership” with this twentieth century party which grew out of the nineteenth century restoration movement. But if God had saints and martyrs in the tenth century scattered among the various sects of Christendom, on what ground can we conclude that he does not have such in the twentieth century? If some of the saints in the tenth century had adopted the exclusive title “The Church of Christ” would that have automatically removed the others from the church of God? If not, how can we reason that it does so in the twentieth century? Has God altered his purpose in the last ten centuries?

Alexander Campbell did not think so, for he wrote:

A deep and abiding impression that the power, the consolations and joys— the holiness and happiness— of Christ’s religion were lost in the forms and ceremonies, in the speculations and conjectures, in the feuds and bickerings of sects and schisms, originated a project many years ago for uniting the sects, or rather the Christians in all the sects, upon a clear and scriptural bond of union . . .

Today the heirs of restoration have created their own party or parties. They deny that there are even Christians among the sects. They have all the Christians united in “The Church of Christ” but have split these whom they have gathered into twenty-five splinter parties. This is the sad and deplorable state to which the narrow, exclusive party spirit has brought us. There are those who think that the name “Church of Christ” has been the one proven and approved designation of God’s people ever since Pentecost. Candor and honesty forces us to admit that as an exclusive party title, as now used and defended, it stems from 1906, when, in a letter to the Director of the Census Bureau, David Lipscomb called for a special listing under this heading. There was a considerable discussion between leaders of the restoration movement in an earlier day as to how they should designate themselves and their co-laborers.

The Church and the Name

“What name shall the church wear?” This forms a sermon subject on many occasions as men labor to establish a partisan position. We shall exercise our right to examine the topic, believing we have the same freedom to do so as others. Let us begin by looking at the word “church.” It purports to be a translation of the Greek ekklesia. Of this word, Thayer says, “prop. a gathering of citizens called out from their homes, into some public place; an assembly.” In the Christian usage, for at first it had a civil implication, he says, “an assembly of Christians gathered for worship,” and again, “the whole body of Christians scattered throughout the earth.”

It is noteworthy that in the Septuagint Version of the old covenant scriptures, the term is generally used as the Greek equivalent of kahal, and the King James translators render this by congregation or assembly. Not once do they use the word “church” in the old covenant scriptures. It would appear that if the Greek ekklesia was a proper rendering of the Hebrew kahal, and if ekklesia was rendered “church” in the new covenant scriptures, its equivalent would be so rendered in the old, where, instead, the rendering is uniformly “congregation” or “assembly.” The student becomes suspicious of the translators when they show such decided disparity, and that suspicion is justified when the following truths are known.

The King James Version was a revised version, diligently compared with previous translations. Among the earlier translations was that of William Tyndal, who translated the word ekklesia, by “congregation,” a non-ecclesiastical term. This brought down upon his head the wrath of the clergy. The reason is given by Campbell:

It was with these old ecclesiastical words that the clergy succeeded in preserving the fascination of priestcraft. When Tyndal issued his translation of the Bible, because in it he had disregarded the words which the clergy esteemed sacred, they condemned it. He had for instance, changed charity into love; church into congregation; priest into senior; grace into favor; confession into knowledge; penance into repentance; and a contrite heart into a troubled heart.

Now the king of England is titular head of the church as the Established Church in Great Britain views it. There is an unholy combination of royalty and clergy as the ruling power. If the clergy “preserves the fascination of priestcraft” it must do so with a vocabulary of its own. In the eyes of commoners it means much more to say that the king is the only supreme head on earth of the church, than to say he is the head of the congregation, for the word “church” has certain connotations not shared by the latter word. Therefore, when the translators were commissioned to bring out a new version, King James actually forbade them to translate certain terms. He specified fourteen points to be scrupulously observed, number three of which reads:

The old ecclesiastical words are to be kept; as the word church, not to be translated congregation, etc.

However, the word church is not a translation of ekklesia at all. There is nothing in it which signifies a being called out and called together. It is an abbreviation of a wholly different expression, kuriou oikos, the house of the Lord. A realization of this fact caused Campbell in his translation called "Living Oracles" to use the word "congregation" consistently. He says, in a note:

Wherever the word church is found in the common version, congregation will be found in this. We shall let Doctors Campbell and Doddridge defend this preference: for, although they have not always so rendered it, they give the best reasons why it should always be so translated.

The passage relied upon to sustain a party title, Romans 16:16, appears as, "The congregations of Christ salute you." We have no doubt that if Alexander Campbell were alive today, he would be dubbed a heretic and accused of "denying the name of the church." This accusation would be made by the very ones who owe so much to his untiring labors for restoration of a pure speech.

But it was not only men like Philip Doddridge, James Macknight, and George Campbell of Great Britain, and Alexander Campbell of the United States, who made such careful distinctions in terms. In 1955 The Authentic New Testament by Hugh I. Schonfield, was published. Dr. Schonfield is the only Jew ever to bring out a version of the new covenant scriptures. In his most interesting preface occurs the following:

Perhaps it should be stated again with every possible emphasis that his is a nonecclesiastical version, the work of an historian and man of letters, not of a theologian, and is not therefore binding on anyone's conscience. The translator has felt it to be important for his purpose not to employ in his rendering familiar ecclesiastical terms where they should be avoided, since the use of them would give the impression that they were peculiarly Christian in origin and association. This relates to such words as baptism (immersion), church (community), apostle (envoy), bishop (supervisor), and deacon (administrator), but also sometimes to words like 'salvation', 'righteousness', 'faith', and 'grace', which occasionally do not accurately represent the sense of the original.

I am certain that many of the brethren would rejoice with the Authentic Version rendering of Acts 2:38. "Repent," Peter told them, "and let each of you be immersed for the forgiveness of your sins in the name of Jesus Christ, and you will receive the gift of the holy Spirit."

I am just as certain that some who rejoiced would turn to scoffing when they read Romans 16:16, "All the Christian communities send their regards." or Matthew 16:18; "Upon that rock I will found my Community, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." It would destroy the significance of many outdoor signs and indoor pulpit drapes if they were changed to read "The Christian communities send their regards"—Romans 16:16; instead of "The Churches of Christ salute you"—Romans 16:16. And it is that very significance attached to the title and quotation which is sectarian.

There is a grave doubt that much impact will be made upon the thinking of this generation with regard to the matter at hand. Most of us are so accustomed to borrowed expositions of scriptural passages, and so steeped in tradition, that we feel secure behind the fences and barriers that have marked our sectarian boundaries of the past. Too, a great many view this matter from a purely emotional, rather than a rational standpoint. They feel safe behind a sign board that has the proper words on it, or in a house with the right slogan over the door. They would feel out of place and insecure if the sign read "The Church of God."

For example, I know an aged sister whose gossiping and meddling ways had kept the community of saints in turmoil for years, and the members of whose family were frequently a source of difficulty to the brethren, who declared, almost in hysteria, “If they take down the sign, Church of Christ, they can take my name off the record. I joined the Church of Christ and I’m going to die in the Church of Christ.” Such irresponsible outbreaks show that many have not even begun to grasp the impact of what is being said. They are aided by preachers whose sermon outlines would have to be abandoned if they caught the significance of what we urge and conformed their teaching to the revelation of God instead of to the party standard.

Since so many prefer the King James Version and its language, let us employ it for our purpose. What is the title of the ekklesia of God? What one name is used as the exclusive designation of the covenant community? Is the body of believers known as “The Church of Christ”? The answer is obvious to all who can read English. Nowhere did the translators capitalize the word “church.” It is simply a common noun. It is never used in any combination of words as a proper title. The saints, in a corporate sense, are most frequently designated simply “the church.”

1. From the standpoint of ownership the church is called the church of God (1 Cor. 1:2; 10:32; 11:22; 15:9; Gal. 1:13, etc.). He purchased it. The Authentic Version renders Acts 20:28, “See to it that you tend God’s community, which he has acquired with the blood of his own Son.” I am persuaded that this is correct, although for years I just about left God out of the church. The Lamb “didst ransom men for God . . . and hast made them a kingdom and priests to our God” (Rev. 5:9, 10).

2. From the standpoint of constituency it is a church of saints (1 Cor. 14:33). It is composed of the holy ones, those who are sanctified in Christ Jesus.

3. From the standpoint of heirship, it is the church of the firstborn ones whose names are enrolled in heaven (Heb. 12:23).

4. From the standpoint of divine relationship, it is the church of God in Christ Jesus (1 Thess. 2:14).

5. From the standpoint of its head, it is the church of Christ (Rom. 16:16; Gal. 1:22).

6. From the standpoint of government it is the kingdom of heaven (Matt. 16:19). We remind our readers that it is called the kingdom of heaven, the kingdom of God, the kingdom of the Son of man, and the kingdom of God's beloved Son. Is it not strange that someone has not settled upon one of these as the name for the kingdom and sought to establish it to the exclusion of all the others?

7. From the standpoint of organization and unity it is called the body of Christ (1 Cor. 12:27).

The church, church of God, churches of the saints, church of the firstborn, churches of God in Christ Jesus, churches of Christ, kingdom of heaven, body of Christ— which one of these is the official designation or title? Who will dare to choose the one and say “This is it” and defend that one as the name of the church? Who will be so rash as to capitalize one of these as the scriptural designation to be used on all the road signs, and in all advertising mediums? Do you realize that one of these has become the stereotyped trademark of a modern party to the extent that if a congregation made no change in doctrine, practice or worship, but simply erected a sign reading, “A church of God meets here,” they would be avoided like the plague and assailed as “unfaithful”? Yet the expression “church of God” is found in the scriptures, whereas the term “the church of Christ” appears not once in that form. In spite of this, the latter is “the scriptural name of the church” in the contention of modern party defenders.

But you may ask what I propose to call the church, and how I would refer to it. My reply is that, like the Holy Spirit, I would use the term that described the phase I had in mind at the time. If I refer to its nature, I call it the church; if to its owner, the church of God; if to its constituency, church of the saints; if to its government, the kingdom of heaven or kingdom of God; if to its head, the church of Christ.

The ekklesia of God has no special name. The only designation given to it was in the form of a simple noun. It is the church, the congregation, the assembly, the community, composed of all those who have been called by the grace of God. To give it a special title for the purpose of separating, segregating, and dividing it off from other believers is to make of that portion so titled a sect, and nothing else! The expression “The Church of Christ” is used by its adherents today exactly as others talk of The Baptist Church, The Presbyterian Church, The Lutheran Church, or the Methodist Church, and for the same reason.

We should notice the objections made to my position and discuss them fully, freely and frankly. The first is that the church is the bride of Christ and the bride should wear the husband’s name. This argument breaks down on several counts as do most arguments arranged to defend a pre-conceived notion. First, the church is now betrothed unto Jesus. The apostle says, “I betrothed you to Christ to present you as a pure bride to her one husband” (2 Cor. 11:2). The marriage of the Lamb, when his bride has made herself ready is yet to come (Cp. Rev. 19:7).

The idea that the bride wears her husband’s name is part of our western culture, and of recent origin. In the times when the Bible was being written in the Near East, such was not the case. We read of Sarah, the wife of Abraham; Rebekah, the wife of Isaac; and Deborah, the wife of Lapidoth. In every instance the wife wore her own name. The relationship was signified by the term wife. The word “church” is not a proper name at all, but a common noun. We say “The church is the bride of Jesus Christ,” exactly as we say, “The church is the body of Jesus Christ.” It would surely be improper to follow our modern method of designation and call the church, “Mrs. Jesus Christ,” which we would have to do if the name of the husband, as it is commonly regarded were applied.

Actually those who propose to call the covenantal community “The Church of Christ” do not use the name of the bridegroom. His name is Jesus. “You shall call his name Jesus, for he will save his people from their sins” (Matt. 1:21). “He called his name Jesus” (Matt. 1:25). “At the name of Jesus every knee should bow” (Phil. 2:10). The word “Christ” actually is ho Christos, the Christ. Jesus is the Christ. The word Christ, anointed, signifies his office. “Let all the house of Israel therefore know assuredly that God has made him both Lord and Christ, this Jesus whom you have crucified” (Acts 2:36). If brethren wish to be consistent in their argument, even to a slight degree, let them call the saints in the aggregate, “the church of Jesus.” This would still only show possession, but if they wish to create a name to match their argument, this must be it. You would not call the wife of John Doe, a mechanic, Mrs. Mechanic; nor the wife of Richard Roe, a janitor, Mrs. Janitor. It would be as logical to say “Church of Lord” as “Church of Christ” because Jesus was made both Lord and Christ. The truth is that a certain designation has been created and invested with such authority, that if some people drove by a meeting-house with the label “Church of Jesus Christ,” they would not go in, for it would not have “the right name.” They would be suspicious of it. My own reasoning in the folder I mentioned earlier has proven to be childish, absurd and without scriptural warrant. I had to prove something, and in my ignorance, I forced the sacred scriptures into a false pattern. I am sorry and ashamed of my reasoning, but at the time I just did not know any better.

The words of our Lord in Matthew 16:18, “Upon this rock I will build my church” are frequently cited. These words merely indicate possession. They do not create a title by which the church must be called. If that were the case, the apostles should have invariably used the designation. Actually they never once used the term “the church of Christ” in that form. If I say “Upon this lot I will park my car,” it signifies to whom the car belongs, but does not give the name of the car. You do not know if it is a Dodge, Chevrolet, or Ford. Manufacturers of automobiles give their products names as means of distinction. Others are engaged in producing cars. But there is only one church, never was more than one, and never will be. The church contains all of the saved upon this earth. There can no more be another church than there can be another God, another Lord, or another Spirit. The argument that the church must have a name to distinguish it from other churches is an admission that there are others. This is not true! The people of God need only to be distinguished from those who are not his people. For this the noun “church” is sufficient, since it designates all of the called out ones.

But do we not have The Methodist Church, The Baptist Church, The Christian Church, The Presbyterian Church, etc., and must we not be distinguished from these? In its essence, this question literally means, shall we not create another party with its special brand name as these have done? To do so is to defeat our announced purpose of attempting to unite the Christians in all sects, by merely becoming another sect. The term “church” is misused when applied to sects. It is impossible to have more than one church as the Holy Spirit employs that term. The Methodist people do not constitute a church, but a party in Christendom crystallized around the views of John and Charles Wesley; as the Presbyterians constitute a party that has crystallized around the theological speculations of John Calvin; and the Friends Church a party crystallized about the teachings of George Fox.

The party spirit is a sin. It is subversive of the divine purpose. The church of God is not a sect. No combination or coalition of sects constitutes the church of God. There may be many now in the various sects, who have entered into covenant relationship with God, and have been added to the church, but are now involved in the human parties with which they are currently allied. All such need to heed the appeal to be just Christians and Christians only, instead of some brand or special party of believers. We need to create congregations where all of God's dear children can meet together about his table without being subjected to creeds, written or unwritten, as the basis or test of fellowship. It is just as sinful to create a party wearing the title "The Church of Christ" as any other. It is the party spirit that is a sin. Giving it a scriptural label does not sanctify it. Let all who are members of the body of Christ receive and respect all others who are members of the body of Christ, and we can begin to restore the concept of the one body for which Jesus died and the apostles labored.

But did Peter not say, "There is none other name under heaven given among men by which we must be saved"? Certainly so, but he was not talking about a title of the church. When Peter healed the lame man he said, "In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, walk" (Acts 3:6). When the multitude convened he said, "And his name, by faith in his name, has made this man strong whom you see and know." When arrested, he said to the Jewish rulers, "By the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom you crucified, whom God raised from the dead, by him this man is standing before you well . . . And there is salvation in no one else, for there is no other name under heaven given among men by which we must be saved" (Acts 4:10, 12).

We are not saved by the church. It is the community of saved ones, those who have heeded the call, and thus constitute the ekklesia, the called out. The church, or body, must be saved. It is not a Saviour. "For the husband is the head of the wife as Christ is the head of the church, his body, and is himself its Saviour" (Eph. 5:23). You cannot be saved by a name adopted by the called out ones, but the called out ones must be saved by faith in the name of Jesus. The miracle of healing was performed in Jerusalem. The apostle Paul referred to the congregations in that region as “the churches of God in Christ Jesus which are in Judea.” This demonstrates that Peter was not holding out salvation upon the basis of a specific church title.

Those who are hard pressed to preserve their sermon outlines sometimes resort for comfort to Ephesians 3:14, 15, which, in the King James Version, reads, “For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named.” Because they find “Christ” and “named” in the same context, they eagerly seize upon this as proof of their thesis. In doing so, they manifest their ignorance of the text and the weakness of their position. Actually, the expression “of our Lord Jesus Christ” is not in the best manuscripts at all. The word “Father” is from pater, the word “family” from patria. The thought is that every family is derived from the Father.

Unquestionably, the translation should be “every family” rather than “the whole family.” The apostle has been showing that principalities and powers, i.e., the various ranks and gradations of angels in heaven, as well as the Jews and Gentiles on earth, all have a common origin. All came from one creative source. All have the same Father.

The Revised Standard Version reads, “For this reason I bow my knees before the Father, from whom every family in heaven and on earth is named.”

J. B. Phillips renders it, “When I think of the greatness of this great plan I fall on my knees before God the Father (from whom all fatherhood, earthly and heavenly, derives its name).”

James Moffatt has it, “For this reason, then, I kneel before the Father from whom every family in heaven and on earth derives its name and nature.”

My personal view of the situation created by the multiplication of the sects in our day can be summarized in three simple sentences.

1. It is scriptural to designate the community of saints by any term employed by the Holy Spirit in the sacred writings.

2. It is unscriptural to designate the community of saints by any term not employed by the Holy Spirit in the sacred writings.

3. It is anti-scriptural to seize upon one term and make it the designation of a community of saints, to the exclusion of all other terms used by the Holy Spirit.

A few comments are in order on each of these. It is scriptural to refer to the communities of saints as “churches of Christ.” I have never said that it was not. I only say that it is not scriptural to do so in the attitude and for the purpose for which it is commonly done among those with whom I am associated, for their attitude and purpose are born of partisanship.

As to the second point, a term may be unscriptural and not be anti-scriptural. Because a specific word is not found in some version of the scripture is no indication that such English term is opposed to the scriptures. We tend to confuse the word “scriptural” with the King James Version of the scriptures. If one quotes from another version, there are some who think his language is not “scriptural.”

As to number three, it is certainly opposed to the tenor of the sacred scriptures for men to arbitrarily select and settle upon one term to the exclusion of all other terms given by the same divine authority, and attempt to justify partisan status by exaltation of that one term or title.

It is very difficult for a community of believers to remain non-sectarian. None of us are wholly free from the blight of the party spirit. The very complexity of the present Protestant situation militates against us. Satan continually strives to drive congregations into exclusivism and narrow partisanship. The pressures from brethren within are great. Few men can withstand the temptation to conform, to keep silent, and just go along with the current drift and trend. It is my personal conviction that the following points will help us to furnish leadership to a confused and distressed religious world which seeks for guidance.

1. A proper evaluation of our own status. The work of restoration has not been completed. We have not yet “arrived.” As a covenantal community we are striving to recapture the nature and spirit of the ancient order. This will necessitate changes in life and thought as we learn more of the will of God.

2. A recognition that God has children scattered over the hills of sectarianism. We have not yet gathered all of the scattered sheep into one corral. That is an ideal for which we should strive. We have brethren in the Lord who have not yet seen the wrong or error of the party spirit. We must prayerfully and patiently teach them.

3. A rejection of the idea that the restoration movement is identical with the church of God, and resistance to the attempt to create a new sect under the label “Church of Christ.” We should be content to be simply Christians, members of the one body. We need not wear a sectarian label of distinction, for we should not be sectarian. There is only one church. There cannot be more than one. The church consists of the called of God— all of them. There are none left over to be in anything else. If there are those who are not in the body of Christ they are not the called out, and therefore, not “a church.”

4. Communities of saints may be designated by the location of their meeting-houses, as was done in primitive times. There was the church in the house of Prisca and Aquila; the church at Cenchrea; the church in the lecture hall of Tyrannus; the church in the upper room at Troas. Today we may have the church which meets in Oak Hill Chapel; the Manchester Avenue church; the Broadway Avenue church. In all congregations of the saints the table of the Lord should be set for all immersed believers whose moral behavior is in harmony with the code of ethics pronounced by Jesus of Nazareth. All such should be welcomed and received to the table. True, some of them may, by accident or unfortunate circumstance of environment or previous instruction, be allied with a human party or sect, but we will not unite them by our own partisan or sectarian tests of fellowship. We should all seek to be Christians only and persuade others to be. We should not try to make Baptist Christians, Christian Church Christians or Church of Christ Christians— or any other type, kind, brand, or condition.

We dare not compromise the will of God, or water down his sacred requirements, to achieve a greater degree of oneness. Such union would be worthless. We can only be firm in our convictions, faithful to the revelation of God, and labor in love and kindness, for a better day. We must uphold the truth, as God gives us to see the truth, and we must plead for the authority of Jesus to be respected and regarded. In the midst of a sectarian world we must keep ourselves free from the sectarian spirit. Then the Holy Spirit can use us as powerful instruments of God to achieve the divine purpose.

The Indwelling Spirit

Mission Messenger (November 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

And if the Spirit of Him who raised Jesus from the dead dwells within you, then He who raised Christ from the dead will also make your mortal bodies live by his indwelling Spirit in your lives” (Romans 8:11— James Moffatt).

Our kinship with each other in the Lord is achieved through Christ. We are joined together only because we are joined unto Him. Our relationship is not one of man to man, but of men to Him. It is not the result of our agreement upon certain propositions, or of concurrence on interpretation of certain issues, but of faith in Him as God’s Son. If we attempt to maintain union based upon uniformity of degree in knowledge, division is inevitable as soon as one learns more than another. If we attempt it based upon conformity in opinion, it is impossible. Not only is spiritual unity that is based upon faith in a person the best way, it is the only way. Jesus does not force us together. He draws us unto Himself. We are together only because we are with Him. “He is our peace, who has made both one, and has broken down the dividing wall of hostility.”

Our problem is not really whom we shall recognize as brethren, or with whom we shall be in fellowship. That is not for us to determine. We can no more choose our spiritual brethren than we could select our physical brethren. Each of us who would be saved has the personal responsibility of gaining access to the Father. Fatherhood establishes brotherhood. Fellowship is the result of mutual sonship. It is unthinkable that children of God would deny their paternity, but if they admit it, they acknowledge all others who have been born again as brethren. Access to the Father is through Jesus and by the Holy Spirit. "For through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father."

The church of God is simply the covenantal community composed of all in whom the Spirit resides. There is not a child of God who has not been made such by the Spirit, no one in whom the Spirit does not dwell can be a child of God. "But you are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if the Spirit of God really dwells in you. Any one who does not have the Spirit of Christ does not belong to him." In a sense, then, God's children are united. They constitute but one body. The Holy Spirit does not recognize the validity of many of the barriers and walls we have erected. There is one Spirit and all in whom that Spirit dwells constitute the one body. They all drink of that one Spirit. "For by one Spirit we were all baptized into one body— Jews or Greeks, slaves or free— and all were made to drink of one Spirit."

Actually we are not commanded to strive for, arrive at, or achieve unity. We are told to maintain or keep it. To do this is to "lead a life worthy of the calling to which you have been called." We manifest such worthiness by being "eager to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." The indwelling Spirit witnesses to the sonship of every child of God. "For you did not receive the spirit of slavery to fall back into fear, but you have received the spirit of sonship. When we cry, 'Abba! Father!' it is the Spirit himself bearing witness with our spirit that we are the children of God." Every person in whom the Spirit dwells is a child of God. There is but one Spirit, so all of God's children are members of one body, regardless of the unfortunate accidents which now separate them into various segments and groups.

These partisan alignments were caused and created by men devoid of the Spirit, but not every one in them is in such a state, else all of us would be lost. “It is these who set up divisions, worldly people, devoid of the Spirit.”

Since it is the indwelling Spirit in our hearts, who is our seal and guarantee, it behooves us to study and determine all we can about this holy guest. There is no better place with which to begin than with the words of Jesus which he publicly announced on the eighth day of the feast of tabernacles in Jerusalem. Jewish tradition required the high priest to fill a golden vessel with water from the pool of Siloam which was carried to the temple with much ritual and ceremony. Here it was mingled with wine and poured out upon the altar. Perhaps it was in conjunction with this ceremony that we have the event described in John 7:37-39.

On the last day of the feast, the great day, Jesus stood up and proclaimed, “If any one thirst, let him come to me and drink. He who believes in me, as the scripture has said, ‘Out of his heart shall flow rivers of living water.’” Now this he said about the Spirit, which those who believed in him were to receive; for as yet the Spirit had not been given, because Jesus was not yet glorified.

Some truths of tremendous importance may be deduced from this statement. We mention a few of them.

1. The thirsty soul, unable even to supply its own need, when it comes to Jesus will be transformed into a rich source of blessing for others. He who had not enough water to quench his own thirst will become an instrument from whose heart rivers of living water will be dispersed abroad.

2. The source of this life-giving power to be diffused from the heart is the Spirit. It is apparent that those who do not receive the Spirit are thirsty and distressed.

3. The Spirit was to be received by those who came to Jesus to drink. He was promised to those who believe in the Lord Jesus.

4. In the sense here considered the Spirit had not been previously bestowed, nor would he be until Jesus was glorified. We can expect that the Spirit will be bestowed subsequent to this statement, when Jesus attains his state of glorification.

The apostle declares that “he who was manifest in the flesh” was “received up into glory.” Peter declared on the first Pentecost after his ascension that he is “exalted at the right hand of God, and having received from the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, he has poured out this which you see and hear.” To those whose hearts were touched he said, “Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the forgiveness of your sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. For the promise is to you . . .” A short time later Peter said, “And we are witnesses to these things, and so is the Holy Spirit whom God has given to those who obey him.”

If we are to recapture the power and purpose of the early disciples we must begin by re-affirming the personal indwelling of the Holy Spirit in the hearts of the believers. Nothing short of this can make us the agents or channels for the diffusion of universal blessing. Rivers of water cannot flow from the arid heart of one who is so devoid of the water of life that he still thirsts. We must understand the nature of the Spirit if we are to partake of the divine nature and be “sanctified by the Spirit.”

IDENTITY OF THE SPIRIT

I. The Holy Spirit is not a vague influence, an abstract principle, nor an indescribable force.

II. The Holy Spirit is not the word of God.

The Spirit is not the living word (1 John 5:7). He is not the spoken word, but a teacher who employs words. “And we impart this in words not taught by human wisdom, but taught by the Spirit” (1 Cor. 2:13). The Spirit is not the written word but that word is the sword or instrument by which the Spirit accomplishes his purpose (Eph. 6:17). There is as much difference between the Spirit and the word as there is between a soldier and his weapon.

III. The Holy Spirit is a divine person, or personality.

We base this conclusion upon five cardinal factors, which we herewith submit for your study and investigation.

A. The Spirit possesses characteristics which definitely belong only to persons.

1. The Holy Spirit is intelligent. “For what person knows a man’s thoughts except the spirit of the man which is in him? So also no one comprehends the thoughts of God except the Spirit of God” (1 Cor. 2:11). Only a person is capable of knowing or comprehending thought. There is a difference between the thoughts of man and those of God. The former may be understood by a human intellect. The latter can be comprehended only by a divine intellect. The Holy Spirit is a divine intelligent being.

2. The Holy Spirit has a mind. “And he who searches the hearts of men knows what is the mind of the Spirit” (Romans 8:27). In the previous quotation we learned that the Spirit knows the mind of God; in this we learn that God knows the mind of the Spirit. God searches the hearts of men, but there is a difference in knowing the spirit of one’s mind, and knowing the mind of the Spirit.

3. The Holy Spirit is capable of doing research into the divine purpose. “For the Spirit searches everything, even the depths of God” (1 Cor. 2:10).

4. The Holy Spirit is able to reveal the divine purpose. “You can perceive my insight into the mystery of Christ, which was not made known to the sons of men in other generations as it has now been revealed . . . by the Spirit” (Eph. 3:5).

5. The Holy Spirit is subject to grief. “And do not grieve the Holy Spirit of God, in whom you were sealed for the day of redemption” (Eph. 4:30). Grief and sorrow are emotions which can be felt only by a person.

6. The Holy Spirit can be lied to. Peter asked Ananias, “Why has Satan filled your heart to lie to the Holy Spirit?” (Acts 5:3).

B. The Holy Spirit engages in functions which can only be carried out by an intelligent person.

1. The Holy Spirit speaks. “The Holy Spirit spoke beforehand by the mouth of David” (Acts 1:16). “Now the Spirit speaketh expressly” (1 Tim. 4:1). “Whatever he hears he will speak” (John 16:13).

2. The Holy Spirit instructs or teaches. “He will teach you all things” (John 14:26).

3. The Holy Spirit testifies to facts or bears witness. “He will bear witness to me; and you also are witnesses, because you have been with me from the beginning” (John 15:26, 27). “When we cry ‘Abba! Father!’ it is the Spirit himself bearing witness with our spirit that we are children of God” (Rom. 8:15, 16). This is proof that the Holy Spirit is not merely our own spirit made holy, but a separate entity.

4. The Holy Spirit gives life. “If the Spirit of him who raised up Jesus from the dead dwells in you, he who raised Christ Jesus from the dead will give life to your mortal bodies also through his Spirit which dwells in you” (Rom. 8:11). It is axiomatic that life proceeds only from life. The Holy Spirit must be alive.

5. The Holy Spirit intercedes for the saints. “Likewise the Spirit helps us in our weakness; for we do not know how to pray as we ought, but the Spirit himself intercedes for us with sighs too deep for words” (Rom. 8:26).

C. The language used to refer to the Holy Spirit is such as can be used appropriately only when speaking of a person.

In John 14:15-17 Jesus refers to the Spirit as a Comforter (AV), or Counselor (RSV). He declares the world cannot receive him because it neither sees him or knows him. But the disciples know him because he dwells in them.

In John 16:13, 14 it is affirmed that the Spirit will guide them into all truth. He will not speak on his own authority, but whatever he hears he will speak. He will declare things to come. He will glorify Jesus by taking what is his and declaring it to the human witnesses. We submit that an unbiased reader must conclude that such things can be affirmed only of a personal being.

D. The purpose for which the Holy Spirit came was such as could be carried out only by a person.

1. He was promised as another Comforter to the sorrowing disciples during the absence of Jesus from the earth, and with the aid of this Counselor they could accomplish what could not be done if Jesus personally remained. “I tell you the truth: it is to your advantage that I go away, for if I go not away, the Counselor will not come to you; but if I go I will send him to you” (John 16:7).

2. The Spirit was sent that the disciples of Jesus might not be orphans during his absence, and thus feel a sense of desertion or desolation. “I will not leave you desolate; I will come to you” (John 14:18). The original for “desolate” is orphanos. Jesus did not say that he would not leave them orphans, but would give them a book, or have a series of letters written to them. The ones to whom he spoke were the very ones who wrote the new covenant scriptures. He promised another Helper like himself who would remain with them during his absence.

3. The indwelling Spirit was to be a constant assurance that Jesus was in the Father, the disciples were in Jesus, and Jesus was in them, thus maintaining a direct association with the Godhood (John 14:20).

4. The word translated “Comforter” or “Counselor” is parakletos. Its proper meaning is to call one to aid another. From that it came to mean, “One who stands beside another,” that is, to aid, advise, assist or comfort him. Greek writers apply it to an attorney or advocate in court who pleads the case of another; and to a teacher, assistant, or helper. It is used five times in the new covenant scriptures. Once it refers to Jesus (1 John 2:1). The other four times it is used of the Spirit.

E. The association of the Holy Spirit with divine personages, and with no qualifying explanation or distinction being made, is indicative that he is a divine personality.

1. Those who are made disciples among the nations are to be immersed into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit (Matt. 28:19).

2. In the bestowal of spiritual gifts, and in the regulation of their function and service, the Spirit is joined with God and Christ. “There are varieties of gifts, but the same Spirit; there are varieties of service, but the same Lord; and there are varieties of working, but it is the same God who inspires them all in every one.”

3. The Spirit is united in apostolic benediction, providing fellowship in conjunction with grace and love. “The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit be with you all” (2 Cor. 13:14).

4. The Spirit is identified in the seven planks of God's platform for maintenance of unity in the bond of peace, and is distinguished from the one Lord and one God (Eph. 4:4-6).

5. In a disputed passage (1 John 5:7) it is said, "For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit, and these three are one."

I conclude that the Godhood (a better rendering than Godhead) consists of three persons, perfectly united in the accomplishment of the divine purpose. While Jesus is sitting at the right hand of God the Father in heaven, the Holy Spirit dwells in the hearts of those on earth who are his. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." Our reasons for so thinking are now given.

THE INDWELLING SPIRIT

1. Jesus promised the Holy Spirit would be given to those who believed in him, and that they would receive the Spirit after he had been glorified (John 7:37-39).

2. On the occasion of the first proclamation of the good news after the glorification of Jesus, Peter told those who were willing to reform and be immersed, that they would receive the Spirit as a gift (Acts 2:38).

3. Peter informed the Jewish Sanhedrin that God had given the Holy Spirit to those who obeyed him (Acts 5:32).

4. Paul told the Corinthians that the body of a believer is the temple of the Holy Spirit "which is in you, which you have of God" (1 Cor. 6:19).

5. He told the Romans that "the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit which is given unto us" (Romans 5:5).

6. He took it for granted that the Galatians would admit having received the Spirit. “Did you receive the Spirit by works of the law, or by hearing with faith?” (Gal. 3:2).

7. He declared that God has “given us his Spirit in our hearts as a guarantee” (2 Cor. 1:22).

8. He affirms that “you are in the Spirit if the Spirit of God really dwells in you” (Rom. 8:9).

9. He twice asserts in one verse that the Spirit dwells in the believers, and identifies the dwelling place as “your mortal bodies” (Rom. 8:11).

10. Once more, Paul testifies that “God has sent the Spirit of his Son into our hearts” (Gal. 4:6). The context shows that this is the divine method of recognition of our own sonship. When we become children of God, and are introduced into a spirit of sonship God sends the Spirit of his Son as a guarantee and witness of that sonship. That is why “if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.”

Let us summarize the plain teaching of God’s revelation, and see what we have discovered under this heading. The Holy Spirit is received by believers. He is a gift bestowed upon them by God. He dwells in the physical or mortal bodies of the saints as his temple. His abiding place is in the hearts of God’s children. He is a seal and a guarantee given by a loving Father to his offspring.

CONDITIONS OF RECEPTION

It is obvious that not all men on earth have the Spirit, for some create divisions, and of these it is affirmed that they are “sensual, having not the Spirit” (Jude 19). It is essential that we learn the conditions upon which the Spirit is bestowed, and ascertain the nature of those who receive him.

1. Our introductory passage (John 7:37-39) informs us that the blessing afforded by the Spirit will be realized by those who come to Christ, and this is explained by the term, “he who believes in me.” Reception of the Spirit, then, is limited to those who believe in Jesus.

2. But what is meant by believing in him? The same writer (John 20:30, 31) supplies the information “that you may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God.” This is the foundation of our covenantal relationship with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ.

3. The promise of the Spirit is, therefore, received through faith. “In Christ Jesus the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles, that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith” (Gal. 3:14). “Let me ask you only this: Did you receive the Spirit by works of the law, or by hearing with faith?” (Gal. 3:2).

4. However, the Spirit is not bestowed upon one who gives mere intellectual assent to Christ as a historical figure, nor to one who passively acknowledges his divine Sonship. It is faith manifested or perfected that lays hold on the Spirit. Paul declared “We have received grace and apostleship to bring about the obedience of faith for the sake of his name among all nations” (Romans 1:5). Short of this, grace and apostleship are ineffectual. Thus, to receive the Spirit through faith, is to receive him by the obedience of faith, since this was the aim of both grace and apostleship. This concurs with the statement of the first apostle to announce the Good News. “So is also the Holy Spirit, whom God hath given to them that obey him” (Acts 5:32).

5. The obedience of faith requisite to reception of the Holy Spirit is submission to immersion by the authority of the Lord Jesus. “Reform and be immersed every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the forgiveness of sins, and you will receive the gift of the Holy Spirit” (Acts 2:38).

6. The Holy Spirit is not bestowed upon a believer to make him a child of God, but because he is a son. “Because you are sons, God has sent the Spirit of his son into your hearts” (Gal. 4:6). The sons of God are those who are in Christ by faith, that is, all who have put on Christ. “For in Christ Jesus you are all sons of God through faith. For as many of you as were baptized into Christ have put on Christ” (Gal. 3:26, 27).

We conclude that every person on this earth who sincerely believes that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and who is immersed upon that foundation of faith, receives forgiveness of his sins, and the Spirit of God moves into his heart where Christ dwells by faith. Every such person is a member of the one body, regardless of nationality, social standing, or other natural or acquired differences. He may be wrong about a great many things, but one does not come into covenant relationship with God through a knowledge of, or interpretation of, things, but by faith in a person, even the Lord Jesus Christ. “For by one Spirit we were all baptized into one body— Jews or Greeks, slaves or free— and all were made to drink of one Spirit” (1 Cor. 12:13).

We live in an age of crisis and decadence. Believers in our Lord are rent, torn and divided. The children of God are scattered among the sects, as God’s people were once scattered by the Assyrian power. The hearts of many are filled with heaviness. It is time to blow the trumpet and summon the congregation from afar. The longing in the hearts of the scattered believers is the yearning tug of the Spirit, often grieved, and saddened and hurt, but still moving us toward each other in spite of our own littleness, narrowness and hate.

Slowly but surely walls are beginning to crumble, barriers are being moved, and fences are being torn down. God has not forgotten. The Spirit has not deserted the body. Weakened, despondent, filled with fears and trepidation though we may be, there is nonetheless a surging of the Spirit within. The will of God must be done on earth as it is in heaven. Time is running out for many of us. The hour is growing late. The night is coming. The chill wind from the river is felt on our faces. The fog settles in our throats. We must work while it is called today. “The unity of the Spirit” must be affirmed again, and recaptured in our longing hearts. It must be maintained in the bond of peace. No man walks worthy of his high calling who forgets this truth.

In our next issue, God willing, we shall demonstrate what the Holy Spirit does for the indwelt child of God. We solicit your interest in this theme. Pray for us. “Now may our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God our Father who loved us and gave us eternal comfort and hope through grace, comfort your hearts and establish them in every good work.”

No Creed But Christ

Mission Messenger (November 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

The power of a slogan has often been demonstrated. A pithy statement, easily remembered, and frequently repeated may become the watchword of a political or religious party. But it is often true that “familiarity breeds contempt.” Rabid partisans may shout words which they cannot define, and the implications of which they reject by their own actions. Circumstances alter cases. It is one thing for a patriot opposing foreign tyranny to cry, “Give me liberty or give me death.” It is wholly different thing for a criminal incarcerated behind penitentiary bars to shout these words, punctuated by the angry shaking of his cell door.

It is no uncommon thing for me to receive letters with our title used at the top of the page as a printed slogan. It should be pointed out, however, that these words may mean different things to different persons. Some, confusing Jesus with the entire gamut of new covenant writings, hide behind the statement to impose their peculiar interpretations upon all and sundry, and demand rigid conformity to their legalistic code as a means of sharing in their “fellowship.” Others, who reject the view that the apostles were inspired of God and were divine revelators of His will, employ the same words to assert their utter freedom from any regulation by divine fiat. Indeed, the so-called ultra conservative and the so-called ultra liberal have this in common, that both make the claim of having “no creed but Christ.”

The truth is, however, that both of these operate under false pretence. Strangely enough, though they are poles apart in their philosophies, they are both guilty of the same error, they dethrone the very One whom they profess to place at the apex of their respective systems, and both assume the prerogatives which they contend belong only to Him. The first accomplishes this unenviable end by exalting human interpretation to the level of divine revelation; the second by denying that the divine mind has been revealed unto men by men who were chosen for the task. The first achieves by dilution what the other does by denial. Both are destructive forces in the religious domain, because, in essence, both assume the prerogatives of Jesus, one by becoming a law unto all, the other by becoming a law unto himself.

The legalist falsifies when he contends he has “no creed but Christ,” and the modernist falsifies when he affirms he has “no creed but Christ.” The legalist does have another creed; the modernist does not have Christ. Lest we be falsely accused with reference to this last, we hasten to say there is a difference between acknowledging the historicity of Jesus, and the recognition of the Nazarene as the Messiah, or Christ. This latter entails an acceptance of the fact that “what God foretold by the mouth of all the prophets, that his Christ should suffer, he thus fulfilled” (Acts 3:18). The modernist dare not give acquiescence to this in simple faith, so he attempts to explain it away, really explaining himself away from the Christ.

However, it is toward the other group we propose to direct the burden of this brief essay. Many of our brethren fall into this category, most of them unwittingly. This causes them to deny vehemently the justice of our charge as relates to them. In no sense do we wish to become unduly censorious. Our strictures upon our present state are made with full appreciation of the difficulty of adhering to a non-sectarian policy amidst the complexities of our current divisions and schisms. The great majority of the brethren are sincere in their anxiety to please the Lord. They have been betrayed by the party spirit. They are victims of inherited feuds which they did not start. But reliance for salvation upon a slogan which we mouth but do not mind, will produce nothing but trouble and despair.

I do not argue against the validity of the slogan. If by “creed” we mean a basis, or foundation, for unity, then surely we should have no creed but Christ. The apostle says, “For other foundation can no man lay, than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ.” The setting, or context, of this majestic principle should be noted. It is contained in that section of First Corinthians in which the holy ambassador is dealing with “the dissensions among you.” It represents the answer to the problem of schisms. Paul and Apollos are servants. He who plants and he who waters are equal. They are merely fellow workmen for God. Jesus Christ is the foundation. He is not divided. There is no other basis of unity.

Jesus Christ is a person. He is a who not a what. We are divided. All must admit this is so. Yet all of us steadfastly claim to be building upon this foundation. There is not a party among us, even the most exclusive and uncharitable, but the adherents will contend that they are building upon this one foundation. All make this boast, yet the more than two dozen warring factions which have grown out of the restoration movement bear eloquent witness to the fallacy of our claims. If we are sincere in asserting that we are building upon this one foundation which was laid for unity, yet we are torn by strife and disunity, it is evident that we are confused as to the identity of the foundation. Here lies the crux of our difficulty. We cannot identify Christ!

We are not divided over a person. We are divided over things. This is apparent to the most casual thinker. The restoration movement heirs are divided over societies, institutions, instrumental music, individual cups, the state of the fruit of the vine, the nature of the bread, the method of breaking it, classes, literature, and a host of other things. All upon every side of these divisive issues claim to be building upon Christ. But it is not belief in Christ that is the basis of their fellowship at all. It is a position on one or more of the above list of things.

Regardless of what you believe about Jesus Christ, you must agree with them upon these things, or you are not regarded as a brother. “The brotherhood” in each case is limited to the conformists on the partisan test. Thus we must have as many “brotherhoods” as we have parties. The reason is that we have substituted orthodoxy as to things, for belief in Jesus, as our foundation. We have elevated the what above the who, and by doing so we create a new party and add to the confusion in the religious world every time an honest dissenter arises among us. No one is regarded more of a heretic by the various parties than he who dares to build on the one foundation, Jesus Christ, and upon him alone. Such a man is not “sound” for he will not parrot the party line.

Whatever is required as a term of admission to your fellowship, or to recognition as a member of your “brotherhood” constitutes your creed. It makes no difference whether it is written down in formal terminology, or if it is simply understood and enforced by mutual consent, it is a creed if a man must subscribe to it to be in good standing with the party. For example, if you refuse to regard and love as your brethren those who have been immersed into the Lord Jesus, but who condone the use of instrumental music in their public worship, then you have another creed than Jesus Christ. One must not only be right about Jesus—the only foundation—but he must concur with you on this other matter. Conversely, if you refuse to regard and love as your brethren those who oppose the use of the instrument, that is, if you hate the “antis” as you may slightly refer to them, then you have another creed than Jesus Christ.

If you refuse to regard as your brethren those who have classes, and if you un-Christianize all who do not conform to your view on this matter, you have another creed than Jesus. If you have classes but sneer at those who cannot conscientiously have them, if you eliminate them from your “brotherhood” you are laying another foundation. You have another creed than Jesus. You constitute a sect. If you do not regard as a part of “the brotherhood” those earnest children of God who worship where individual cups are used in the Lord’s Supper; or if you use such cups and disenfranchise those who feel they must use but one container, then you have another creed than Jesus Christ, and you are an exclusive sect.

A candid examination of our profession and practice in the past, and a true evaluation of it, would reveal that the expression “No creed but Christ” has become an empty slogan, and those who use it are sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. We have used the phrase to decoy a creed-bound, weary and tired religious world into a state where they merely substitute a formal creed for an informal one, a written one for an oral one, established and sanctified by partisan tradition. There is a basic error in our present course of thinking. Unless it is corrected we are doomed to continue on the sordid street of strife, and perpetuate contention and confusion.

We have confused the new covenant writings with the Living Word. We have substituted interpretation of scripture for faith in Jesus. We have made opinions about things, not belief in Him, our foundation of hope and unity. Revelation is divine in origin. It is what God said. Interpretation is human. It is what men think God meant by what He said. The first is an uncovering of the thoughts of the infinite mind. The second is an application of the finite mind to what is revealed, to determine its requirements for ourselves.

Revelation is infallible, but we have no infallible interpretation. When any man, or any group of men in collaboration, set up their views, opinions or interpretations as the basis of fellowship, they create a human creed. It is useless to condemn the Roman Catholics for claiming to have an infallible interpreter, then proceed as if we have an infallible interpretation. The Roman Catholic believes that when the pope speaks ex cathedra, he cannot err; many of our brethren believe that when they speak they do not err. Editors are no more infallible than the pope. Being in America does not make the difference!

We should be grateful that God has not made our salvation from sin contingent upon orthodoxy, nor upon conformity to any set of opinions announced as essential by well-meaning, but partisan men. Our salvation is hinged upon faith in Jesus as the Messiah, the Son of God. This is the foundation that has been laid. Other foundation can no man lay as a basis of Christian unity. The folly of attempting it is evidenced by the factions and sects which men have created while making a vain plea for unity. Few indeed can live up to the majestic implications and the tremendous responsibilities entailed in the statement, "No creed but Christ." To do so, one must crucify every inclination toward the party spirit, and must rise above every humanly conceived limiting factor which retards or restricts fellowship in the Spirit. More of us should lift this motto from our letterheads, and transfer it to our hearts.

It is here that the fearful will ask the inevitable question. Does this mean that one must swallow everything or anything, to secure peace at any price? And it is here the partisan, unable to grasp the significance of the plea we make, will utter such vain charges. But does this mean, for example, that the man whose conscience forces him to oppose individual cups and classes, should stifle his convictions, and as a display of charity, attend worship services and participate in that which violates his scruples? Certainly not! Those who affirm this is what we mean or imply, have a veil over their hearts when they read what I write. We are obligated to be true to conscience and conviction. Not for anything would I encourage the humblest one of God's servants to go against his conscience. Then what is meant by my thesis?

It is just this. Regardless of personal views, opinions and interpretations as to the things which divide us, we shall allow none of these to be greater than our relationship in the Son of God. The unifying power of his blood must be superior to the walls men have erected. We must differ as brethren, not as enemies. We must love each other as kindred, not regard each other as aliens. Others are not separated from us, but we are separated from each other. But not one thing which divides is as great as the One who died to unite! Let us really have “no creed but Christ!”

Opinions and Unity

Mission Messenger (November 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

We believe it will be conceded by most of our readers that many who are of a factious spirit feel they are true defenders of the faith. Some are deluded by a Messiah-complex into thinking the salvation of mankind is dependent upon universal adoption of their personal views. Others consider themselves as indispensable to preservation of truth, therefore issue proclamations with such dogmatic fervor as to make their hearers shudder and tremble. Perhaps the majority are simply confused and ignorant of the true basis of the Christian relationship, and deceived into building their hope of divine approbation upon a foundation of the sand of opinions.

This is the root of most sectarianism in our age. It is the bane of every restoration movement. It is a noxious weed which, once planted, spreads with such rapidity that it soon chokes out all spiritual life. Every written creed we have examined, which has resulted in the creation of a party or sect, is nothing more nor less than the crystallization into a formal pattern of the opinions of great thinkers and consecrated men. When such a formula is announced as the foundation for fellowship for all who come after, it has started on its route of destruction and disintegration. Seldom will a generation pass without a new division arising in the ranks.

The reason why schisms always occur in the wake of propagation of opinions as bases for religious unity, is easily determined by the rational student. Such unity must be predicated upon moral and spiritual values. Opinions are neither. An opinion is the result of a purely intellectual process. It is the fruit produced by human and finite rationalization. All human reasoning must be based upon experience, and since the experiences, environments, and backgrounds of men are variant and divergent, their modes of reasoning will differ. We can only reason from the known to the unknown, and since no two persons on earth have exactly the same degree of knowledge in all fields, the inferences drawn or conclusions reached, will be as different from each other as the persons themselves are different. We can no more think alike than we can look alike. Therefore, any arbitrary pronouncement of an opinion, or set of opinions, as a basis of fellowship, will only destroy that state it was intended to create.

We dare not predicate our hope of eternal life upon opinion, for if it should prove at the judgment that the opinion is in error, it will be too late to rectify our mistake. One of the essentials to happiness and joy is the certainty of our salvation. Without this, man gravitates from exalted rejoicing to utmost despair and dejection. He is on top of the mountains one day and groping in the lowest valley the next. But certainty is not possible on the basis of opinion, for opinion is but speculation erected on probable evidence. He, who on the basis of such evidence, exalts his conclusions to the realm of dogma, and demands conformity by his fellows in order to enjoy spiritual privileges, is unsafe as a religious leader, and detrimental to the peace and harmony of the spiritual domain. It is just this procedure which has created the segments and splinters which presently exist as a shame and disgrace to the Christian way. It can produce nothing else, for disruption must follow the propagation of opinion as a test of fellowship as certainly as the night follows the day.

Men will have opinions and they will differ in them. There is no way to offset such, nor should one be sought. Such differences are not dangerous in themselves. They provide the stimuli for all research and are responsible for all progress. It is only when men, through pride, exalt their conjectures to the realm of law, and seek to bind them upon others, that harm results. The danger, then, is not in having an opinion, nor in holding one, nor even in expressing it as such. No rational being can keep from having opinions, for it would be ridiculous to suppose that the intellect would be interminably employed in the reasoning process, and never reach a conclusion based on the probability of such reasoning. A problem is created only when an opinion is pressed or forced upon another, who recognizes an equal right to have his own. John Wesley stated this in a unique way.

I have no more right to object to a man holding a different opinion from mine than I have to differ with a man because he wears a wig and I wear my own hair; but if he takes his wig off and shakes the powder in my eyes, I shall consider it my duty to get quit of him as soon as possible.

In addition to speculation, or opinion, man moves in two other mental realms. These are the realms of knowledge and faith. In each of these a state of certainty may be attained, for the evidence upon which these two are postulated is not probable. Knowledge has to do with personal experience, faith with the experience of others. Both of these are arrived at through testimony. Knowledge is produced by the evidence submitted by one's own sense. He knows that fire produces a sensation called heat, and ice a sensation designated cold. He knows certain roses are possessed of a color called red, and violets a tint called blue. Knowledge is, in its very nature, accumulative. The experiences of the past constitute a foundation upon which to build in the future. No two people have the same degree of knowledge, for no two have had identical experiences, nor are possessed of equal perceptive and retentive faculties. Those who are brought into contact with the world about them, do not have the same ability to grasp the significance of what they hear, see or touch, nor the same power of memory as a basis for future interpretations.

Any system purposing to secure unity based upon conformity in opinion or equal attainment of knowledge is doomed at its inception. It proposes to accomplish what is, by nature, impossible. Yet it is upon these two postulates virtually every attempt at unity has been made in the past. The wreckage and disunity left in the wake of all such schemes is ample proof of their unreliability. Is unity, then, unobtainable? Not so! Certainly in the realms of knowledge and opinion it must be a unity of diversity, but in the cohesive element which God has ordained as the divine basis for unity of believers, there can be unanimity, for it is faith.

Faith is the certainty of the experience of others. It is the result of the mind acting upon the evidence presented to it by such witnesses. If one is fully convinced of the credibility of the witnesses, if he has no reason to doubt that they know what they testify, and testify what they know, he must believe. On no other basis can rational men proceed. Since reliable witnesses testify to facts, and since facts are things done and said, the only knowledge required is of the facts to which the witnesses testify. Since no amount of speculation or opinion can alter facts, it is possible to be united on the basis of faith. The richest provision of grace is a system of religion based upon faith. No other is adapted to man in his present state. We will never recapture the unity of the primitive community of saints until we first understand the basis of that unity. All who believed were together.

A Sincere Offer

Mission Messenger (November 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

In the January, 1958, MISSION MESSENGER, I published the first of a series of articles entitled “Thoughts On Fellowship.” In the following months I showed that the koinonia, fellowship, was not equivalent to endorsement of the views of others, that it was not contingent upon conformity of opinion, unanimity of interpretation, or simultaneous arrival at a specific degree of knowledge. I demonstrated that it was a state or condition to which men were called by God through the gospel, and that every sincere and consecrated immersed believer was in the fellowship. Fellowship was achieved by faith and the only test of admission to fellowship, should be the divine test of faith in Jesus, submission to immersion in water in His name.

This led to the conclusion that the parties, or factions, growing out of the early nineteenth century restoration movement, sparked by the Campbells and their contemporaries, had become sectarian and exclusivist in profession and practice, and that a revival or rejuvenation of the spirit of the original restoration movement was now in order.

The only real assailants and defenders of the partisan status quo, have been those who either could not or would not understand what we wrote, and found it more to their liking to create a straw man and belabor this scarecrow with diligence, under the guise that they were smiting my position “hip and thigh.” Such one-sided tactics may be calculated to please rabid party followers who constitute “the loyal church,” but they hardly satisfy less emotional, and more rational searchers after truth. Nothing of value is to be gained from such maneuvers unless the crystallization of the party spirit is no longer a work of the flesh, but a spiritual desideratum.

It is admitted that the views I have voiced run counter to those which have generally motivated “The Church of Christ” and “The Christian Church” for many decades, although individuals in both of these, and some in neither of them, have cherished the same ideas. We have no desire to protect our convictions from investigation, nor conceal them from examination. Rather we invite inquisition. By such means we can eliminate any fallacy in our reasoning and correct our errors. Our desire is to attain to the truth on these matters. He is a friend indeed who will help us in that endeavor. We feel that this spirit characterizes the majority of our brethren in the Lord, and that they wish to be fair, honorable and just.

We, therefore, make the following proposal. At the invitation of any interested congregation in this country or Canada, we will appear before them, and present our views on the subject of fellowship and unity of the Spirit. In order to guarantee adequate investigation of our plea, we suggest three meetings, each of at least one and one-half hour duration. In the first, we will present our position. In the second, we will submit to questions by a panel of three informed men, to be selected by the congregation. In the final session, we will answer questions submitted from the audience. The three meetings may be held on consecutive nights, or all in one day, at the discretion of the local congregation.

For the second session, the panel of querists need not consist of adherents or representatives of any one faction, but may be drawn from divergent groups. For example, two may be from the “Church of Christ” and two from the “Christian Church.” In the case of congregations affiliated with the more exclusive segments, the questioners may all be drawn from those having endorsement of the party. All such meetings must be advertised in advance and open to people of all faiths. This proposal is not limited to the groups mentioned above, but is open to all other respectable religious organizations and denominations composed of believers in our Lord Jesus Christ.

For his part the editor promises to present his views in a clear and lucid manner, but not in a dogmatic or arbitrary fashion, and with the understanding that no person except himself shall be bound by them, and that no person in attending shall be considered as indorsing either the views of the speaker or the congregation making the arrangements. It will be made clear that the views of the speaker do not necessarily represent those of the inviting congregation, but that the meetings are arranged as a forum in the interest of research for truth. The speaker covenants to be gentlemanly, polite and kindly in manner to all questioners, and to exercise forbearance in love to those who express disagreement. Those who are eager to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, and who feel that such meetings will contribute to better understanding, are asked to communicate with W. Carl Ketcherside, 2360 Gardner Drive, Saint Louis 36, Missouri.

The Helping Spirit

Mission Messenger (December 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

Likewise the Spirit helps us in our weakness” (Rom. 8:26). When Jesus was preparing to return to the Father, he told his disciples that he would not leave them orphans (John 14:18). He promised to send them another Comforter. The word thus translated in the Authorized Version is parakletos. It is rendered “Counselor” in the Revised Standard Version, and “Helper” by James Moffatt. Perhaps this last is best. The word refers to one who comes to the side of another to help or assist him in pleading his case. The life of the child of God is lived by and through the indwelling Spirit. “If by the Spirit you put to death the deeds of the body you will live” (Rom. 8:13). “He who raised Christ Jesus from the dead will give life to your mortal bodies also through His Spirit which dwells in you” (Rom. 8:11).

Our opening quotation affirms our weakness. It implies our need of help or assistance. We have a divine helper who will abide with us and dwell in us as long as Jesus is absent from the earth. We are not left as orphans since he has gone away. Lack of recognition of this great truth fills our lives with fears and frustrations, doubts and discouragements. Modern philosophers talk about “the lonely crowd.” Many are unhappy, and feel forlorn and forsaken while surrounded by a sea of people. Not so the saint. He is never alone. He can say, “So we do not lose heart” (2 Cor. 4:16). Or, he can affirm, “God has given us the Spirit as a guarantee. So we are always of good courage” (2 Cor. 5:5, 6).

It little matters what happens without when the Spirit is within. “Though our outer nature is wasting away, our inner nature is being renewed every day” (2 Cor. 4:16). Note the expression “every day.” Ours is a daily renewal of strength and courage, not a temporary or spasmodic revival. The secret of the life of power is the unseen guest. “We are strengthened with might through his Spirit in the inner man” (Eph. 3:16). We are constantly exposed to the grinding effect of temptation. Our spirits become raw and bleeding from the strain and struggle. But each day the divine Helper renews us, not by making a scar, but by rebuilding healthy spiritual tissue sensitive and alive to the needs of those about us.

The covenantal community of saints, as a corporate body, suffers seriously today from ignorance of the work of the Spirit. This causes the Helper to be ignored and grieved. The body without the Spirit is dead. The saints and members of the household of God constitute a structure which “is joined together and grows into an holy temple in the Lord.” We who love the Lord “are built into it for a dwelling place of God in the Spirit.” But many are tied together simply by the party spirit. They exist only to oppose others of God’s children. They are fed upon a diet of criticism and hate. The services are occasions for diatribes and accusations. Strife, jealousy, contention and division are the order of the day. The very bishops who should guide the flock fall out among themselves and destroy the work of God. They “hold the form of religion but deny the power of it” (2 Tim. 2:5). Jude says, “It is these who set up divisions, worldly people, devoid of the Spirit.” The answer to the problem of division is a restoration of the concept of the indwelling Spirit.

In Acts 4:31, we read, “And they were all filled with the Holy Spirit and spoke the word of God with boldness.” The very next words are, “Now the company of those who believed were of one heart and soul.” Such unity is known only by a company of believers, all of whom are filled with the Holy Spirit. It is “the unity of the Spirit” we must be eager to maintain in the bond of peace. One might as well expect a corpse to function as a congregation devoid of the Spirit to further the real purpose of God. We will never secure the unity of all believers until we convince them that love, joy and peace are the fruit of the Spirit, and it is only those who are led by the Spirit who can know this fruit. Others are doomed to “strife, jealousy, anger, selfishness, dissension, party spirit, and envy.” These are works of the flesh.

What does the divine Helper do for us? What plain, practical benefits are derived from his indwelling in the heart? It is to these questions we now address our attention. We shall catalogue for you the blessings bestowed upon the saints by the Holy Spirit.

1. Pours Out God's Love

In Romans 5:1-5 there occurs a beautiful chain of thought, in which the question of the reason for suffering is partially explained. The entire passage is a culmination of Paul's reasoning in the preceding chapters. That it represents his conclusion is evidenced by the first word, “therefore.” As a result of being justified by faith, we obtain certain things through our Lord Jesus Christ. We have peace with God, access to grace, and we rejoice in our hope.

“More than that, we rejoice in our sufferings.” This is a state to which only God's children can attain. The unbeliever questions the purpose of suffering. He murmurs and complains in bitterness and anguish. He regards suffering as an end in itself, rather than a means to an end. He does not recognize the dark threads as but a part of the pattern of life; to him all is blackness and despair. The believer looks beyond the veil and sees the divine weaver working at the loom. He rejoices to see that shadow and sunshine are woven together to make a better and purer existence. It is knowledge of the divine purpose that makes the difference. “We rejoice in our sufferings, knowing . . .”

What do we know? First, that suffering produces endurance. This sterling quality, so much admired, is forged in us at the furnace of affliction. “Endurance produces character.” It is true that character is the sum total of all the facets which combine to make personality, but as used here, that character is meant which receives divine approval. Of such a person it was written, “Now before he was taken he was attested as having pleased God” (Heb. 11:5). “Character produces hope.” “Suffering produces endurance, endurance produces character, and character produces hope.” Hope is here seen in proper perspective. It is a fruit of character, which is a fruit of endurance, which is a fruit of suffering. Hope is related to suffering, it is a great-grandchild of suffering. One might as well seek to enter life without ancestry as to have hope without suffering.

But many of our cherished hopes prove to be illusions, and leave us broken, despondent and despairing in the end. Not so this hope. “Hope does not disappoint us, because God’s love has been poured into our hearts through the Holy Spirit which has been given to us.” The hearts of the saints are full of God’s love. That sacred ingredient has been poured into these ready receptacles, as the servants filled the waterpots at the wedding feast in Cana. There is no room left for doubt or despair. Not even suffering can daunt the love-filled heart. All is rejoicing. “When they called in the apostles, they beat them and charged them not to speak in the name of Jesus, and let them go. Then they left . . . rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer dishonor for the name.” The answer to the problem of suffering in the flesh is a consciousness of the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

2. Kills Deeds of Body

The heart of each one of us is a great battlefield. Here the shock troops of sin and righteousness clash daily in an unrelenting conflict. “For the desires of the flesh are against the Spirit, and the desires of the Spirit are against the flesh; for these are opposed to each other” (Gal. 5:17). The word “opposed” is a military term. The original has to do with digging trenches. But trenches are constructed only for sustained warfare in a given area. The Spirit and the flesh have dug in for a long battle. It is useless for us to seek for victory over the flesh purely by our own initiative and will. We cannot conquer by good resolutions or sheer will power. The fleshly desire we bury today crops up in new guise tomorrow. “I do not understand my own actions. For I do not do what I want, but I do the very thing I hate” (Rom. 7:15).

It is all very well for advisers to recommend conquering this or that desire by firm resolve, but even those who so advise have areas of personal weakness where their own resolutions have proven powerless. The apostle puts his finger on the problem, with these words, “I can will what is right, but I cannot do it” (Rom. 7:18). The truth is that we gain the victory, not by affirming our own power, but by admitting our utter weakness. The victory that overcomes the world is faith— not faith in our own ability, but faith in the triumphant power of the Spirit.

So long as a man seeks to deliver himself, by merely wanting or willing to do better or be better, he is lost, for “when I want to do right, evil lies close at hand” (Rom. 7:21). When he admits and confesses his own failure, futility and inability to deliver himself, and cries out, “Wretched man that I am! Who will deliver me from the body of this death?” he places deliverance in the hands of another, a specialist in spiritual warfare. It is a matter of good generalship when you are surrounded by the enemy to call for reinforcements and superior power. God wants us to gain the victory and has supplied the indwelling Spirit as the source of power. “If you live according to the flesh you will die, but if by the Spirit you put to death the deeds of the body you will live.” The Helper is on your side to put to death the deeds of the body.

Our life is one of surrender. We either surrender to the flesh or to the Spirit. The conquest of the flesh is made by the Spirit. We do not lead our forces in the battle, we are “led by the Spirit of God” (Rom. 8:14). This is the distinguishing characteristic of the sons of God. They do not set their minds on their desires, or on the struggles, but on the Spirit. “To set the mind on the flesh is death, but to set the mind on the Spirit is life and peace” (Rom. 8:6). Here is the secret of life! Here is the secret of peace! It is the set of the mind, the surrender of the heart that makes the difference.

One ship sails east, another west,

With the selfsame winds that blow;

’Tis the set of the sail, and not the gale,

That determines the way we go!

3. Testifies to Sonship

Slaves or sons! What a difference in these two words. In one of the most pregnant passages in the new covenant scriptures (Gal. 4:1-7), the apostle paints a glowing picture of the transformation from slavery to sonship. In verse 1, he shows that the Jews, under the law were “no better than slaves.” In verse 3, he declares, “we were slaves to the elemental spirits of the universe.” However, when the time had fully come, God sent forth his Son, to redeem those under the law, in order that they might receive adoption as sons. Redeemed slaves were adopted into the divine family. “So through God you are no longer a slave but a son, and if a son then an heir” (verse 7).

It is a long step from bondage and slavery to freedom and sonship. The natural tendency upon the part of the adopted would be one of fear that the condition would again reverse, and he find himself reverting to his former abject state. To make a real prince out of a pauper requires more than a mere legal procedure. It would be difficult for one to call God “Father” who had previously cringed in fear of the August presence. Here it is that the Spirit becomes a true Helper. “And because you are sons, God has sent the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying ‘Abba! Father!’” The Holy Spirit is here called “the Spirit of his Son” because of the problems involved in sonship.

Because of the relationship of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, there is no reticence between them. The Holy Spirit in my heart enables me to come boldly to the throne of grace. He takes over from my feeble, halting, stumbling approach, and cries out “Abba! Father!” My stammering tongue is thus encouraged to proceed. The word “Abba” is Aramaic for “father” The term “Father” is a translation of the Greek term for the same. This implies that former slaves, whether Jew or Greek, can call upon God who has adopted them, in their own language. They have truly “come to know God, or rather to be known by God” (Gal. 4:9).

But there is another constant fear of a transformed slave, and that is that his credentials to sonship may be challenged by another, and that he may not be able to prove his adoptive rights, or sonship. In this event, the Spirit of God acts as a witness to substantiate the testimony of one’s own spirit, for “in the mouth of two or three witnesses must every word be established.” The Holy Spirit cannot cry “Abba! Father!” in one who is not a child of God, for he does not dwell in those who are not sons. “Because you are sons, God has sent the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, ‘Abba! Father!’” Thus, this very cry of the Spirit is proof of our sonship.

“For you did not receive the spirit of slavery to fall back into fear, but you have received the spirit of sonship. When we cry, ‘Abba! Father’ it is the Spirit himself bearing witness with our spirit that we are the children of God, and if children, then heirs, heirs of God and fellow heirs with Christ” (Rom. 8:15-17). I must confess that for many years I did not grasp the beauty and meaning of this passage. Growing up as I did, in a religious environment which regarded one with suspicion and as a little queer, who talked very much of the Holy Spirit, I gave the traditional explanation of it, and let it go at that. I knew little, if anything about the Roman method of purchasing a slave or adopting a son, but now a whole new vista of the Spirit’s work has been opened to my heart. Inasmuch as the best summary of this topic known to me is found under the article “Adoption” in The Local Colour of the Bible, Vol. 3, pages 275-277, I ask indulgence of our readers for quoting at length.

St. Paul is the only one of the New Testament writers to use the term “adoption!” This is not surprising, because adoption was not a custom among the Jews, and, in a legal sense, was absolutely unknown. On the other hand, the custom was a common one among the Greeks and Romans and as a Roman citizen Paul was familiar with it and with the legal ceremonies which belonged to it.

Under Roman law an entire stranger by blood might be adopted into a family and become a member of that family, holding the same position in it as a son born in marriage. According to Dr. Ball, he even became a member of the family in a higher sense than some who had the family blood in their veins, than emancipated sons of descendants through females. He assumed the family name, and took part in the mystic sacrificial rites. He could no more marry in the family of his adoption within the prohibited degrees than those related by blood. He severed his connection completely with his former family, and in the eyes of the law he became so entirely a new personality that even his debts were cancelled.

Let us look at the process. In the presence of five witnesses and the libripens (one who held the balance as if to weigh out money, at nominal sales), the son about to be adopted was sold three times by his father. According to the law of the Twelve Tables, if a father sold his son thrice he lost his paternal rights over him (patria potestas). A fictitious law-suit then followed, by which the person to be transferred was surrendered to the adopter, and the act was ratified in a set form of words.

As the form of adoption and that of sale into slavery were very similar, the presence of witnesses was essential to testify to the real nature of the ceremony. That is why the Apostle says, “Ye received not the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye received the Spirit of Adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father” (Rom. 8:15). Suppose that the adopter had died and that the adopted son lays claim to the inheritance. His claim is refused; his status as a son is denied; it is declared that he was sold as a slave and that he has no legal right to the inheritance. So the son seeks the aid of the law-court. “No,” he pleads, “the ceremony was that of adoption, the deceased claimed me by the name of son. He took me to his home. I called him father and he allowed it. I sat at his table where the slaves never sat. He told me the inheritance was mine.” But the law requires corroborative evidence. One of the witnesses is called. “I was present,” he says, “at the ceremony. It was I who held the scales and struck them with the ingot of brass. The transaction was not a sale into slavery. It was an adoption. I heard the words of vindication, and I say this person was claimed by the deceased not as a slave, but as a son.”

And who is the witness to that spiritual adoption which makes us sons of God? It is the Third Person in the Trinity. “The Spirit himself beareth witness (along) with our spirit, that we are children of God.” (The Local Colour of the Bible, by Charles W. Budden, M.D., and Edward Hastings, M.A. Published by T. and T. Clark, Edinburgh.)

4. Strengthens Inner Man

In Ephesians 3:10, the apostle writes, “that through the church the manifold wisdom of God might now be made known to the principalities and powers in the heavenly places.” The principalities and powers are celestial beings, orders of angels. Until the death of Jesus, the plan of the mystery had been hidden for ages. Angels desired to look into God’s intentions but were unable to do so. With the planting of the covenantal community made up of reconciled persons of every nation and tongue, it suddenly became apparent to the angels how the plan was to be implemented in the universe. All of the revelations previously given, and which appeared so complex, now fitted properly into place, so that the many-sided (manifold) wisdom of God was seen in a clear demonstration.

In verse 11, it is pointed out that this was not an accidental result, but “was according to the eternal purpose which he has realized in Christ Jesus our Lord.” The role, or function, of the church was not an afterthought of God, but was included in a deliberate and unvarying plan, which came to fruition in Jesus. This fact provides ground for real hope. “In whom we have boldness and confidence of access through our faith in him.”

However, there is a difficulty presented. It can be stated in the following sequence. God had an eternal purpose. This involved a plan which was hidden for ages. It was now revealed to his holy apostles and prophets. How did it happen, then, that the apostles were required to suffer such persecution for making known the plan? Could not God have foreseen and forestalled such tragic suffering? Anticipating the problem, Paul writes, “So I ask you not to lose heart over what I am suffering for you, which is your glory.” This placed the suffering of the ambassadors in proper perspective. It was a matter of glory, not of giving up. But it is a difficult thing in the Christian life “not to lose heart.” Moments of doubt and despair do rush in. Questions arise, fear takes hold, and a feeling of futility and frustration besets us.

It is precisely because of this we need “a Helper.” So Paul assures the disciples, “For this reason I bow my knees before the Father from whom every family in heaven and on earth is named, that according to the riches of his glory he may grant you to be strengthened with might through his Spirit in the inner man” (Eph. 3:16). The inner man is the “inmost self” of Romans 8:21. The apostle asks, “For what person knows a man’s thoughts except the spirit of the man which is in him?” (1 Cor. 2:11). The inner man is the spirit in contrast to the body, or flesh. Luther says of the spirit, that it is “the highest and noblest part of man, which qualifies him to lay hold of incomprehensible, invisible, eternal things; in short, it is the house where God’s word and Faith are at home.”

The lexicons define the spirit as, “the rational part of man, the power of perceiving and grasping divine and eternal things, and upon which the Spirit of God exerts its influence.” Therefore, to be strengthened in the inner man is to be given the ability to perceive and grasp the divine plan and purpose. The apostle, in this context describes it as having “power to comprehend with all the saints what is the breadth and length and height and depth.” He calls it “being filled with all the fulness of God.” This does not mean simply the aptitude to grasp the meaning of terms in the scriptures, nor to simply envision the divine plan for the world.

Rather, it is the ability to understand the design and purpose of God for you as an individual, to grasp the relationship of your existence to the eternal purpose. It is unthinkable that God does not have a design for each of us, or to conjecture that the spirit which dwells in us was bestowed by accident or chance. Not a sparrow falls to the ground without God’s knowledge. I am of more value than many sparrows. If I live on a purely animal plane, I will have no concept of the part that is played by suffering, frustration and sorrow in my life. If I am wholly committed to Jesus, I will be able to see the finger of God tracing the pattern of my destiny. This is a gift of God which the animal man can never enjoy. “The unspiritual man does not receive the gifts of the Spirit of God, for they are folly to him, and he is not able to understand them because they are spiritually discerned” (1 Cor. 2:14). Ponder upon the expressions “the gifts of the Spirit” and “he is not able to understand.”

There are thousands today whose lives are bounded by fears and circumscribed by failure, because they deny in practice, if not in word, the indwelling of the Spirit. All such must rely for strength purely upon natural or human resources. These might provide power enough if our foes were only human. But we must also face the wiles of Satan. “For we are not contending against flesh and blood, but against the principalities, against the powers, against the world rulers of this present darkness, against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places.” One reason why we do not feel the need of divine inner power is that we have been conditioned to think we are not personally and actually at war. We have an idealistic sense of a universal struggle but we feel remote from the field of battle. If we have any part to play in the struggle it is in “paying our taxes,” that is, giving of our means, to send someone else into battle.

Accordingly, the strength or power in the inner man is not required. We feel quite capable of carrying on with our own resources. Our worship becomes a mere observance of formal rituals, our prayers mere recitations. We read about the Holy Spirit in the sacred writings, we talk about him, but we do not personally experience his presence. He is not real. He is an indescribable, indefinable, intangible thing. He is not a strength-giving, power bestowing person. But it is a proven fact that no fleshly man has sufficient strength in and of himself to triumph over the infernal trinity—the world, the flesh, and the devil. “Thanks be to God, who in Christ always leads us in triumph. . . . Not that we are sufficient of ourselves to claim anything as coming from us; our sufficiency is from God” (2 Cor. 2:14; 3:5).

Twice in 2 Corinthians 4 (verses 1 and 16) Paul declares, “So we do not lose heart.” Between these two statements of courage, he declares, “We have this treasure in earthen vessels, to show that the transcendent power belongs to God and not to us.” He then gives a catalog of things endured by the earthen vessel, and shows how the divine power within buoys and sustains. “We are afflicted in every way, but not crushed; perplexed, but not driven to despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; struck down, but not destroyed.” The climax of his account is one of the most comforting passages in all literature. “So we do not lose heart. Though our outer nature is wasting away, our inner nature is being renewed every day.”

This is the secret of growing old gracefully. It places the body and spirit in proper perspective. The loss of natural powers may coincide with the increase of spiritual power. “We are strengthened with might through the Spirit in the inner man.” The word “might” is from dunamis, power. The Holy Spirit is a fountain of youth for the human spirit. “They who wait for the Lord shall renew their strength, they shall mount up with wings like eagles, they shall run and not be weary, they shall walk and not faint” (Isa. 40:31). When one recuperates from physical illness he freely announces that he is getting stronger every day. Will not one who ceases to quench the Spirit, but commits himself wholly to God, feel the surging strength flowing through the inner man until he can run and not be weary? Will he not grow stronger every day?

We need to recognize the part which discipline of suffering plays in our earth life. Affliction is part of a preparatory process. It is not at all to bring us to death. Death is not an end but a means to an end. It is not the closing of a door but the opening of one. “For this slight momentary affliction is preparing for us an eternal weight of glory beyond all comparison.” Of what did this “slight momentary affliction” consist? The apostle speaks of perplexity, persecution, and being struck down. Perplexity is mental anguish; persecution is physical suffering. Paul said, “For while we live we are always being given up to death for Jesus’ sake.” How could such affliction be regarded as either slight or momentary? The answer is that it is so in comparison with the eternal weight of glory.

If the Christian can regard his affliction as “carrying in the body the death of Jesus?” and recognize that commitment to God is not so much the adoption of a way of life, but the actual assumption of the life of Jesus, it will enable him to endure the earthly pilgrimage cheerfully, despite external reverses. “You joyfully accepted the plundering of your property, since you knew that you yourselves had a better possession and an abiding one” (Heb. 10:34). This philosophy allows a vision of the unseen. One does not look at the bruises, scars and marks of the lash. His eye pierces the veil. “We look not to the things that are seen but to the things that are unseen; for the things that are seen are transient, but the things that are unseen are eternal.” Faith permits one to see the unseen and to view the invisible. “By faith . . . he endured as seeing him who is invisible” (Heb. 11:27).

We now live in a tent as befits strangers and wanderers. It is destined to be destroyed. It cannot always resist the battering of the storms of life. It is temporary and transitory. But when we leave it, we have a house not made with hands. It is eternal and enduring. A Christian who dies does not leave home; he goes home! Our goal is to reach that state where “what is mortal may be swallowed up of life.” The record assures us that “He who has prepared us for this very thing is God, who has given us the Spirit as a guarantee.” The Holy Spirit is a helper and comforter, a consolation and a strength for tent-dwellers, as all of us are, while awaiting our great transformation. The holy guest shares our lot and gives us power to endure and to conquer. “I will all the more gladly boast of my weaknesses that the power of Christ may rest upon me. For the sake of Christ, then I am content with weaknesses, insults, hardships, persecutions, and calamities; for when I am weak, then I am strong” (2 Cor. 12:9, 10).

The Spirit-Filled Life

The indwelling Spirit is the secret to the satisfactory life. The things that trouble and distress us are works of the flesh. These include not only immorality, impurity, idolatry, and drunkenness, but also enmity, strife, jealousy, anger, selfishness, dissension, party spirit, and envy (Gal. 5:19). "The desires of the Spirit are against the flesh." A lack of recognition of the Spirit, deadens and destroys the fruit of the Spirit. Men fight, divide and destroy one another because they seek justification by cold legalistic means. They have a zeal but not according to knowledge. Being ignorant of God's system of justification, they set up their own system, and demand rigid conformity to it. They act toward each other, not as brothers, but as antagonistic lawyers. To them the new covenant scriptures do not constitute a love letter to the family of God, but a code of jurisprudence with which to batter humble servants into submission. In almost every case the bitter factionalist seeks to explain away the teaching of God's word about the indwelling Spirit. He must get rid of the Spirit to justify his bitter, hateful attitude toward those whom God loves.

But the man who is conscious of the Spirit, who lives with the Spirit, and is led by the Spirit, conquers the flesh. He is not affected by any external force. He lives in a constant glow of inner sunlight despite the dark clouds on the outside. He is "sure that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor things present, nor things to come, nor powers, nor height, nor depth, nor anything else in all creation, will be able to separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus our Lord." He does not set his compass by what men desire or expect of him. He is not interested in conforming to the standards of men, but in reforming to be more like God. Men cast him out but he receives them in his own heart. "When reviled, we bless; when persecuted, we endure; when slandered, we try to conciliate; we have become, and are now, as the refuse of the world, the offscouring of all things" (1 Cor. 4:13). The Holy Spirit abides in those who are “fools for Christ’s sake.”

How can we attain this glorious state where we are even unaffected when we “become a spectacle to the world, to angels, and to men”? We must recognize that the Spirit of God is a gift. The divine Helper is given of God. But a gift must be accepted before it can be appropriated to personal use. One may offer his car to help me accomplish my work, but if I am oblivious of the offer, or if I rationalize that he does not mean it, so that I never accept and use it, it will benefit me not at all. It is at this juncture that prayer comes in. First, I must be grateful and thankful that Jesus promised the Helper, and I must rest upon that promise. I must not doubt it, question it, or seek to explain it away, but accept it as true and valid, and expect its fulfillment in my life. Then I must pray God for the Spirit and his work and fruit in my life. “If you then, who are evil, know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more will the heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to those who ask him?” (Luke 11:13). Have you ever really asked and besought God for the Spirit? It will surprise you at the change that will be wrought within when you do.

We must also cultivate the attitude which will cause us to intreat that others may be strengthened within by the Spirit. The apostle sets for us this example. “I bow my knees before the Father— that according to the riches of his glory he may grant you to be strengthened with might through his Spirit in the inner man.” We should ask others to pray in our behalf. But above all, we must be wholly committed or fully surrendered unto God. To the extent we hold back we hinder the Spirit. The difference in the fruitful life and the sterile, barren life is the set of the mind. “To set the mind on the flesh is death, but to set the mind on the Spirit is life and peace.”

Setting the mind is an act of the will. It is the result of volition, the deliberate implementation of the right to choose the course one will pursue. It is enthusiastic and unreserved commitment to the way of the Spirit, a complete surrender of personality which allows one to lose his life in Christ, so that he no longer lives, but it is Jesus who lives in him. The result of this positive direction of the mind will be life and peace. This is not the lot of the fearful and unbelieving, the frightened and faithless. It is fruit gathered only by the courageous and faithful. It is the reward of those who trust the Spirit in childlike simplicity.

O Lord, my heart is not lifted up, my eyes are not raised too high;

I do not occupy myself with things too great and marvelous for me.

But I have calmed and quieted my soul, like a child quieted at it's mothers' breast;

like a child that is quieted is my soul.

Psalm 131.

Old John

Mission Messenger (December 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

Many of our readers saw in their newspapers the story of “Old John” Toten, who died in the state prison at Moundsville, West Virginia, October 15, 1960. The account said, “The 83-year-old convicted slayer, spent 44 years behind the walls which he chose as his home rather than ‘the outside world.’” He was paroled on January 27, 1948, but several months later returned and asked to be re-admitted. When told he must first violate his parole, he absconded to his former home in Pennsylvania where he welcomed arrest and returned to prison happy. He told a fellow inmate that life in “the outside world” had become too swift for him.

While it seems incredible that one would prefer prison to freedom, there are many like “Old John” in the spiritual realm. Unable to cope with the responsibilities entailed in a life of liberty, they erect partisan walls around themselves and feel a sense of security behind them. Fear may be the greatest single factor contributing to the perpetuity of sectism in our land. One does not really need to study, think, or engage in spiritual research to be a member of a sect. Indeed, he will be more popular if he does neither. If he can continue to parrot the party plea, and conform to the creedal basis of his society, he will be regarded as “sound” and “loyal.”

It is of the essence of sectism that it measures everything by the knowledge accumulated and crystallized in the past. The interpretations, explanations, and opinions, arrived at by godly, consecrated, but fallible men, in yesteryear, become the criterion by which the worth of all contemporary reasoning must be judged. With each generation the encircling wall of tradition grows higher. Ancestor worship becomes a part of the prejudicial pattern. Original thinking is stifled on the ground that it is a reflection against those who were our fathers in the faith. Dissenters, although honest, are labelled and harassed, and eventually hounded out as heretics. This has been the tragic history of sectism in all ages.

Eventually, with passing generations, the scales of justice are finally balanced by the weight of enlightened opinion, and the maligned culprit is enshrined as a martyr of righteousness. Most of the religious heroes of today were driven forth as heretics in the long past yesterday. But mankind seems never to learn that, while you can confine men behind walls, you cannot imprison truth. Those who scurry to the inner shadow of their protective walls to preserve truth always end by losing it. Truth was never given to be the exclusive personal property of any sect or segment. It was given to mankind for universal sustenance of the spirit, as the atmosphere was given to perpetuate the physical life, not of one group or nation, but of all men everywhere. It is as absurd to attempt to confine truth to human creeds and formulae as to try and bottle or can the air we breathe.

Just as I never pass a prison without feeling compassion for those who are deprived of their freedom, so I never contemplate sectism with its high walls and barred doors, without a tinge of sadness for those who surrender liberty for security. Peace is not so sweet as to be purchased by shackles. Life is not so precious that we should maintain it at the cost of all that makes it worth living. But prison makes a man unfit to compete in a world of freedom. Sectism deprives man of the will to be free. It wraps him in a mummy-like shroud which renders him helpless. He cannot move upward and onward for he dare not move at all. As the marching prisoners halt when they reach the stone wall, so the marching saints must stop at their creedal barrier. "Thus far, and no farther shalt thou come," is the watchword of every sect.

Sectism always begins with honest, sincere men, but it is motivated by fear. Those who fear the loss of what little has been gained, build a fence around it, and end by losing all— that which has been attained by stagnation and atrophy; that which could have been attained by complacency and lack of effort. The attempt to define the extent and scope of the kingdom of heaven, by drawing our own lines of demarkation, and concluding that those outside of our walls are outside of God's grace, only reveals the incipient spirit of pride and haughtiness in the hearts of many.

Freedom is a blessing of such magnitude as to be inestimable in value, but it carries with it such responsibility as to frighten many, and drive them cringing and slinking within the safety of prison walls. "Old John" deliberately chose to die in prison, rather than to live in a world of freedom outside. We are saddened by such manifestations of the degradation of human character and will, but our hearts are even more deeply stirred by the voluntary submission to confinement of those who dare not face "the outside world" in the spirit. May He who came to "set the captives free" give us liberty in thought, word and action, and may we be not entangled again within the yoke of bondage.

The Sacred Quest

Mission Messenger (December 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

It has long been a favorite theme of ours that the noblest purpose of man on earth is the pursuit of truth. From this, however, many shrink back, moved by fear, and hampered by the fetters of tradition. The party spirit, which is classed with the works of the flesh, by the apostle Paul, is always opposed to free investigation and unhampered research. The Romanist, for instance, dares not select his reading matter without permission from other men. The power of censorship is exercised by the hierarchy. The mother of all sects seeks to perpetuate her tyranny over the intellect through suppression and boycott.

The same charge can be leveled against religious partyism in general. It may be a veritable hallmark of the sectarian attitude. Indeed, the slanted propaganda, the twisted testimony, and the one-sided presentation are the chief weapons in the party arsenal. On what grounds do men who are thrust into prominence by force of circumstances, arrogate to themselves the right to think for others, and to enforce conformity by threat of excommunication and boycott? Does the mere assumption of leadership convey to him who exercises it the right to dominate thought, and to deny its freedom to others?

We face today the sad spectacle of the closed mind. Even worse, this attitude has its public defenders. These assert that one should make up his mind as to the truth of a matter and then close it against the encroachment of any other idea. The philosophy of such rationalization is that the open mind can arrive at truth, but cannot retain it; that it can sort truth out from error originally, but cannot preserve it against error in the future. In its final analysis this simply means that one possessed of truth is more helpless than before he arrived at it, for if one without truth has power to attain to it, then loses his ability to retain it, he is weaker with truth than without it.

It would astonish many of our readers to know how many of those in current factions are cautioned against reading anything not written by a member of "the faithful brotherhood." The leaders exercise their right to read what they wish, and often borrow ideas which they use freely, but these must be filtered to the "common people" who are discouraged from doing their own thinking, lest they be led away from "the truth." This is Romanistic censorship on a small scale, and conducted by wholly unqualified and inadequate regulators.

Actually, such enslaved partisans can never really come to an appreciation of universal truth, because their outlook is too provincial and parochial. It would be like a dweller in a remote mountain who judged the geography of the whole world by what he could see from his cabin door. In ancient times, Heraclitus assigned the lack of wisdom to the fact that, "Men sought truth in their own little worlds, and not in the great and common world." No man is God, and no party is the Deity. None of us possess universal knowledge or infallible wisdom. It is only through the free exchange of thought that we can strive toward either.

He who closes his mind, generally does so, not because he fears to learn truths new to him, but because he fears that what he already has may prove to be not the truth. He does not want it placed in the crucible of investigation, for fear that it will not stand the test. By throwing up walls about himself, he can forego the searchlight of investigation and consider himself fortunate to continue unhampered in pursuit of his traditional pattern. It is fear which causes men to refuse to examine anew those practices which, in the past, have created division. To assume that when brethren have once severed relations with each other, the case is forever settled, because one side has all the truth and the other has none, and that future generations have no recourse but to perpetuate the feud and widen the gap, is the tragic conclusion of little minds and warped spirits. Such a philosophy would render reconciliation forever an impossibility, and brand a peacemaker as a traitor and reprobate, instead of a child of God.

George Bernanos, in his book, Tradition of Freedom, makes this apt observation, "The man who defends freedom of thought only for himself is, indeed, already on the point of betraying it." This statement deserves long and careful meditation. I am convinced that all who misrepresent, ridicule and persecute those who are sincere non-conformists, do so because of a genuine lack of personal faith. It is not the desire to defend the truth which prompts their castigation of others, but the attempt to force misguided zeal to atone for their empty hearts. Those who love truth for truth's sake, and who love mankind for God's sake, are neither egotistical nor cruel.

The first step toward acquisition of truth is the acknowledgment of truth regardless of where it may be and who holds it. So long as it is regarded as a partisan possession, we must be limited only to the discoveries of the coterie of partisans with whom we are directly affiliated. When truth is regarded as a universal blessing bestowed upon the intelligent creation by a benevolent Creator, we can join with anyone in honest research for greater knowledge of truth without sacrificing either past acquirements or present convictions.

The open Bible, the open mind, and the open hand— these are characteristics of spiritual greatness. When the sacred volume is kept open for unbiased and objective study, when the open mind is freed from the fetters of traditionalism and creedal tyranny, when the open hand is extended to welcome all lovers of truth and to receive their contributions of discovered truth—then we are safe! But the Bible is a closed book to many. They have mined a few of its treasures and these they jealously clutch, the while they bar the entrance against those who would dig deeper and explore those veins of precious ore not yet brought to the surface.

It is frequently those who know the least who make such frantic objection to learning more. Their minds have “waxed gross” lest they discover truths which would make their sermon notes obsolete, and force them to acknowledge mistakes of the past. The closed mind is barred by fear and locked by pride. No man is free who is shackled by inner dread. It is the closed mind which so often resorts to the closed fist, thinking by brute force to compel where reason is lacking. Such tactics only shift the ground of our problems, they never solve them!

The apostle, in a startling sentence, shows the utter futility of any attempt to suppress the truth. One must either acknowledge truth or eventually be crushed by it. In 2 Corinthians 13:8 we are informed, “For, after all, we can make no progress against the truth; we can only work for the truth.” He who denies the truth, who shrinks from it and refuses to acknowledge it, will make no progress. He will lose his soul and be banished from the light. We need bold adventurers who dare to set sail with their only goal being discovery of the truth! The truth makes men free!

The Horses of Glaucus

Mission Messenger (December 1960)

Volume 22

[Abstract]

Have you ever read the translation by J. B. Phillips, of Galatians 5:15? It is a rich gem, which contains a stern rebuke to the attitude of many who profess to be followers of the Prince of peace. I like it because it shows what freedom does not include. It also contains a grim warning of the consequences resulting from a misconception of freedom. Here it is: “But if freedom means merely that you are free to attack and tear one another to pieces, be careful that it doesn’t mean that between you, you destroy your fellowship altogether!”

Recently, in a southern city, I tuned-in to several radio broadcasts. Feeling was running high over certain disputed issues. Congregations had purchased time on the air for the purpose of blasting away at those opposed to them. The aerial waves were filled with vitriolic charges. Accusations and counter-accusations were hurled in successive programs. Challenges to debate were flung out by blatant partisans. The listening world, if listening at all, was treated to the sordid spectacle of men who claimed to plead for unity, clawing at the spiritual vitals of each other, and rending to shreds the characters of those who opposed them. This is called “preaching the gospel.” What a travesty upon a term meaning good news!

Such fratricidal strife always works its own rebuke. He who hates his brother consumes that brother from without and himself from within. No one can kindle the fire of passion and not be burnt. Only the arch-fiend who sowed distrust and suspicion in the world gains from such unholy tactics. What a shame that brotherhood must be stifled while a world stands aghast at the gory sight of the children of the same Father, locked in mortal combat, each seeking to thrust his sword into the heart of the other, each smeared with the blood of his companion.

In ancient mythology, King Glaucus fed his horses upon human flesh to make them fierce. One day, in a mad dash, they upset his chariot, and devoured him before he could rise from the ground. The man who plants the seed of animosity, must partake of the fruit of his harvest. One cannot sow hate and reap peace; he cannot sow to the wind without being caught in the whirlwind he creates. Division is not accidental. Neither is peace. Division is caused; peace is made. “And now I implore you, my brothers, to keep a watchful eye on those who cause trouble and make difficulties among you, in plain opposition to the teaching you have been given, and steer clear of them” (Rom. 16:17). “Blessed are the peacemakers for they shall be called the children of God.”

The spirit of factionalism is never satiated. It is raised in every generation to devour and destroy. Hephaestus chained Prometheus to a crag in the Caucasus Mountains. Each day a vulture came and ate out the liver of the imprisoned victim. Each night the organ grew back to furnish a bloody feast for the carrion bird the next day. So it appears the church of God lies bound on the mountain peaks of faith, exposed to the rending and tearing of those who do not preach peace, but dedicate their efforts to the partisan conflict.

We cannot divide ourselves into unity! We cannot unite the world by dividing among ourselves! Where has God provided division as a remedy for the spiritual ills in his family? Can purity be achieved by segregating the leaven from the lump?

Can the balm of Gilead heal while kept in a bottle on the shelf? Can salt exert its influence while kept in the shaker? Is it not time to cease listening to prophets of disaster who seek to lock us inside our own shells? Shall we not make the Christian concept the activating, energizing influence it was intended to be? Shall we admit that the Christian way is so weak and powerless that it must succumb to every foe upon contact, and dare not be risked in open combat in the arena?

It is high time for real men to rise above their petty prejudices, trivial traditions, and frightened feelings, and enter the lists boldly in the crusade for peace, the most challenging cause to confront a sick, weary, disappointed and frustrated religious world. Let us have done with murmuring and meandering, with fears and futility. In the spirit of true adventure let us face up to the greatest foe of our age, the lumbering giant of religious schism.

Surely our freedom has a greater design than to make us free to attack and tear one another to pieces. Let those who differ be big and brave enough to meet face to face and settle their differences in an atmosphere of love. Let them respect each other as brethren while they work together to solve their problems of conflict. I pledge myself, herewith, to meet any of my brethren who differ with me, and to do so at any time or place which they suggest and I can arrange. I will pray with them, converse with them, and study with them, in an honest attempt to lessen any tensions, and to narrow the gap that exists between us. I will meet with brethren under any arrangement commensurate with fairness and justice, and I will respect their dignity and rights in our conversations together. I am obligated to "follow after peace and the things wherewith one may edify another." We must find the way to peace or we will all perish!

MISSION MESSENGER ESSAYS (1961)

Volume 23

The Path of Peace

Index to Volumes

- The Divine Guarantee
- Unity in Diversity
- Members of One Body
- Queries to the Editor (No. 1)
- Abuse of Scripture
- Joint Participation
- Queries to the Editor (No. 2)
- Unity and Identity
- The Plea for Unity
- Preaching Christ
- The Human Factor
- The Perfect Church
- Only One Church
- Christians in Babylon
- The Higher Path
- Analysis of Heresy
- Are They Apostates?
- Are We a Denomination?
- The Greatest of These
- Restoring Restoration
- A Great Abuse
- False Teachers
- Background of Restoration

- Adventures in Religion (1)
- Restoration Astray
- Adventures in Religion (2)
- A Brighter Day
- The Growth of Division
- Adventures in Religion (3)
- Rejecting and Returning

The Divine Guarantee

Mission Messenger (January 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

It is a manifestation of divine grace that God always accommodates his revelation to man's nature and need. And man, being a creature inclined to doubts and fears, requires assurance in spiritual, as well as in other matters. It was upon this basis that men, in executing contracts and making promises to each other, demanded an oath witnessed by some person or thing greater than themselves. Accordingly, although it was not necessary, God confirmed his promises by an oath. "Among men it is customary to swear by something greater than themselves. And if a statement is confirmed by an oath, that is the end of all quibbling. So in this matter, God, wishing to show beyond doubt that his plan was unchangeable, confirmed it with an oath."

Our eternal hope is conditioned upon our sustaining a proper relationship to God. Surely here, if in any field, for our happiness and peace of mind, we must have a guarantee. We must know that God dwells in us and we in God. This assurance is given by the indwelling Spirit, as John twice affirms in his first epistle. "The man who does obey God's commands lives in God and God lives in him, and the guarantee of his presence within us is the Spirit he has given us" (1 John 3:24). "And as I wrote above, the guarantee of our living in him and his living in us is the share of his own Spirit which he gives us" (1 John 4:13).

It is lack of recognition of the power of the indwelling

Spirit which causes so much distress and disillusionment among members of the community of saints today. Those who regard revelation of God in Christ Jesus as a legalistic arrangement, and who seek to be justified by law can never be certain of their spiritual standing. When asked if they are saved they reply that they hope so, or they are trying to be. There is ever the fear that they do not know as much as they should at the time, or that they are not as good as they ought to be, so they are tormented because of their own frailties and shortcomings. They do not really trust in God but must rely on their own knowledge and strength. They seek to be saved by exercise of their own will power, and not by the power of God's will. Actually, they are trying to earn salvation, and have no way of knowing whether they are paid up to date.

Such a philosophy breeds envy, hatred and strife. Those who embrace it become jealous of each other and when they cannot attain the heights reached by others, they seek to pull them down to their own level. One of the prevalent symptoms of the legalistic heart is an attempt to explain away the indwelling Spirit. Every passage referring to this gracious promise must be glossed over, or made to conform to the cold ritual of "do and don't." It is unthinkable that those who have reduced the hope of salvation to a long, arduous, toilsome climb up a ladder, with the frightened climber holding on by sheer force of will, could ever concede that a Helper has been provided to soothe and sustain from within. Jesus comforted the sorrowing, fearful disciples by promising, "I shall ask the Father to give you someone else to stand by you, to be with you always" (John 14:16 — J. B. Phillips Translation). We can only conclude that those who are still sad and frightened do not recognize the "someone else," standing by. So the church is filled with the bickering, backbiting, contention, and strife created by the shriveled spirits of the scared and lonely.

The only way to counteract the sordid condition now existing among the scattered people of God is to recapture the consciousness of the nearness of the Spirit. The unity we are told to guard and maintain in the bond of peace is “the unity of the Spirit.” Until we regain and employ this vital concept, whatever we achieve will be merely superficial, and the festering wounds healed over will burst forth again in other areas of the body. The appeals to partisan pride and external influence to manifest a semblance of agreement avail nothing except to postpone the day of division. The works of the flesh can only be killed by the Spirit. “If by the Spirit you put to death the deeds of the body you will live,” or, as Phillips translates it, “you are on the way to real living.” What are some of the ways in which the Helper assists us to enjoy real living? Let us consider a few of them.

1. Encourages Our Hope

It is neither incidental nor accidental that we have in the midst of the most profound treatise on the indwelling Spirit (Romans 8), an insertion of the topic of hope. The apostle mentions the universal travail of created life, and points out that even those who possess the first fruits of the Spirit, groan inwardly, while awaiting that great event when we shall come into the fulness of sonship, and the culmination of the divine adoptive purpose. He says, “We were saved by this hope, but in our moments of impatience let us remember that hope always means waiting for something we haven’t yet got. But if we hope for something we cannot see, then we must settle down to wait for it in patience” (verses 24, 25).

It is a sad commentary upon the quality of our faith that we no longer grow impatient for the culmination of God’s purpose in ourselves. This is not because we have learned patience but because we have become content with our present state. We look upon death as a tragedy. We talk about it in frightened tones. It is regarded as the end, not the means to an end. We think of those who die, not as going home, but as leaving home. Hope is devitalized and weak. We have substituted stolid endurance for patient waiting.

We have cut the nerve that responds to the call of the beyond. We do not desire to depart and be with Christ. We prefer to remain where we are. The glad expectancy, the vibrant hope, these are no longer characteristic of the Christian, because the Christian character has been altered, affected and amended by contact with the world. "Character produces hope, and hope does not disappoint us, because God's love has been poured into our hearts through the Holy Spirit which has been given to us" (Rom. 5:5, 6). The love-filled heart is a product of the Spirit, and the hope which cheers and sustains without disappointment is the result of outpoured love. The Holy Spirit is the funnel through which empty hearts become abundantly enriched, the channel through which hope is kept supplied.

It was, however, to the vacillating Galatians, that Paul wrote a memorable statement in which he connected faith, hope, and the Spirit, and pointed out the significance of each and the relationship of the three. That statement came as the culmination of one of his most poignant arguments, in which he used the two sons of Abraham and their respective mothers, in an allegorical presentation, reaching the conclusion, "So, brethren, we are not children of the slave but of the free woman." He admonishes them to remain free, having been thus born. "Plant your feet firmly therefore within the freedom that Christ has won for us, and do not let your feet be caught again in the shackles of slavery."

He then reasons that those who consent to be circumcised are bound to obey all the rest of the law, and says, "If you try to be justified by the law you automatically cut yourself off from the power of Christ; you put yourself outside the range of his grace." It is at this juncture, the statement occurs, "For through the Spirit by faith, we wait for the hope of righteousness" (Gal. 5:5). Our hope of righteousness, or justification, is based upon faith which works through love. It is accomplished through the Spirit. So the apostle asks the question, “Are you so foolish? Having begun with the Spirit, are you now ending with the flesh?” (Gal. 2:3) This proves it is possible for man to start with the Spirit and then lapse into dependence upon the flesh. The Galatians did so by reverting to works of the law, and their hope died within them. The same tragedy is being reenacted in our times, and the Holy Spirit is our only hope of renewing our hope!

2. Acts as Intercessor

In the art of communication man is woefully weak. He finds it difficult to transmute abstract ideas into such oral or manual signs as will convey the real significance of his innermost feelings. Many of the gravest problems of our society stem from this inadequacy. We constantly misunderstand each other. Frequently the one who is not understood, only complicates matters when he tries to explain or simplify them. Our literature is rife with accounts of ludicrous, and even tragic situations, which have risen because of such shortcomings.

It is no surprise, then, to realize that there are grave problems in transmission of our inner yearnings to God. We cannot dismiss the matter by glibly quoting, “For your Father knows what you need before you ask him.” It is true that Jesus said this, but he did so in condemnation of the practice of “heaping up empty phrases as the Gentiles do; for they think they will be heard for their many words.” And, in contrast he told the apostles how to pray. It is evident that God wants us to pray, it is just as plain that he does not want our petitions to consist of empty phrases and a meaningless jumble of words. This very fact makes prayer a serious matter, for there is a right and a wrong way for the creature to approach the majestic Creator of the universe.

We do not know the language by which communication is carried on in heaven, a purely spiritual realm. We do know there is such a language, and that it is not the same as the language spoken by mortals, for Paul conjectures about speaking “in the tongues of men and of angels.” We may be certain in the domain of the infinite there will be no barriers to expression such as we find among finite beings. With all of our growth and development, in communication, there are still deep feelings which are inexpressible. Frequently, it is just such feelings about which we must talk to God.

Man’s extremity is God’s opportunity. The Father not only knows what we need before we ask, but also how difficult it is for us to ask for what we need. It is here that the Holy Spirit proves to be our real Helper, by actually becoming an intercessor in our behalf. A word of caution is necessary. We must not confuse an intercessor with a mediator. There is only one mediator, and to become such, he gave himself as a ransom for all. “For there is one God, and there is one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus” (1 Timothy 2:5). In this same context, however, Paul urges all of us to be intercessors for all men, especially mentioning “kings and all who are in high positions.”

Jesus is both a mediator and an intercessor. “It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us” (Rom. 8:34). We have two divine intercessors— one at the right hand of God in heaven, the other at our own right hand on earth. “Likewise the Spirit helps us in our weakness; for we do not know how to pray as we ought, but the Spirit himself intercedes for us with sighs too deep for words. And he who searches the hearts of men knows what is the mind of the Spirit, because the Spirit intercedes for the saints according to the will of God” (Rom. 8:26, 27). A study of this pregnant passage will be especially rewarding to the eager analyst. We suggest the following points.

1. It is admitted that we ought to pray, but we do not know how to do so in acceptable fashion and this is to be regarded as a human weakness.

2. To offset this weakness created by our limited and finite knowledge, a divine Helper has been provided who is not weak or helpless.

3. The human spirit is capable of longings, desires and aspirations, for which social intercourse has not developed adequate vehicles of expression, and thus man is rendered incapable of transmitting these in words. However, “the Spirit himself intercedes for us with sighs too deep for words.”

4. God searches the hearts of men. His word is a discernor of the thoughts and intentions of the heart. “And before him no creature is hidden, but all are open and laid bare to the eyes of him with whom we have to do” (Heb. 4:12, 13). The Holy Spirit dwells in the hearts and sustains an intimate personal relationship to the will, reason and conscience of man. God knows the mind of the Spirit, just as the Spirit knows the mind of God. As the Spirit comprehends the thoughts of God and reveals them to men (1 Cor. 2:11), so he also comprehends the thoughts of men and relays (not reveals) them to God.

5. This intercession of the Spirit is only for the saints, the sons of God, since the Spirit dwells only in the hearts of those who are sons (Gal. 4:6).

6. The intercession in behalf of the saints is in conformity with the will of God. There are two phrases in this context which should humble us and make us rejoice. “For we do not know how” and “the Spirit intercedes according to the will of God.”

We do not know it all. We are weak and helpless. We cannot even express our own deep longings. We need help to approach God as we ought. The Holy Spirit is the invisible living link between the heart of man and the mind of God. “We do not know.” “He knows what is the mind of the Spirit.” If any consideration on earth would motivate one to be a saint, surely this would do so. How pitiable and poverty-stricken are the hearts in which the Spirit has not made his home.

3. Guarantee of Inheritance

Our present status is that of heirs. As children of God, we are heirs of God and fellow heirs with Christ. An heir must live in hope. His is an attitude of expectancy. Since we cannot realize our heritage in its fulness so long as we dwell in clay tabernacles, God has given us a guarantee that He will eventually fulfill all of His promises respecting sonship in its fulness. This is evident in a thrilling passage filled with a wealth of meditative material, contained in Ephesians 1:13, 14. After speaking of those who first trusted in Christ, he continues.

“In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation; in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory.”

1. The sequence of events cited is interesting. First, the gospel of salvation was proclaimed, for it is stated that they heard it. The gospel is identified as the word of truth. The gospel is the good news concerning a person, Jesus Christ, and it is affirmed that after hearing this good news they trusted in Christ.

2. The holy Spirit was not given to make believers of them. The good news was proclaimed to achieve that result. After they believed they were sealed with the holy Spirit of promise.

3. The holy Spirit was given as an earnest, or guarantee, of the inheritance. An earnest is not a down payment. When one engaged in a real estate transaction puts up earnest money, that is not of itself a down payment, although it may be so applied when the contract is fully executed. But an earnest is a pledge or guarantee of good faith or sincerity of intention. The holy Spirit is not a down payment on eternal life. He is given as a guarantee that God will fulfill His promise or covenant.

4. We cannot receive the inheritance “until the redemption of the purchased possession.” There is something which God has purchased, and now possesses, but it has not yet been redeemed, and the inheritance cannot be realized until it is redeemed. By the death of Jesus, our spirits were redeemed and our bodies were purchased. That these latter were not redeemed is proved by the fact that we must all die. It is still appointed unto men once to die. Because our spirits have been redeemed we need not experience the second death. “He who conquers shall not be hurt by the second death” (Rev. 2:11). But because our bodies have not been redeemed we must experience physical death.

That our bodies have been bought and are now possessed as a dwelling place of Deity is established by 1 Corinthians 6:19, 20. “What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Spirit which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are his.”

5. The redemption of the purchased possession will be “unto the praise of his glory.” This expression occurs three times in the chapter, in verses 6, 12, 14. In the last instance it indicates the result when the work of God is consummated by our arrival at the fulness of sonship. God’s purpose as it relates to us will have been realized in its ultimate degree.

6. How do we know that the redemption of the purchased possession is the redemption of the body by its arrival at a state of incorruption and immortality? The answer is found in Romans 8:22, 23, which we here quote from J. B. Phillips’ translation. “It is plain to anyone with eyes to see that at the present time all created life groans in a sort of universal travail. And it is plain, too, that we who have a foretaste of the Spirit are in a state of painful tension, while we wait for that redemption of our bodies which will mean that at last we have realized our sonship in him.”

The body, while unredeemed, is flesh and blood. Such a body is not adapted to an eternal state, therefore, is incapable of receiving the inheritance until it is changed, or redeemed from death. “For I assure you, my brothers, it is utterly impossible for flesh and blood to possess the kingdom of God. The transitory could never possess the everlasting” (1 Cor. 15:50). The redemption of the body will result in a great change or transformation. “For this perishable nature of ours must be wrapped in imperishability; these bodies which are mortal must be wrapped in immortality. So when the perishable is lost in the imperishable, the mortal lost in the immortal, this saying will come true: Death is swallowed up in victory.”

After we demonstrate our belief and trust in Jesus, through response to the gospel, the Spirit is given us as a guarantee that eternal life will be inherited when our bodies are redeemed from the clutch of death. “He has put his seal upon us and given us his Spirit in our hearts as a guarantee” (2 Cor. 1:22). “He who has prepared us for this very thing is God, who has given us the Spirit as a guarantee” (2 Cor. 5:5). “And do not grieve the Holy Spirit of God, in whom you were sealed for the day of redemption” (Eph. 4:30).

4. Produces Fruit of Holiness

In the wonderful Galatian letter which contains a gripping description of the conflict which rages between the flesh and Spirit, the apostle presents in one brief compass a catalogue of the works of the flesh and the fruit of the Spirit. He asserts in positive language that the works of the flesh debar from kingdom inheritance. As he had previously warned, he continues to warn against indulgence in immorality, “idolatry, sorcery, enmity, strife, jealousy, anger, selfishness, dissension, party spirit, envy, drunkenness, carousing, and the like.”

When he turns to the fruits of the Spirit, he asserts that no law exists against these. Neither God nor man ever had to enact legislation to curb them. It is noteworthy, that these things are products of the Holy Spirit. They are not merely the result of our own resolution, determination or will power. They come about, not so much because of what is in us, as they do because of who is in us. These fruits are produced in and through us, rather than by us. Our responsibility requires full commitment unto God, that is, an unreserved surrender of our personality. The Spirit is then able through such an agent to produce the fruits of righteousness.

“The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, self-control.” Study this list carefully. It contains all of those qualities so essential to the congregation of saints, and yet so frequently lacking. Many groups of believers have compiled an unenviable history of continued bickering and contention. Each new generation has been bequeathed a heritage of animosity, and peace never reigns. Is this not indicative of a quenching of the Spirit? Where hate, anger and strife have taken the place of love, joy, and peace, is it not evident that flesh has triumphed over the aggrieved Spirit? Does not the existence in many areas of two or more congregations, each professing to be the church of our Lord Jesus Christ, and each assailing the others in open combat, bear eloquent testimony that the Holy Spirit is not in control of the hearts of men?

We should realize now that we are not going to be saved eternally by having the “right name” over the door of a meetinghouse, but by making our hearts the dwelling place of the Spirit. What good will it do us on earth to add to the heavy freight of division and strife under which the burdened world groans, if we lose our right to heaven? Ask yourself what the congregation of which you are a member has ever contributed to alleviation of universal misery? What has really been accomplished towards a transformation of the sin-cursed earth? Many congregations, proud and arrogant in their own self-righteousness, and mistaking their narrow exclusivism for loyalty to God, are not even known outside their own environs, and even there have earned the disrespect of those who know them best because of their attitude toward others. This is the result of the legalistic philosophy which has been palmed off on the ignorant and indifferent as “the faith once delivered to the saints.” It is the fruition of the party spirit which chokes out like tares the effect of the Holy Spirit.

More than anything else, the members of the church of God today need to repent. They need to view with remorse the wreckage with which they have bestrewn the path of their existence; they need to humble themselves, and upon bended knee confess their sin of division and that of their fathers. They need to implore the Holy Spirit to once again fill chastened and trembling hearts, and in this new attitude to go forth conquering, and to conquer. Perhaps we need once more to hold such a prayer gathering as characterized the young church in Jerusalem. “When they had prayed their meeting-place was shaken; they were all filled with the Holy Spirit and spoke the word of God fearlessly.” The Spirit is the key to our problems.

Unity in Diversity

Mission Messenger (January 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

John, the apostle of love, was present at Golgotha, when Jesus of Nazareth was crucified. He tells of the disposition of the meager effects of the condemned man by the soldiers. "When the soldiers had crucified Jesus they took his garments and made four parts, one for each soldier. But his tunic was without seam, woven from top to bottom; so they said one to another, 'Let us not tear it, but cast lots for it to see whose it shall be.'" This selfish solicitude of the enemies of Jesus in behalf of a physical garment, is in contrast with the attitude of his friends toward the robe of love intended to enfold his spiritual body. The fabric of charity has been rent and torn by the rude hands of those who claim to love him.

So long have we advocated division, in the mistaken view that by such a means could purity be achieved, we have allowed our consciences to become seared and our hearts to become insensitive and numbed, until a plea for unity and brotherhood falls upon deaf ears. Our Lord has delayed his coming, and we have arisen and begun to smite our fellowservants. Many are so cold and calloused that they look with jaundiced eye and prejudiced mind upon any attempt at peacemaking. They have been conditioned to think in terms of suspicion and hate. They resent those who would pluck up the thorns and briers of partisan animosity. I have long wondered how the seed of our contemporary schismatic thought took such firm root in our hearts at first. Believers in Christ could hardly be more divided if they had been commanded to do so.

As our longing hearts turn toward thoughts of “fellowship in the Spirit” we find it necessary to completely restudy the question of unity. That unity is a desirable goal is universally admitted. That it is superior to schism no one even questions. But the nature of the unity toward which we should strive, and the means of attaining it when its nature has been established; these present grave issues to the concerned ones.

It should probably be recognized that there are some who are not interested in working toward unity. Many of these are discouraged and see no prospect of ever bettering the complex situation, so have resigned themselves to defence of the status quo. Others are partisan and fear that the faction, which they equate with the body of Christ, will lose its identity if they develop a wider vision, so they circumscribe the narrow confine beyond which they refuse to look. By closing their ears to any divergent expression they bask in the security created by the walls they have erected, forgetting that while they shut others out, by the same action they shut themselves in.

But there are growing signs of spiritual awakening. Many who were bitter, even a few months ago, under the gentle influence of the Spirit, are beginning to see the purpose of God with new eyes. Hearts are being warmed and tendered. Men are being made ready for the great crusade which lies ahead of us. They are losing their fear of reprisals from shortsighted men and declaring the good news of peace on earth with aroused fervor. All such must sooner or later confront personally the question of the nature of the unity for which we labor. At intervals, in the months past, we have been suggesting that “the unity of the Spirit” is not agreement on matters of opinion or interpretation, but is a “unity of diversity.”

DETECTING A FALLACY

Some of those who have jumped on this phrase with an alacrity which they do not exhibit in other phases of spiritual activity, have accused us of compromise, surrender to the enemy, fraternization with the forces of evil, and traitorous conduct in the army of our absent King. We are persuaded that these brethren who would rejoice to see our pen silenced forever, if it cannot be used for party promotion, do not know whereof they speak, nor what they affirm. The truth is that there is just no other unity obtainable by free men, and, as far as I am personally concerned, no other that is desirable, since any other would demand a surrender of liberty and make us mere pawns of a system, or of the men who control such systems.

It is unwisely objected by some that there can be no such thing as “unity of diversity.” They argue that if there is unity there can be no diversity, and to the extent that diversity exists there is no unity. Of course, the fallacy in this lies in their confusing unity with conformity. Even Francis Bacon, who died as far back as 1626, knew better, for he wrote: “These be two things— unity and conformity.” It is a tragic error to try and make them the same. Actually, unity in practically any area, is a state of oneness achieved by varied and divergent elements. Let us consider a few examples to illustrate this point.

COMMON EXAMPLES

1. Music. Harmony is from the Greek harmonia, proportion, concord. This came from harmos, a fitting. It is easy to see how this came to refer to the adaptation of musical tones to each other, resulting in agreement of those parts in a composition. In vocal music we speak of those who sing different parts. Not all voices are alike, nor, in order to produce harmony is it necessary for all to even speak the same words at the same time. The harmonious arrangement lies in adapting the diverse parts in such a manner as to produce unity of effect.

This is no less true in instrumental music. The word “symphony” is from the Greek syn, with; to which is added the word phone, a sound. A symphony orchestra is not composed of people who all play on the same instrument. They do not all strike the same note on their diverse instruments. They achieve harmony by playing in concert the notes which complement each other. The Greek writers like Plato and Aristotle used the word Symphoneo to express the idea of sounding together. It referred to being in accord, as opposed to discord. A symphony orchestra is an example of unity in diversity as regards players, instruments and tones.

2. Planetary system. Our scientific explorations and discoveries of recent years have revealed unto us the great differences in size, shape, speed and power of attraction in the celestial bodies. The Milky Way we see represents a galaxy containing millions of planets majestically rotating through space. Beyond the field of unaided vision are countless other galaxies. In spite of all the variations, these maintain such uniformity of movement that Aristotle referred to “the music of the spheres,” using the word symphonia for “music.” The heavens declare the glory of God and a part of that glory is revealed in a demonstration of unity in diversity.

3. Human body. This is a figure used by the apostle to illustrate the church of God. Its appropriateness for his purpose lies in the very thing we are discussing. It is precisely because “all members have not the same function” that they are exhorted to labor in unity for the good of all. The foot is not the hand, the eye is not the ear. They do not conform to each other and if they did it would be ruinous. “If all were a single organ, where would the body be?” (1 Cor. 12:19). It is admitted that some parts of the body are weaker (1 Cor. 12:22), less honorable and unpresentable (verse 23), and inferior (verse 24). Their unity lies in an adjustment which eliminates discord. “But God has so adjusted the body . . . that there may be no discord in the body” (verses 24, 25). All who saw the electronic computers which hastened news of election trends realize what unity there is in the harmonious functioning of diverse parts. This was true “machine-like precision.”

4. Spiritual gifts. The congregation at Corinth was not “lacking in any spiritual gift” (1 Cor. 1:7). But there was “jealousy and strife among them” (1 Cor. 3:3) and the apostle has to write them regulating the employment of these gifts. His whole purpose was to achieve unity, and his thesis was “To each is given the manifestation of the Spirit for the common good” (1 Cor. 12:7). He recognized the diversity of gifts. “Now there are varieties of gifts, but the same Spirit and there are varieties of servings but the same Lord; and there are varieties of working, but the same God who inspires them all in every one.” There was diversity in gifts, service and working, but there was unity in origin—the same Spirit, the same Lord, the same God! Here is the basis and source of all unity. We have tried to secure the same gifts, service and working, but there is a variety in these. They are divergent! Just as there were varieties of spiritual gifts then, there are varieties of natural gifts now, but we expect every one to have the gift of knowledge, and in the exact proportion as we have it. Those who do not, and who cannot see every point as we do are ostracized and excommunicated! It was this very spirit Paul condemned at Corinth. His plea was for unity in diversity — not for abject and rigid conformity!

5. The body of Christ. There is one body. It is composed of many members. These are to synchronize their efforts. They are to work together for the common good. They differ in many respects. They are divergent in degree of knowledge, intellectual ability, talent, skill and function. In the spiritual family, as in the earthly, there are babies, children, young men and fathers. All have not attained the same growth. These entertain varied opinions. If they did not, the fourteenth chapter of Romans would be useless. It begins with the admonition, “As for the man who is weak in faith, welcome him, but not for disputes over opinions.” We dispute over matters about which we disagree, but such disputes are forbidden in the realm of opinion. Here tolerance and forbearance are enjoined. This is positive proof that the unity which Paul enjoins does not entail agreement in matters of opinion. The unity lies in the fact that although we entertain different views about eating meats, observing days, etc., “we are the Lord’s” (Rom. 14:8).

We are not to demand conformity to our opinions upon the part of others, but, “The faith that you have, keep between yourself and God” (verse 22). It is not required that we all believe alike about everything, for it is plainly stated, “One believes he may eat anything, while the weak man eats only vegetables” (verse 2). But it is required that we all love each other in spite of our variety of views, and that we esteem brotherhood more highly than our personal preferences. “If your brother is being injured by what you eat, you are no longer walking in love” (verse 15). “Thus, sinning against your brethren and wounding their conscience when it is weak, you sin against Christ” (1 Cor. 8:12).

THE PARTY SPIRIT

Our critics, by their own practice, bear witness to the truth of our contention. They do not agree with each other upon every matter; they violently disagree upon some things, even how to treat us! The degree of unity they do possess is one of diversity. It is not a question of whether they must agree upon all points, for they do not. The only question is which matters they will arbitrarily decide upon as grounds for division between themselves and other brethren. It is here the party spirit is manifested. Each faction is segregated from the others because of emphasis upon some specific issue, or a multiple of issues. This becomes the criterion of faithfulness or loyalty. A faithful church is one which is “lined up” on the divisive issue. It is the rallying ground for bitter partisans. It is the measuring reed by which all must be judged.

The party may oppose individual cups and Bible classes. If so, there must be conformity upon these two matters. Those who oppose cups and classes may disagree about a hundred other things, but they will not divide over them. They are not elevated to a test of fellowship. They do not constitute valid articles in the unwritten creed. On the other hand, if a man is vociferous in opposition to cups and classes, he can do practically anything and be retained in the party as a member in good standing. His speech, attitude and behavior may be intemperate and unbecoming. His personal habits may be revolting and his conduct be boorish and insulting, but he will be recognized and accepted because he passes the test. He can be called upon to lead in prayer, while one who honestly holds a different view about cups and classes will be given the “deep freeze” treatment, although his life may be a credit to the lives of some of those who refuse to regard him as a brother. The unity of the party is one of diversity in every avenue except the party creed. Here conformity is enforced, or the non-conformist is considered to be out of Christ, because he is not allowed in the faction.

All who profess to believe in any unity except that which respects diversity in opinion, are inconsistent. They violate their own announced position “at sundry times and in divers manners.” Any other unity would demand perfect knowledge of all who participate. Yet, none of these claim to possess infallible judgment. All of them oppose the pope because he makes such a claim. It is amazing how men who possess rational ability can allow themselves to be so “brain washed” as to ignore even the factors in their own lives which demonstrate the fallacies in their contention. There is not one congregation on this earth where all of the members agree upon every point of interpretation. There are no two preachers in the world who see everything alike. What unity they have is one of diversity, and there will never be any other kind where human beings are involved. Those who contend for any other are actually sowing the seed of strife and discord. They are apostles of division and disciples of schism!

In the pursuit of that unity which should be the goal of every saint of God, we must first lay a foundation. We believe that such a foundation must possess two parts. It must be based upon the supreme, absolute and sole authority of the word of God, and upon the inalienable right of private and individual judgment. Any union or association of believers which ignores or negates either of these factors is doomed to failure before it starts. To draw up any compact or agreement, regardless of how sincere the intentions of those who produce it, or how well written it may be, if it sets aside these two considerations, it can only generate dissension while it is in force, and culminate in eventual dissolution.

The Bible contains a revelation from God. It is the repository of the living oracles, and these are divine in origin. The authority of this revelation must be supreme in every area which it covers. It is the right and duty of every human being who is a subject of that revelation to read and study it, and thus to familiarize himself with its content. It is equally his duty to read with a view of understanding and grasping the significance of what God has spoken, and to follow his convictions of the requirements contained in it. This obligation, stemming as it does from our relationship to God, cannot be legislated out of existence by human power, nor transferred to others by any individual.

We are responsible before God as individuals. Thus do we die, and thus we shall be judged. God will open up the books and each of us will be “judged out of the things written in the books.” We will not be held accountable for the ideas, interpretations, or opinions of others as to the implication of what is written. We will not be answerable for the conclusions reached by any other person. No one will be held accountable for that which he disavows. Our views of the will of God, and our implementation of it in our lives, must be the result of personal convictions derived from the Bible. If we act solely upon the basis of what others have discovered, and mechanically conform to their findings, our service is mere formalism, or impious deception and hypocrisy.

God demands no other worship from us than that which commends itself to our heart and conscience as being His will. We dare not act contrary to conviction, nor proceed in such a manner as to violate conscience. We are responsible for the nature of our obedience, as well as for our disobedience. Our worship must be an expression of our personal love for God, and this love requires us to search the scriptures to ascertain the will of God, and to implement it in our lives in such a manner that our heart condemn us not.

Any attempt to secure unity based upon any other authority than the revelation of God is absurd. What good would be achieved by uniting with others, if in the process, we severed ourselves from God? But, by the same token, any proposal for unity which denies the sovereign and inalienable right of each accountable being to approach God's truth for himself without the intervention of human priest or intermediary, will serve only to enslave conscience and divide men into warring camps. Such coercion of thought and compulsion of conscience is the first step toward Rome. It is a denial of the basic tenet of the Reformation.

But any unity which preserves these sacred and inherent rights must be one of diversity, not of uniformity or conformity. It cannot be the unity of Rome which abrogates the right of individual conscience and reduces man to subservience to an earthly cult of priestcraft. It must not be the unity of the strait jacket or of the stocks, for this is degrading and demoralizing to the human spirit. When we substitute submission to human authority for personal investigation of truth, and prevent difference of opinion by allowing no opinion at all, we take a leaf from the book of atheistic Communism, and make of the church of God a collection of puerile pawns and performing puppets.

We believe that unity which is revealed in the Bible is based on “the common faith,” the belief held by all of us that God revealed Himself in Christ, and that it is only in Christ we can implement the divine purpose on earth. Having been baptized into Christ and having thus put on Christ, we are united, being knit together in love. This unity allows for diversity in knowledge, ability, service and conviction. It recognizes that there will be divergent opinions and provides restraint from imposing these upon others. In Christ, one may believe one thing, another who is weak may dissent. Neither may judge the other, neither may set at nought his brother. We do not seek to iron out our differences in order to become brethren, but, being brethren, we seek to eliminate our differences in love and respect for each other.

There can be no unity which does not allow for diversity of opinion. This was the nature of the unity of the early church. The saints of that age had many problems of greater significance than those which now trouble and disturb us, but they welcomed each other as Christ had welcomed them. Our opposers are living proof of the correctness of our thesis, for while denying that there can be unity in diversity, they practice it. It is only by tolerance of their divergent views and variant ideas that they are able to unite long enough to oppose us.

We need once again to recapture the meaning of the sovereign authority of the word of God in our lives, and to restore the inalienable right of every man to approach the Book and sincerely to formulate convictions based upon an understanding of its demands upon individual life. Then, if we will discuss our divergent views in love, respecting those who dissent as children of God, and not seek to enforce upon them our conclusions, we will at last be demonstrating that degree of spiritual maturity essential to enable us to solve the problem of disunity, which is actually rooted in immaturity. “But, I, brethren, could not address you as spiritual men, but . . . as babes in Christ . . . For while there is jealousy and strife among you, are you not of the flesh?” (1 Cor. 3:1, 3).

Members of One Body

Mission Messenger (February 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

“Sound speech that cannot be condemned” (Titus 1:8). “Hold fast the form of sound words, which thou hast heard of me” (2 Tim. 1:13).

Speech is the highest, although not the only form of communication between rational beings. Man is a gregarious creature; that is, he flocks together with his kind. Because, by nature, he is social, he requires a medium of exchange on the intellectual level. Speech provides that medium and words constitute its currency. But, as in the economic realm the value of currency fluctuates, so it is with the significance of words. They may suffer from inflation, or undue discount.

God adapts his revelation to the needs of mankind and presents it in a form calculated to appeal to a rational being. Thus he employs human language which, in its inception was a divine gift, as the vehicle for conveying divine thoughts. Recognizing the value of a sound currency, he enjoins that sound speech or sound words be maintained. A sound dollar is one that is valued according to the original standard of accepted bullion on which it was issued. Sound spiritual words are those which convey the same values as when originally minted by the Holy Spirit. The value of a word is reckoned by the impression made upon the mind of one with whom it is deposited.

The currency of a nation can be corrupted. This may be done by counterfeiting or by inflation. In the former there is a substitute of the spurious for the genuine. In the latter, the specie is not altered or amended, but loses its power for purchase. Thus, one may have a dollar issued by proper authority which will not be sound. The same holds true with the words of the Spirit. One can substitute other terms for them, or he can inflate them until they are worthless. In either case, he no longer has “sound words.” A word maintains its value when its significance is equal to its original intent; that is, when there is a harmonious relation between it and the truth it is intended to express or convey.

This will serve to introduce a theme worthy of examination and note by the earnest student of the sacred oracles. It is a rule of the Spirit that when God’s people are designated in the aggregate, or en masse, the terms used to describe the individuals must correspond in relationship to those used to designate them in their totality. If they are called a flock, the individuals are called sheep; if a house, they are called stones; if an army, they are called soldiers; if a kingdom, they are called citizens. God never indulges in such incongruity as to speak of a flock of soldiers, an army of stones, or a house composed of citizens. The family is composed of children, or sons, because of this congruity of language.

So apparent is this fact that many will consider it a waste of time and space to mention it at all, and indeed it would be except for the fact that in one important analogy the rule is completely ignored, as if the Holy Spirit, in this instance, had scrapped the appropriateness of language. I refer to the word “church.” This is a common noun used in a collective sense. Ask the average person what designation is given individually to those who compose it, and he will invariably reply “members.” So habitual is the expression “members of the church,” so sanctified is it by traditional usage, it will come as a distinct shock to many brethren to realize that it is never so used by the Spirit, and for the very good reason that it is not sound speech.

To call such matters to the attention of the average careless student in these days will earn for him who does so the scorn and ridicule employed by shallow thinkers to mask their ignorance. Yet, there are many who are eager and sincere in their desire to know the will of God more perfectly, and it is to such we address our remarks. It is hopeless to reason with the indifferent and the callous. If this were a mere quibble about words we would not waste precious space to mention it, but a serious principle is involved which has shaded the thinking of many as to the nature of the church of God.

Organization or Organism

Men regard the church as an organization. They speak of “membership” in it in the same sense as they do a farm bureau, lodge, or social welfare agency. Just as one joins one or more of these organizations by performing certain initiatory requirements, it is believed that he becomes a “member of the church” in such fashion. “A church member,” then, is one who belongs to a religious institution, called the church. He feels obligated to pay his dues and to furnish his just share of the finance to sustain the organization. In turn, he expects, and may demand, certain benefits as a result of his membership. If he becomes disgruntled with the local management, he can quit, and he resents any of the other “members” telling him that he cannot. He has no particular sense of responsibility to them. He cannot see why his personal choice should be any of their business. He is content to allow affairs to be run by certain ones whom he calls “the officers,” and feels that he has discharged his duty when he attends the stated meetings of the organization and contributes his share of the finance. He looks at “membership in the church” as he would membership in a mutual insurance company. He is to receive certain benefits or dividends from belonging, and be assured of protection at death.

Perhaps no other philosophy in our day has done so much to render the church ineffective and sterile. So long as men are governed by this kind of thinking, they will miss the very spirit of the community of saints. This fuzzy, wooly rationalization strikes at the heart of “the fellowship of the Spirit.” It is detrimental and deceptive. It is noteworthy that every time the Holy Spirit uses the word “member” it is in connection with the term “body.” It is never employed in conjunction with any other noun expressing the totality of the saved ones. The body of Christ is not an organization. It is an organism. It is a living, growing, vital entity, pulsating and throbbing with the life of the Spirit. By that Spirit all who are members were immersed into the one body; of that Spirit all the members freely drink or imbibe (1 Cor. 12:13). They are both introduced into the body, and sustained in it, by the Spirit. What are the implications of this great truth?

Reasons for the Figure

To answer this question, we must know why the apostle uses the human body as a figure of the covenantal community of saints. A study of his reasoning will reveal the following salient facts:

1. The human body is a living organism depending upon its head for guidance and direction in every phase of existence.
2. It is a divine creation in which all of the members are specially adapted to perform certain functions contributing to the wellbeing of the whole. God set the members in the body as it pleased him.
3. It is the best illustration known to man of the harmonious relationship of divergent functions; thus, is a portrayal of unity in diversity.

4. It is an exemplification of complete inter-dependence and mutuality of service on the part of many members, each ministering to the needs of all the others.

5. It is an apt demonstration of the reciprocal attitude in joy and suffering essential to the cultivation of a proper relationship in the spiritual body to offset schisms.

Areas of Difference

The lesser can never adequately represent the greater, nor the inferior fully correspond to the superior. The physical must, by nature, fall short of the spiritual. Thus, there are aspects of the body of Christ which cannot be illustrated by the body of man. To attempt to stretch an analogy to cover all phases of a subject is to be guilty of a fallacy which is all too common. Consider these facts:

1. In the physical body many of its members are remotely and indirectly joined to the head. They sustain a relationship to the head only through other members. A toe is joined to the foot, which is joined to the leg, which is joined to the trunk, which is joined to the neck, which is connected with the head. In the spiritual body, each member is directly in contact with the head, with no intermediary between. In the physical body many members are joined to the head only because they are united with other members; in the spiritual body all of the members are joined to each other because they are united with the head.

2. In the human body, all of the members are present at birth, or inception, These grow and develop in size and skill, but no new organs, or members, are added. The body is static as regards the number of members, and progressive only as pertains to their increasing functional ability. In the spiritual body perfection in membership is an ideal, never to be fully attained until the Lord comes. New members are constantly being added, so the spiritual body is static as regards the number and variety of functions, but progressive as respects the number of members. New members were added daily after the inception of the body of Christ.

3. In the physical body, when the members die, the body suffers dissolution, but in the body of Christ the functions are maintained from one generation to another by continuous replacement of members with diversified natural gifts. The body is self-perpetuating by addition of members, or organic functionaries.

Member Relationships

Members of the body sustain two spiritual relationships, a primary and a secondary, with the latter growing out of the former. The primary relationship is established by covenant. It is individual and personal. It is created by proper response to the divine call and is the result of unreserved surrender and complete commitment of the entire personality to Jesus the Christ. This acknowledgment of the Lordship of Jesus establishes him as head in all things in the life of the person, thus transferring such person from the status of sinner to that of saint. It must be observed that it is not sufficient to accept Jesus as Saviour, a divine function related to sin and its forgiveness; but there must be an acknowledgment of lordship, or headship, a submission to divine rule related to righteousness and service. To regard Jesus merely as a Saviour is a selfish appropriation of divine grace; to regard him as Lord is an unselfish dedication to divine service. In the first, one merely accepts what heaven offers to him; in the second he offers to heaven all that he has and is. One is no good without the other. When God raised Jesus from the dead, He made him both Lord and Christ (Acts 2:36). By his function as a Saviour he created the body; by his function as head he regulates and governs it in the accomplishment of the eternal purpose.

The primary relationship is, therefore, one of the member to the head. The life is hid with Christ in God (Col. 3:3). It is not the member who lives, but it is Christ who lives in him (Gal. 2:20). Life is sustained only through contact with the source of life. It is attachment to the head, not to the other members, that makes spiritual existence possible and real. The body is not the Saviour. "He is the head of the church, and he is the Saviour of the body." But while the body cannot save, one cannot be saved outside the body. It is the body that will be saved and one who is detached from it has no promise of salvation. There is no provision for a "lone wolf" philosophy in God's program. The apostolic message was declared to establish a fellowship of the redeemed person with God and Christ, but also assures that "we have fellowship one with another" (1 John 1:7).

This introduces the secondary relationship, that of the members to each other. It is expressed in the phrase "members one of another" (Romans 12:5). This is not a mere reciprocal feeling of the members of a local congregation to each other. Neither is it an inter-relationship of local congregations. The constituents of the body of Christ are not congregations at all. One of the gravest misconceptions of our age is that the body is made up of congregations, that it is the sum total of all the congregations of a given faith and order. This leads to the mistaken idea that no one is a member of the body unless he is attached to a local congregation receiving our endorsement or support. One is a member of the body before he is attached to a local congregation. No one is immersed into a local congregation, but "by one Spirit are we all immersed into one body" (1 Cor. 12:13). One becomes a member of the body by an act of God; he becomes an affiliate of a local congregation by his own act. The members of a local congregation can receive or reject one who applies for association with them; only God can add or sever a member as relates to the body.

Congregations are not so much essential to the being, as to the wellbeing of the body. The congregational system is a provision of divine wisdom for the government, discipline and development of the members of the body in a given locality. It provides for orderly training and equipping the children of God. The very word “congregation” signifies a gathering. But when persecution, or some other catastrophe, disrupts and destroys the local unit, those who are scattered abroad are no less members of the body than when they congregated in orderly procedure.

This in no sense minimizes the worth and value of the congregation. He who does that impugns the divine wisdom and impeaches the arrangement of heaven. But the body is not composed of congregations. It is composed of members! Congregations are organizations of disciples for implementation of God’s purpose. The divine organism is made up of many members, set in the body as it pleases God. The Ethiopian eunuch was a member of the body when he was immersed, although the Holy Spirit immediately caught away the only other member of the body whom he knew. Whether he was ever affiliated with a local congregation, we have no way of knowing. Certainly as a sheep of God, he would join the flock, if one existed in his area.

The relationship of members of the body is as universal as discipleship. It is unaffected by geographical lines, differences in race, color, social status, or degrees in educational or intellectual attainment. It is not a horizontal, but a vertical relationship. The tie that binds does not run on a line from one heart to another, but from each heart up to Christ. Our relationship is established through Him. We were not drawn together, but we came together because we were drawn unto Him. “And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me.” No fellowship can long be maintained on a horizontal basis, for the divergent backgrounds, experiences, attitudes, temperaments and dispositions will create frictions which burn through and dissolve the bond of unison. Only a vertical fellowship can be sustained, for if each is joined to Jesus directly, and through Jesus to his brethren, he must first sever himself from Jesus in order to be divided from any other member of the body. No one under the motivation of the Holy Spirit can ever tolerate the thought of being separated from any other member of the body. “These are they which set up divisions, worldly men, devoid of the Spirit.” Those who create or condone division are carnal and walk as ordinary men. Those who defend and apologize for schisms among brethren do despise to the Spirit of God.

I am an integral part of a society of the redeemed. Every person on earth who has been reconciled unto God is a participant. Everyone who has been received of God is a part of the brotherhood. None of these has been received on the basis of perfection in knowledge, conduct, or character. All are frail, weak, and erring mortals. Their claim to membership in the body is a response to the call of God, and commitment to the divine ideal. They have not yet attained, they are merely striving toward the mark. With their sins remitted by God and their lives committed to God, they are partners in the furtherance of the divine purpose on earth, and are inter-related with every other such consecrated and sanctified human instrument. It will help us to realize that none of us has “arrived.” The body is made up of those who are on the way because they are in Him who is “the way.”

Forgetting The Head

We are not in Christ because we belong to the church; we are in the church because we belong to Christ. “Ye are Christ’s and Christ is God’s.” We are not dues paying members of an organization, but vital, integral parts of an organism. The church is composed of the people of God. These constitute the body of Christ. It is because we are organically connected with him as the head that we are, in the aggregate, his body. “Now you are together the body of Christ, and individually are members of him” (1 Cor. 12:27). Every saved person on this earth is a member of the divine organism, attached to it by the indwelling Spirit. Such membership is not the result of being received by other members, but of being received by Christ. He does not promise to accept those whom we receive, but we are admonished to receive those whom he accepts. "Wherefore receive ye one another, as Christ also received us to the glory of God" (Rom. 15:7).

Many of our problems arise from the pride and ambition of men who seek unwittingly to displace the head, and snatch the prerogatives which are his. In every age there are those who would "lord it over the heritage of God." These elevate their opinions, views, and interpretations into a legalistic code and seek to bind that code upon the remainder of the body. All such persons would do well to analyze their behavior in the light of the remarkable disclosures in Colossians, chapter two. This portion of sacred scripture has a definite protective purpose. "I write like this to prevent you from being led astray by someone or other's attractive arguments" (verse 4).

The apostle continues. "Be careful that nobody spoils your faith through intellectualism or high-sounding nonsense. Such stuff is at best founded on men's ideas of the nature of the world, and disregards Christ; . . . your own completeness is only realized in him, who is the authority over all authorities, and the supreme power over all powers" (verses 8-10). After showing the majestic accomplishments of Jesus in our behalf, he says, "In view of these tremendous facts, don't let anyone worry you by criticizing what you eat or drink, or what holy days you ought to observe, or bothering you over new moons or Sabbaths. All these have at most only a symbolical value: the solid fact is Christ" (verses 16, 17). How often the body has been worried and bothered by criticism of those who would elevate their personal scruples to the realm of dogma. The spiritual domain has frequently been made the arena for fierce disputes over food and days, until it would appear that Jesus died for a diet kitchen or vitamin dispensary, and the good news to be heralded was about food supplements.

There are ever among us those who would rob us of the vitality of the Christian way by advocating the ascetic life. They feel that a long face denotes a pure heart; and that he who frowns is faithful. These purveyors of gloom who think that the flower of spiritual existence thrives best in the dark interior of a monastery, encourage what they describe as humility. They actually take a fierce pride in being humble. The apostle writes, “Nor let any man cheat you of your joy in Christ by persuading you to make yourself ‘humble’ and fall down and worship angels” (verse 18). He then describes the real reason for such critics and troublers.

“Such a man, inflated by an unspiritual imagination, is pushing his way into matters he knows nothing about, and in his cleverness forgetting the head. It is from the head alone that the body, by natural channels, is nourished and built up and grows according to God’s laws of growth.” Troubles are caused often by those who push their way into things about which they know nothing. In many instances, it is not essential to know about such things. They contribute not one whit to spiritual betterment. But, it is significant that those who intrude into such disturbing and controversial fields do so because they “forget the head.” They cease to take directions, and begin giving them. They do not obey laws, they make them! They want not to be led, but to be leaders. They know the body is one, and they propose to be the one!

“The head alone.” God has a law of spiritual growth. He who created nature and established natural laws of development and reproduction has not left the spiritual body to grow in haphazard fashion. Growth is according to divine formula. The body is nourished, grows up, and is strengthened from “the head alone.” It is not my relationship to other men and women which provides for growth, but my relationship to the head. Others may help me, or they may discourage me. But my development is the result of my connection with the head. Before my foot can function the message must be relayed through other members of my body. If there is a nerve block in another member, my foot, although perfectly sound in itself, is paralyzed. But the message of heaven need not pass through another member to reach me. I am joined to the head, as directly as any other member. There is no human intermediary between me and my God. The Holy Spirit does not link me with God through someone else. If, therefore, I do not grow, I cannot blame the body nor any other member. The only reason I do not grow is because I have personally neglected or violated God's laws.

Men sometime become so clever they "forget the head." It is a common saying that a person noted for lack of memory would forget his head "if it were not fastened on him." This is true in the spiritual domain. Men become so engrossed in their theories, ideas and programs for expansion, that they "forget the head." This is a day of promotion and propaganda. Religion takes its cue from "Big Business." If a huckstering program will sell soap chips or automobiles, it is reasoned that it will sell the gospel. "Church membership" can be built up by the hard sell. If we can get a clever television program, an attention-arresting display advertisement in a national magazine, or a hot-shot radio appeal, we will grow and increase.

We overlook the fact that the body "increaseth with the increase of God." It may be one thing to increase "church membership" figures, and a wholly different thing to make "increase of the body to the edifying of itself in love." The word of God knows nothing about persuading men and women to join the church, or enroll as members of it! This is what transpires when men in their cleverness forget the head. We have clever men in these days! Their stuff is at best founded on men's ideas of the world. The body of Christ does not grow like an insurance company. It is not increased like the sale of deodorant or cough syrup!

Total Commitment

To be in Christ is to be a member of his body. All who are in him are members of the body; all the members of the body are in him. This means more than having one's name on the roster or register, or being a mere statistic in a card file. It means, in a very real and genuine sense, that one is an organ or limb in the body of Christ. Whatever else this relationship implies, we may be certain it includes three things. Let us think about them soberly and seriously.

1. Dependence upon Christ. All religion grows out of a sense of dependence. Man realizes the futility of his own life and recognizes a void or emptiness that cannot be satisfied by any material blessing. The Christian religion answers the longing of the human heart and supplies its need through Jesus. Man does not find God, but God finds man. We cannot come to Him unless he first comes to us. The greatest fact of history is that "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself." In Jesus dwelt the fulness of Godhood, or Deity, in a body. Of that fulness we have received and are, therefore, complete in Him. He is our atonement, our reconciliation, our mediator and intercessor. He is our peace. He is the pioneer and perfecter of our faith. "He is the source of your life in Christ Jesus, whom God made our wisdom, our righteousness and sanctification and redemption."

To be cut off from Christ is to be severed from the source of life. Just as an arm when amputated must die and cannot live of itself, so a person who does not sustain an organic connection with Jesus is dead. The life is not in the arm. If it were, the arm could live as well after surgical removal as before. The life is in the union or fellowship inherent in the body where the source of life is contacted. Any theory of spiritual existence which does not proceed upon the principle of personal and vital relationship to Jesus is false and misleading. "In him was life and the life was the light of men." He rightly declares, "For apart from me you can do nothing" (John 15:5).

2. Subjection to his will. The great passage which asserts the headship of Jesus over all things to the church, which is his body, is but the climax of a majestic power-packed paragraph, a portion of which we shall note in Ephesians 1:19-23. The first of these verses employs such expressions as “immeasurable greatness,” “power,” and “great might.” These are descriptive of divine energy. They refer to a force working in us who believe. The child of God is, therefore, a veritable dynamo, motivated and charged by heaven. It is affirmed that by this great might God raised Jesus from the dead, then elevated him to his own right hand in heavenly places. This exaltation was so supreme that it lifted him not only above, but far above, “all rule and authority and power and dominion.” It involves supremacy over “every name that is named, not only in this age, but also in that which is to come.”

It includes the subjection of all things under his feet. Jesus is upon the throne of majesty. Under him, as a footstool, are all the created beings of the universe. The climax of this catalog of triumphs is found in the expression, “He has made him the head over all things for the church, which is his body.” The word “over” implies that everyone and everything else is “under” Jesus. The master-servant relationship can never be dissolved by those who love Jesus sincerely. We are free to serve him, not free to do as we please, but at liberty to do as he wills. There is no thought of an organ in the physical body disobeying a directive from the head. Such an organ has no will of its own. It is motivated and regulated by the head. Its response is made automatically because of its vital connection with the source of authority.

3. Dedicated to his ends. If it had been best for the accomplishment of the divine purpose for those in Christ to go their separate ways, God would have thus arranged it. But as it was impossible for God to fully reveal himself to the world except through the physical body of Jesus, it is likewise impossible for Jesus to continue to manifest himself to the world except through his spiritual body. The church makes known the manifold wisdom of God to angelic and demonic powers. This was in conformity with the divine purpose (Eph. 3:10, 11). This means that, as these principalities and powers look at the church, they behold in it the outworking of the plan of the ages.

In like manner, Jesus holds converse with the world through his body. It is through the members His will is accomplished. He needs eyes to look upon the fields, hands to pluck the ripened grain, feet to run on errands of mercy, and hearts to throb with compassion. The fellowship of kindred minds is the greatest force for righteousness upon earth. The body should represent the combined force and strength of all the redeemed ones applied in unified effort to the achievement of the eternal aim. When we work against each other we work against God. When we undermine each other we sabotage the purpose of God. "Thus, sinning against your brethren and wounding their conscience when it is weak, you sin against Christ" (1 Cor. 8:12).

The divine end will be achieved when all of the ransomed ones of earth gather in a grand fellowship of heaven. This is called "the festal gathering" in Hebrews 12:22. To fit and prepare us for participation in that magnificent event we are made to be sharers in a fellowship on earth. In this we actually and actively join with Christ in furthering his mission. This is the highest honor that can come to sinful man, yet it is bestowed upon the humblest and poorest who are willing to commit themselves wholly unto God.

Unfortunately, many of us have learned to labor but not to wait. In the postponement of our Lord's coming, we either fall asleep, or fall out with our brethren. Engaged in disputes and involved in quarrels, there is ever the danger that his coming will find us unprepared. "Let your loins be girded and your lamps burning, and be like men who are waiting for their master to come home from the marriage feast, so that they may open to him at once when he comes and knocks. Blessed are those servants whom the master finds awake when he comes” (Luke 12:35-37). More than anything else today we need to recapture the sense of closeness and inter-relationship which is characteristic of a body, and be just the one body. This is our major task in this generation.

A Mistaken Emphasis

Our emphasis has been wrong. It has betrayed us into tragic error. The church is the community of saints. It is the composite group of the called out ones. We have been taught that we should live for the church, and if need be, that we should die for it. No suffering martyr in the primitive community of saints believed this. The early Christians were not beheaded or burned at the stake for the community, but for the Christ. It was not for the body of which they were members, but for Him whose body it was. Their loyalty was to Him. It was through Him their love for each other was manifested. There is the ever present danger that one may be loyal to a community or “church” and in the very act be disloyal to Jesus. But no one who is loyal to Christ can ever be disloyal to, or unfaithful in, His body.

Being members of a body always presents grave problems. A body composed of men and women constitutes a social unit, whether that body be political, fraternal or spiritual. This very fact produces tension in thinking. There arises the conflict between the idea of the individual and his right to freedom and self-determination; and the idea of the group, or the social unit, with its communal ends overriding and sublimating those of any individual.

We have been made aware, in these days, of those societies grounded in a belief of the supremacy of the state. In these the individual lives only to serve the commune. The emphasis placed upon the society is so strong that the significance of the individual person as a moral unit is denied. His whole energy is directed by and toward the state. Even his expression of affection for another, consummated in a union of bodies, must be as a breeder for the state. Nothing can be sacred to him as a person, not even a belief in a personal God. The state is god! To this god must be consecrated everything. The individual presents both mind and body as a living sacrifice to the god of the commune. Yet, in tending to swerve from this ideology, man violently reasserts the rights of the individual as opposed to the state and thus wrecks his bark upon the rocks of anarchy as the other is battered to pieces by the lashing breakers of tyranny.

The truth is that no community or society which is entered voluntarily, or by choice, has an absolute claim on the individual except the body of Christ, and that only because it is Christ's. He has purchased us. We belong to Him in body and spirit. We are slaves of Christ in the totality of our being. So the community of saints can make total demands upon those who compose it without being totalitarian, because it never claims to be a sovereign power. The body is entirely subordinate and wholly dedicated to a task beyond its own power, the ends of Jesus Christ.

Let us again emphasize that a member of the body is not one who has joined an organization or who merely belongs to a society. He is a vital organ in a divine organism. As such he is directly related to and connected with every other member on earth. He is obligated to prevent and eliminate discord in the body by concern for every other. "But God has so adjusted the body, giving the greater honor to the inferior part, that there may be no discord in the body, but that the members may have the same care for one another" (1 Cor. 12:25).

Personal Considerations

Some of the things in this article may appear revolutionary. We believe they are true. They have not been written impulsively, but have been hammered out of the white hot metal of thought upon the anvil of deep meditation. We are convinced that God wants these things expressed, and that we are doing His will when we summon the brethren to rise up and examine anew their traditional positions in the full glare of divine revelation. We invite and implore criticism. We will read carefully everything you write. We want to be right. We do not want to be “weighed in the balances and found wanting.”

No one realizes, as he advances in research, where his increasing knowledge of truth will lead him. He cannot foresee the consequences nor predict the results. It is enough that he be honest enough to admit truth as he discovers it, and humble enough to walk in its brightening light. But, if what we have affirmed in this issue be correct, there are certain implications which can be determined, and these will demand alteration of some of our previous views if we are to adjust to truth. With no intention of arousing ire or provoking controversy, and only with a desire to stimulate wholesome thought I suggest a few items which grow out of our reasoning.

1. No local congregation, or coalition of congregations, in existence today constitutes the body of Christ. The body is composed of members, individual saints. There were seven congregations in Asia in the days of John, but there was only one body in the whole world. Many of those in these congregations were in the body, some of them were not. They associated with these congregations by choice and because of geographical location. They were attached to the one body by an act of God.

2. Men are neither judged, saved, nor damned as congregations, but as individuals. We should cease to regard them as a mass, or group, and treat them as God does. Those who protest against evil in a congregation should not be charged with it. No one should be held responsible for what he disavows.

We need to renounce the doctrine of “guilt by association” and let every man plead his own cause and stand upon his own convictions.

3. We should recognize our limitations. We may help in the regulation of the affairs of a congregation, but we have no authority over the body. Of it, all of us are merely members, and it has but one head. An elder is not a bishop of the one body, but of a congregation of saints. God has placed the members in the body as it pleased him; we can neither place or displace a member in the body.

4. Since there is no such thing as a useless or non-functioning member, each of us should determine in what realm God has qualified him to serve and diligently pursue his responsibility. God has no more ordained a useless organ in the one body than in the physical body. We should synchronize our efforts with those of all the other members, seeking to avoid discord, in order that the body may function smoothly and efficiently.

5. One congregation cannot “withdraw fellowship” from another congregation. The expression is unscriptural to begin with. We can neither extend nor withdraw fellowship. The term “withdraw fellowship” is not in the new covenant scriptures. We can sever ourselves from those who walk disorderly; we can put away from among ourselves those who are immoral. This is individual and congregational discipline. Beyond it we cannot go! No congregation of saints has any authority over any other congregation, and can exercise no regulatory or restraining power over another. Many who pay lip service to local autonomy seek to run and rule all the congregations in the country by remote control.

6. One can be in the body and be saved even though in a congregation which is unworthy of Christ as a whole. He can be alive by sustaining his relationship to Jesus as the source of life even if the congregation is dead. Jesus wrote to the messenger of the congregation at Sardis, “I know what you have done, that you have a reputation for being alive, but that in fact you are dead. Now wake up! Strengthen what you still have before it dies. For I have not found any of your deeds complete in the sight of my God . . . Yet you still have a few names in Sardis of people who have not soiled their garments. They shall walk with me in white, for they have deserved to do so.”

This writing is in direct contradiction to the teaching of those who advocate splitting and dividing the congregation in an attempt to secure purity and diligent service. Nowhere in all of God’s word are brethren ever told to divide from their brethren. Both schism and division are deplored and condemned. If it be asked how members at Sardis could live and walk with Jesus while in a congregation that was pronounced dead, the answer is simple. We do not derive life from the congregation, but from Jesus. The congregation is simply a group of persons who may or may not be attached to Jesus. But those who abide in Him, and who are deserving, will be saved regardless of the fate of the others.

Against this it is urged that the church at Ephesus was threatened that if it did not reform, it would have its lampstand removed. We need to note the reason! It is important! Many good things were said about the congregation at Ephesus. “I know what you have done; I know how hard you have worked and what you have endured. I know that you will not tolerate wicked men, that you have put to the test self-styled ‘apostles’ who are nothing of the sort, and have found them to be liars. I know your powers of endurance, how you have suffered for the sake of my name and have not grown weary.” I submit that this is a pretty fair recommendation. Many of the “loyal churches” of today could not deserve such plaudits.

Then why was the lampstand of such a place to be removed? Here it is! “But I hold this against you, that you do not love as you did at first. Remember then how far you have fallen . . . Otherwise, if your heart remains unchanged, I shall come to you and remove your lampstand from its place.” Thayer indicates that “love” in this place is affection for the brethren. No one falls so far as he who ceases to love. Without brotherly love we are still in darkness, we are murderers and have not God. One who does not love his brother whom he sees cannot possibly love God whom he has not seen. “If your heart remains unchanged.” A congregation must either change its heart or Jesus will change its status. Is there not an indication in these letters that a congregation may survive almost anything except a decay of love? The over-tolerant congregation at Pergamos, the compromising church at Thyatira, the sleeping church in Sardis — these were not threatened with extinction, though criticized and warned.

It is not enough to work hard and endure, to refuse to endorse wicked men and deceivers, or to suffer for the sake of the name of Jesus and not grow weary. All of these were characteristic of Ephesus, yet the lampstand was to be removed because of dearth of love. How important it is to love one another! Yet amidst all of our doctrinal disputes, our wranglings and debates, this is the one quality that is lost. Indeed one is thought to be a weakling or compromiser who dares to urge it as the last great hope of a dying movement.

In closing, I plead with all of my readers to help us recapture the value and significance of the individual soul. Let us allow men to remain where God attached them, and not seek to make them “members” of something else. It is enough that we be welded to Jesus, that we be members of one body. Let us destroy sectarianism by destroying that spirit which gave it rise. Let us begin such a noble work of destruction in our own lives. We need to purge our hearts of littleness. All of us have been too much affected by the party spirit. All of us have been too factional, exclusive and circumscribed. The will of God can only be done when we recognize as members of the body all whom he has received, whether they be affiliated with our small splinter or segment, or not. Let us, while we defend those truths we have been fortunate enough to discover, not un-Christianize those sincere brethren who have not yet found them. Then we shall truly be one body and walk in love. God, please hasten that day!

Will you who read resolve to share this message with others in a world so sick of strife and division? You can aid very practically by sending this issue of the paper to others. Is there not some preacher, teacher, friend or neighbor who ought to be allowed to think through on these points? Can you be content to selfishly read and forget? If you'll send the names and addresses of those who should see a copy of this edition we will mail it at our own expense and with a fervent prayer that it may strengthen and help. Please be a worker for Christ during 1961. Do not just absorb this teaching, but share it! Let us help you while you help others. God has called us to serve! "We are your servants for Jesus' sake."

Queries to the Editor (No. 1)

Mission Messenger (March 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

I have found it practical and helpful at periodic intervals to present an issue of the paper in which I answer questions gleaned from several sources. Some of these queries are propounded in the forums I conduct, others are asked by visitors in our home, while most of them are taken from letters. I personally reply to more than five hundred letters each month. A few of these are bitterly critical and censorious, but the great majority are written by earnest, consecrated seekers after truth. I read them all carefully, regardless of the tone of the writer. I am particularly interested in those which disagree, because they aid me to properly evaluate my thinking and to sift out the flaws in my reasoning.

One of the rewarding experiences of maturation is the realization that one does not have all of the answers, and that the knowledge of the best of us is still very limited in scope. The term “expert” is a relative one in any field. When one arrives at the place where he can say “I do not know,” and where he will admit, “I have always been wrong about that,” he is in a position where his real knowledge will rapidly increase. If, at the same time, he makes discovery of truth his prime quest in life, so that he can look at truth objectively and admit it wherever he finds it irrespective of who holds it, his sphere of usefulness to God and man will be greatly enlarged. God sends none away empty except those who are full of themselves.

This attitude will enable us to use even our avowed enemies for spiritual enrichment. By forgetting the man and his bitter spirit, one can salvage nuggets of truth which can be added to his storehouse of knowledge, and by thanking God for such gain and asking Him to bless the giver regardless of his attitude, he may even save his former foe. Love is a powerful force. It works effectively, although unseen. If one refuses to allow hate to exist for those who would destroy him, but actively sends out love from the dynamo of his heart, amazing things can happen. “Love has good manners and does not pursue selfish advantage. It is not touchy. It does not keep account of evil or gloat over the wickedness of other people. On the contrary, it is glad with all good men when truth prevails” (1 Cor. 13:5, 6).

It is in that spirit I reply to the questions which follow. The answers are not given dogmatically or arbitrarily. They simply represent my present views. I express them quite humbly, realizing my shortcomings and frailties: They are not intended to be accepted as authority. Those who cannot conscientiously concur with the views expressed will be loved and respected every whit as much as those who agree. I have neither time nor inclination to indulge in the luxury of hate or contempt. I refuse to allow the cancer of animosity to consume my own soul. My interpretation of the sacred scripture is my own, therefore, is human and fallible. No one else on earth will give account for my answers. No one else should be held responsible for them.

1. Can you state briefly your real purpose in publishing and sending forth Mission Messenger?

Our major purpose at present is to plead for the unity of all believers in our Lord Jesus Christ, thus working toward an answer to the touching prayer which he offered on the night of his betrayal into the hands of his enemies (John 17:20, 21). We seek to be truly identified with that prayer and its purpose. We believe that by actively cooperating with the Holy Spirit in this great endeavor, we can help bring about that state in which the will of God may be done on earth as it is in heaven. It is our conviction that God works through human agency as well as divine. Before the believers can be united, someone must be so wholly and unreservedly committed to this task that God can use him as an instrument or tool to effect the divine purpose. In our weak way and with the limited facilities at our disposal, we hope to arouse men to think, so they can become such instruments of peace. Peace is not an accident. It must be waged, like others wage war. "And the wise are peacemakers who go on quietly sowing the seed for a harvest of righteousness, in other people and themselves" (James 3:18). It is our aim to present a strategy of peace!

2. Would you say then that your ultimate aim is to achieve peace among God's children?

No, for peace and unity must never be our goal. They are not the end we seek. They are means to an end. Jesus expresses the ultimate aim, "that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." God's children are agents of reconciliation. God loved the world. He sent His Son to die for it. He wants the world to believe, for "whosoever believeth in the Son hath everlasting life." But the world can only be won to belief in Christ, when those who believe in Christ are one. This is the essence of his prayer. The one thing essential to the universal belief in Jesus is the unity of all who believe in him. It is just that simple. But those who do believe are torn asunder by strife and division. Therefore, our major task at present is to repair the breaches and bind up the wounds. This is presently essential that our ultimate goal, if it is the same as that of heaven, may be reached. We are engaged in our current task, not because it is our final aim, but because it must come first.

3. Has this always been the plea made in Mission Messenger?

Not at all! A paper merely reflects the thinking of an editor. If he grows and matures in thought, his writings will manifest that growth. I have been editing this little paper for more than twenty years. By dint of hard study and years of research, I have learned a great deal I did not know when I began. My hardest task has been to “unlearn” some of what I thought I knew. I have discovered that I was wrong upon many interpretations, and I have had to alter many of my views in the light of growing knowledge.

I grew up in one segment of the disciple brotherhood and was quite convinced that it was “the loyal church” to the exclusion of all who were members of other splinters, factions, and parties. Imbued with such a spirit, the paper was originally quite a partisan journal, designed to be the mouthpiece of “the brotherhood,” which, in my unwarranted arrogance and self-righteous assumption, was limited only to those who agreed with us on the party tests which formed our criteria. I was reared in an atmosphere where the editor of a partisan journal could control thought and wield power even at great distance. Those who did not conform were excommunicated. Such a condition is sinful and wicked. I am sincerely ashamed of my littleness and factional spirit. I give thanks to God for having opened my eyes to a vision, dim though it may yet be, of his majestic purpose for mankind. No faction, as such, will ever accomplish that purpose. It can only be furthered by the united effort of all believers in the fact that “God was in Christ, reconciling the world to himself.”

4. What are some of the things you have learned which have helped to formulate your present convictions?

Of course, in two decades, one learns a great many things which have a profound influence on his thinking, but I will cite only three at this juncture, which have meant a great deal to me.

A. The consciousness that the restoration movement, inaugurated by the Campbells and others, who were tired of sectarian feuds, is not identical with the church of God. The church has always existed since the advent of the Spirit on Pentecost. God's sheep were scattered among the sectarian hills. Many of them still are. The rallying of them in an attempt to restore the ancient order to the church, did not thereby automatically remove all of the others from God's covenantal grace.

B. A realization that fellowship is not to be equated with endorsement, nor is it contingent upon another's views, interpretations, or opinions. The koinonia is a state or condition. We are called into it by the Good News concerning Jesus Christ our Lord. Every sincere person who believes that Jesus is the Messiah and God's Son, who is immersed in water in the implementation of that faith, is God's child. He is my brother. He is in the fellowship, the same fellowship into which I have been called. Brotherhood, in the spiritual as in the natural realm, is not based upon common views, but upon a common Fatherhood. Men may conceive ideas but they are not conceived by them. Fellowship is conditioned upon sonship. We are not in fellowship because we agree upon everything, but being in fellowship we strive toward agreement upon things. Agreement is the goal of those in fellowship.

C. A recognition that the party spirit is a sin, just as is fornication, adultery, idolatry and drunkenness (Gal. 5:19-21). One who is guilty of it cannot enter heaven. A factual and unbiased study of most of the divisions which have occurred will reveal that the party spirit has been prevalent in the cleavages, frequently augmented and intensified by debates engaged in by partisan champions. The truth is that God has not granted us division among brethren as a possible solution to our problems at all. God is not the author of confusion, but of peace. We are to love the brethren, not leave them; edify them, not divide from them. It is contrary to the doctrine we have learned of the apostles to divide. He who causes divisions should not be followed but marked and avoided. God never once commanded brethren to divide, he repeatedly condemns division, and commands them to unite.

5. You frequently speak about “restoration movement.” What do you mean by that expression?

In the beginning of the previous century a movement began almost simultaneously among sincere students of the word of God in various sectarian groups, but especially among those of the Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist parties, to unite believers in our Lord by a restoration of the primitive order as taught by the apostles. This great reformation eventually lost its impetus. Its adherents degenerated into a state of war among themselves. At present, the heirs of the restoration movement constitute one of the most divided segments of Christendom. There are two great bodies resulting from a rent over the use of instrumental music in the public praise service (coupled with other matters); and these in turn are fractured among themselves into some twenty-five parties or factions, which have little to do with each other. It is my conviction that, if a restoration movement was the only answer to the divided condition of the religious world in the beginning of the nineteenth century, it should be the answer to our own sectarian divisions in the middle of the twentieth century. The conditions which existed to call forth the original restoration are now duplicated among us. These cry out for the original remedy. More than anything else we need now to recapture that spirit which motivated the Campbells, Stone, Scott, and others of their contemporaries, and which prompted them to labor unceasingly for unity among the Christians in all sects. That spirit is needed to produce unity among the sects which have grown up around the restoration movement.

6. What is your personal approach to the problems created by divisions in the restoration movement?

I simply refuse to recognize the validity of those things which have been allowed to divide us. I will not let things invalidate brotherhood. It would be foolish to deny that walls have been erected, but I look through them and see my brethren on both sides of them. Love makes walls transparent which seem opaque when viewed through eyes of hatred. No wall means as much to me as a brother. Walls are products of men; my brethren are a creation of God. My attitude toward our walls is that of Jesus toward the wall which separated Jew and Gentile. His love was great enough to reach beyond the wall and encompass those on both sides of it. By the love exemplified in the cross he battered down the partition. "He has made a unity of the conflicting elements of Jew and Gentile, by breaking down the barrier which lay between us." Only love for those on both sides could do that. The Jews and Gentiles had tried every other means prescribed by human wisdom. They merely pushed the wall of hostility to greater heights. I refuse to allow the barricades men have erected to become a spite wall in my heart.

Men are not my brethren because they have Bible classes or oppose them; because they use individual cups or oppose them; because they believe in Bible colleges or oppose them; because they endorse orphan homes or oppose them; or defend and use instrumental music in worship or oppose it. They are my brothers because they have the same Father as myself. They were not born of endorsement or opposition to the great host of things which now divide us, but of the water and of the Spirit. I do not love them because of their position on these matters, but because I love the Father. "Every one who believes that Jesus is the Christ is a child of God, and every one who loves the parent loves the child" (1 John 5:1).

7. Is this not a kind of weak, compromising position which leads to endorsement of just about any thing?

Indeed not! He who so assumes is ignorant of that for which we contend. The position we occupy does not necessitate one compromising his conviction on anything. It only places persons and things in proper relation to each other. It creates a proper sense of values, and allows you to view brotherhood in a right perspective. One must have a frame of reference in which to visualize fellowship in its varied aspects, else he will be at sea without a compass, when winds of doubt and waves of division arise. It is our contention that Jesus provides the answer. During his entire earthly sojourn he was confronted with those who attached greater value to things than they did to persons. In Matthew 10:31 he taught that a man is of more value than many sparrows; in Matthew 6:26 that he was much better than the fowls of the air; in Matthew 12:12 that he was much better than a sheep; and in Luke 13:15 that he was better than an ox or an ass. He also taught that the life is greater than food, and the body than raiment. The reason for such instruction was its need among those who were unable to view man in proper relation to things.

Jesus taught that due regard for a brother was of greater value than a public act of religious service. "So that if, while you are offering your gift at the altar, you should remember that your brother has something against you, you must leave your gift there before the altar and go away. Make your peace with your brother first, then come and offer your gift" (Matt. 5:23, 24). Our Lord did not compromise his views on the service of God, the altar, or gifts, but he did show that proper relationship with a brother is of prime importance. We need to think a long time on the phrase "your brother first."

We have inherited a sad state of affairs from our fathers. The family of God is divided over missionary societies, instrumental music, orphans homes, cups, colleges, and a host of other things. All of these may be important, for the significance of anything which divides God's people must never be overlooked. But not one of these, nor all of them together, is equal to the value of a brother. If I allow my position on any of them to blot out, erase, and nullify my relationship with my brothers, I endanger my soul. It is the spirit of evil which separates and segregates the children of the Father into warring camps. It was acceptance of Jesus as God's Son which brought us into relationship and I refuse to allow anything short of irreverence for His majesty and rule, to separate me from my brethren in Him. It is the weak man who seeks to solve the problem by dividing and running away. The strong one remains, faces up to the issue, and continues to labor and to wait for the Spirit operating through love, to bring things into focus.

8. How can you retain your convictions on these issues that divide, and fraternize with those of the opposition?

That is easy when one gets through "playing God" and holding every one else accountable to himself. When I am with brethren who differ with me on some thing (and that is the only kind I am ever with), I set forth my views, and listen to theirs. If given an opportunity, I reason with them in a spirit of meekness and love, but I do not seek to bind my views on them as a requisite to fellowship or brotherhood. My brethren do not belong to me. They are servants of another. If they can justify their conduct with their Master, it is not necessary for them to clear it with me. "Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth."

I do not have to give account for the views of any person on earth except my own. I cannot force others to see everything as I do. "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." If a brother cannot agree with my views on cups, classes, or colleges, I shall not allow that to cancel my love for him, nor destroy my relationship as a brother. If I thought all who differed with my views were as "sick" as some seem to think they are, and if I felt that I had the remedy I would be where the sick are. Most of the "physicians" who have all the answers are around collecting money off those whom they flatter as being "well." What would the world think if all the physicians got a monopoly on healing drugs and shut themselves up in a club house, and threatened to throw one out of the "charmed circle" who visited the sick. Must we conclude that a physician endorses illness because he visits among and seeks to help the sick? And must a physician always be talking about the patient's illness while with him, or might he not occasionally discuss other and more agreeable things? The problem of many of my brethren is the same as that of the scribes and Pharisees who could not understand how Jesus could fraternize with publicans and sinners and yet not endorse sin.

9. If you oppose the use of instrumental music in the public praise service how can you recognize those who use it as brethren?

It is good to deal frankly with this question. I hear it over and over. It seems to be the acid test. I think it has been elevated to a position hardly commensurate with its real value. As a result it has been made a criterion by both sides to the controversy. I have found many who use the instrument and who defend it with such blind fury that they look upon any relaxation in its use as a compromise with the "antis" and this they regard almost an unpardonable sin. I have been in meetings where members arose and stalked from the house when it was announced that in deference to my conviction, the instrument would not be played.

On the other hand, many of those who use the instrument, but who adopt the title "Church of Christ," have experienced the embarrassing act of visitors arising and stamping out of the building, when the piano or organ begins to play. Such protests do little good except to show the rudeness and intemperance of those who engage in them, and to demonstrate that the use of the instrument has now created an emotional problem, the most difficult type with which to deal. The instrument has become a symbol of intangibles. To one group it is an emblem of freedom and independency; to the other, a sign of degeneration and apostasy. Those who use it would as soon see "Old Glory" stripped from the mast and trampled underfoot as to give it up; those who oppose it would as soon see Satan declaiming from the pulpit as to see the piano on it.

The folly of elevating such a visible thing as a criterion for measurement of invisible things is realized when you stop to consider that many who use the instrument are not free, but enslaved; and many who oppose it lead immoral lives. But in such an atmosphere it is difficult to examine a matter objectively, and both sides fear and question the motives of the other. However, the very emphasis upon this subject provides a real test of our thesis on brotherhood and fellowship. If it will bridge so great a chasm we need not be concerned about lesser gaps.

But why has this issue assumed such importance? A number of factors, no doubt, contribute to it. One is the violence with which it was introduced, frequently with utter disregard for the feelings of brethren. I have known congregations in which the instrument was spirited in at night and the lock changed on the door. I have also known places where some who opposed it, also went at night, climbed in through a window, took a pole-ax and smashed the offending organ to smithereens. In northern Missouri there is a community where the church split, and the non-instrument forces were driven out in the dead of winter. They forthwith built a meeting-house with a door so narrow that no organ could ever be brought in. One rather portly brother had a time even getting in to the worship service.

Too, the congregations frequently resorted to the civil law to resolve their suits for the buildings. These court tests with their resultant bad feelings crystallized the party spirit for several generations. Regardless of who won, the winning party always acclaimed it as a victory for truth, and hailed the judge as a wise brilliant jurist. The other side generally appealed to a higher court, in the mistaken view that truth would fare better in a more elevated judiciary. Frequently one side won the meetinghouse and lost the respect of their neighbors.

Another reason for the intensity of feeling on this matter is the tangible nature of the instrument. It is visible to the eye, and is not, therefore, like the reasoning on some abstract theory or point of doctrine. A man who knew little or no scripture, and who was unlearned in the Bible, knew an organ when he saw one and could be lined up on one side or the other, and thus made to join in a dispute where he frequently made up in noise what he lacked in knowledge and judgment. And his vote counted as much as that of a gifted saint. Because of all these things and the reams of paper that have been written on the subject pro and con, and because of the prejudice and party spirit which has grown out of the controversy, it is a real test.

However, and this is very important to remember, it does not actually affect the subject of fellowship when that word is used in its scriptural connotation. Unfortunately the term has acquired in “Church of Christ” circles a meaning which the Spirit never gave it. I note that those who oppose me so vigorously do not even know what I mean when I talk about fellowship. In spite of all my writing on the subject they have not yet grasped the import of what I am saying. They are thinking of a wholly different thing when they ask if I fellowship those who use instrumental music, than I am when I reply that I am in fellowship with many who use it. They have been conditioned to think in a certain channel when “fellowship” and “instrumental music” are mentioned in conjunction with each other.

I am in the fellowship with those who use instrumental music in exactly the same way I am in the fellowship with those who do not. My being in the fellowship with the former is not because they use it; my being in fellowship with the latter is not because they oppose it. We do not come into fellowship because of either position on the subject, but because we are born again. One is not born of a position of endorsement or opposition to instrumental music, but of the water and the Spirit.

Before the instrument was introduced it is admitted by both groups that we were all God’s children and brethren. Putting in the instrument did not change our family relationship. Suppose that one Lord's Day a congregation gathered and sat down as brethren at the Lord's table in spite of tension over the music question. During the week an instrument is brought in, and the brethren who oppose it feel obligated to worship where the offending instrument is absent. Does this fact alter the family status? It is my contention that it does not, but in such a community we will have some brethren who insist on having the instrument regardless of the feeling of others of the brethren. But they are still brethren, and for me that simplifies the matter. I am told to love the brethren, and to let brotherly love continue. I propose to love all of my brethren, for I must do so to have eternal life. "We know that we have passed out of death into life, because we love the brethren. He who does not love remains in death."

I am not obligated to love instrumental music, missionary societies, institutional homes, one container, individual cups, leavened bread, unleavened bread, fermented wine, unfermented grape juice, etc. I violate no requirement of God when I do not. But I am obligated to love the brethren, and with me that is all of them. I have no half-brothers or step-brothers in the Lord. "And this commandment we have from him, that he who loves God should love his brother also." I am, therefore, forced to conclude either that endorsement of instrumental music cancels out the relationship created by the new birth, or I am obligated to love, respect and exhibit brotherly kindness to those of my brethren who use it. As ridiculous as the first alternative appears, it is the very position adopted by our ancestors a century ago, and which has now led to such extremes on both sides.

I simply refuse to allow one camp of brethren to capture me and place me in their corral where I must deny brotherhood to others who have been born into God's family. I have no right to choose who my brethren shall be. God determines that. It is out of my hands. But I must love my brethren or I will be damned. Admittedly, it is more difficult to love some than others, but I have resolved that difficulty. I love them through Jesus. The tie that binds me to them does not run directly from my heart to theirs, so their views and opinions do not create a short circuit and are no impediment. It runs to Jesus, and because I am bound to him, I am bound through him to all whom he has received. If I can just love Jesus enough to encompass all whom he loves, then my love flowing through him will embrace my brethren— all of them!

It is absurd to talk about fellowshiping cups, classes, leavened bread, orphan homes, instrumental music and such things, simply because they are things! We are not in fellowship with things, but with people. The word “fellow” shows that. I do not endorse instrumental music, or a host of other things which divide the brethren, but I am in fellowship with all of my brethren, for fellowship, as the Spirit regards it, is brotherhood. Now, in answer to my querist, it is no real problem for me to recognize as brethren those who use instrumental music, even though I am opposed to it. The truth is that the only kind of persons with whom I am in fellowship, are those with whom I disagree. There are no other kind as far as I am concerned.

10. Was not the question of how to regard members of the Christian Church settled seventy years ago? Why resurrect it and disturb us?

My concern is not about how to treat members of “The Christian Church” or any other party among us. I am concerned with how to treat God’s children, and my brothers, regardless of where they may be. There is only one church now. There never was but one, and never can be another. If the word “church” is to be retained as a translation of ekklesia, it must refer to the whole assembly of the saved throughout this earth. If there is one body, there must be one church, and only one. “He is the head of the body, the church.” The church embraces every saved person on this earth. Every child of God is a member of it; every member of it is a child of God. But no faction can be that one body, and the one body is no faction!

No question is ever settled, so far as God is concerned, until it is settled properly. If our fathers, in the midst of the feud occasioned by instrumental music and societies, decided not to regard members of “The Christian Church” as brethren, then their decision was wrong. The prerogative of deciding who are children of the Father, belongs unto Him, not to the other children, and those who arrogate to themselves such a right are presumptuous. Their decision constitutes a human creed, and they are guilty of the sectarian attitude. Such decisions need to be reversed. A thousand years of maintaining the status quo will not sanctify evil. The tradition of our elders should not be allowed to make void the law of God.

But where does this leave questions such as that pertaining to the use of instrumental music? It leaves them where they should always have been, matters of discussion among brethren — not questions of strife between enemies and aliens! What about those who, because of conscience and conviction, cannot worship where the instruments are used? Let them worship elsewhere, but not in an aura of hate and animosity toward those who disagree with them. Not all members of the same family can live amicably under the same roof, but they need not deny or renounce the family relationship because they occupy separate quarters. They can constantly seek through love to improve the situation. It is not so much geographical, as spiritual, affinity for which we labor.

As to disturbing the brethren over these matters which they have put to sleep, and about which they have gone to sleep, perhaps nothing is more essential to our future wellbeing. The stagnant pools covered with the green scum of partisan security need to be agitated. The freshets of God’s love need to purge and purify our relationships. Too long have we perpetuated the spiritual feuds of yesterday. It is time to re-think our position as to relationship in Jesus, to rise above the altercations and embroilments which have made a laughing-stock out of our plea to the dissident religious syndicates about us. There is nothing sacred about the mere human judgments of seventy years ago. There are now no laws made by men which are as unalterable as those of the Medes and Persians.

Let us discuss the issues which divide us, with a view to lessening, and not increasing the distance between us. When we rise from the common council table, if we are no closer to each other, let us not have worsened our state. If we continue as we are, we will embalm our divergencies and bequeath to our own posterity a condition much worse than that which was passed on to us. Let me make it clear that my interest is not in how to regard a faction, sect or party, but in what attitude I should manifest toward my brethren who are scattered among the various sects men have created. God does not love sects, but he does love men.

11. Does not the fact that you oppose instrumental music make you a member of an anti-instrument party?

Not at all. It would if I allowed that to become a test of fellowship. If one declares that he does not consider as being in his fellowship any person who believes in the use of instrumental music in public worship, he then separates and segregates himself from such brethren, and is a member of an anti-instrument party, or faction. I strive to make nothing a test of fellowship which God has not made a condition of salvation. I am not a spokesman for, nor a champion of, a non-instrument party or faction. I do not propose to be factional about the host of other things which separate my brethren.

Holding the personal convictions which are mine, I think the brethren who introduced the instrument into the corporate worship were mistaken, and in error. But they are my brethren. If I equated fellowship with perfection in knowledge, and waited until I could be in fellowship only with those who were right on everything I would wait a long time. Come to think of it, I could not qualify for such fellowship myself!

With the kind indulgence of our readers, we shall continue to reply to questions we have received, in our next issue also. Please remember that you need not agree with our answers for us to love and respect you as brethren in the Lord. We do not commend you to our views and opinions as your hope of life, but to the word of God. We humbly seek to follow it, and recognize your divine right to go to it for yourself. Unity is not conformity. In truth, there can be no unity among men, except the unity of diversity. This is no new thought. Lord Bacon, who was born on January 22, 1561, four hundred years ago, declared, “They be two things, unity and conformity.” Most of our difficulties have arisen because we thought they were the same. Until our next issue, we commend you unto God and the word of His grace, which is able to build you up. “Little children, let us not love in word or speech, but in deed and in truth.”

Abuse of Scripture

Mission Messenger (March 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

In these days of division among the people of God, party prejudice and a desire to defend that exclusiveness which is so much a part of the sectarian spirit often cause brethren to make forced applications of the sacred writings which completely distort the divine revelation by ignoring the context. We do not think there is always deliberate intent to “handle the word of God deceitfully” but innocency of motive is no guarantee against a harmful result from such unfair manipulation of the word of God. It is no honor to scholarship when one who poses as a teacher reveals his utter lack of knowledge of the most obvious implications of a passage.

As an example we cite a common usage of Ephesians 5:11. “And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.” In their zeal to destroy unity among God’s children and to dissolve relationship with them, rabid factionists have branded every item of disagreement as an “unfruitful work of darkness.” The party champions draw a circle which they label “Darkness” and inside of this they inscribe a catalog of things such as instrumental music, missionary societies, orphan homes, colleges, pastor system, Bible classes, uninspired literature, tuning forks, individual cups, leavened bread, unleavened bread, fermented wine, unfermented grape juice, etc., and proceed to proscribe all who do not subscribe to their unwritten creeds.

No two factions will list exactly the same things under “light” or “darkness.” Each party has its own copyrighted category. What is “light” in one is “darkness” in another. The confusion caused by this hodgepodge parading under the name “The Church of Christ” is as appalling as it is senseless. The chief aim of each faction seems to be to locate a scriptural basis for having no fellowship with the rest of God’s children. This passage which says “Have no fellowship” is a godsend to their partisan purpose. To them nothing can be “light” which contravenes the partisan creed. They can see darkness everywhere except in the narrowness of their own hearts.

The truth is that the apostle was not talking about anything even remotely connected with the above list of items. The “works of darkness” are identified as practices connected with immorality, covetousness and idolatry. Under consideration especially are these things as related to the heathen mystery religions with their clandestine sexual orgies. They are identified as “those things which are done of them in secret” (verse 12) . This certainly has no application to the use of instrumental music in public worship. It cannot apply to cups which are passed to a whole congregation in the open, nor to Bible classes to which all are invited. To try and palm off such an interpretation of this passage is to reveal a shameful ignorance of the entire Ephesian letter.

Mind you, the above things may or may not be wrong. But they are not “works of darkness” such as this passage condemns. And if fellowship is to be withheld on the basis of this passage, then it cannot be applied to the things to which the passage has no remote relationship. The sad fact is that men who have a partisan axe to grind will go to almost any length to find a grindstone that suits their purpose. It is time that honest men and women begin to study for themselves and cease to be followers of those who would lead them down blind alleys for gain! Truth does not need to resort to twisting and wresting of the sacred scriptures for its defence. No man has a right to get out of the scriptures what God did not put into them!

We commend to you the translation of this passage as given by J. B. Phillips, in The New Testament in Modern English. “Steer clear of the activities of darkness, let your lives show by contrast how dreary and futile these things are. (You know the sort of things I mean— to detail their secret doings is really too shameful).” We think it is significant that those who do not want to have fellowship with others of God’s children have to write a Bible of their own in order to justify their factional actions. They cannot find comfort for their party spirit in the word of God correctly interpreted for it specifically calls the party spirit a “work of the flesh.”

Joint Participation

Mission Messenger (April 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

The original word for fellowship is majestic in its implications. It serves as an illustration of the divine assertion, “My thoughts are not your thoughts.” Only the mind of God could have conceived of a community composed of ransomed slaves in which the dignity of each individual is preserved while each esteems others better than himself. Such a society whose members are together not because they are bound to like one another, but are bound together because they all mutually love another person, never entered the most fanciful dreams of the philosophers of ancient Greece or Rome. It could not have been the creation of sinful man. It stands as a monument to the new creation wrought by the Spirit of God.

But it is a sad commentary on man that he tends to corrupt what he touches. This is as true in the spiritual as in any other realm. The thoughts of God are as high above our thoughts as the heavens are above the earth. Even when they are revealed we frequently find it easier to drag those thoughts down to our level than to exert the effort to attain unto them. It is not that we lack inspiration but we are victims of frustration. Our heads may be in the clouds but our feet still stumble over clods. We admire the beauty of heaven but we are caught in the mire of the earth. “The spirit is willing but the flesh is weak.” In our human littleness we reduce that which is sublime to the realm of pettiness. We turn beauty into ashes. In no case is this more obvious than in the current views of many on fellowship.

Fellowship is the English word used to translate the Greek koinonia, but it is not equivalent to the original. The two are not exact synonyms. The truth is that koinonia is manifested in so many different aspects that no single English word or phrase is adequate to express them. The translators working under the authority of King James faced this difficulty and it accounts for the different words they employed for the original. In the light of this fact it is tragic to see men in our day who pose as scholars and teachers fasten upon some facet of definition and reduce everything to this common denominator in order to justify a traditional position of partisan exclusiveness. Few others are as guilty in this respect as those who are connected with the various segments growing out of the Restoration Movement sparked by the Campbells and their co-laborers. That movement which was begun to unite the Christians in all sects has ended up the most divided one in all the realm of Christendom. This shameful condition is largely the result of a misconception of the glory and greatness of the koinonia.

It is useless to our purpose to rehearse in detail the sordid catalog of things which are credited with rending the fabric of brotherhood. The heart recoils and the blood chills when we consider the insignificance of some of those things which have been allowed to turn the dwelling place of the saints into an armed camp. The saddest feature of all is that those who have split and splintered the body have done so in the belief that they thus serve the purpose of God. They have deceived themselves into thinking that they are contending earnestly for the one faith by sinking a dagger into the one body. How far misguided zeal can lead men is witnessed by the words of Jesus to the apostles, "The time is coming when anyone who kills you will think he is doing religious service to God" (John 16:2). It is significant that the next sentence is, "They will do this because they know not the Father or me." Thus it is possible for men to go to an extreme in the thought that they are worshipping God, when they know not God or Jesus. They know about them, but there is a great difference in knowing a person until you are identified with him, and knowing about him.

Fellowship is the togetherness of the saints with God and each other. As relates to God it is based upon sonship, as relates to the community of saved ones it is brotherhood. Basically, it is a sharing experience, a joint participation. And it is at this juncture that many are unconsciously betrayed by the partisan spirit. Fastening upon this definition and regarding it through factional eyes they actually use their interpretation of fellowship to destroy fellowship. Any interpretation of a principle which is so restricted and limited as to destroy the functioning of that principle is subversive of the authority from which the principle originates. Any definition of brotherhood which will ultimately make brotherhood impossible is dangerous indeed.

Let me give you an example of what I mean. Some of our brethren believe it is not in harmony with the will of God to have Bible classes for teaching of the sacred scriptures. Others think it is perfectly consistent with the will of God to employ such a method. Those who oppose classes and cannot conscientiously participate in a study so conducted are led to the conclusion that those who have classes are not in the fellowship. They do not regard them as being in “the brotherhood” for that term includes only those who do not participate in the class method of teaching. Those who draw such a line of exclusivism are honest but they are deceived by a false concept of fellowship. They conclude that because the word means “joint participation” it cannot exist where there is any difference in thought or practice.

The same thing holds true in various other areas. Many brethren in the congregations of the saints adopted the use of instrumental music in their corporate worship; others could not conscientiously participate in such a service. The latter concluded that they could no longer regard the former as brethren. They did not consider them as being in the fellowship because they could not participate with them in the practice which they introduced. Since those who used the instruments were considered as no longer in “the brotherhood” they could not be called upon or recognized to lead a prayer or to perform any other function when they came among those who opposed instrumental music. They were looked upon as being in the same category with heathen and publicans. Actually this state exists because of a wrong view of the nature of the fellowship.

Our English word “fellow” comes to us through the Anglo-Saxon tongue from the Old Norse felagi, comrade. This is from the root felag, partnership. Since partnership is a relation between persons the nature and extent of such relation has to be determined and understood or the partnership may be dissolved over a basis utterly foreign to that upon which it was established. Two men enter into a partnership to operate a filling station for the purpose of servicing cars and thus making a livelihood. One believes that a certain type of jack is best adapted to elevating cars while the other believes that another is best. They need not dissolve partnership because of their disagreement over method, for the partnership was not founded specifically to exemplify one method or another. If they had entered into partnership to demonstrate the superiority of one type of jack and to promote the sale of that type exclusively, then there would be ground for dissolution over their difference.

What is the nature of the koinonia of the new covenant? What is it that is shared? Of what are we partakers? Paul states that the divine secret which was not disclosed to previous generations was made known to him by revelation. The purpose of this revelation was “that the Gentiles should be fellowheirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel” (Eph. 3:6). The Good News as a universal proclamation made possible the sharing by men of all nations in the promise made to Abraham and his seed. The magnitude of this disclosure is not yet fully grasped by most of us. It involves the gathering together of all the forces of righteousness and the joint participation in this gathering constitutes the koinonia. “So richly has God lavished upon us his grace, granting us complete insight and understanding of the open secret of his will, showing us how it was the purpose of his design so to order it in the fulness of the ages that all things in heaven and earth alike should be gathered up in Christ—in the Christ in whom we have had our heritage allotted us” (Eph. 1:9-11).

In view of the tremendous significance of the “open secret” how childish and trivial are the things over which we have striven and disrupted our relationship. It was never the purpose of the koinonia to create rigid conformists. God did not demand that a Jew become a Gentile, nor a Gentile become a Jew, in order to be fellowheirs. He allowed each of these to retain his own individuality. The Jews were still circumcised; the Gentiles remained uncircumcised. It was simply declared that there was no importance attached to circumcision in Christ. In the new relationship it was not important that everyone think alike about circumcision. “For neither circumcision nor the want of it is of any importance, but only a new creation” (Gal. 6:15).

Obviously there are problems presented in maintaining koinonia where differences are tolerated and permitted. There is ever a tendency for one to attempt to make his fellows over “after his own image.” The apostle recognized that there would be conflict of conscience because one who was in the “joint participation” of the Good News might feel that this implied he was a partaker of every divergent view or practice of those within the fellowship. Such a mistaken or warped idea would in its ultimate make partnership impossible. The difficulty was resolved by pointing out that we seek not conformity but community, and the desired union is one of diversity.

Different ages and cultures produce variations of the same problem. In the days of the apostles the question of eating meats was a major one and akin to it was that of observing days. We are liable to undervalue the seriousness of these matters because they do not trouble us. All of us think our own difficulties are greater than those of others. Actually these things more seriously disturbed many of the primitive saints than those modern issues which have caused us such grave concern. Paul begins his treatise of “unity in diversity” by a clear statement that brotherhood is not based upon agreement in opinion or interpretation. “Treat people who are overscrupulous in their faith like brothers; do not criticize their views” (Goodspeed). “As for the man who is weak in faith, welcome him, but not for disputes over opinions” (RSV).

No man is a partaker in that which he disavows or does not sanction. The one who opposed eating meats was not a participant in eating meat simply because he was in the fellowship with those who ate it. The fellowship of the gospel was not conditioned upon eating meats or observing days. Brotherhood is not based upon such matters. “The kingdom of God does not mean food and drink but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit” (Rom. 14:17). By the same token the kingdom of God does not mean cups, classes, colleges, etc., for these are not righteousness or peace or joy. If a man is allied with a congregation of saints which has Bible classes he is not in “fellowship” with classes if he does not participate in them. But he is guilty of the party spirit if he presses his scruples to the place that he builds an anti-class party. The same thing is true in reverse. All parties in the religious domain are sinful because they build men around something other than Jesus. “Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ” (1 Cor. 3:11).

Differences in opinion among brethren create problems for those who are nonpartisan and whose love for the brethren is universal. It is possible for one to be free from all men, that is, to be a free man in Christ Jesus. But such a person is obligated by his love to be a slave to all. The minute he allows himself to become a partisan or factional representative he limits his love and the party standard becomes his rallying ground instead of the love of God. One does not compromise his convictions when he freely moves among all and adjusts himself to them. It is only the unbending sectarian or rigid partisan who falsely equates fellowship with endorsement and who cannot be free.

“Though I am free from anyone’s control, I have made myself everyone’s slave, so as to win over all the more. To the Jews I have become like a Jew, to win Jews over; to men under the law I have become like a man under the law, though I am not myself under the law, so as to win over those who are under the law. To those who have no law I have become a man without any law— though I am not without the law of God, but under the law of Christ— so as to win over those who are without any law. To the overscrupulous I have become overscrupulous, so as to win the overscrupulous; I have become everything to everybody, so as by all means to save some of them. And I do it all for the sake of the good news, so that I may share (koinonos) in its blessings along with the rest” (1 Cor. 9:19-23).

Our joint participation is in “the promise in Christ Jesus through the gospel.” It is in the “blessings” of the gospel. Notice the expression “along with the rest.” The hope of the gospel is not based upon the things we have allowed to separate, segregate and splinter us. We can share in the promise “along with the rest” even though they entertain ideas which we cannot endorse because of conscientious scruples. We will not be judged by their views. We need to cease to pass judgment upon brethren; we need to cease to despise them. They are brethren and we are obligated to love them. We are not obligated to agree with them but to respect them. “Why do you pass judgment on your brother? Or you, why do you despise your brother? For we shall all stand before the judgment seat of God” (Rom. 14:10).

It is astounding how little we value our mutual relationship in Christ Jesus. We regard the tie that binds as being so frail and unimportant that it may be severed by the slightest whim of difference. We do not hesitate to “set at nought a brother.” We will upon the slightest provocation “destroy the work of God” (Rom. 14:20). By our boasted knowledge and our vaunted faithfulness we trample underfoot those who do not possess such knowledge. We base our joint participation upon equality in knowledge. The humble child of God who does not see everything as we do is driven forth without mercy. “And so by your knowledge this weak man is destroyed, the brother for whom Christ died” (1 Cor. 8:11). Jesus thought enough of him to die for him as he is. Jesus received him in spite of his limited knowledge, wrong concepts and mistaken views. We will not retain him until he is right on “all the essential points of doctrine.” And we propose to be the sole judges of what is essential! We set up a standard for fellowship with ourselves which will make it impossible for us to have fellowship with God. If fellowship is based upon equality in understanding and perfection in interpretation how can we be in fellowship with God until we know as much as God? We sign our own death warrant and create our own commitment into hell when we condition fellowship upon such bases. “For with the judgment you pronounce you will be judged, and the measure you give will be the measure you get” (Matt. 7:2).

Ours is a fellowship (koinonia) of the Holy Spirit (2 Cor. 13:14; Phil. 2:1). It is a participation in the Spirit. Despite our differences nationally, socially, or otherwise we were made one by the Spirit. Despite those differences we all partake of one Spirit. “For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit” (1 Cor. 12:13). The differences were not erased but the state was changed by the Spirit. Men were still Jews and Gentiles after they were baptized, but they were Jews and Gentiles in Christ. They were still slaves or freemen, but they were slaves or freemen in Christ. They were in one body not because they were all alike but because they were all baptized. They remained in one body not because they agreed upon everything but because they all drank of the same Spirit. It was “the unity of the Spirit” they were commanded to guard in the bond of peace.

In the body there were those who were “more feeble” (1 Cor. 12:22), “less honorable” (verse 23), and there were parts “that lacked” (verse 24). But God tempered the body together so that there should be no schism in the body (verse 25). What God tempers together intemperate men rend asunder. God regards all of the members as necessary. Factionalists recognize no one as necessary who will not subscribe to their unwritten creeds. Men may keep the unity of the Spirit and differ on many things, they may agree on many things and not keep the unity of the Spirit. The Spirit values men above things and regards a man as more important than his ideas. It is only those who regard things as more valuable than men who create division by such carnal standards of measurement. “These are the men who split communities, for they are led by human emotions and never by the Spirit of God” (Jude 19— J. B. Phillips).

Brotherhood is not conditioned on agreement on classes, cups, colleges, and such like things. Men may disagree upon these and remain in the fellowship of the Spirit. No one in that fellowship is a joint participant in every idea, notion, interpretation or opinion of the others in it, unless he personally avows and espouses such a position. Even then it is not a part of fellowship. The tie that binds is not one of human reasoning or of conformity. It is the love that reaches out to engulf and enfold those who are different from ourselves because “God has set them in the body as it has pleased him.”

The man who would destroy the fellowship of the Spirit by teaching that to be in that fellowship is to endorse or sanction every thing that every other person in it says or does, reveals his ignorance of the koinonia of the Spirit. He is ensnared by his fallacy, enslaved by his own pettiness, and indicted by his own admission. His position is obnoxious to reason, offensive to the fraternal heart, and obsessed with pride. Let us turn from such divisive teaching and “follow after the things which make for peace and things wherewith one may edify another.”

Queries to the Editor (No. 2)

Mission Messenger (April 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

In our previous issue we presented answers to some of the questions frequently raised by our correspondents and hearers. Perhaps there is no better way for one to clarify his position than to submit to grilling by those who are concerned especially when they are inclined to opposition. Solomon declared, “He who states his case first seems right, until the other comes and examines him” (Prov. 18:17). If truth, not partisan victory, is the object of our search we should not resent the searchlight being turned on in full power to scrutinize our position. If you did not receive a copy of the paper last month we suggest that you write for one immediately. The questions and answers found therein will be helpful in these days. You should study them before reading those which follow.

1. Which one of the groups calling themselves “Church of Christ” do you regard as the loyal church?

In the divided state now existing among the heirs of the Restoration Movement there is no such thing as “the loyal church.” There are brethren in all of the groups who seek to do God’s will sincerely. There are many in all of them whose lives and attitudes are a disgrace to the cause we profess. No one of these parties is the church of God to the exclusion of all others. They are all factions, existing because of emphasis upon one point or another which has been pressed to the extent of creating division or separation. So long as one is in schism all are in schism. It is a figment of the imagination to idealize any of the two dozen splinters of the disciple brotherhood as “the faithful church.”

2. Should not one who is a member of a faction get out and leave it?

Where would he go— to another faction? It is this philosophy which is the root of all our current difficulty. It has created all of our existing factions. When a man learns something his brethren do not know, he concludes that they are no longer his brethren because they do not know all that he knows. He immediately abandons them to attach himself to another group more favorable to his newly formed views. If one discovers truth he should remain and share it with his brethren. He seldom betters himself by going to another faction, and contributes nothing worthwhile by creating one of his own.

We need to distinguish between being in a faction and possessing a factional spirit. One can be in a sect and not be sectarian. He can be in a faction and not be factional. The cure for our present sadly divided condition is not for all of “the faithful” to leave the various factions and come out and form a “loyal church.” That would only complicate the matter further. Those who are no longer factional and, thank God, the number of such is growing, should work as leaven where they are. They should exhibit a spirit of patience and love which will influence those whom they contact until eventually all of us will flow together again. We cannot divide ourselves into a faithful church. We cannot secure loyalty to the one body by fracturing it. We have tried long enough to divide ourselves into unity. It is time to find a common denominator and reduce our fractions. It is that for which we plead. Let those who have crucified the party spirit, a work of the flesh, remain where they are and help their brethren achieve the same attitude. Thus will factionalism be killed among us!

Of course conditions may become intolerable where one is allied and he can best serve God elsewhere. Every man is obligated to go where he can best fulfill his responsibility. But if he does go, he should not conclude that those whom he leaves are not his brethren. He should love them, pray for them, and continue to help them in those areas where they can mutually labor. Merely going from one faction to another for personal satisfaction is the resort of a weakling. It is easier to leave than to stay and face up to problems. "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind."

3. How can a congregation take steps to grow out of the factional attitude?

The first thing is to resolve to regard nothing as a test of fellowship which God has not made a condition of salvation. Whatever is required to bring one into the Christ should bring him into partnership with us. Nothing else should be devised to drive him forth. The belief of one fact and the obedience to one act constitute the terms of entrance into our Lord. The one fact is that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. The act required to validate that faith is immersion in water of the penitent believer. No immersed believer should be subjected to question relative to his opinion or view of anything else as a requisite to enjoyment of the fellowship. Whether he believes in the pre-millennial or post-millennial coming of our Lord, or in colleges, institutional homes, missionary societies or instrumental music; whether he holds to some opinion regarding sinless perfection or perseverance of the saints, he is not to be grilled about these as a test of fellowship.

"For other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ." To set up other foundations or bases of fellowship is to originate creedalism with all of its sad aftermath of strife and division. Let the congregation of saints which desires to be non-sectarian reject all grounds of fellowship except Jesus Christ. Let the Lord's table be set for all immersed believers whose lives are in harmony with the moral and ethical code of Jesus. Let announcement be made that all such are invited to participate in the communion (fellowship) of the body and blood of the Lord. By no other means can a congregation grow out of the factional spirit. When all of the congregations so teach and act, and not before, we will have restored the body intact with all of the breaches repaired.

4. Are there any indications of congregations practicing this non-partisan attitude?

Yes, there are. Of course any progress in this direction will be slow. It represents a reversal of attitude in most places. The drift has been toward the sectarian spirit and it is difficult for most places to alter their course. There is something about the narrow partisan viewpoint which provides a sense of security. Men feel safer behind walls of their own construction. They fear to submit their position to open combat in the field. So long as they convince themselves that they are the only children of God and all others are apostates and pagans they have a natural sense of pride in their organization.

Obviously many will prefer their own structure. They believe that it is the church. They feel called upon to defend it until death. Many preachers will find it especially difficult to cultivate a nonsectarian view. Some of these are regarded as party champions. They will not want to relinquish their reputations. Economic interests will keep others from asserting a conviction on these issues even after they conclude their former stand is untenable. Too, we must recognize that there are differences in temperament and ability. All men are not equally adept at grasping original thinking. We must be patient, kind and charitable toward all, never forgetting that all of us have been tainted with the party spirit in the past.

It is gratifying to know that in some areas brethren are awakening to a greater sense of destiny. These are manifesting a degree of knowledge which they did not have five years ago. We have been reared in factional backgrounds. All of us are averse and resistant to change. We must be cautious, for many in the past, have veered from the word of God. None of us want to make shipwreck of the faith. In our zeal to leave Babylon we should not run past Jerusalem and down into Egypt. While being thankful to see brethren adopt a more loving and cheerful disposition in some areas we must not allow ourselves to think or speak evil of those in other sections who do not yet agree with us in our ideas. Love will answer our problems!

5. How do those brethren with whom you have always labored regard your present writings?

I was fortunate when I left the Lutheran party and espoused the restoration plea that I grew up in a segment of the disciple brotherhood where brethren had a fair outlook on some of these issues. In many respects we constituted a restricted and exclusive party and were no doubt arrogant toward others, but in a few respects there was a charitable viewpoint toward the sectarian world about us. I suspect we treated those who were nearest to us worse than we did others. This is generally the case.

Since I no longer allow myself to be regarded as a party defender or champion, the brethren react as all brethren do under such circumstances. Some have investigated and agree that my position is more in harmony with the will of God. Others regard me as a traitor and would do all they could to ruin my influence and wreck my opportunities of answering our Saviour's prayer. They feel that I am dangerous to the peace and safety of what they regard as "the brotherhood." A few have attacked me openly and personally from the pulpit when I was hundreds of miles away. Some have used the Mission Messenger as a text.

None of these things move me. I do not grow discouraged because of them. I anticipated such reaction and prepared myself with months of prayer and meditation before I began to write my thoughts on fellowship. I have arrived at the place where I can truly love and pray for those who disagree with me. I am resolved that when any man presents what commends itself to my heart to be the truth I will accept it and will amend my thinking to conform to it. I have an earnest desire to reach heaven and I know that I must be honest with truth in order to do so. If I know my own heart I am willing to make any sacrifice for truth. But I cannot afford to indulge in hate for any of the brethren. I do not want to pay the price exacted for such indulgence.

6. How have your present writings affected the circulation of the paper?

Strangely enough, the circulation figure has not varied a great deal. It does not fluctuate appreciably, but has been on the upgrade recently. It has altered in constituency. A goodly number who formerly read it no longer do so. A few have cancelled their subscriptions. But others who have been attracted by the tenor of our plea and who are sickened by the symptoms of the partisan attitude about them have subscribed for, and sent the paper to, other interested students until there are more readers than before. There is one difference in our readership. The majority of those who now receive the paper are students of restoration. They tend to think for themselves and are not frightened by challenges to their minds. Many former subscribers took the paper out of a sense of party loyalty. They regarded it as a sort of factional mouthpiece. They felt that they could depend upon it to parrot the party line and deny all others access to its columns. We should not judge them harshly for this. They merely reflect the conditioning that all of us have received through the years.

I am not so vain as to think that the purpose of God, in this time of crisis, is dependent upon the continuance of this little journal. I have no Messiah complex. So long as we can hold our heads above water we shall make the plea which we think God wants us to make as our testimony to this generation. But if my tongue is silenced by death or my fingers paralyzed by affliction, or if the paper ceases through economic necessity, others with greater ability and more ample means will rise up and carry on. The cry for peace on earth to men of good will and for unity among brethren is in harmony with the will of Him who notes even the fall of a sparrow. And when He who watches over our destiny sees fit to culminate our appeal we will submit without murmur. If we can face the sunset glow in the glad knowledge that we have plucked up but a few thorns of hate and planted the fragrant blossoms of fraternal love we will be content.

7. Do you think you went about presenting what appears to be revolutionary teaching in the proper manner?

Apparently many feel that I did not. This question is asked repeatedly. I am not sure how I would proceed if I were suddenly set back ten years in time. I might approach the problem of restoration from an entirely different angle. I am fallible and finite. My judgment is far from perfect. I have made a lot of mistakes and still make many. My presentation may have been faulty in many respects. No doubt it still is. I have to do the best I can at any given time and hold myself in readiness to admit my errors and to amend my thinking as I learn more.

I was reared in a strictly factional background as most of us have been. I beheld the inconsistencies of those who call themselves "The Church of Christ," and saw how, while they made an appeal for unity to the divided religious world, they were themselves fractured into more than two dozen parties. This caused me to review the history of the movement to see at what point we forsook the original purpose of restoration and what factors contributed to our arrival at our present divided state.

Examination revealed that neither of the current factions could lay exclusive claim to being the one body of our Lord. From that I went on to discover that the restoration movement had crystallized into a new party (or parties) in Christendom, and that this movement in its totality does not now, nor did it ever, constitute the church of God on earth exclusively. I became convinced it was merely another exhibition of the sectarian spirit to contend that it did.

It was while I was away from the United States in 1951 laboring with the devoted saints in North Ireland that I had time to catch up with my own thoughts. At the time I was quite popular in the partisan alliance in which I had been groomed and my meetings were planned for many years in advance. The Mission Messenger was regarded as a “safe and sound” party organ which could be trusted to echo what we had traditionally taught, and to exclude from its pages any thing which might be contrary to the partisan tests.

When I came face to face with myself and was convinced that I was actually laboring against God’s purpose, rather than for it, an inner struggle began. I did not want to hurt those with whom I had always labored and whom I loved but I could not ignore the tug of the Spirit on my heart. I fought a personal battle all the way across the Atlantic. By the time the ship docked in New York the die was cast. I had crossed my personal Rubicon. Before going home I was scheduled to speak at a gathering of brethren in New Castle, Indiana. I selected as my theme “The Name of the Church” and proved from the scriptures that the ekklesia of God had no official title and we had sectarianized the expression “Church of Christ.” Those present, not realizing at the time where the non-sectarian attitude would take them, were highly commendatory in their comments on my discourse.

For four years I plunged into study and research. With every discovery of truth I saw how far we had drifted from our original moorings and how deeply we had imbibed the sectarian spirit. I asked permission of the brethren in my home congregation to conduct Saturday night forums. I proposed to speak for an hour and then submit to open questioning from the audience. All brethren in the Saint Louis area were invited to attend. The reaction from the first was characteristic of all such gatherings. Brethren were divided in their opinions. This was good because it provided opportunity to show that fellowship in Jesus is not contingent upon uniformity of opinion. It served to stimulate serious and sincere questioning of my position and thus provide for me an opportunity to re-evaluate my own thinking and to eliminate the flaws from it. It also demonstrated the power of love and patience in our striving toward harmony.

Having a desire to share our views on a wider scale I began to write "Thoughts on Fellowship" after first giving several months advance notice of intention. I resolved to open up our columns to those who dissented. I did so, publishing freely their critical examinations of my position and my replies to these. Not being possessed of prophetic insight I have had to do the best I could to encourage the thinking of the brethren. I have not been too concerned as to whether or not my viewpoint was accepted. Not having a desire to enroll partisan followers I am content to plant what I believe is the seed furnished by the Spirit. Any increase will have to be given by the Creator.

Other brethren convicted of the futility of the course they had been pursuing and finding themselves in the grip of the same great moral compulsion I experience, might go about their presentation in another manner. I do not say my approach is the only correct one, nor even that it is the best one. It seemed to be the only one open to me with my limited ability and I pursued it because I owed it to God to do what I could to alleviate the sad and tragic state into which the heirs of the restoration movement had fallen.

I readily concede that I may have been guilty of the mistake of proceeding too rapidly. I am also convinced that for some who ask this question, the right way would have been to say nothing and do nothing except to maintain the party status. They do not so much resent the manner of my procedure as they do the fact that I proceeded at all. One must pay a price for rising above partisan littleness. He must expect to be sniped at and shot at by those who aim their shafts at any one who does not conform. One who is not willing to endure misrepresentation and even maligning of his motives should not attempt reformation, for there can be no reformation without change. The very word "reformation" betokens alteration.

8. Are there any specific indications that the factional spirit is being quenched?

Yes, indeed! Brethren are recognizing a spiritual kinship in many places where an attitude of hate and exclusiveness formerly flourished. Those who differ with the interpretations and views of a congregation are frequently given recognition and called upon to lead songs or direct prayer when they visit meetings. In some areas where opposition to Mission Messenger is very bitter the brethren are actually practicing what we advocate. In some instances they go even farther than we would be disposed to go.

It is also observable that in some congregations which would not think of calling upon the editor to speak, other brethren present virtually the same teaching and are accepted. This is good because the problem is not one of recognizing or honoring the persons of men but of receiving the teaching which will lift us out of the doldrums into which partisan thinking has led us. It is to be expected that those who first break with tradition must bear the brunt of reprisal. Some day when clouds of doubt have been dispelled by the sunlight of a greater love men will see more clearly. We need not be distressed now if we are rejected and refused for this is the expected lot of those who blaze the trail. We seek not sympathy but study; not acclamation but reformation.

Many in the past have felt uncomfortable because of the inconsistency into which they have been betrayed by their partisan alliance. They do not wish to appear unmerciful or inconsiderate. It has been difficult for them to justify to their inner selves the recognition of those in the party whose lives have been out of harmony with their profession, and the utter rejection of those whose moral conduct is spotless although their opinions do not agree with the party position. Now that we can see that brotherhood is not, and cannot be, based on absolute conformity in opinion, a more charitable attitude is being shown. We thank God and take courage because of this fact. Better days are in the offing and will be hastened by those who are committed vessels of the Spirit, meet for the Master's use.

9. What can we do to help in the crusade for unity of all believers in Christ?

There are many things for all of us to do. Community circumstances differ so widely and our personal talents and abilities are so divergent that it would be unwise and presumptuous to dogmatically set forth an approach which must be followed. This would be impractical because the same approach will not be equally effective in every region. We need to allow freedom for brethren to work in the way best suited to local needs and conditions. God can use us all, but not always in the same way. We need to be less critical and more understanding of each other. Too often we confuse motives and methods.

We should pray for the accomplishment of God's purpose and for all who are interested in and concerned about the problem of disunity and division. We should petition God to grant leaders who will not be swayed from truth by love of money, ease or popularity. We must extend the outreach of our plea. We must not selfishly hug it to our bosoms and conclude that we fulfill our responsibility if we cherish but refuse to share it. Nothing is more needful for winning the world to belief in Jesus than the unity of those who believe in Him. This message must be heralded far and wide. The blessed and joyous day when all of God's people are one will not come merely by singing about it. Someone must first envision it as an attainable reality, then strive for it with labor and sacrifice.

We hold that every child of God is an agent of reconciliation. You are personally charged with responsibility to help bring to fruition the prayer of Jesus. If you deem our own meager effort worthy of support, we urge you to implement your thinking. Practice what you profess. We need your help to send forth this message. We labor under the constant handicap of restricted material resources. Many would hear who do not if you could help a little bit. Here are some practical ways to aid.

1. Pass the MISSION MESSENGER to your friends, relatives and brethren in Christ. Ask them to read portions of it which you feel will help them.

2. Send in a list of subscriptions from your area. Do not think that unity will come by wishful thinking. Peace must be waged by peacemakers.

3. Many of you are earning the most money you have ever received in your lives. How much of this is really being invested in a better world for your children and your children's children? If you would allot but a small amount each month to help, new names could be added from our mailing list.

Not one cent of subscription money or of that which is sent to help circulate the paper is used for personal need or gain. Every penny goes into the ministry of the printed word. We invite you to become a sharer in this service. Why not include the crusade for unity and fellowship in your personal budget for the months ahead? Let us labor together to usher in the peace for which Jesus prayed. Are you satisfied with what you are doing to promote His cause?

10. What plans do you have for future issues of the paper?

The issue for next month will contain a re-statement of our purpose and position in simple language. In June we will have a challenging article entitled, “Only One Church;” and in July a very important and timely presentation on the topic, “Analysis of Heresy.” At present we are doing research on Agape, the only power which can ever unite us all and hold us together. We expect to present the material on it before the year is out, and follow with a thrilling, thought-provoking series of studies on “The Rise of Factionalism.” In this last we shall attempt to show just where we detoured from the path of restoration and we predict that it will cause a great deal of comment and study. There are many good things ahead for all of us!

Unity and Identity

Mission Messenger (April 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

Will our plea for unity of all believers in Christ cause the church to lose its identity? This is an objection frequently heard. Like many other accusations it proves to be absurd when examined in the light of reason. Jesus prayed for the unity of all believers. He also planted the church. Would he pray for that which, if it came to pass, would destroy the identity of the church?

How can the church lose its identity? It is the body of Christ. He is the head of the body and the Saviour of the church. As a head, Jesus would have no significance without the body, just as the body would have no significance without Jesus. If the church should cease to be, Jesus would cease to exist as a head. That which makes him a head is his relationship to the body. So long as the head lives the body cannot die; and so long as the body lives it can be identified. That which identifies the church is its connection with Jesus. It cannot lose its identity unless it is severed from Jesus. But if it is severed from Jesus it is not the church and he is not a head.

Unconsciously, those who voice a fear the church will lose its identity under the impact of our discussions on fellowship, reveal that they are really members of a sect. It is plainly stated by Jesus that the gates of hell shall not prevail against the church. In plain language this means that the church which he planted can never lose its identity. Now, if the church of our Lord cannot lose its identity and the institution to which our objectors belong can lose its identity it is evident that there is a difference between the former and latter.

The truth is that our brethren have confused the party to which they are attached with the church of God. They are frightened by the thought that all of God's children may become one, and thus put an end to their party as well as all other factions. Since they look upon their faction as the church that would be equivalent to the church losing its identity. One of the fruits of the party spirit is fear— blind, unreasoning fear. Men build walls about themselves and feel secure within their narrow confines. They lose their love for freedom. With their wings kept closely cropped by tradition and penned up inside their interpretative fences they are no longer adapted to the glorious liberty of the sons of God.

They surrender love of truth for dogmatism and barter hope of grace for legalism. Removed from the main channel of religious thought where the current flows freely they drift into bayous and sloughs where they mistake stagnation for faithfulness and placidity for loyalty. In time they come to believe that the marsh is the stream and that to dry it up would be to destroy the river. But just as a swiftly flowing stream cannot be kept within the narrow banks of a pond so truth cannot be harnessed within the limited confines of a party. When it is directed in its force against the dams men have constructed they must give way before it but this only means the merging again of the waters in the main channel.

Truth is dangerous to any party or faction. It is well for factious men to keep it out if they would keep their partisans in. They will need to apply threat and boycott if they are to survive. Every party is built on reverence for the traditions of the fathers, therefore, has its own creed. The party exists on the basis that it has discovered, embraced and enclosed all truth.

John Milton in his famous Areopagitica, published in 1644, points out that truth in our age is but dimly seen and imperfectly known. Those who would seek to rule with an infallible authority would confine our knowledge to this present circumference. But man has not been made to endure this tyranny. The Puritan poet writes, “The light which we have gained was given us not to be ever staring on, but by it to discover onward things more remote from our knowledge.” This statement is worthy of our consideration.

Every factional leader has the dream of “converting” all the members of every other faction to his own party. It is his aim and intention by persuasion if possible, and otherwise by coercion, to bring all into his own fold. This will never be done. The purpose of God is not served by partisan clashes or debates. All religious sectism is wrong. That includes our own. It can never be reconciled with the divine plan. It is only as the parties lose their identity and Christians divest themselves of their special brands that we will draw closer to God.

This does not require the sacrifice of a single truth by any person. We are not divided because each holds some truth but because no one of us holds it all. It is not by giving up any truth but by entering more deeply into truth that we shall find greater unity. The church will never lose its identity by searching for truth. The party which ceases to do so merely cumbars the ground. It produces no real fruit for good. It is time for all of us to realize that it is not in the defense or maintenance of parties that we serve God, but in rising above the spirit which creates such parties and gives them birth.

The church of God cannot lose its identity. This is the vain fear of those who trust in an organization rather than in the divine organism. It is an indication that men walk by sight and not by faith. Can a body lose its identity while the head still lives? Can a kingdom lose its identity while its king is seated on the throne and reigns unchallenged? Can a flock lose its identity while the shepherd watches over it? Can a house lose its identity while it is recognized by its owner? Can a temple lose its identity while the Deity dwells within it?

If the exaltation of the name of Jesus as our rallying point means death to factionalism let it die! If the fulfillment of the prayer of Jesus for unity spells the doom of the party let it die! If the advocacy of the brotherhood of all the sons of God removes the barriers, dissolves the hate and renders the sectarian spirit helpless and useless— let it die! Too long have men kept the family of God apart by proclaiming that the family would lose its identity if all the children came together. Too long have they predicted that the city of God would lose its identity if the breaches in the walls were repaired.

Men created parties and men can destroy them. God created the church and men are powerless to destroy it. The grave could not retain the physical body of Jesus; it can never receive his spiritual body. Will he who notes the fall of the sparrow allow the church to perish? But we are asked if our recognition of persons in other churches as brethren will not eventually cause the church to lose its identity. There are no persons in other churches. There is only one church. You might as well talk of belonging to other Christs or other Gods as to talk of belonging to “other churches.” If others are in a church at all they are members of the one body; if they are not members of it they are not in the church. There are many parties but there is only one church. A man can no more start a church than he can make another God or create another Spirit. There is only one body just as there is but one Lord.

It is precisely by our formation of parties that we have obscured the church. Men “see through a glass darkly” because of our sectarian conflicts. This does not mean the church has lost its identity. It is still true that “the Lord knoweth them that are his.” It is not the man who seeks to dispel the partisan fog who beclouds the church but he who confuses factionalism with faithfulness. The church has no better friend on earth than the one who strips from its face the creedal shrouds with which men have swathed it and allows it to shine forth in the radiant and undimmed glow of spiritual oneness. No man who really believes in the purpose of God will ever entertain the thought that the bridegroom will be unable to identify his bride. Those who harbor such fears are not made perfect in love for perfect love casts out fear. Men cannot see far even on a clear day with clouded spectacles.

The Plea for Unity

Mission Messenger (May 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

This article contains a re-statement in simple language of our desire and aim. We dedicate it to all who have experienced “the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit.” We beg of all the saints that they read it carefully and thoughtfully. Our earnest prayer is that it may serve the interests of Him “whom having not seen we love.”

For several years we have devoted a major part of this paper to a plea for unity among those who acknowledge Jesus of Nazareth to be the Son of God. Our reason for this is the personal conviction that division among the believers is the greatest hindering factor in our attempt to convert the world to Christ. With the shadow of the cross falling over his path Jesus prayed “for those who are to believe in me through their word, that they may all be one.” He stated as the purpose of such unity, “that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.”

In view of this it would seem that any effort to lead the world to Christ which ignores the problem of disunity among the believers is doomed to failure. It will avail us little to expend partisan efforts to preach the gospel if we encourage a spirit of rivalry and sectarian bitterness. The world will be won for Christ when all who believe are one in Christ. It was a realization of this great fact which caused us to transform this little journal from a party organ or mouthpiece, into a crusader for peace and unity.

In thus altering our status, we incurred the wrath of some of our brethren who feel that we have deserted and betrayed them.

We love all of the brethren who oppose us. We do not question their honesty nor doubt their sincerity. We know just how they feel, for we once felt exactly the same way. They regard that segment of the disciple brotherhood of which we are members as the kingdom of heaven. None outside of it are children of God, as they view the matter. It is treason to talk about anyone being a Christian who is not in the party. Now I no longer concur in such reasoning. I think that the sheep of God are scattered over the sectarian hills. I believe that God still has a people in Babylon. I am driven by a deep yearning to help lead them to a better future, not by denying that they are brethren, but by loving them as brethren. I am sincere in this conviction. I have reached it after years of study and meditation!

I am saddened because when I extend my love to others, some are thereby motivated to hate and attack me. I cannot quit loving, lest I quit living, for life in the Spirit is love. I refuse to indulge in hate even for those who seek to undermine and destroy my influence. I prefer to pray for them and help them in any manner within my power. Most of them have never understood our plea. They have imagined a great many things.

They have predicted dire results. We trust that God will permit us to live and prove how vain and empty are these speculations.

It was never our intention to hurt any of our brethren, but rather to help all of them. We have sought to share with them our maturing ideas as we grew in grace and knowledge of the truth, and that for their good. Most of us are sincerely striving to reach heaven. We are not religious gangsters bent upon destroying that for which Jesus died. Even when we differ it is because of an earnest desire to cling more closely unto Him who died for us. We are all human, frail, weak, and even sinful. All of us have been too factional and exclusive in attitude. We have been taught to be so, and conditioned for that kind of life. We are all victims of the party spirit in a greater or lesser degree. I have sought to find the way by which I could conquer this evil tendency in my life.

Unfortunately, and for this we express regret and tender our apologies, we are not always able to communicate unto others our innermost feelings. We cannot bring ourselves to believe that any of God's children would deliberately choose to misunderstand a brother who loves them. We prefer to think that we have somehow failed to present the message in a way they can grasp. Because of an urgency to enlist all in the noble work of peace and unity, we are thus prompted to repeat a great deal. While this may make our regular readers impatient we feel it is justified because of those who have recently been introduced to the paper, and to further help those who, in the past, have sought to understand our position but without success.

We must lead gently. All of us are on the way out of an undesirable state, yet we are filled with fears for our safety. We did not create the condition in which we have been reared, but we inherited it. All of us are what we have been taught to be. We love and respect our fathers. We do not easily cast off any of their influence in our lives. From childhood we have revered certain preachers. Their arguments and explanations are almost sacred unto us. To admit that they were in error in any of these things appears like questioning the very revelation of God, since we've heard them say so often, "This is what the Bible teaches." It is not always easy to separate their interpretation from what God spoke, for they have been our interpreters. Many of us have almost felt that we had an infallible interpretation. Yet there have always been differences among us.

Needed Changes

What approach are we making to the problem? How does it differ from what we used to think and say? These are good questions. I should like to face up to them once more. We pray that those who have read after us regularly will not be discouraged by our need to repeat so frequently. Certainly we have made some changes. It is unthinkable that one would not grow in twenty years. But growth means change. How often do we say of a growing boy, "He has changed until I hardly knew him." It is not always wrong to change. It is wrong not to change if you learn better. Actually, there never can be unity among a divided people unless there are changes made. All of us rejoice when others change and come closer to our views. Resentment comes only when one with whom we are associated alters in any respect. If others change and approach our position, they are sincere seekers after truth; if one of our number changes, he is unstable and a traitor.

It is hard for us to be fair and just. When someone is forced, through anguish of mind and deep study, to amend his views, we cannot give him personal credit for honesty. We look about for some exterior influence. We conclude that he came under the power of some other person who possessed great ability, and through love for that other person was led astray. We infer that he would have remained "sound" and "faithful" if another had not woven a spell about him. Actually, we just cannot understand how a person can be honest and not see everything just as we have always seen it. We assume that one who does not is either ignorant or insincere. We constantly seek to influence as many others as possible, and when we are successful, the one who lines up with us is always a person of deep conviction. If one defects from our party it is because of an unworthy motive, such as love of money or prestige.

We make no allowance for spiritual growth or progress. We conclude that all progression in the faith is digression from it. Thus we build our party walls higher with each generation, and petrify the hearts of those who dwell inside them. Religion becomes a kind of soul-chilling performance of ritual, observed by those who are suspicious of each other. Faithfulness to God is measured by the number of services attended each week, and the amount of money contributed. No real impact is made upon the world. Division is rife among the saints. I doubt that any of us would deny this state of affairs exists, nor would we defend it. We continue in it because we have been trained to believe that stolid endurance of such a condition is being faithful to God and loyal to the cause!

I do not believe that! When a condition is out of harmony with God's plan, it is not the one who continues in it, but the one who changes it, who is faithful to God. Division among brethren is wrong. It is sinful! To continue in a wrong state does not make us either right or faithful. But what can we do about it? Here is the crux of the situation. The problem is so big and complex it makes the average person feel powerless and futile. He resigns himself to doing nothing, for fear that he will make things worse. He resolves to sit down in his party and be faithful and trust to God to save him, even if all the rest are damned. I know how he feels, for I am an average person. And I felt that way for years.

I now know that such an attitude will not save me at all. It is a surrender to Satan. Jesus prayed for all believers to be one. He died on the cross to make it possible. He did all within his power to answer his prayer. If I am to work with Jesus I must labor for unity. I must pray for it and do something about it. I can never be content for God's children to be separated from each other. So long as they are, the will of God cannot be done on earth as it is in heaven. Peace is never an accident. Peace is made. "Blessed are the peacemakers for they shall be called the children of God."

Thinking Unity

As I view it, we have been lulled into thinking we are helpless to offset the existing state of division. So long as we thus think, we will do nothing about it. This is actually working against God's great design. Someone must restore the vision of a united people. Everything in the universe began with an idea. There can be no accomplishment without an idea, or an ideal. So long as we think in terms of division, we must expect divisions to occur. We are what we are today because of what we thought yesterday. We are just where our thinking has brought us now; we will be where our thinking takes us tomorrow. If we would better conditions we must alter our thinking. We have division because we thought in terms of division; we can only have unity when we think in terms of unity.

We should admit the greatness of our problem, and we should be aware of our own weakness. But we should never be so weak that we do not tackle the problem. Much of what passes for weakness may be either indifference or cowardice. Things will not be made better by one big man working at the top, but by a lot of little folk like ourselves digging away at the bottom. There is a mountain of debris which has accumulated. It has been piled high by tradition and teaching. It must be removed before we can really rebuild the walls of Zion. Every shovel full, every basket full, that is carted away, shortens the task just that much for those who follow us. Besides that, God will work with us, for we will be doing His will. It is not the will of God that His children engage in strife and division. He is not the author of confusion, but of peace. He will help the peacemakers who are called His children.

Of course, we must always be careful. We must guard against the tendency to allow anxiety for unity with God's children to cause us to go too far. We must not become more charitable than God. In these days many tremble with fear about the future. They are afraid that when restraints and restrictions are cast aside, we will be swept away by a flood. The party lines are looked upon as dikes to hold back an angry ocean. If such were the case, we should constantly labor to heighten and strengthen the barrier. But the walls we seek to remove are not those which sever us from an alien and sinful world, but the ones we've erected inside against brethren. Some of these are spite fences kept up by those who forget why they were originally constructed. Let us maintain the fortress against sin and Satan, but work to remove the walls that separate brethren from each other.

We are asked what will happen when we let the bars down. My answer is that many of these bars should not have been put up in the first place. There has been a great deal of senseless and needless division which has produced an aftermath of bitterness. The bars we seek to remove are not those erected against evils, but the ones which keep brethren apart. The reason we are separated in many cases is because some have been forced out. They are in other parties, or segments, because we have driven them from us. Our interest is not to let down the bars to things, but to remove them from between brethren, so that we can again sit down as equals and examine our differences. It is not our intention to have any person compromise or weaken his conviction on any point, but while holding to that point, to regard those who differ as brethren beloved in the Lord.

Our Present Purpose

Our hope is not so much that we can eliminate all of the divisive factors, as that we may offset the divisive spirit. We are seeking to create a proper atmosphere for discussion. In the past our discussions have often encouraged prejudice and partisan bitterness. They have been carried on in a highly charged emotional state. We feel that we need to approach our grave differences in calmness. "The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God." We cannot argue ourselves into unity nor debate ourselves into peace. If we can once see that our differences do not destroy brotherhood, we can then examine them in mutual regard for each other as children of the same

Father. In such a state of affairs we will not widen gaps even if we do not lessen tensions. In the past we have often faced each other as enemies and every encounter has pushed us farther apart. We believe that if we meet with love and respect for each other, the very act of meeting will bring us closer to each other.

We are often asked if we have any right to open up anew those matters which have long ago been settled. Our answer is that nothing is ever settled in the spiritual realm until it is settled in harmony with God's will. It is not God's will that we be divided, and to reach a stalemate where we agree to maintain division without again trying to remedy the situation is not to settle, but to unsettle the saints of God. No Christian can ever regard our present divided state with an easy conscience. He must be troubled at heart, he must be disturbed in mind. And he must be constantly at work to bring about the conditions for which Jesus prayed. We are not re-opening that which is a closed book, for God does not close the book while His family is apart and alienated from one another.

We hold that to reverse the situation which confronts us we must start with those things which we hold in common, and use them as a foundation for approach to our differences. If we do not, we have no solid ground upon which to stand. We do not suggest that we merely forget our differences and act as if they were of no consequence, or that we simply shake hands and agree to disagree. We believe that differences should be recognized, brought into the open, and discussed freely, but the discussions should be carried on as becomes brethren in the Lord. We should never slam the door shut. We should always be ready and willing to meet and review any matter, even though such a meeting seems doomed to failure in advance.

What Is Fellowship?

Under no circumstance should we allow honest differences of interpretation or opinion to affect our view of fellowship. It is here we have all made a tragic error in the past. We were taught that fellowship was equivalent to endorsement, and that to be in fellowship with one was to be in complete agreement with him. It is true that we were inconsistent but we rationalized in such a manner as to satisfy ourselves and stifle conscience. Such a view of fellowship is in error, and we need to alter our position so we can be in harmony with the word of God. To be in the fellowship with a man does not mean you endorse all of his ideas or actions. It does not mean that you share all of his views and opinions.

Fellowship is a state or condition which we enter in response to the call of God (1 Cor. 1:9). It is a relationship we enjoy as “fellows” or brothers. Every person who is in Christ is in the fellowship. Not all who are in the fellowship agree upon every matter. Perhaps no two of them do so. But they did not enter the fellowship through mutual agreement or understanding on all points. They entered it through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and an expressed obedience to that faith in baptism. Every sincere baptized believer is in the fellowship. This has been true since the planting of the church of God on earth.

It is important to remember that the word “fellowship” is a noun. It is never used as a verb. We should not belittle such truths, because it is necessary that we employ sound speech. We do not want to confuse others, and to avoid doing so, we must not only use the language of the Spirit, but must do it in the same manner in which the Spirit has used it. Thus, we should not say that we fellowship a certain person. We are in the fellowship with certain persons. We never ask, “Do you partnership him?” or “Do you companionship him”? By the same token we should not ask, “Do you fellowship him”? To do so, removes fellowship from a state or condition and reduces it to an act. It then becomes something which we may extend or withdraw, when, in reality, it is a state into which we enter. That is why the expression “withdraw fellowship” is not in the scriptures.

We do not “fellowship” things, or ideas, or doctrines. Fellowship is a relation between persons, like brotherhood or partnership. The word “fellow” shows this. It is from a word meaning “a companion” or “one who shares.” We do not fellowship societies, instrumental music, Bible classes, individual cups, etc. I mention this because of the common error of many of my good brethren who have been conditioned by long practice to misuse the word in such a manner. We need to purify our speech if we would please God.

The implication of what we have said is simply this. Fellowship is not a state that is entered because of a position on the things that have been allowed to divide us. We come into the fellowship by response to the call of God. Anyone who makes the proper response to that call enters the fellowship. He may not even know there has been division created by an attitude toward certain things. He may be unaware that God’s family is rent or divided. Just as the fellowship is not entered by a view of these issues, and because of that, it is our contention that it is not broken or destroyed by an opinion on these matters. Fellowship is brotherhood. Brotherhood is the result of common Fatherhood. Disagreements with each other about certain things do not remove us from the family. The term used to describe the family relationship of God’s children is “fellowship.”

It is at this juncture I have been most often misunderstood. I can see why it is difficult for good brethren to grasp what I am saying. They have been taught for several generations that fellowship is something extended or withdrawn by a congregation and that it is an attitude toward certain things over which we are divided. I sympathize with the problems posed for them by my writings because I once felt just as they do. I taught many of them the very things they now quote to me. But I was wrong, seriously wrong, and I am sorry. I did the best I knew as I still do but I had a mistaken idea about fellowship which I had inherited. I am now trying to correct it and it is not easy for those to accept who sat under my teaching in an earlier day.

Source of Division

I now know that my former view was divisive in its tendency. Most of our divisions in these days probably stem directly, or indirectly, from a mistaken view about fellowship. I do not want to be a party to division among my brethren. I want only to be a humble instrument to plead for peace and unity. This means that I must regard fellowship in a different light. It is to offset division and strife that I have written so much about fellowship in recent years. I do not feel that we can do a great deal toward leading the world to believe in Jesus until we can bring the children of God together.

I have thus far been unable to convey my thoughts in such a manner as to convince the brethren that there is a difference between fellowship and endorsement. That is why many of them in their anger because of my personal plea accuse me of endorsing all of the things I once opposed. Actually, I have not changed at all on any of the things I opposed. For example, take the question of instrumental music. I consider myself more strongly opposed to its use in the corporate worship of the saints than ever before. But fellowship is a relation to persons and not to things. The change I have made is not in reference to the things that have divided, but to those who are divided. Once I did not regard them as brethren. Now I have a deep and abiding love for them. I have no half-brothers or step-brothers in the Lord so I move among all of my brethren with love and compassion. Like Paul, I commend what I can and what I cannot commend I do not. But, like the apostle, I do not measure fellowship in terms of what I can or cannot commend.

I am not so unrealistic as to think that we'll settle such problems as the use of instrumental music in my lifetime, nor do

I feel that I have either the wisdom or the power to do so. I am not sure the time would be ripe for any radical adjustment one way or another. I do know that my previous attitude only made the rift greater and encouraged the party spirit with its train of prejudice and I am sorry for the years in which I was working against God's purpose instead of for it. My present approach is not to engage in debate over the divisive issues but to establish a proper atmosphere for calm reasoning in love. It appears that factional debates have only cemented partisan prejudices and have contributed little real good. As conducted in the past they have left a trail of bitterness and passion in their wake which was not good.

I have used instrumental music to illustrate my point, not because I wish to emphasize it unduly nor make it appear that it is any worse than the host of other things which divide us from each other. But it does seem to be the criterion of "fellowship" for many and if my position will span this rift and allow me to regard as my brethren those on both sides of such a wide chasm it will certainly be effective in lesser areas. As I see it I am not commanded or obligated by God's revelation to love the instrument. I am under the orders of heaven to love my brethren. If I allow anything to influence me not to love them, that thing will destroy me even if I oppose it. "He who does not love does not know God, for God is love."

The point at issue with me is not so much whether instrumental music in worship is of God or the devil. I have some brethren who affirm it is of God, others that it is of the devil, others who do not know, and still others who do not care. Those who are interested on both sides quote scriptural passages to sustain their views. Frequently they use the same passages—one to prove it is of God, the other to show it is of the devil. What concerns me primarily as of the present is whether those who use it are brethren. If they are and I refuse to regard them as brethren, or if I do not love them as such, then I am of the devil regardless of where instrumental music originated. "By this it may be seen who are the children of God, and who are the children of the devil: whoever does not do right is not of God, nor he who does not love his brother” (1 John 3:10).

Light and Darkness

It is a favorite blackboard exercise of a lot of my brethren to put two circles on the board, one bearing the label “light” and the other “darkness.” In the first of these they put a list of things approved of God; in the second a list of things which God (or themselves) will not sanction. No two factions will place exactly the same list of things in either circle. Every group has its own party catalogue of things designated “darkness.” It will be generally admitted that few of these are actually named in the word of God. They are included because the party thinks that God implied them in certain passages. They oppose them and feel that God must do the same.

However it is the motive which these brethren have in mind that should cause us to tremble. Their purpose in listing under “darkness” the various and sundry matters over which we are divided is to “draw the line” against sincere brethren who disagree with them. They then quote and misapply the statement. “Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness.” This becomes the ground for un-Christianizing men over instrumental music, missionary societies, colleges, orphan homes, individual cups, leavened bread, fermented wine, unfermented wine, Bible classes, etc. On this basis they deny brotherhood to all those who cannot pronounce their “shibboleth.” Now the strange thing is that God has drawn no circles into which He has placed the things named. He has said little, if anything, about most of them. But he did draw a circle called darkness and put someone in it. “He who says he is in the light and hates his brother is in the darkness still.”

This positively demonstrates that one may place himself in the circle of light and be in the other circle. I have never known one of my brethren to draw these circles in order to put themselves in the one titled “darkness.” They are always in the one called “light” and just about everyone else outside of the faction is in the one designated “darkness.” It is interesting to note that in most of this blackboard art the circles are made the same size. This indicates an improper sense of proportion. It would not take a very big circle to envelop all who are admittedly in the factional “light” but the other circle would need to be large indeed.

In God’s circles of “light” and “darkness” there are, of course, two categories. “He who loves his brother abides in the light” (1 John 2:10). “He who hates his brother is in the darkness” (verse 11). It will be admitted that one can oppose instrumental music and hate his brother. Such a person is in darkness, not because of his position on instrumental music but because of his attitude toward his brother. It will also be admitted that one may endorse instrumental music and love his brother fervently. Is he in the light? If not, have we set up a double standard? I rather suspect that we are in dangerous business legislating on matters of light and darkness for the express purpose of excluding good and sincere brethren, even when they are mistaken about a lot of things. This is a demonstration of the carnal spirit and a work of the flesh. “Now the works of the flesh are plain . . . selfishness, dissension, party spirit, envy . . .” (Gal. 5:19, 20). In short, to draw a circle of darkness for the purpose of excluding your brethren is the surest way to place yourself in that circle.

A Practical Approach

Because of my inability to make myself clear in print a lot of fine brethren have concluded that I was advocating a general mixing and mingling of everyone regardless of personal conviction or conscience. Nothing could be farther from the truth. I would not compromise my conviction nor even suggest that one should violate his conscience. But we do have a divided state of affairs. None of us like it, all of us are saddened by it. We must, however, be practical and realize that it is of long standing. It will not be corrected over night, nor for several generations. It may never be fully corrected in the ideal sense. God had to suffer and tolerate many things with which he was not pleased until the time was ripe for their correction. We must be like God, and exercise patience. But God was always working toward an inevitable solution, and we must also do that.

There are many areas in which we can work together even though we cannot do so in all areas. We should not allow the few points of difference to offset the many points of agreement. If we do unity will never be possible because even one minor point of divergency will keep us apart. It seems to me that the essential thing right now is to respect and treat each other as brethren. If one comes to my meeting who is allied with another faction I will be courteous unto him. I will have no hesitancy to call upon him to direct the prayer. This does not mean that I endorse all he believes or does, or that I consider him as being right on everything. I never did call upon one to lead in prayer to whom I would give a blanket endorsement. And if one must be right on everything before he can pray I will have to cease praying. It is precisely because of my failures and shortcomings that I want to pray, and need to do so.

Where to Begin

I feel we can do much toward ushering in a better day if we actually practice non-sectarian Christianity. This means setting the table of the Lord where we worship for all immersed believers whose lives are in harmony with the ethics of Jesus. It should be made clear that we receive and recognize, to sit at the feast with us, all whom the Lord receives and invites. No tests of fellowship should be made which are not specifically designated as such by our Lord himself. This is merely another way of saying that we should make nothing a test of fellowship which He has not made a condition of salvation.

We have been accused of advocating a policy which will lead to endorsement and recognition of the sects. The brethren who make such an assertion wholly misunderstand our aim and intent. We regard all sectism as a work of the flesh. The very spirit which gave rise to the sects is evil and sinful. It is carnal. We are opposed to the creation and maintenance of any sect. We contend that all sects should be uprooted and abolished. We are set for the destruction of the sectarian attitude. It is because of that very thing that we want to see all of God's children rescued from its tyranny. We propose to be not only non-sectarian but also anti-sectarian. Yet while we deplore and hate sectism we love our brethren who have been ensnared in it.

We want to see them free from the blighting, chilling effect of all sectism. To that end we dedicate our efforts and our thoughts. We cannot lead others from sectism by becoming sectarian.

In closing we implore all of our brethren to be patient and loving. Let us not indulge in false accusations against each other. If we have differences let us meet like men and resolve them in discussions across the table, under the warming influence of brotherly affection. None of us want to be lost. We are not dishonest nor malicious. Life is hard enough for all of us without adding to our problems. Let us find the way to peace and walk in it! What good can possibly come by bitterly attacking each other and indulging in personal thrusts? What is to be gained for the cause we love by speaking evil of those who are hundreds of miles away? Let us deal with issues, and not attack men. The issues will still live on when our bones have crumbled into dust.

I am ready and willing to go at my own expense, as long as I am able and God permits, and meet with any who sincerely differ with my position. I will pray with them, converse with them, and reason with them in love in the hope that the Spirit may work in and through us to achieve greater things. If we cannot come to agreement I will not widen the gap between us. When I leave I will love those who cannot agree with me as much as I do those who concur in my views. We can undo the strife of the past, we can conquer the party spirit of the present, we can promote peace on earth among men of good will in the future! Let us thus serve our generation before we fall asleep and our children will rise up to call us blessed!

Preaching Christ

Mission Messenger (May 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

The problems created by schism and strife in our contemporary religious scene are many and varied. Faced with such complexity the reaction of some is to ignore the condition and “just preach Christ.” This is like a doctor who spends his time lecturing on good health while an epidemic sweeps the land. It is like a man who tries to sell his neighbor insurance while his own house is on fire. Few there are in our land who have not heard of Jesus. Millions believe that he is the Messiah and God’s Son. His name is magnified in thousands of pulpits every week. His gracious attributes are daily described on hundreds of radios.

The believers are rent and torn because of the party spirit. They do not know that sectism is a work of the flesh. They have grown up in circumstances they have never investigated. They are victims of inherited conditions they have never questioned. They are not conscious of the fact that the very existence of divergent denominations is in opposition to the essence of the Christian way. We will not change this status by “preaching Christ” to the occasional hearer from another group who drops in upon one of our meetings out of courtesy. We will make no great impact upon the world at large by merely immersing our own children.

We need to face up to the fact that as Paul declared, “some proclaim Christ out of partisanship” (Phil. 1:17). We belong to Christ but he does not belong to us. Let us cease to look upon honest believers about us as pagans and heathen. Let us cease to regard them as apostates and heretics. These words are misused when applied to sincere believers in our Lord Jesus Christ who are mistaken about the implication of certain scriptural passages. Can we lead other men to Christ while we cannot live together with those already in him? Shall we preach Christ and practice division? Dare we pray for men to believe in Jesus while we forget his own prayer for those who do believe in him? Does not our proclaiming Christ lay upon us the responsibility to answer his prayer for one-ness of those who accept that proclamation? Perhaps the greatest problem that faces us is not that Christ is not preached, but as it was in the days of Rome, men “proclaim Christ out of partisanship”? Are we as anxious to see people saved as to have them see things like we do?

The Human Factor

Mission Messenger (May 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

The problem of division in the ranks of the believers is one of the major problems of our day. Men tend to react in different ways when confronted with such a problem. Some close their eyes and try to ignore it. Others attempt to minimize its importance and make it appear that the solution lies in the emphasis of something else. Still others seek to isolate and insulate themselves from reality by erecting a wall around themselves and the party with which they are allied. Such tactics are actually forms of escapism. They stem from fear and frustration. They are the resort of immature minds.

The problem must be faced for God has laid upon us a solemn responsibility to do something about it. He has committed those whom he designates his sons to the task of making peace. This entails more than simply being inclined toward peace or being on the side of peace as opposed to division. It involves more than thinking about peace or desiring peace and praying for it. One may do all of these and still do little to really create peace. The peacemaker must analyze the problem of division, endeavor to understand the motivations of the past which have caused it, and he must direct his energy and talent in creativity to bring about a state of unity.

I say he must do this because any responsibility enjoined by God has to be met, either in this life or in the one to come. We cannot finally evade an answer to the problem for we must either arrive at an answer here, or we shall arrive at the place where we must answer for our failure. To be a peacemaker means more than reading a journal which advocates peace or endorsing the work of another who labors for it. It means a personal commitment to a task with the expenditure of time, effort and energy required to achieve it. It requires a persistent and consistent attempt to lessen every area of tension. He who would be called a child of God must be a peacemaker!

This is an age of conformity, postponement and substitution. No one wants to be regarded as different. No one desires to be designated a radical. There is a conspiracy of timid souls to maintain the status quo. The problems of life are put off until another day, or something else more in keeping with the wishes and desires of the people is substituted in the hope that it will provide an opiate to drug the senses and quiet the throbbing conscience. But the world is in a topsy-turvy state. The same holds true for the church. The present condition is opposed to the divine plan and purpose. We cannot attain unto God's will by perpetuating our status. We must change it. There is a sacred imperative to do something that will bring us to a state more in harmony with the divine will.

Unfortunately reformers are always deterred by the threat of being labeled as traitors and radicals. We must come to realize, however, that one who is loyal to a party may betray the cause of Christ. The party spirit is a work of the flesh. The real traitor is the one who claims to be faithful to the ideals of Jesus while motivated by narrow partisanship. As for being a radical, perhaps that is what we need most of all. The word is from the Latin radix, a root. It is from this we get our word radish. A radical is one who gets to the root of things. He is not satisfied to meander through life dealing only with superficial matters. Jesus was a real radical. His teaching was a little too radical for some of the people in his day on earth; it is still too radical for many in the church.

When we get to the root of the question of division among the believers it will be seen that our problem is one of human relationships. In this connection J. B. Phillips writes: "The deep fundamental problems of human life are really neither intellectual nor technical; they are always in the last resort problems of human relationship." The case can be summarized in a few brief sentences. Jesus of Nazareth died on the cross to remove walls of partition and to make men one in him. He prayed for the oneness of all who believe in him on the testimony or the apostles. Those who believe in him are rent and torn. Schism and division are rife in our world.

Thus our present state is opposed to the purpose of the cross. It is a contradiction of the prayer of Jesus. Why is the religious world in this condition? Perhaps there is no simple answer. No doubt many complex forces and factors contribute to it. One thing is obvious, we are just what our thinking has made us. We have not thought as God thinks or we would be united. We have developed a philosophy which is counter to God's purpose. In pursuing it we have fractured ourselves into numerous segments and factions.

It is a common assumption that all divisions are caused by deviations from a divine pattern, either by adding something God has not commanded or by deliberately omitting something he has demanded. This generalization like so many others is not true. Many of those things which are credited with creating division did not create it at all. The alienation of heart already existed and the first thing that was presented which could be magnified into a rallying standard was seized upon and emphasized until the open rupture came. The real cause was the clash of temperaments, the selfish desire to dominate and domineer. It was not so much a matter of principles in many cases as of personalities.

A frequent source of difficulty is the tendency of man to legislate his opinions into law. He then seeks to bind these opinions upon others and those who refuse to be bound are driven forth. When modes and methods are hallowed by traditional practice, it is easy for partisans to believe that the early saints practiced a procedure because the party practices it. "The pattern" is not so much bound upon us by the early church as it is bound upon the early church by our practice. The interpretations of certain fathers of the party become the norm and constitute the criteria by which everyone is to be measured including the new covenant writers. The holy word has been utilized to prove about anything and everything that men want to do.

J. B. Phillips again writes: "Although in the heated atmosphere of the revival meeting the phrase 'the Bible says' may carry fervent conviction, the intelligent man who has read the Bible knows perfectly well it can be made to say a lot of things, and that, as a matter of sober history, witch-hunting, slave-owning, and the inhuman practice of apartheid have all been justified by reference to the same Bible."

It is doubtful that we can eliminate the human factor from our divisions. These generally result not so much from cool rational discussion in love, but from heated emotional argument in hate. Men cannot learn to live together until they first learn how to live. Our rifts will be healed and our barriers removed when each member of the body learns what it means to say "To live is Christ." It may be true that many of our parties have originated from a desire to be faithful or loyal but it is a misplaced loyalty. No man can prove his loyalty to Jesus by separating from his brethren because Jesus positively forbids it through the teaching of the apostles. To be loyal to Jesus one must continue to love all of the brethren, not just those who see everything as he does.

Our divisions are monuments to our tragic failure. Their very existence bears mute testimony to our spiritual immaturity. They proclaim to all the world that we are still babes, that we are carnal and walk as men. So long as these divisions continue we all rest under the stigma created by our own selfishness and littleness, “for while there is jealousy and strife among you, are you not of the flesh, and behaving like ordinary men?” It is useless to boast of our progress and gains in the spiritual realm so long as strife exists, for while it exists we are of the flesh. We are not extraordinary men, we are merely ordinary men! The only hope of clearing ourselves is by cleaning up the condition.

Our schisms are witness to our lack of real regard for Jesus. Nothing can be elevated as a basis or test of fellowship without first reducing Jesus to a position that is inferior and secondary. When the apostle was dealing with the schismatic state of the Corinthian congregation he declared, “For no other foundation can anyone lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ.” He did not mean that no one could emphasize anything else for men were doing just that. He did mean that no one could lay any other foundation of unity and fellowship. The very existence of the parties among us shows that those who have proclaimed the loudest their loyalty to Jesus have been building on other foundations.

Our first major task is to recapture the sense of commitment to Jesus. When our life is “hid with Christ in God” the love of God will be shed abroad in our hearts. Brethren will become of greater importance to us than opinions, ideas or methods. We shall no longer be so much concerned as to whether men are conformed to us as that they are transformed by him. We shall cease to make laws and bind them upon others, but we will be bound to them by the one word which fulfills the whole law— love! We need not love Jesus the less because we love more of the brethren.

We hear much about following “the pattern” but God has not given us a pattern of separation, segregation and division. When primitive saints became disunited they were not blessed but condemned. When schisms arose the apostle did not select one party as “the faithful church” for no party is the church. Those who would follow the pattern must walk in love toward the brethren. The pattern is one of cohesion not of division. Those who demand a scripture for what they do should cite the scripture upon which they acted in dividing from their brethren. It is not to be found. God is not double-tongued. He does not command unity among brethren in one verse and urge division among them in the next. Here is what the pattern says, “Mend your ways, heed my appeal, agree with one another, live in peace and the God of love and peace will be with you.”

The Perfect Church

Mission Messenger (May 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

Many casual students of the primitive church have a very distorted picture of conditions prevailing among the early disciples. There is a widespread notion that perfect agreement prevailed upon all matters, that a specific pattern was immediately given and that all concurred in it without discussion or deviation. This viewpoint is unrealistic and contrary to fact.

Those who first acknowledged Jesus as Lord and Christ were Jews. They brought with them into their new relationship the prejudices and partisan ideas which had motivated them in the past. There is no indication that they ever intended to become “a church of Christ.” It is far more probable that they expected to constitute a synagogue of Messianic Jews with a membership composed of those who regarded Jesus of Nazareth as having fulfilled “what God foretold by the mouth of all the prophets.” Certainly it was not their intention to allow anyone to participate with them who had never been circumcised. It was some of their own members who went to foreign cities and taught the Gentile converts that “unless you are circumcised according to the law of Moses you cannot be saved.”

Peter did not understand the full implication of his own words spoken under impulse of the Spirit when he declared that “the promise is unto . . . all them that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God doth call.” Several years later when the time had arrived to share the promise with some who were “afar off” it was necessary for God to perform a miracle upon him before he would take the good news to a Gentile. Even during the trance into which he fell Peter hastened to remind God that he had been orthodox with reference to kosher foods. When he returned from his mission, happy to be back again with the apostles and brethren in Jerusalem, he was censured by the circumcision party in the congregation for going to visit and eating with uncircumcised men. He hastened to assure them that it was not his idea, and that it was either go or withstand God, so he went.

The believers still worshipped daily in the temple and retained their membership in the synagogues. Many years later the elders of the congregation at Jerusalem pointed out to Paul “how many thousands there are among the Jews of those who have believed; they are all zealous for the law.” They urged Paul to engage in a certain temple ritual so “all will know that there is nothing in what they have been told about you but that you yourself live in observance of the law.” Paul actually circumcised Timothy because of the Jews in the area surrounding his home “for they all knew that his father was a Greek.”

Not only was there race prejudice with reference to the uncircumcised but there was provincial feeling between Hebrews and Hellenists. The former were Palestinian Jews and more rigid in their separation and exclusiveness. The others had grown up in Greek-speaking areas of the Roman Empire and were bi-lingual. One of the first areas of tension among the disciples in Jerusalem arose over a charge of favoritism. The Hellenists charged the Hebrews with being partial in the daily distribution of food commodities.

But does not the record say “the company of those who believed were of one heart and soul”? Indeed it does but we must not interpret this to mean that they had no problems of adjustment, no controversies or variations of opinion. They were one because of their recognition of Jesus as the Messiah. They were a company of men and women who realized that in their very city “there were gathered together . . . against Jesus . . . both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles and the people of Israel.” They were one because they shared in the hope kindled by his resurrection and because “they were all filled with the Holy Spirit.” But they were still in the flesh and subject to human frailty and shortcomings.

Perhaps the “perfect church” has never existed anywhere on earth. True, we have an infallible God, a perfect Savior, and a complete revelation. But we are the church. We are the members who constitute the one body. And we are in various stages of growth. Not one of us is perfect. The perfect church is an ideal toward which each generation must strive in the light of the revelation. “We are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Christ Jesus being the chief cornerstone.” But it is still true that “the whole structure is joined together and grows into a holy temple in the Lord.” Let us not become discouraged by our failures and weaknesses. Let us do our best and believe that through his grace and the cleansing power of his blood, Jesus may yet “present the church to himself all glorious, with no stain or wrinkle or anything of the sort.” This will be the Lord’s doing— not ours— and it will be marvelous in our sight!

Only One Church

Mission Messenger (June 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

I have been preparing the material for this article or preparing myself for the material for many months. In the article I shall say some things which are long overdue. It is not my intention to be sensational yet much of what is said will appear challenging to our former concepts and expressions. The casual reader laboring under the curse of unconcern will not take the time nor make a real effort to grasp the significance of what is written. The traditionalist and partisan will bristle with resentment at what is read. But the eager student of revelation, maintaining an open mind and motivated by a sincere desire to know the will of God, will critically examine our thesis in the light of the language of the Spirit. It is to such we must look for honest criticism and we invite all such to express themselves to us freely so that we may examine what they say and eliminate the flaws and fallacies which show up in our thinking.

I never write to create controversy but to express honest conviction. "Since we have the same spirit of faith as he had who wrote, 'I believed, and so I spoke,' we too believe, and so we speak" (2 Cor. 4:13). Still when varied views are presented research is stimulated and this encourages statement of divergent ideas. This is good for thereby we learn from each other. It is our desire that all who cannot in good conscience share our views write us the reasons why such is the case. We promise to scrutinize carefully all that is offered. With the preliminaries disposed of we now propose an examination of the nature of the church of God. It would be more factual to say that this is a re-examination since the subject has been so frequently discussed in the past.

The word “church” is the term employed by translators of the sacred scriptures to express in English the idea contained in the Greek ekklesia. In every instance but one in which “church” occurs in the King James Version it is a translation of ekklesia. The single exception is Acts 19:37, where a more literal rendering would be “plunderers of temples,” rather than “robbers of churches.” The Revised Standard Version is more nearly correct in its employment of the term “sacrilegious.” “You have brought these men here who are neither sacrilegious nor blasphemers of our goddess.”

The word ekklesia is a combined form of two words: ek, out; and kaleo, to call. The term signifies those who are called out and by that very same act are gathered or called together. In the old covenant scriptures two Hebrew words were employed to signify the gathering together of the people of God— the Israelites. The word edhah which in a secular sense was used to refer to the harvest which was a gathering of the sheaves or vintage and to recruiting of the people for a specific task such as war, is from a root meaning “gathering.”

In the Septuagint which was a Greek translation of the Hebrew scriptures made some two hundred years before the birth of Jesus of Nazareth, edhah is translated by sunagoge, bringing together. In the Revised Version this is generally rendered “congregation.”

The other Hebrew word tahal is from a root form meaning “to call or summon.” It is understood that those who are summoned will come together; that is, gather at the place and for the purpose for which they were summoned. The Greeks had a term akin to this and applied to an assembly of citizens of a city-state. Such an assembly was not a mere collection of inhabitants in the agora, or marketplace, nor a casual convening of a group for discussion or debate. It referred to a proper assembly of qualified and accredited citizens possessed of credentials and the right of franchise, called out or summoned to meet for decision on matters of state. The Greek term for such an assembly was ekklesia.

Where the word tahal occurs in the Jewish scriptures the Septuagint uses ekklesia as the Greek equivalent. And where this word occurs in the ancient oracles the Revised Standard Version employs the term “assembly.” It is noteworthy that the King James translators never once employ the word “church” in the old covenant scriptures although once in the new covenant writings they do refer to Israel as “the church in the wilderness.” The reason is obvious. Stephen was quoting from the Septuagint Version as most students realize, so used the word “ekklesia.” Of even greater interest is the fact that the RSV drops the word “church” at this place and says, “This is he who was in the congregation in the wilderness” (Acts 7:38). Yet, wherever the word ekklesia occurs, relating to the assembly of the saints, the same translators used the word “church” instead of “congregation.”

Pursuing this study of linguistics in order to lay a foundation for our principal theme, it must be mentioned that the word “church” is not an adequate translation of ekklesia at all. There is nothing in it which signifies a calling out or calling together. It has no connection with either an assemblage or a congregation. It came into our English language as an abbreviation of a wholly different term, kuriou oikos. This originally referred to a manor house owned by a feudal lord. It thus means literally “the house of a lord.” While it is true that the ekklesia of God is “the house of the living God,” the word for house does not translate ekklesia. A recognition of the inappropriateness of the word “church” prompted Alexander Campbell, in the version Living Oracles to substitute the word “congregation” wherever the word “church” appears in the Common Version. Hugh J. Schonfield, in his Authentic Version uses the word “community.” This is probably the best translation of the word.

The King James translators use the word “church” because it has acquired a certain ecclesiastical meaning. It is a professional term sanctioned by the clergy. It did not have such a connotation in the days before the rise of the so-called “Christian clergy” so the same translators never use it in the old covenant scriptures. There they faithfully render the equivalent Hebrew terms by “assembly” or “congregation.” Such reasoning as this will be lost upon many of our contemporary religionists. They are not so much concerned about the rightness of things as in defending what they have whether it is right or wrong. Instead of “searching the scriptures daily to see whether these things be so,” they invest their time in condemning those who dare to question their traditions.

It is from a recognition of this mental bias that we herein use the word “church” which has become sanctified by repeated usage despite its inappropriateness. We must “speak after the manner of men because of the infirmity of the flesh.” We have no desire to wound the conscience of the weak nor drive from us those who cannot concur in our findings. But in our discussion of “the church” we have our own mental reservations regarding the term even though we defer out of regard for the brethren to their opinions on the matter. Let us, then, in this thesis use the word “church” as a translation of Ekklesia.

That original term in the new covenant scriptures designates all of the called of God without a single exception. Every person on this earth who has responded to the divine call is by a divine act constituted a part of the ekklesia. It is impossible to conceive of one of the elect being outside the ekklesia. Every person who has been called out of darkness has by the same token been called into the light. One cannot be called out of darkness and not be called into light, for otherwise he would still be in darkness. “But you are a chosen race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, God’s own people, that you may declare the wonderful deeds of him who called you out of darkness into his marvelous light. Once you were no people but now you are God’s people” (1 Pet. 2:9, 10). The ekklesia is composed of God’s people. All who are numbered among God’s people are in the ekklesia of God, the called of God. There is not one of God’s people on this earth who is not a part of the ekklesia.

This being true there is only one church on earth now, there never has been more than one since Jesus died on the cross, and there never can be more than one. If we are to use the word “church” as the rendering for ekklesia it must embrace all of the called, all of God’s people without a single exception. If we talk about “other churches” we imply that there are other called out people and since we can only become one of the called or elect by an act of God this is an admission that he has more than one body, a direct contradiction of what the record says.

In every instance in which the sacred oracles speak on this matter it is affirmed that there is one body. “For as in one body we have many members, and all the members do not have the same function, so we, though many, are one body in Christ” (Rom. 12:4, 5). The “many” includes all who are in Christ. It is inconceivable that any should be members and not be attached to the head and thus be members of the body. If the body is “the church,” there can never, while Jesus is head, be more than one church. “For just as the body is one and has many members, and all the members of the body, though many, are one body, so it is with Christ” (1 Cor. 12:12). The expression “so it is with Christ” forever precludes the thought of more than one church. It is absurd, in the light of the sacred oracles, to ask a man with what church he is affiliated. If he is one of the elect he is in the church; if he is not one of the elect he is not affiliated with the church at all.

It is equally ridiculous to talk about “uniting with the church of your choice.” In order to have a choice there must be more than one item from which to select. A man has a choice as to whether he will respond to or reject the call of God. If he rejects it he is not one of the called out; if he accepts it he has no choice of churches. He is added to the only one there is, the congregation of the “called out ones.” One has no more freedom to accept the church of his choice than he does to accept the God of his choice or the Lord of his choice.

“For by one Spirit we were all baptized into one body—Jews or Greeks, slaves or free— and all were made to drink of one Spirit” (1 Cor. 12:13). There were congregations made up of Jews and others made up of Greeks, but in the very nature of things there could be no such thing as a Jewish church or a Gentile church. It took a long time for some of the early Christians to get this through their heads. In the same way there may be some congregations composed of white people and others composed of colored people, but there is no such thing as a colored church or a white church. In Jesus Christ there is no color line. His body is not divided by a median line with all of the members on the right side being white and those on the left being red, black or yellow.

One cannot choose whether he wishes to be affiliated with a church which receives colored people or refuses them for there is no such thing. There is one body, one church, and only one, and to it God adds the called ones, regardless of color. If you do not choose to be in a church with colored people the only other alternative is to be out of the church. Unfortunately, there are colored people out of it so your only spiritual choice is whether you’ll be in the church with colored people or be out of the church with colored people. One can no more choose his spiritual brothers than he could select his physical brothers. In both cases brotherhood results from fatherhood and we must welcome those begotten by our father whether we wish to do so or not. The other members of my physical body did not select my right arm or left foot, and the members of the one body do not select each other. "But as it is, God arranged the organs in the body, each one of them, as he chose" (1 Cor. 12:18). He did not arrange them as you chose because in this matter you have no choice. We should thank God for that!

No one who was ever baptized by the Spirit was baptized into other than the one body. "By one Spirit we were all baptized into one body." Of course, the Spirit could not baptize one into any other body, for there is no other. "There is one body and one Spirit, just as you were called to that one hope that belongs to your call" (Eph. 4:4). "Just as you were called." Note how the one body and one Spirit are tied in with the calling. The called ones constitute the one body. Anyone not in that body is not one of the called or elect. One might as well talk about choosing which Spirit will give him life as to talk about which church he will embrace. "Any one who does not have the Spirit of Christ does not belong to him" (Rom. 8:9). It is also true that "Any one who is not a member of the body of Christ does not belong to him." You have no more choice of bodies than you do of Spirits. "There is one body, and one Spirit."

We are told that God ordained one church but men have created other churches. This cannot be for men have no power to call other men out of the world and save them. To make such a statement necessitates a shifting of terms and definitions to get from "church" to "churches." It is true that men have brought into existence institutions which they call "churches" but these are not and cannot be churches. Men have also made other gods which are really not gods. "We know that an idol is nothing in the world, and that there is none other God but one. For though there be that are called gods . . . But to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him" (1 Cor. 8:4-6). By the same reasoning a sect is nothing and there is no other church than one, consisting of all the elect of the earth. The same authority which declares there is one God asserts there is one body, the church. Notice that it is not said that there should be, or ought to be, one body. The record says, "There is one body." One could as consistently affirm that there is more than one Lord as to assert there is more than one church.

We are asked what we propose to do about The Methodist Church, The Baptist Church, The Presbyterian Church, The Reformed Church, and a host of others. My reply is that not one of these is a church. "There be that are called churches," just like "There be that are called gods," but a man can no more create a church than he can create God! What are these? They are sects or parties within the realm of Christendom, that domain which includes all who confess that Jesus of Nazareth was the Messiah and God's Son. They are not an ekklesia of God, nor the ekklesia of God, so they are not churches. They exist without divine authority or approval.

The Methodist Church is a party subscribing to the opinions and interpretations of John and Charles Wesley. The Baptist Church is a party subscribing to the opinions and interpretations originally embodied in the Philadelphia Confession of Faith. The Presbyterian Church is a party crystallized around the teaching and opinions of John Calvin. The Reformed Church is a party addicted to the opinions announced by Ulrich Zwingli and other reformers. There may be, and no doubt are, children of God scattered among all of these. They are not God's children because they are attached to a sect, but in spite of it. God adds no one to a sect. He added them to the church and they joined a human party. In this they erred just as God's children err in many things. The church is not, and by its very nature cannot be a sect, and no sect can be the church of God. The very word "sect" is exclusive and indicates that there are others not of it who are Christians, but the word "church" as used by the Spirit, the ekklesia, is inclusive. It embraces all of the saved. There can be and there are many parties or sects, but there is only one body, one church.

Lack of understanding of this point betrays many of the good brethren who oppose my thinking on fellowship, into ridiculous positions. They go to Webster's Dictionary for a definition of fellowship. Apparently the inconsistency of using a twentieth century American dictionary to define a term employed by Anglo-Saxon translators to render a word used by the Holy Spirit in addressing the Greek-speaking world of the first century never occurs to them. By consulting Mr. Webster they deduce that fellowship is a relation "existing between members of the same church." They emphasize and dwell upon this phrase as if to make it appear that I advocate that fellowship is a relation between members of different churches.

Such brethren deserve pity more than censure. They imagine they see a fire-breathing dragon attacking all they revere. They unsheath their trusty traditional sword and dash forth out of their castle, widely swinging right and left, more frequently hitting themselves than anyone else. These brethren have a zeal for God but not according to knowledge. They want to do what is right but they should take out a little time and think before they speak. They understand neither what I suggest nor what the Bible says about fellowship.

Certainly fellowship is limited to those affiliated with "the same church," for that is all there is in existence. No one has advocated a state of fellowship between members of "other churches" for there are none. My whole contention on fellowship has been that it is a divine relationship existing between all members of the one body. I have never advocated fellowship with or between sects or sectaries, but with the Christians in all sects. The Christians are all in the same church by an act of God. They are members of one body. I am sorry that a lot of them put themselves into something else where God did not place them, but I'll not help get them out by denying they are Christians.

The real contention is not now and never has been on fellowship. The question is whether we shall recognize all of God's children as composing the ekklesia, or limit His family to the constituency of a faction, fraction, or fragment. I insist that I must regard all of God's children as my brethren. Because we have the same parents I am not ashamed to call them brethren. I am sorry that we are divided and that we have been betrayed into sectism by the party spirit but I shall not allow this tragedy to sever me from God's children. All of my brethren are members of the church— all who are members of the church are my brethren. And the church is bigger than any faction which men have created. God pity it if it is not!

Recently a couple of brethren whom I esteem highly, and who are elders of a congregation in the midwest, tried my case in absentia, and without even talking to me concerning my position reached the conclusion that I was a heretic. When I questioned them as to the basis for such a conclusion I found that they charged that my teaching would “lead to fellowship with the denominations.” These are fine brethren and I love them but they no more understand what I advocate than the man in the moon. Fortunately the latter does not make false accusations against me and in this respect sets an example for some of my brethren who are on this planet.

I am opposed to denominationalism. Sectism is sinful, condemned of God and deplored by all good men who understand the divine will. Instead of advocating “fellowship with the sects” I am dedicated to the destruction of all sects and the uprooting of all factions by killing the taproot which sustains and nurtures them— the party spirit. He who suggests that I am favorable to “fellowship with the sects” is wholly ignorant of my position and in no sense qualified to judge of its merits. Sectism must be defeated. It must be overthrown. It is inimical to the Christian concept and nullifies the purpose of God. It creates the false impression that there can be more than one ekklesia (church) in defiance of the plain statement, “There is one body.”

I have suggested that the real bone of contention is the constituency of the church of God. It is evident that no one is a part of the ekklesia who was not added to it by God; it is equally evident that every person so added is part of the ekklesia, or church. As I view it, all of those who are saved from their past sins and are reconciled to God are added. Jesus declares that “He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.” I take it that the salvation here mentioned is from past sins. The fact which one must believe in order to be baptized is that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. I conclude, therefore, that any person who believes this fact and validates his faith by being immersed is added to the church and thus is a member of the one body. Since, as our opposing brethren mentioned above have said, fellowship is a relation existing between “members of the same church,” I conclude that I am in fellowship with every sincere baptized believer on the face of the earth, seeing that all such are in the same church.

If it be argued that some of these baptized believers are in different “churches” I deny it. There is only one church, the ekklesia, the called of God. True, some of them may be in different parties or factions but if they are in a church at all they are in one church; if they are not in it they are not in a church. Can a man be in a faction or belong to a schismatic group and be a part of the church of God? Certainly so, although his attachment to the party is condemned of God. The first letter to the Corinthians points out that the called saints (1:2), the brethren (1:11), those who had been “called unto the fellowship” (1:9), had divisions among them. They were divided into parties consisting of Paulites, Cephasites, Apollosites and Christites (not Christians). Yet they composed “the church of God which is at Corinth” (1:2).

God formed the church but men created these parties. The parties were composed of those whom God had added to the church but neither of these parties nor all of them together, constituted the church of God at Corinth. The church of God existed at Corinth before any of these parties came into being.

The apostle did not deny that those affiliated with the parties were in the church of God. He affirmed it! But they were not in the church because they were in the party. They were in the church by the grace of God and in the party by the mistake of men.

The tragedy at Corinth was that those who claimed to be of Paul thereby separated themselves from those who claimed to be of Cephas, Apollos, or Christ. Each splinter no doubt thought it was the tree, and each party thought that it was the church of God. In this they were all wrong. No party among the brethren in Corinth while Paul was on earth was the church; no party in the United States today is the church. God's people are divided among themselves now as they were in Corinth then. The remedy of the apostle then was the utter elimination of the schismatic spirit. That is the only remedy now. It will avail little to have meetings to talk about uniting so long as the narrow, exclusive, bitter party spirit is imbedded in the hearts of those who meet, for it will germinate and produce other divisions and factions tomorrow. Until we are able to regard and respect each other as brethren, as part of the church even though divided by opinions into divergent parties, we will get nowhere except into deeper trouble!

All attempts at recapture of the concept of unity of the Spirit must start with the view that there is only one church and can never be another; that the ekklesia is a divine institution formed according to an eternal purpose and that man can no more create a church than he could create God or the Holy Spirit. Men may evolve heresies or sects and they do. These are the result of a carnal nature. They are, all of them which are in the spiritual realm, works of the flesh. But there is as much difference between being in the church of God and belonging to a sect as there is between being a citizen of the United States and belonging to a political party. A citizen may join a political party but he is not a citizen because he does so. In the political and social realm there is nothing inherently wrong with formation of a party based upon a certain political philosophy. In the spiritual realm sectism is inherently wrong because it is dangerous to the welfare and preservation of the divine organism which is maintained by mutual love and always adversely affected by sectarian rivalries. The spirit of competition and rivalry is opposed to the very nature of the church of God.

Still it is wrong to assume that the church will fail if factions are not foiled. The church is the body of Christ. It is not subject to corruptions or decay. No body is dead while the head still lives and Jesus has been raised from the dead to die no more. He ever liveth and because he does the church, the one body, ever lives. Men may wither and die upon factional vines and partisan plants but the one body will continue. The gates of hell shall not prevail against it. It is for that reason I am no longer concerned with sectarian rivalry, with the struggle for the supremacy of this insignificant faction, or that. I am content to be what God has made me through His Spirit, to remain where He has placed me, and to regard all others whom He has received as my brethren.

No faction now existing is the church of God in its fulness. There is no such thing in these days as “the faithful church” or “the loyal church” with reference to any party. Not one of these has gathered all of God’s children into its corral. To speak of “the faithful church” is to imply that there is an unfaithful ekklesia. We do not believe that! There is only one ekklesia, one church. Men may betray its best interests and become traitors and deserters. They may form human parties composed of their own kind, but these are factions and not “churches.” The ekklesia is the body of Christ. My body cannot be unfaithful to me, although some of its organs or members may become diseased.

Those parties whose partisans refer to them as “the faithful church” are simply narrow and exclusive segments of a divided disciple brotherhood which have certain points of emphasis and regard as faithful those who parrot “the party line.” They are not the church, although many in them may be attached to the church. Frequently those of their number whom they count as least worthy because they refuse to be bitterly factional are closest to the ideal of God. Their ranting, rampant, shouting public proclaimers are often farthest from the ideal of the Spirit.

Very humbly do I implore all of my brethren to pray for me regardless of the tragic circumstances which now separate and segregate us. Intreat for me before His throne that I may conquer and soar above the natural inclinations of the carnal man with its factional spirit. I do not consider that you need to be personally affiliated with the particular faction in which I grew up to have your petitions acknowledged and your prayers answered. It is enough for me that He has added you to the church, where the Holy Spirit can help your infirmities in prayer as He does mine. I am not interested in seeing you added to anything larger or smaller than the church. May all of us catch again the majestic vision of one body composed of all of God’s dear children and our beloved brethren. I am happy that there is only one church. I am glad that there can never be another!

Christians in Babylon

Mission Messenger (June 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

Are there any Christians in the religious sects about us? This question occurs with increasing frequency in the letters we receive. It is our intention to face up to such questions regardless of personal consequences. Only by doing so can we live with ourselves and be true to the trust He has imposed upon us. Only by this method can we serve our generation before we fall asleep. Truth must be our chief consideration so I unhesitatingly state that I believe the sheep of God are a scattered flock and that God has a people in Babylon. I am convinced that there are many Christians among the sectarian parties of our day.

Mind you, I do not believe that there are any Christians outside the body of Christ. Every Christian on earth has been added to the church of God. A Christian is one who is in Christ and it is impossible to be in Christ and not be a member of his body. All who have been immersed upon the basis of their faith in Christ Jesus are in Christ. "For you are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."

The children of God are divided. Christians are separated from one another. This is the real tragedy. We should not think it strange that the children of the devil are divided. It would be peculiar if they were united. But it is indeed sad that Christians are not together, seeing that "God is not the author of confusion but of peace.” Our constant aim should be to help bring all of the sons of God into a state of togetherness. We cannot accomplish this by denying that they are sons of God. Neither can we do it by creating another sect more exclusive and intolerant than those in which they are already involved.

It is only when we recognize our brethren and love them as brethren that we can move toward a closer association with each other and a closer walk with God. We cannot unite the family by denying the paternity of those who compose it. This was clearly understood at the outset of the restoration movement of which most of our readers are the heirs. Alexander Campbell described it as “a project to unite the Christians in all of the sects.” We have lived to see the day when the parties resulting from this project, or from abuses of it, regard as “heresy” the mere intimation that there are any Christians in the sects. This is a complete reversal of thought. What has happened?

There is really no easy answer to be given for a number of complex factors have combined to provide the present attitude. We represent about the fifth generation of those who launched the noble experiment. All of us were born into an age when the party spirit had crystallized. We found a well-entrenched organization already on the scene operating under the official title “Church of Christ” or “Christian Church.” That organization grew up almost in self-defense when the early restorationists were driven forth from the sectarian groups which spewed out the leaven of their testimony. At the outset there was no separate group existing under the label “Church of Christ” and had not been for centuries. It was a good many decades before there was such an organization.

Those who are presently members of one of the twenty-five factions denominating themselves “The Church of Christ” are generally good people. They are not inclined by nature to be vindictive or hateful. But they have been conditioned to believe that the particular “Church of Christ” with which they are affiliated is identical with the church of God mentioned in the new covenant scriptures. Since each faction has its own test of fellowship in an unwritten legalistic code or creed it is obvious that one who does not subscribe to it is not a child of God.

The members of “The Church of Christ” have been led to believe that they alone constitute the kingdom of heaven. They are the Israel of God, and all other believers in Christ are deceived and are not believers at all, but unbelievers. These are regarded as being “without hope and without God in the world” and are to be treated as heathen and pagans. It is only fair to say that among the more scholarly party leaders there is probably a revulsion of spirit against such a narrow and illiberal attitude but they dare not express themselves openly. They have contributed to the party spirit, and are now supported by it. It would be suicidal for them to try and breast the current which they have helped to create.

As an indication of how far adrift the restoration movement has gone we need only mention that the suggestion that there are Christians in the sects is now bitterly assailed as “new doctrine.” This expression is the kiss of death to any idea to which it is applied for it is unthinkable to admit that those who have long held the key of knowledge could learn anything else. An infallible interpretation dare admit no error! Yet it is the view that there are no Christians among the sects that is new is doctrine! This is modernism gone to seed! Not one of the early restorationists of note held such an idea. If they had there would have been no restoration movement. The very purpose of the project was to unite Christians and there was no party called “Church of Christ.”

The men who began the restoration movement were in the sects— Methodist and Baptist parties. It is a fair question to ask at what date every Christian on earth deserted every sect and left none remaining where so many had been before? When did every disciple abandon all organizational error so that all who remained were not disciples but impostors? When did the restoration movement become the church of Christ? If we cannot answer these questions it might be challenging to contrast our modernistic viewpoint with that of some of the pioneers. We shall quote these men not to prove that there are Christians in the sects but to show that they thought there were. Thus our position is not new doctrine, but the opposing view is the novel one.

We quote first from the witnesses who signed "The Last Will and Testament of the Springfield Presbytery" on June 28, 1804. These men were Robert Marshall, John Dunlavy, Richard McNemar, Barton W. Stone, John Thompson and David Purviance.

Let all Christians join with us, in crying to God day and night, to remove the obstacles which stand in the way of his work, and give him no rest till he make Jerusalem a praise in all the earth. We heartily unite with our Christian brethren of every name, in thanksgiving to God for the display of his goodness in the glorious work he is carrying on in our western country, which we hope will terminate in the universal spread of the gospel.

We quote next from the "Declaration and Address" which was presented to the members of the Christian Association of Washington, Pennsylvania, in September, 1809, by its author, Thomas Campbell.

Moreover, being aware from sad experience of the heinous nature and pernicious tendency of religious controversy among Christians; tired and sick of the bitter warrings and janglings of a party spirit, we would desire to be at rest; and were it possible, would also desire to adopt and recommend such measures as would give rest to our brethren throughout all the churches— as would restore unity, peace and purity to the whole church of God.

A good many years later, Thomas Campbell identified his “Christian brethren” and proved that he recognized them as existing under various partisan titles.

We speak to all our Christian brethren, however diversified by professional epithets, those accidental distinctions which have unhappily and unscripturally diversified the professing world. By our Christian brethren, then, we mean the very same description of character addressed in our Declaration published at Washington, Pa., in the year 1809— namely, ‘All that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, throughout the churches.’ If there were none such at that time throughout the churches, then Christianity was dead and gone. And if there be none such at present within the same limits, it still continues extinct.

It was Alexander Campbell who definitely stated the goal of the restoration movement. The following appeared in the book “Christianity Restored” which was published at Bethany, Virginia, in 1835.

A deep and an abiding impression that the power, the consolations and joys— the holiness and happiness of Christ’s religion were lost in the forms and ceremonies, in the speculations and conjectures, in the feuds and bickerings of sects and schisms, originated a project many years ago for uniting the sects, or rather the christians in all the sects, upon a clear and scriptural bond of union; upon having a ‘thus saith the Lord,’ either in express terms, or in approved precedent ‘for every article of faith, and item of religious practice.’ This was offered in the year 1809 in the ‘Declaration and Address’ of the Washington Association, Pennsylvania.

In 1862, Benjamin Franklin, who was editor of the American Christian Review stated his position very clearly:

There are individuals among the sects who are not sectarians, or who are more than sectarians— they are Christians; or persons who have believed the gospel, submitted to it, and in spite of the leaders, been constituted Christians according to the Scriptures.

In the very same year, Brother Franklin made the following statement in his paper:

That there are Christians among the sects, a people of God in Babylon, we have believed and admitted, and committed to print many years ago, and we believe the same now. That these have a right to commune, and, enjoy in common with all Christians, all the blessings of the house of the Lord, we presume is not doubted by any brother.

Two years later, in his quarterly for March, 1864, Moses E. Lard while writing on the topic "Have We Become a Sect?" had this to say:

Against the individual members of these parties we cannot have even one unkind feeling. Many of them we regard as true Christians, and love them sincerely. But as they occupy a place in bodies holding traditional and other unsanctioned tenets; holding practices unknown to the Bible, and supporting humanly imposed names, we must tell them plainly that they stand on apostate ground.

Frank G. Allen was editor and proprietor of The Old Path Guide, a monthly journal "devoted to the restoration and defense of primitive Christianity." In his issue of October, 1880, Brother Allen wrote thus:

We are not of those who believe that gruffness and discourtesy to those who differ from us religiously are synonyms for soundness. Inflexible fidelity to truth does not demand this. Nor do we think that anything is gained by magnifying the differences between us and others. The best interests of the cause we love demand that only the real differences shall be presented, not imaginary ones, and these in kindness and love. Our standard of right and wrong is not what the sects do, but what the Bible teaches. Nor have we any sympathy with the reimmersion of Baptist, or any other people, unless their faith was defective when first immersed. With these exceptions those who go forth to ‘baptize Baptists’ are working under a modern commission. The idea that all God’s children are found among those vulgarly called Campbellites is a false conception of our reformatory work, and the teaching of the word of God. It is natural for those holding this position to conclude that our plea for Christian union is not only useless, but senseless.

David Lipscomb, who was editor of the Gospel Advocate, writing in his book Questions Answered, says on page 582:

There are some in sectarian churches who will obey God and follow him in spite of the churches in which they find themselves. As examples, there are persons in the Baptist, Methodist, and Presbyterian churches who are baptized to obey God rather than to please the sects. In this they rise above the party spirit, despite the parties in which they find themselves. They ought to get out of the sectarian churches, but they see so much sectarianism in the nonsectarian churches that they think they are all alike.

Daniel Sommer was editor of the Octographic Review and produced a booklet under the heading Religious Sectism Defined, Analyzed and Exposed. He expressed his sentiments in this language:

What shall we say of those preachers who denounce all persons who happen to hold membership in a sectarian denomination with a sentence of sweeping impeachment, as though they were all under the influence of sectism? We should say that they are probably more sectarian than some whom they denounce. Their manner shows that they are unscripturally exclusive, and this is one of the elements of sectarianism.

It can be seen by the foregoing that I occupy the same position as those other “liberals” and “modernists” of yesteryear — Campbell, Stone, Lard, Franklin, Allen, Lipscomb and Sommer. The charge that this position is a “new doctrine” is absurd and ridiculous. The fact is that “The Church of Christ” has become sectarian by adoption of its present position. It can only contribute to strife and division as long as that position is maintained. Let me make myself clear. I hold that every sincere immersed believer in the Sonship of Jesus is God’s child and my brother. That is true regardless of how much such believers are “diversified by professional epithets.”

To demand that one of God’s children be forced to submit to re-baptism at the hands of one of “our preachers” in order to be in “our fellowship” is sectarianism pure and simple. This is the very essence of the sectarian spirit. Such Church of Christism like all other “isms” is an insult to the person and dignity of the Holy Spirit by whom we “are all baptized into one body.” No one demonstrates loyalty to the Father by refusing to recognize his other children; no one manifests faithfulness to Christ Jesus by denying those whom the Son is not ashamed to call his brethren.

Make no mistake about it! Sectism is sinful. It is a work of the flesh, a symptom of carnality and a sign of spiritual immaturity. It is not hallowed because we practice it, nor purged from evil because we are guilty of it. Sin is no different when those who engage in it sit in a house labeled “Church of Christ” than it is when practiced under any other name. Not every person in a sect is sectarian. Sectarianism is the party spirit. It is an attitude toward truth. It is not so much what a man thinks as how he thinks; it is not so much where he is as why he is there! A man can be wrong on a doctrinal matter and not be sectarian; he can be right on it and be sectarian. He can be in the Methodist Church and not be sectarian; he can be in the “Church of Christ” and be sectarian.

We call upon all men to leave their sectarian spirit as they would flee from any other work of the flesh. We need to hate this garment spotted by the flesh! It is only those who are free from the bondage of sectism who can furnish the leadership to a better and brighter day! It is not “new doctrine” to love and cherish all of God’s children; it is dangerous not to do so.

The Higher Path

Mission Messenger (June 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

“Set your heart on the higher talents. And yet I will go on to show you a still higher path.”

This is the way James Moffatt translates 1 Corinthians 12:31. He does not make Paul speak disparagingly of those abilities which men may possess. They are not discouraged from trying to attain unto higher talents. Indeed, they are encouraged to set their hearts on achieving these. The community of saints needs the ministration of every gifted person. God has not created a body which needs to be satisfied with inferior performance. Mediocrity is not a sign of spirituality.

But the men who possess gifts, and the gifts which men possess, should ever be viewed in a proper frame of reference. There is someone who is greater than the men and there is something which is greater than the gifts. “What do you possess that has not been given you? And if it was given you, why do you boast of it as if it had been gained, not given” (1 Cor. 4:7). Though the man who has the “higher talents” may appear to take “the high road” while others of less ability take “the low road” of Christian service it must always be remembered that the “still higher path” can be trodden by all— gifted and ungifted alike!

The “still higher path” is the path of love. In the days of special dispensations of the Spirit, not all received the gifts. “One man is granted words of wisdom by the Spirit, another words of knowledge by the same Spirit; one man in the same Spirit has the gift of faith, another in the one Spirit has gifts of healing . . .” The limitation in the reception of these gifts is indicated by the language of the writer, “Are all workers of miracles? Are all endowed with the gifts of healing? Are all able to speak in tongues? Are all able to interpret?”

But the gift of love, the first fruit of the indwelling Spirit (Gal. 5:23) can be had by all. It is a universal gift to the saints of God. And it is the only hope of unity. We will not be brought together by gifted men. The congregation at Corinth was divided over them. It is only when our hearts are captured and controlled by love— that fierce and unquenchable passion of desire for the good of all— that we shall be welded together. It is useless to possess the gifts unless we are surrendered to love. He who has “the higher talents” and has not love is nothing. This is the plain statement of the inspired writer. We must love ourselves into togetherness. We will never be able to achieve it by debate, dispute or derision. We can never accomplish it through human wisdom or philosophy!

The attributes of love are the characteristics which alone can usher in a brighter day by creating a united church. We will continue to strive in vain for peace until we learn this lesson. “Love is very patient, very kind. Love knows no jealousy, makes no parade, gives itself no airs, is never rude, never selfish, never irritated, never resentful; love is never glad when others go wrong, love is gladdened by goodness, always slow to expose, always eager to believe the best, always hopeful, always patient.”

We have tried other means and our present state bears mute, but eloquent testimony that any boasted greatness is but hollow mockery. Let us cast ourselves at the feet of Jesus Christ our Lord and confess our error in thinking that we could unite by dividing, or secure peace by force and compulsion. Instead of seeking to expose others, let us expose our hearts in humble contrition, that He may purge away all the dross of hatred and strife. "A broken and a contrite heart he will not despise." We are told to "love one another with a pure heart fervently." Let us begin by purifying our hearts of the party spirit, of the vanity and pride which are born of the sectarian attitude. Free from the spreading contagion of such poison we can be free to love all who love Him "who loved us all and gave himself for us."

We are free to love our brethren; we are not free to not love them!

Many of us have been little, factious, hateful and censorious. We have sought for areas of disagreement. We have fomented trouble and stirred up strife. We have searched the writings of men, not to learn from them, but to find something with which to condemn them. We have searched the writings of God to find something with which to justify ourselves or our party. Let us now invite all who revere His holy name to join with us in searching those sacred oracles to find the "still higher path." If we had always loved the children of God as we have cherished our own opinions we would not have reduced the Christian plea to the sordid spectacle it now exhibits to an unbelieving world.

The "higher path" is one in which we can ignore the sting of personal thrusts and insults. We can walk above the consuming spirit of revenge and recrimination. We will not need to think of "getting even" or of "giving as good as we get" because we will be able to forgive and forget! We can even rejoice when we are persecuted and reviled knowing that this introduces us to the company of the prophets who have gone before. What freedom is brought to the spirit when one knows that he can love all of his brethren, that he can climb over walls and barriers on the wings of affection and not be earth-bound by the chains of partisan prejudice.

Love was a higher path than the special gifts and talents of the Spirit in the days of primitive Christianity. It is still a higher path than the natural gifts and talents of our own day. He who would be more than “a sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal” must learn to speak in the tones of love, for without these the tongues of men and of angels are reduced to empty clatter. Regardless of how great and mighty our talents may seem, let us pray, “Lord, plant my feet on higher ground.”

Analysis of Heresy

Mission Messenger (July 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

The thoughts of God and the ways of God are not the same as the thoughts and ways of men. He says, "For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways and my thoughts than your thoughts." The human mind is not capable of arriving at divine thought merely by reason or logic. "For who has known the mind of the Lord so as to instruct him?" There are some things which had to be made known by revelation or mankind would always have remained ignorant of them. We can learn many things by our senses of sight and hearing and by acting upon the knowledge thus gained we can form mental concepts. What we need to know and cannot thus learn God has given by revelation. The apostle writes, "What no eye has seen, nor ear heard, nor the heart of man conceived . . . God has revealed to us through the Spirit."

Intelligent creatures communicate with each other by means of language. Any revelation to man must be given in this fashion if it is to be understood. That which cannot be understood is not a revelation but a mystery. Language is composed of words which may be delivered orally or in writing. The Holy Spirit had to employ words to convey the thoughts of God to the minds of men. To this the sacred writer bears witness. "Now we have received not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is from God, that we might understand the gifts bestowed on us by God. And we impart this in words not taught by human wisdom but taught by the Spirit.”

A word is a symbol of an idea or thought. It employs a certain combination of sounds or of written characters which are intended, when heard or seen, to convey to the mind of the one whose senses are thus exercised the idea which is in the mind of the speaker or writer. The communication of thought is always a difficult process. To transmit an exact image from one mind to another is not easy. Words come to mean different things to different persons. All of us are creatures of environment and training and our use of language is affected by these factors.

The problem of our understanding is even greater when the message was delivered twenty centuries ago and in a tongue alien to our own. For one thing it is not always easy to find an exact equivalent to a word in another language. We must also realize that words are not static. They alter in meaning with the passage of time. Words are like the persons who use them—they possess both a body and soul. The body of a word is its form as seen or heard. It is composed of sounds or characters as the fleshly body is of muscle and tissue. The soul of a word like the soul of a man is invisible. It is the mental image that is formed when the word is used. The image grows or recedes as the meaning attached to a word expands or contracts through the march of time.

If we would understand the revelation of God we must not only know the words used by the Holy Spirit but we must also know the significance attached to each one of them. One might be able to repeat every word of the sacred oracles and not understand the message of God at all. It is not enough to know what an English word means now when it is used to translate what was written in Greek by the apostles. A twentieth century dictionary is not an adequate guide to the meaning of the Holy Spirit. We are indeed fortunate that men have devoted their lives to translating the sacred scriptures. “Other men have labored and ye have entered into their labors.” But we still have the personal responsibility of determining what idea God intended to convey by the words selected. Translation is one thing and interpretation a wholly different thing.

The importance of this cannot be too greatly stressed. If we do not know what God meant by what He said we will not have the thoughts of God at all. In such an event the scriptures are not a revelation but an orderly arrangement of words and phrases. The fact is that the sacred volume becomes a revelation to each of us only as we understand what God is saying. Without this we have the form of words but the soul has fled. The Book will then be to us a dead letter for “the body without the spirit is dead.”

While this is sad enough there is an even more dangerous aspect which grows out of lack of understanding the message of the Spirit. One may form a wrong concept of a word and do so in all sincerity. If he passes this on to others as the meaning intended by the Spirit he misleads his hearers. This is always regrettable but not always equally serious. None of us has a perfect knowledge of either the mind or language of the Spirit. All of us must constantly amend our thinking as we learn additional things from the word of God. Words are like coins in that they do not all have the same value. We do not like to lose any money but we would rather lose a penny than a dollar. In our teaching we may pass along a thought which does not do justice to a word or actually distorts its meaning and still we may do little harm. But in other instances the word under consideration may be vital to our relationship unto God. A mistaken view of such a word may do a great deal of harm to the whole system of revealed religion. Until such a mistake is corrected it may be impossible to recapture for our generation the idea of God as expressed in his revelation.

It is my intention to discuss such a word in this article. I realize that some are not interested in a study of this nature.

They will even quote, “Charge them before the Lord to avoid disputing about words, which does no good, but only ruins the hearers.” There is a difference between studying words to determine their true meaning and disputing about words. It is not our intention to engage in strife or empty argument. We propose to make an unbiased investigation of the language of the Holy Spirit to determine the thought of God on a vital subject. This will not ruin the hearers. It may save the church in our generation from perpetuating an error that has proved to be tragic and destructive.

Justice demands that we say that the readers of this journal who are indifferent about such matters constitute a very small minority. The majority are eager students, anxious for truth and willing to make a sacrifice of time and effort to secure it. The quality of the readership has steadily increased. Bitter partisans have weeded themselves out for it is characteristic of the party spirit that it cannot long endure that which does not conform to the party position. The result has been to provide a select group who constitute a sort of fellowship of the concerned ones and who have a genuine longing to know the will of God. We are grateful for such a forum and realize a deep sense of responsibility toward God and those who read the things we write.

Our present readers represent many facets of religious belief. They belong to various Protestant sects. However, most of them are affiliated with some branch growing out of the Restoration Movement launched in the early part of the nineteenth century by Thomas and Alexander Campbell and their co-laborers. If our writings seem especially slanted in the direction of these it is not because our regard for them is greater than for other earnest students but simply because there are more of them who read this particular journal. We trust that while we deal with some of the problems confronting the heirs of the Restoration Movement we may say something which will be of interest to others also.

The immediate question before us concerns the meaning of “heresy.” I consider this one of the most important studies we have ever made. It is not an exaggeration to say that the hope of answering the prayer of Jesus for the unity of all believers may actually hinge upon our arriving at a correct understanding of the term. Certainly we must receive all whom God receives and reject all whom God rejects. We can only know whom He receives or rejects by what He has revealed. “Wherefore receive ye one another, as Christ also received us to the glory of God” (Romans 15:17). Christ does not receive us because we have perfect knowledge or agree with each other on everything. It is distinctly said that he receives us in spite of our differences. “Let not him that eateth despise him that eateth not; and let not him which eateth not judge him that eateth; for God hath received him” (Romans 14:3).

If we are to receive one another on the same basis that Christ receives us we cannot make an opinion a test of fellowship. We must receive each other regardless of opinions held. “As for the man who is weak in faith, welcome him, but not for disputes over opinions” (Rom. 14:1). But are we not told to reject heretics? Indeed we are! “A man that is an heretic after the first and second admonition reject” (Titus 3:9). Is not a heretic one who holds an opinion at variance with our views? This is the definition generally given but if it is true we can never reconcile the scriptures. It will be impossible to receive one upon whose opinions we are not to sit in judgment, and at the same time reject him as a heretic for holding certain opinions.

The scripture which tells us to welcome a man regardless of opinion is quite plain. In the context the apostle even gives us examples of how men may differ in opinion and still be received of God. The apparent contradiction must lie in the definition of the word “heretic.” What does it take to make one a heretic? On what ground can a man be rejected as such? We regret that any thorough examination of words must be somewhat technical. It is not possible to write upon such a theme in light popular fashion. In our research we shall be as simple and plain as possible. Our purpose is not to confuse but to explain. Yet there has to be in the heart of the reader a desire to learn. We believe that most of our readers are eager to know the truth and that they will study what we write. We trust that what we say will not be boresome nor tiring.

The restoration brotherhood has been splintered and shivered into fragments. There are some two dozen factions now existing. Each of these claims to be the one and only holy, catholic and apostolic church of God upon the earth. All of these have resulted from an attempt to purify the church by withdrawing from “heretics.” These brethren are sincere. They all feel that they are contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. It is strange indeed that they have not paused to examine their own thinking. The command to reject heretics was evidently given to keep the church intact, but its attempted enforcement has divided the church into rival parties. That which was given for protection has proven to be destructive beyond description. Surely there is something wrong in our definition of heresy.

What is heresy as it is today regarded by these various “Churches of Christ”? The answer is that it is any view or opinion which differs with the position of the party. A man must either conform in every respect to the partisan thinking or he is branded as a heretic and rejected. Thus “heresy” differs with each party.

What is “heresy” in one “Church of Christ” is regarded as “sound doctrine” in another. Let us illustrate. One party holds that Bible classes in which to teach the word of God constitute a departure from “the apostolic pattern.” Any person in their number who verbally disagrees is judged guilty of “heresy” and rejected. In the same town there will be a party which holds that Bible classes are justified by the scriptures. To oppose that position is “heresy.” When these debate with each other as they often do, the discussion is not between brethren who receive each other but between “heretics” who mutually reject each other.

In one group it is heresy to advocate individual cups, in another it is heresy to contend for one container; in one it is heresy to suggest breaking the loaf before passing it, in another it is heresy to suggest passing it without first breaking it. Depending upon the segment under consideration advocacy of instrumental music, colleges, the pastor system, orphan homes, national television programs, classes, cups, literature, fermented wine, unfermented grape juice, leavened bread, and a host of other things, is regarded as heresy.

The brethren stigmatize each other as sectarians or hobbyists, and reject each other as heretics. In “Church of Christ” usage a sectarian is one who has what we oppose and a hobbyist is one who opposes what we have. If we oppose instrumental music, those who have it are sectarians; if we have Bible classes, those who oppose them are hobbyists. If we oppose a missionary society, those who have one are sectarians; if we have individual cups, those who oppose them are hobbyists. No two parties regard the same people as sectarian and no two regard the same people as hobbyists. Those who are sectarian to the one extreme are hobbyists to the other. Yet each of these two dozen factions is “the only faithful church” in its own sight and its adherents are “the loyal brethren.” To this deplorable state have we come by reason of our thinking and the condition will continue to grow worse until our thinking has been changed.

We cannot think that the serious brethren in any of these factions can be satisfied with conditions as they are. It is obvious that no one faction will win the adherents of all other factions to its position. Instead the history of our movement leads us to expect only more division and disunity so long as we continue on our present course. Already the most divided religious movement on the American scene, “The Church of Christ” will eventually become so fractured and fragmented that its shame and disgrace will reflect against it in every community where it is known. What has happened to this great effort which was launched for the express purpose of uniting the Christians in all sects?

Those who compose “The Church of Christ” are not vicious or mean. They are generally good people and sincere in their religious efforts. But they have misunderstood some of the vital teaching of the Spirit and have constructed unwritten creeds which they seek to bind upon others with the dire results we can observe. No greater error afflicts them than their mistaken view of heresy. So long as they retain it they will drive from themselves every independent thinker, impose rigid conformity as the desire of heaven, and continue to splinter and fracture themselves into rival and warring camps. That we may pinpoint the problem created by their grave error we wish to make some statements relative to heresy which can be proved and defended. Startling as some of these statements may appear we have no hesitancy in affirming that they are true.

1. As the Holy Spirit uses the term, heresy does not refer to any opinion whether true or false. A man might hold any opinion regardless of how wrong it is and might even express that opinion to others and still not be a heretic.

2. Heresy has no relation to doctrine. It is not something preached or taught and is never employed in direct connection with any word translated “preaching” or “teaching.”

3. A man may be a heretic even though what he teaches is in perfect harmony with the word of God, for heresy does not relate to that which is taught, but to the motive and attitude of the one who teaches.

4. The definition of heresy as now exemplified by the various groups designated “The Church of Christ” is not that of the new covenant scriptures. It has been borrowed from Rome where it was developed to enable an apostate church to enforce her dogmas under penalty of physical death.

5. In the scriptural sense those who are most frequently rejected in these days as heretics are not such at all, but the term can be justly applied to those who reject them.

What is the special implication of these things to the divided disciple brotherhood? It is this. No one is a heretic because he believes instrumental music or missionary societies are justifiable. No one is a heretic because he believes in colleges or orphan homes. No one is a heretic because he believes in the premillennial coming of our Lord. No one is a heretic because he believes in Bible classes, individual cups, or uninspired literature. These things may be right or they may be wrong. We are not dealing with whether they are justified or not. We merely say that one who believes in any of them is not a heretic and his statement of such belief is not heresy. This is not even a consideration of whether he who believes in one or more of these things should be rejected or not. It is a simple declaration that if one is rejected on the basis of such belief it must be upon some other ground than that of heresy.

A man might be guilty of error and indicted on a false charge. In civil courts such a case is thrown out. We are not sitting in judgment now to assess the right or wrong involved in belief of the use of instrumental music or societies nor to determine whether the pre-millennial interpretation is sustained by the sacred scriptures. We merely affirm that those who defend their views of these things are not heretics because of doing so, and to charge them with heresy on that account is to make a false accusation against brethren. Mind you, those who believe in these things may be led into heresy because of them, and those who oppose them may be led into heresy by their opposition. But neither advocating nor opposing them is heresy, therefore no man can be rejected as a heretic on either ground.

It will now be seen that one of the most important tasks confronting the restoration brotherhood is to determine the meaning of heresy. If what we have said thus far proves to be true it is obvious that hundreds of good brethren have been driven forth as heretics who were not such at all. Many divisions have been caused by branding certain things as heresy which were not at all in that class. One of the symptoms of the perilous times to come in the last days is that men will become false accusers (2 Timothy 3:3). Against this crime even the aged women are warned (Titus 2:3). What is not generally recognized is that the word translated accuser is diabolos, and that is the word for Devil. In Revelation 12, where we have a description of the war in heaven it is said, "The great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil." John then heard a loud voice saying in heaven, "Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night."

To falsely accuse our brethren does not merely place us on the side of the devil. It makes the one who does it a personal diabolos, a devil. I must freely confess that I have been guilty of this sin in the past. I have accused brethren of heresy who were not heretics. I was honest when I did so, but I was wrong. I was ignorant of the meaning of heresy and in my zeal for the purity of the church of God I became rash and intemperate in my accusation of others. I am sorry and ashamed of such speech and conduct. Prompted by love for all of my brethren I pray that I may live long enough to undo some of the harm caused by the arrogance born of ignorance. To this end I entreat all of our readers to pray for me.

The word "heresy" is merely the Anglicized form of the Greek hairesis. Basically it means "choice, option." It is used nine times in the new covenant scriptures. In the King James Version it is rendered "heresy" four times and "sect" five times. It is applied to the Sadducees in Acts 5:17, "Then the high priest rose up, and all they that were with him (which is the sect of the Sadducees), and were filled with indignation.” It is applied to the Pharisees in Acts 15:5, “But there rose up certain of the sect of the Pharisees which believed . . .” Paul declares that “after the most straitest sect of our religion I lived a Pharisee” (Acts 26:5). The Pharisees and Sadducees each constituted a sect or heresy among the Jews. That which made them a heresy was not what they believed or taught, but the fact that each constituted a party or sect.

There is nothing inherently sinful in the word “heresy.” A choice or election is not wrong of itself. Originally no bad significance was attached to the term. Jesus did not once during his earthly sojourn condemn the Jews because they were Pharisees, Sadducees, or Essenes. Judaism always provided leeway for varied opinions or interpretations. Instead of condemning what the Pharisees taught, our Lord said, “The scribes and Pharisees sit in Moses’ seat: all therefore whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do, but do not ye after their works: for they say and do not.”

It should be remembered that in spite of their differences the various sects of the Jews did not set up rival places of worship. They all worshipped at the same temple, offered the same sacrifices, respected the same priesthood and observed the same ritual. Frequently both Sadducees and Pharisees would be numbered among the priests. There was no apparent attempt to drive each other out of Judaism and all seemed to respect the right of others to differ. Dr. Edersheim in his book “Sketches of Jewish Social Life in the Days of Christ” says: “The course of our investigations has shown that neither Pharisees nor Sadducees were a sect, in the sense of separating from Temple or Synagogue; and also that the Jewish people as such were not divided between Pharisees and Sadducees.”

Dr. George Campbell in his “Preliminary Dissertations on the Gospels” says of heresy, “The word was not, in its earliest application, conceived to convey any reproach in it, since it was indifferently used either of a party approved, or of one disapproved, by the writer.” Alexander Campbell in “The Christian System” writes thus: “As the word sect or heresy found only in the Acts of the Apostles and Epistles, does always in the former simply mean a party without any regard to its tenets, the term has nothing in it either reproachful or honorable, nothing virtuous or vicious.”

If the word had always been translated sect as it should have been there would be less confusion about it in these days. Certainly many who have been charged with heresy would not have been so accused. The inconsistency of the translators is seen in one specific case which should be apparent to all. When representatives of the Sanhedrin went to Caesarea to indict Paul before Antonius Felix in the Praetorium, their case was presented by a lawyer, Tertullus. He charged Paul with being a trouble-maker, a seditionist, and “a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes” (Acts 24:5). The word for sect is hairesis. In his reply Paul says, “But this I confess unto thee that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers” (verse 14).

Of this passage, Alexander Campbell says: “It is only once rendered heresy in the Acts, and in that place it ought most obviously to have been sect. Paul had been accused by Tertullus with the crime of being a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes. Now, in vindicating himself from any censure in this case he ought to have met the charge under the same title. This he did in the original, for in verse 5th, in the indictment, and in verse 14th, in his defense, we have the same word hairesis. How injudicious, then, was it on the part of our translators and the Vulgate to make Tertullus accuse Paul of a sect, and to make Paul defend himself of a heresy, when both Tertullus and Paul used the same word in their speeches as reported by Luke in the original!” We shall not burden the reader with the remainder of Campbell’s treatment of this passage as it can be read in full in his book The Christian System.

Heresy is not spoken of in a bad sense in either of the four gospel records or in the book of Acts. It is never spoken of in a good sense in the epistles. Why the difference? The answer is that the church of our Lord is to be “essentially and constitutionally one.” It is a community which is to maintain unity. Division is destructive of its nature, detrimental to its purpose and harmful to its functioning. A sect created within it contributes to its weakness and corrupts it. Thus heresy is rebellion against the will of the King. It is treason, for it betrays the divine purpose and encourages rivalry among those who should strive together and not against each other.

Is not all division caused by introducing new doctrine? Does it not all stem from innovation? The answer is in the negative. Many cleavages have been caused by men who without scriptural warrant enact laws where God has made none. Dogmatism is the root of a great deal of our trouble. The demand for conformity in matters of opinion is a fruitful source of heresy. No opinion ever divided a community of saints when held or stated as an opinion. But unwarranted demand that one renounce an opinion and subject himself to tyrannical thought control has shivered and split many congregations.

No opinion constitutes heresy for heresy is the “party spirit” as hairesis is translated in Galatians 5:20 in the Revised Standard Version. A man can be wrong in a matter of doctrine and not have the party spirit; he can be right doctrinally and be guilty of the party spirit. Thus one can be correct in doctrinal matters and be a heretic. A heretic is not one who holds an unorthodox position, but is a factious man. For this reason the Revised Standard Version rendering of Titus 3:10 reads: “As for a man who is factious, after admonishing him once or twice, have nothing more to do with him.” No one is quite so factious as the man who thinks he knows all that can be known and who demands that everyone else give in to his views as the price of peace. Some of the most contentious people I know brand all who differ with them as heretics, while those whom they label as heretics may be mild, gentle and easy to be entreated.

Young's Literal Translation renders Titus 3:10, "A sectarian man after a first and second admonition be rejecting." A sectarian man is one who devises partisan tests and separates from his brethren or drives them out if they do not concur with his views. Any person who makes a test of fellowship out of anything which God has not made a condition of salvation, and who holds himself aloof from his brethren on that basis is a sectarian man. He is a heretic. He regards his party as the church of God on earth and his attitude is divisive and factious. Edgar J. Goodspeed translates the passage: "If a man is inclined to a sect, after warning him once or twice, have nothing to do with him."

I was reared in one segment of the Restoration movement. I was brought up to believe that it constituted the church of Christ on earth and that no one in the world was in Christ except those who were in this party. It was the "loyal church" and no one outside of it could be a Christian. We used to argue whether we should even use the word "brother" when addressing a member of another splinter group. If someone dissented from the party platform or partisan position he was indicted under a general charge of heresy, and under this we spelled out the specific "heresies" of which we thought he was guilty. In every instance these amounted to expressing views contrary to our accepted party creed.

If one said he could see no harm in instrumental music, missionary societies, colleges, the pastor system, charitable institutions, etc., we immediately placed him under grave suspicion, and went to work upon him at once to get him to recant his sin. It made no difference if he said that he intended no harm and would not create division. He could not believe such things and remain among us. He had to renounce his false doctrine and "line up with the truth." When one insisted on doing his own thinking and would not bow to our party ultimatums he was accused of heresy, admonished twice, then excluded to be regarded “as a heathen man and a publican.”

Having learned the meaning of heresy and having grown in knowledge I now realize that it was my attitude which was factious. I was the real heretic in such cases as I have mentioned. To a great extent this has been true of all of us. We have been brought up in, or brought into, a partisan “fellowship” in which “the brotherhood” consists only of those who conform to our views. We confuse brotherhood with conformity and fellowship with endorsement. Unwittingly, all of us who do this have become heretics. We are motivated by the party spirit and this is heresy. Every faction among us is a miniature sect, a heresy in embryo if not in fact. I have repented of my heretical attitude. I am no longer a defender of any party nor the champion of any faction. In such a state of freedom I am at liberty to love all of my brethren in all of their factions and not be circumscribed in affection by party lines drawn by men.

Actually we are the victims of Roman Catholic propaganda. It was the pope who convinced the world that heresy consisted of “an opinion maintained with obstinacy against the doctrine of the church.” It was not until the fifth century that this came to be the accepted meaning of the word. Rome made it so that she might beat, flay, strangle, burn or behead dissenters. Those who were killed by Rome were not heretics. Those who killed them were. We borrowed a page from the book of the mother of all sects, for the sectarian or party spirit is the same in essence wherever it is found.

The church has no doctrine. It has no official teaching. The doctrine of our Lord has been given through the holy apostles and those who are members of His body seek to continue in it. But the church is composed of men and women. They are fallible. They have no infallible interpreter or interpretation. For this reason the members of the body must be tolerant, longsuffering and patient with each other. They must be forbearing toward one another in love. As they read and study the sacred oracles they may arrive at different conclusions. If these are not grave enough to sever them from God they should not be serious enough to separate them from each other. No man who honestly and sincerely believes that God teaches a thing is a heretic. He may be mistaken and suffer from grievous error in reasoning, but he is not a heretic. A heretic is not one who pleads for unity, but one who is factious, contentious and divisive.

Commenting on Titus 3:10, Albert Barnes says of the term heretic, “The true notion of the word is that of one who is a promoter of a sect or party. The man who makes divisions in a church, instead of aiming to promote unity, is the one who is intended. Such a man may form sects and parties on some points of doctrine on which he differs from others, or on some custom, religious rite, or peculiar practice; he may make some unimportant matter a ground of distinction from his brethren, and may refuse to have fellowship with them, and endeavor to get up a new organization. Such a man, according to Scripture usage, is a heretic, and not merely one who holds a different doctrine from that which is regarded as orthodoxy.”

There are many among us who are like I once was. They have a zeal but not according to knowledge. In their attempt to keep the church pure they brand all who differ with them as heretics. In doing this they reveal that they are themselves heretical. The concluding statement of Dr. George Campbell in his Dissertation on Heresy should produce serious thought. He says:

I shall conclude with adding to the observations on the words schism and heresy, that how much soever of a schismatical or heretical spirit, in the apostolic sense of the terms, may have contributed to the formation of the different sects into which the Christian world is at present divided, no person who, in the spirit of candor and charity, adheres to that which, to the best of his judgment is right, though in his opinion he should be mistaken, is in the scriptural sense either schismatic or heretic; and that he, on the contrary, whatever sect he belong to, is more entitled to these odious appellations, who is most apt to throw the imputation upon others. Both terms, for they denote only different degrees of the same bad quality, always indicate a disposition and practice unfriendly to peace, harmony, and love.

This is our own conclusion and is expressive of our personal sentiment arrived at through intensive and painstaking research in the term “heresy” so we adopt the closing statement of Dr. Campbell as the closing statement of our analysis.

Are They Apostates?

Mission Messenger (July 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

One of the fruits of the party spirit is the development of a special vocabulary consisting of what may be called “loaded terms.” Generally the words employed are found in the sacred scriptures but they are given a significance never intended by the Holy Spirit. Frequently these expressions are used to prejudice the partisan followers against dissenters and non-conformists and make sure that “the loyal members” will not give them a hearing. Such words become a part of the mechanism to keep the members “in line” and discourage any attempt upon their part at original thinking.

As an example of what we mean we cite the word “apostasy.” The Anglicized form of the Greek apostasia does not occur in the King James Version. It is found twice in the original. In Acts 21:21 it is translated “to forsake” and in 2 Thessalonians 2:3 it is rendered “a falling away.” The term originally had a political overtone and appears in the papyri as a designation of those who rebel against the government or plot its overthrow. It carries with it the idea of defection from the existing order based upon revolt against it.

It is our opinion that it conveys the same implication in the sacred scriptures. In Acts 21:21 the elders of the congregation in Jerusalem inform Paul of rumors circulated concerning his teaching. It is pointed out that thousands of Jews believe but they are all zealous of the law. They have been told that the apostle is teaching Jews of the Dispersion to forsake Moses, that is, to fall away from him, or apostatize. Note the means by which it was alleged this was being done. It was by “saying they ought not to circumcise their children, neither to walk after the customs.” Since circumcision was the seal of covenant relationship and that relationship bound upon the Jew the necessity of keeping the law (verse 24) it is evident that “forsaking Moses” would constitute outright rebellion.

But the Jews never did regard differences of opinion or interpretation as “apostasy.” Judaism was very tolerant in the days of Jesus and the apostles. Even a twelve year old lad could sit in among the rabbis “both hearing them, and asking them questions” (Luke 2:46). Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essenes all worshiped at the same temple. The disputes between the two principal schools, Hillel and Shammai, did not lead to one driving the other out. It was one thing to forsake the law, a wholly different thing to discuss the implications of its language.

In 2 Thessalonians 2:3, the falling away (apostasy) will be characterized by open revolt. The man of sin will oppose God and exalt himself above God. He will usurp the temple of God and proclaim himself to be Deity. His coming is after the power of Satan and he will use fake miracles, deceitful signs and lying wonders. Thus the apostasy is rooted in rebellion and will result in the elevation of “the mystery of iniquity.” Those who are involved in it have not “received the love of the truth that they might be saved.”

Today the charge of “apostasy” is hurled against every person who cannot subscribe to the partisan tests of fellowship created by various factions growing out of the restoration movement launched in the early years of the preceding century. Since each of these parties has a different criterion of “loyalty” a person who is an “apostate” to one group is “faithful and sound” in the eyes of another. The word “apostate” is a reproachful epithet used as a brand or stigma for every person who does not wholly agree with “the powers that be.” Every man who thinks for himself is guilty of apostasy in the current party vocabulary.

Those who contend for one container to be used in passing “the fruit of the vine” in the Lord’s Supper regard those who use individual cups as apostates. Those who oppose Bible classes regard those who have them as apostates. An apostate may be one who endorses colleges or opposes them, one who indorses instrumental music or opposes it, depending upon what faction he is allied with at the time of such endorsement or opposition. It makes no difference how sincere one may be in his expression of conviction. If he is “not lined up with the faithful brethren” he is an apostate.

We believe that such use of language is unworthy of God’s children, detrimental to the cause we profess to love, and inimical to the welfare of the church of God. It is indicative of a desire to place others of the saints in the worst possible light. It is unfair, uncharitable and unscriptural. Not every person who differs with us on some point of controversy has apostatized. No person who is in Christ Jesus, who loves the Lord and seeks to do his will out of a pure fervent heart is an apostate. To call him such a name is to reveal not only a sad lack of love but a considerable degree of ignorance.

Apostasy is a falling away from the faith, a deliberate revolt against Jesus and his authority. Unfortunately such expressions as “the faith” are also loaded terms in these days. “The faith” not infrequently means the traditional interpretations placed upon the new covenant scriptures. “The faith” is that unwritten body of opinions in each party bound as a law upon the members and constituting the test of “loyalty.” Since each party has an “infallible interpretation” the slightest deviation from this creed is looked upon as rebellion against Jesus and the one who can no longer condone the narrow and intolerant spirit is assailed by his accusers with, “The Spirit speakeeth expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith.”

We do not doubt that many will depart from the faith, but we do doubt that the Holy Spirit meant by “the faith” an opinion related to cups, classes, or colleges, or any of the host of other things which loom so great on our partisan horizons in these days. The symptoms of those who do depart are specified as “giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of demons, speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their conscience seared with a hot iron.” Not every person who reads a passage and comes up with a different viewpoint than ours is heeding seducing spirits or under the influence of demons. There is not a congregation in this land where every member interprets every passage alike, but that is not attributable to demon influence. To accuse men of “departing from the faith” just because they do not concur with us on how to break the loaf, whether to use fermented or unfermented wine, or whether to have Bible classes or not, demonstrates that he who makes the accusation certainly does not know what the faith is and is quite ignorant of what constitutes apostasy.

Then how shall we label those who differ from us? Why label them at all? Is not the attitude which encourages such labeling sectarian in nature? Do we not brand men as “liberals,” “conservatives” and “antis” to include or exclude them from our number? Is that not the essence of the party spirit? Are we not all liberal in some things and conservative in others? Are we not opposed to some things, and if so, are we not “antis” with regard to those things? If God’s children are our brothers why not call them brethren? Those in Corinth who were at such odds they were suing each other in heathen courts were not given special distinction by the apostle. He simply said, “brother goeth to law with brother.”

If asked how I regard those who oppose Bible classes my reply is that I regard them as my brothers. If asked how I regard those who favor instrumental music in their corporate worship my reply is that I regard them as my brothers. I have no half-brothers or step-brothers in the Lord. The fact I do not agree with them does not make them apostates. If it did, every other person in the church would be an apostate in my view, for I do not agree with any person I ever met upon every point of interpretation. My ideas today on many points differ from my ideas of twenty years ago. I have learned a few things by study of the Word but I am not a self-made apostate because I disagree with my former views. I trust that I am maturing spiritually.

I do not think that the Holy Spirit in using the word apostasia meant to imply or inaugurate something that would make God's family disintegrate into warring segments with each group blasting away at the others as "apostates." It seems to me that it is about time that some of God's children grew up. While they are accusing others of falling away from the faith they are in danger of falling out of their spiritual cribs.

Are We a Denomination?

Mission Messenger (July 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

Is “The Church of Christ” a denomination? Many of its members vigorously deny that it is. Its preachers publicly affirm that it is not. Its advertisements appearing in the newspapers among those of other religious organizations boldly assert that it is non-sectarian and undenominational. Those who are unbiased in facing the facts know that these claims cannot be sustained. “The Church of Christ” as it exists today is a denomination in the same sense as The Baptist Church, The Methodist Church, or The Presbyterian Church, and for the same reason. Although this statement may appear treasonable we simply request our brethren to think honestly and sincerely about the matter. The answer is inevitable.

We need to distinguish between the words “sectarian” and “denomination.” They are too often used interchangeably or as synonyms. But there is a difference. “Sectism” is a demonstration of the party spirit. It is “heresy” as the Holy Spirit uses that term. It is manifested in an attitude toward other believers that is factional and divisive. But the word “denomination” is from the Latin nominare, to call by a name, coupled with the prefix de. It refers to a specific designation, to the act of naming. In the religious sense a denomination is a group or society having a specific name or title. The word has nothing to do with the nature of the doctrine adopted and advocated by such a society. A group might teach nothing but the truth and still be a denomination. If they had a specific title by which they called themselves as a means of distinction from others they would be a denomination. The primitive ekklesia of saints had no official title for a very good reason. No proper name was ever assigned to the disciples in a corporate sense. They were the “called out ones” by faith in the Nazarene. They were the believers while those who rejected the testimony of his Sonship were “unbelievers.” With the possible exception of the schismatics at Corinth it had not yet occurred to them to splinter, separate and segregate the believers from one another.

From the standpoint of ownership the believers constituted the church of God (1 Cor. 1:2; 10:32; 11:22; 15:9; Gal. 1:13, etc.); from that of constituency the churches of the saints (1 Cor. 14:33); from that of heirship the church of the first-born ones whose names are enrolled in heaven (Heb. 12:23). As to divine relationship they were the church of God in Christ Jesus (1 Thess. 2:14); as to headship or rule the churches of Christ (Rom. 16:16). In the matter of government they were the kingdom of heaven, the kingdom of God, the kingdom of the Son of man, or the kingdom of God’s beloved Son. In unity and organization they composed the body of Christ.

These designations bestowed upon God’s people were never intended to be official and exclusive titles. They were merely common nouns used as descriptive of some phase or feature of the relationship sustained to God and each other. To fasten upon one of these and make it the specific name of the church and declare it is “the scriptural name” when the scriptures use them all, is to sectarianize that designation and denominate the church.

It is a common practice for partisan speakers to use as a topic, “What Name Shall The Church Wear?” These brethren blithely ignore all the terms used by the Spirit and seize upon an expression not found in the scriptures. They arbitrarily and dogmatically seek to bind this upon disciples of the Lord as an exclusive title which must be worn to be “faithful.” Such speakers prove themselves to be sectarian. The expression “The Church of Christ” is not in the oracles of God in that form at all. Any group which so denominates itself, employing this as its title or specific name, is a denomination in the fair sense of that word, notwithstanding all the anguished protests to the contrary.

It is impossible to avoid the charge that the party with which we are allied is a denomination so long as it is denominated. All the childish denials cannot offset the fact that so long as men deliver talks intended to denominate the church they are contending for denominational status. To denominate is to name and if the body of believers who call themselves “The Church of Christ” insist on that as a title they are a denomination by their own admission. They use that expression exactly as other sects use “Church of God” or “Churches of God in Christ.” Both of these are found in the scriptures; both have been lifted and appropriated as party titles.

The primitive ekklesia of God was neither a denomination nor a sect. It had no official title. Jesus planted no religious party on earth called “The Church of Christ.” The saints in a corporate sense were described by the apostles according to the relationship under consideration at the time. There was only one church then, there is only one now. There never has been more than one church, there never can be another. A distinctive title is superfluous and sectarian in tendency. There is nothing in the category of the ekklesia from which it needs to be distinguished. It is simply the church and is composed of all the saved on earth without a single exception!

So long as members of “The Church of Christ” claim they are not a denomination they will continue to be one. It is only when they are willing to admit that as they now exist they constitute a denomination that they will take the necessary steps to correct their status. It is gratifying to the spirit to note that some are beginning to do so although often hindered by those who cling for security to a party name. In order to be truly non-denominational the believers must renounce all official titles and specific designations used in an exclusive sense. They must become once again just the church the ekklesia— the called out!

This will not be easy to achieve in an age filled with sects and parties. But we will accomplish no real good in our generation toward restoring the primitive order by merely maintaining another sect or party. We will only augment the problem and add to the confusion. However, we must not conclude that all of the members of “The Church of Christ” want to be non-denominational. A majority of them do not. Like any other persons reared in a factional environment they will place their trust and hope in a “church name.” It will be a long dreary struggle before our brethren are won back from the sectarian spirit which grips their hearts.

It is amazing to what lengths men will go in order to maintain a divisive exclusiveness. Near where I reside there is a meetinghouse owned by certain brethren. On their sign in front are the words “Church of Christ” and underneath in parentheses the additional term “Christian.” They thus reveal that they are doubly denominational, and sectarian as well. Not only have they adopted a title to distinguish themselves from other disciples of the Master, but they have added a subtitle to distinguish themselves from other members bearing the same denomination. This would be amusing if it were not a grave symptom of that party spirit which is a work of the flesh. That makes it serious indeed!

By what practical means can we conquer the denominational trend? First, we must purge our hearts from the attitude which has given rise to it. To be undenominational in practice we must first become so in thought. We must cease to regard any faction, segment or party as the church. We must think of ourselves as being Christians only and not regard ourselves as the only Christians. We must cultivate a love for all of God's children which will leave no desire to be distinguished from them. Then we must set about creating an atmosphere of spirituality in which all of them will feel welcome.

This means we will set the Lord's table as a feast in which every Christian, every immersed believer, may freely participate with us. We will regard all such who come among us as a part of the church of God even though in the past they have, by virtue of birth, training and environment, grown up in another segment of the believers. This does not imply nor necessitate any compromise of convictions. It only requires a recognition of brotherhood based upon common parenthood. When we have occasion to speak of ourselves as a group we should employ such scriptural language as describes the particular relationship at the time. We should practice using a variety of terms as did the apostles in their writings.

Let us not feel that our task will be easy. The spirit of sectarianism is deeply entrenched in the hearts of our brethren. Satan will not quickly release his hold upon our minds. So long as he can make of us just another denomination among others, he will effectively reduce the impact of our plea. We need to pray very earnestly for each other, and to strengthen each other in our resolution to be children worthy of the Father who sent His Son to die for us all. And we need to have that courage born of faith which will not allow our consciences to be at ease until we have won the victory for truth and righteousness. Please pray for us!

The Greatest of These

Mission Messenger (July 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

Many years before Jesus was born the Romans had a motto, “Love conquers all.” The motto was correct but the type of love possessed by the pagan world was inadequate. No mere affection could overcome everything because emotions are always variable and affected by external circumstances. It was only when the agape (love) of God was demonstrated in the sacrifice of Jesus that mankind came into possession of a power which would eventually dethrone the Caesars themselves and make the cross a badge of honor instead of an emblem of shame.

The love of God was something which could be, and was manifested. “In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him” (1 John 4:9). Life is dependent upon love. No love, no life! That which was manifested can be perceived. The manifestation was God’s part, the perception is ours. “Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren” (1 John 3:16). A brother is worth more than my life. Indeed, Jesus teaches that it is better not to live than not to love. “But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea” (Matt. 18:6).

Love for others is the foundation of the Christian system. It is the ABC in the school of discipleship, the primary lesson which must be learned. “For this is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another” (1 John 3:11). That love is not emotional, but motional. It is an activating and compulsive force. “For the love of Christ constraineth us” (2 Cor. 5:14). The Amplified New Testament has it, “For the love of Christ controls and urges and impels us.” It is this love which is unconquerable and triumphant. While it is true that faith is the victory which overcomes the world, it is just as certain that love is the victory when it comes over the church.

The apostle rises to the summit of human eloquence when he describes the attributes of agape in 1 Corinthians 13. In verses 1-3 he shows that it is indispensable. Without it the tongues of men and angels are as sounding brass and clashing cymbal. Without it the gift of prophetic insight, the understanding of the deepest mysteries and the knowledge of secret truths are nothing. It is not a question of love or something else. It is love or nothing!

In verses 4-7 love is shown to be invincible. Its faith knows no limit, its hope never fades and its endurance has no end. In verses 8-10 it is affirmed to be indestructible. “Love never fails—never fades out or becomes obsolete or comes to an end.” This is not true of prophecy, tongues or knowledge. In verse 13 love is given immortality and majestic greatness.

It is because we have not realized that love is the power motivation which cements us together, repairs breaches when they occur and binds us in an unbroken fellowship, that we have reduced the Christian realm to its present pitiable and disgraceful state. The early Christians did not conquer mankind by philosophic reasoning, by public debate and forensic striving with each other. The cruel, sadistic Roman populace, seeing the sands of the arena stained with the blood flowing from the lacerated bodies of these humble people, said, “Behold how these love one another.”

Men are frequently persuaded to come into “the church” who have no real sense of covenant relationship with Jesus. No one is truly converted to Him who has not “known and believed the love that God hath to us.” To know that love is not merely to know about it, or to have heard sermons preached on it as a topic. It is to personally and genuinely experience it, to be captured and controlled, invaded and pervaded by it! To believe that love is not merely to give intellectual consent to it, but to be committed to it, not as to a way of life, but as to life itself!

Love is not the way of safety, security and conformity. After all these things do the modern heathen seek. Love is the way of risk, adventure and creation. God took a calculated risk when He sent Jesus on the great adventure which made this the “visited planet.” Jesus risked everything— he emptied himself of all glory! We will never be transformed until we dare to risk everything, make ourselves of no reputation and take upon us the form of a servant. This is love manifested!

Restoring Restoration

Mission Messenger (August 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

Abraham Altars was not a formal member of the Presbyterian Church. But he was a student of the Bible and he was interested in religion. Thus it happened that his farm home located between Mount Pleasant and Washington, Pennsylvania, became the scene of a meeting held in the summer of 1809 which was destined to directly affect our lives and several millions of others like us. This meeting, like all others of kindred nature, was but one link in a chain of events. It was forged out of circumstances which preceded it and became a vital cause in creating conditions which followed. It is doubtful that any of the rugged pioneers who gathered for the occasion sensed the impact which would be made upon future generations, but almost a century later J. B. Briney wrote:

Subsequent events show that this little meeting was probably the most important religious convocation that had ever met upon the American continent. It was made up of earnest, pious, God-fearing men whose souls were thoroughly tired of the jangling voices of a variant denominationalism, and who were in search of some common ground upon which all might stand together as one united brotherhood. Their chief concern was to glorify the Lord Jesus Christ, and heal the gaping wounds of his bleeding and distracted body.

The central figure in the meeting was Thomas Campbell, until recently a minister in the Seceder Presbyterian Church, whose teachings on the unity of believers in Christ and whose disregard for sectarian divisions had aroused much controversy. When he advocated that the Lord's Supper was for all of the Lord's people and that it was not a denominational gift to be bestowed upon the orthodox but a Christian privilege to be enjoyed by all the saints together he was accused before the Presbytery where he was formally tried and censured. He appealed to the Associate Synod of North America which set aside the censure on the basis of a technicality in the proceedings of the Presbytery. A committee was appointed to review the case and brought in a report that his replies were "evasive, unsatisfactory, and highly equivocal."

Recognizing that he was laboring under a cloud of suspicion and that certain of his brethren were scrutinizing his every word and action he stood it as long as possible and then renounced the authority of the Synod and Presbytery. This meant that while he retained his membership in the Presbyterian Church, he would no longer be regarded as a minister of that communion. With a deep reverence for God, a profound respect for the Bible, and an intense love for the souls of men, he still sought to influence his neighbors for good. In his book Religion Follows the Frontier Winfred F. Garrison writes:

He continued preaching as opportunity offered, in churches wherever he was permitted, otherwise in private houses. The burden of his plea was for Christian liberality and union. Many heard him gladly. Among his hearers, who were for the most part Seceder Presbyterians, there developed a group of sympathizers among whom there was a vague bond in their general sentiment in favor of union and in the personal influence of Thomas Campbell.

It will be readily understood that most of his preaching would be done in private homes rather than in meeting-houses, many of which would be closed to him. Accordingly the special meeting was convened at the home of Abraham Altars to determine what steps should be taken to encourage the fraternal spirit among those who loved righteousness. Mr. Campbell, in solemn and grave tones, stated the purpose of the meeting and proceeded to outline the reasons why the Christian domain was in such a serious state. J. B. Briney describes the speech in these words:

In simple but burning words of moving eloquence he dwelt upon the word of God as an infallible standard of faith and conduct, and as offering an ample basis of universal union and communion among Christian people. He called attention to the lamentable fact that men had not been satisfied with this heavenly boon, but had neglected and abandoned it for their own theories, speculations, and philosophies, thus breeding contention, strife, animosity and divisions among the disciples of Christ, who should be of one mind, one heart and one purpose. Having gone over the ground with great care and thoroughness, bringing the true situation vividly before the minds of his attentive hearers, he proceeded to promulgate the principle which, in his judgment, was to govern them in the work which they had undertaken.

Mr. Campbell led up carefully to the climax of his speech. When the time came he announced the foundation upon which reformation should be attempted. "That rule, my respected hearers, is this, that where the Scriptures speak, we speak; and where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent." This statement fell like a thunderbolt upon the hearts of those who had been reared in a sectarian atmosphere. In his monumental work Memoirs of Alexander Campbell, the biographer Robert Richardson writes:

It was from the moment when these significant words were uttered and accepted, that the more intelligent ever afterwards dated the formal and actual commencement of the reformation which was subsequently carried on with so much success, and which has already produced such important changes in religious society over a large portion of the world.

The Washington Association

Following the meeting at the Altars home another was held on August 17, at which the little band of neighbors resolved to form “The Christian Association of Washington.” This was not a “church” nor was it intended that it should grow into one. It represented no organized revolt against nor secession from any religious society. It was a voluntary association of the concerned ones in the community to promote piety and reverence, to study and evaluate their peculiar problems of a religious nature, and to encourage among all men those moral and spiritual views which the members considered essential to the development of mankind. The first statement of their resolution declared, “That we form ourselves into a religious association, under the denomination of the Christian Association of Washington, for the sole purpose of promoting simple, evangelical Christianity, free from all mixture of human opinions and inventions of men.”

It was deemed essential to have a statement of their aims and objectives drawn up in formal fashion, and Thomas Campbell was assigned the task of writing the statement. He began the work immediately and in three weeks had completed his “Declaration and Address.” On September 7 he read it to the members of the Association and after full study and discussion of the contents it was approved and an order issued to have it printed. As Mr. Campbell read to the interested group of farmers and tradesmen on that Thursday morning his family was on the stormy Atlantic bound for the new world. It would be another three weeks until the Latonia would dock in the harbor at New York on September 29.

It is not our purpose in this article to analyze the notable document first read by its author in the little Pennsylvania community more than a hundred and fifty years ago. In our humble opinion it constitutes one of the greatest uninspired documents in the history of the Christian religion. We are chiefly concerned just now with the spirit which called it forth and with an examination of the current status of the movement which it launched. We are anxious to determine if that movement has forgotten its goal and gone aground on the rocks of party strife. First we propose to hear from the foreword of the document itself.

Moreover, being well aware from sad experience of the heinous nature and pernicious tendency of religious controversy among Christians; tired and sick of the bitter warrings and janglings of a party spirit, we would desire to be at rest; and, were it possible, would also desire to adopt and recommend such measures as would give rest to our brethren throughout all the churches— as would restore unity, peace and purity to the whole church of God.

The “Declaration and Address” was written to promote peace on earth among men of good will by making them aware of God’s will. It was an olive branch plucked off during the raging of the torrent of universal disturbance and schism. It originated because of an awareness of the futility of achieving the divine purpose on earth by the methods then employed. It contains this statement:

This desirable rest, however, we utterly despair to find for ourselves or to be able to recommend to our brethren, by continuing amid the diversity and rancor of party contentions, the veering uncertainty and clashings of human opinions.

Two words stand out in this address— desire and despair. These are among the most forceful terms in human language. One expresses aspiration, the other frustration. Often these become the dissimilar parents of desperation. And the “Declaration and Address” was sired by the latter! A quarter of a century later Alexander Campbell looking back upon this preparatory stage of the restoration movement wrote in Christianity Restored as follows:

A deep and abiding impression that the power, the consolations and joys—the holiness and happiness of Christ’s religion were lost in the forms and ceremonies, in the speculations and conjectures, in the feuds and bickerings of sects and schisms, originated a project many years ago for uniting the sects, or rather the Christians in all sects, upon a clear and scriptural bond of union; upon having a ‘thus saith the Lord,’ either in express terms, or in approved precedent, ‘for every article of faith, and item of religious practice.’ This was offered in the year 1809, in the ‘Declaration and Address’ of the Washington Association, Pennsylvania.

These things stand out in bold relief! The restoration movement originated as a project for uniting the Christians in all the sects. It grew out of a “desire to be at rest” and to “recommend such measures as would give rest to our brethren throughout all the churches.” It was engendered by an awareness of the “pernicious tendency of religious controversy among Christians.” Those who inaugurated the project were “tired and sick of the bitter warrings and janglings of the party spirit.” They were convinced that the power, the consolations, the joys, the holiness and happiness of the religion of Christ were all lost “in the feuds and bickerings of sects and schisms.”

Most of those who read my articles are heirs of this noble experiment. What is the present status of these heirs? They now represent the most divided movement in the contemporary American scene. The project originated to unite “the Christians in all the sects” has forsaken its original intent and become so involved in “feuds and bickerings” that it contributes only to “the bitter warrings and janglings of a party spirit.” We have cluttered up the religious scene with a group of miniature sects the members of which are often filled with intolerance, hatred and bigotry. The worst is yet to come for if we continue to pursue the policy and philosophy which has governed us in the past there remains for us only more strife and division. Unless we alter our attitudes and transform our thinking we will bequeath to our children and our children's children a world so filled with religious tension and dissension that they will sink beneath the weight of our cruel folly!

Our current state reminds one of Daedalus and his son Icarus in Grecian mythology. Daedalus, a sculptor and architect, fled to Crete after killing his pupil Talos. He was received by King Minos who commissioned him to build a Labyrinth at Knossos, in which to confine the Minotaur, a monster with the body of a man and the head of a bull. This monster annually ate seven youths and seven maidens which had to be supplied by Athens. Unfortunately, Daedalus constructed the Labyrinth with such intricacy that he became lost in it himself and could not find the way out. Our brethren have spun a web of legalism and party tests which has them trapped until each generation adds new strands to bind them all the tighter.

There are two major segments which have grown out of the "project . . . for uniting . . . the Christians in all the sects." Because the introduction of instrumental music into the corporate worship was one of the aggravating factors leading to separation these are commonly distinguished as instrumental and non-instrumental. The former have about five or six groups to their discredit but the latter have more than two dozen factions to their dishonor. No other religious movement is so strife-torn and factional. No other is so schismatic. We must face up to the true picture of the state to which our thinking has brought us.

As the little band of Presbyterians stood in the "valley of decision" in 1809 so we stand once again in the same place in this our year of destiny. Shall we continue to promote the sectarian spirit, or shall we restore the spirit of restoration? Shall we plunge on deeper into the quicksands of partisanship and legalism or shall we revive in our generation “the desire to adopt and recommend such measures as would give rest to our brethren throughout all the churches— as would restore unity, peace and purity to the whole church of God”? The hour is growing late. The sands are running out of the upper glass. We must decide soon.

Is there any hope remaining? We reply that there is provided we lose our fears and with true courage born of faith embark on the great adventure of discovery. Like the disciples of old we have been fishing too close to shore and we have toiled all night and caught nothing. At the bidding of the Master we must launch out into the deep and let down our nets. Certainly there is more danger but there is also greater reward. We must recapture a sense of the vitality of truth. We must cease to think that it will lose in every encounter with error. We must emerge from behind our sectarian walls and enter anew the fray in the whole Christian arena. In short, we must go back beyond the point where we gravitated into a sect and “take up the quarrel with the foe.” And we must be able to distinguish between friend and foe. Jesus declared “He that is not against us is on our side” (Mark 9:40). We must quit assuming that he who is not at our side is always against us.

The First Great Error

The fundamental error in our thinking as a people came when we confused the restoration movement with the church of God. The church is a divine organism, the restoration movement was a project originated by men at a given period in the history of the church. Its purpose was not to restore the church to earth, for the church never ceased to exist on earth. The temple of God has never been razed, the body of Christ has never died, the family of God has never become extinct. The announced purpose was to “restore unity, peace and purity to the whole church of God.” True, the church was rent by schism, and the people of God were a scattered flock but that same condition prevails even now! When Thomas Campbell wrote “The Declaration and Address” there was not a separate party anywhere which was called by the distinctive title “Church of Christ” and there had been no such organization for centuries. Even after the Campbells and their co-laborers were driven out of the Presbyterian and Baptist communions they formed no party under this title. Alexander Campbell and Barton W. Stone united their forces as the result of a meeting held in Lexington, Kentucky, in 1832. Campbell preferred the name “Disciples” while Stone preferred “Christian.” Eventually the terms “Christian Church” and “Church of Christ” were used interchangeably. It remained for David Lipscomb in 1906 while writing in reply to an enquiry from the United States Census Bureau to bring about a separate listing under the title “Church of Christ.”

It is obvious that there is a difference between the church of Christ and “The Church of Christ” just as there is a difference between the church of God and “The Church of God” in our time. The church of Christ embraces within it every saved person on earth. There is not a child of God outside of it. This is not the case with “The Church of Christ” as it came to be so designated among the religious bodies covered by the census. Indeed there are now some twenty-five parties which wear this title and with few exceptions each of these regards itself as the one holy, catholic and apostolic church of God on earth, while repudiating the claims of all the others. The exclusive attitude of these is an indication of the party spirit which motivates them.

The church of Christ was in existence before the days of Alexander Campbell. He was a member of it even while he was allied with the Redstone and Mahoning Associations of the Baptist Church. But “The Church of Christ” as that title is now employed designates a party in Christendom which grew out of the reformatory work launched by the Campbells. The members of this party confusing it with the church of God now deny that there are Christians in the sects and most of them refuse to regard as brethren in the Lord those who are affiliated with other segments of the same movement. Instead of laboring to unite the Christians in all sects they frequently divide and separate from each other, setting up rival parties in the same area, thus adding to the confusion in the religious realm. Some of them go so far as to argue for re-immersion of those who come to them from other parties of the movement. Thus has the spirit of sectarianism crystallized in new tests of fellowship and unwritten creeds.

A Second Error

Another tragic mistake was made when men lost the distinction between the good news of Christ and the apostles' doctrine. This affected the congregation of saints in a vital way, since it set up knowledge of a system instead of faith in a person as the primary ground of admission to the fellowship. The gospel was to be preached, the doctrine was to be taught. The first was a message announced to the world to bring men into a relationship with Christ; the second was a course of instruction for training those in the Lord. Alexander Campbell early saw the importance of the distinction and wrote:

Preaching the gospel and teaching the converts are as distinct and distinguishable employments as enlisting an army and training it or as creating a school and teaching it. Unhappily, for the church and the world, this distinction, if at all conceded as legitimate, is obliterated or annulled in almost all protestant Christendom. The public heralds of Christianity, acting as missionaries or evangelists, and the elders or pastors of Christian churches are indiscriminately denominated preachers or ministers; and whether addressing the church or the world, they are alike preaching or ministering some things they call Gospel . . . They seem to have never learned the difference between preaching and teaching.

Because of the fatal errors arising from confusion at this point Campbell was insistent that a return to the vocabulary of the Spirit must include a proper understanding of the distinction between these words. In Popular Lectures and Addresses he said:

The difference between preaching and teaching Christ, so palpable in the apostolic age, though now confounded in the theoretic theologies of our day, must be well defined and clearly distinguished in the mind, in the style and utterance of an evangelist or missionary who would be a workman that need not to blush, a workman covetous of the best gifts and of the richest rewards . . .

The difference between the good news which was to be proclaimed and the system of doctrine which must be interpreted and taught is clearly marked in an article in Millennial Harbinger for April, 1862:

We preach, or report, or proclaim news. But who teaches news? Who exhorts it? We preach the gospel to unbelievers, to aliens, but never to Christians, or to those who have received it. Paul taught the Christians; he admonished, exhorted, commanded and reproved Christians and on some occasions declared the glad tidings to them who had received them, but who seemed to have forgotten them, as he wrote to the Corinthians.

Let me explain why it is so important to the community of saints to recognize and maintain this distinction. Jesus commissioned the apostles to proclaim the gospel to all creation. He declared that those who believe and are immersed will be saved. Salvation from past sins and introduction into the fellowship is conditioned upon belief of the gospel. The gospel consists of facts related to Jesus Christ. That which must be believed in order to salvation is that Jesus is the Messiah and God's Son.

Many today have been conditioned to think that the entire scope of the new covenant scriptures constitutes the gospel. They regard the letters addressed to churches and individuals as part of the gospel. Since one must believe the gospel in order to be saved it follows that one must understand and accept their reasoning and interpretation of every point of doctrine to be recognized as a child of God. We must never overlook the fact that the partisan spirit always substitutes the interpretation of God's word for the word itself and demands conformity not just to what God says but to what the party deduces he meant when he said it. This completely alters the Christian system. It makes salvation dependent upon attainment to a certain degree of knowledge rather than upon faith in a person.

This has been the real root of division within all Christendom. It is the basis of most controversy among sincere religionists. It is the ground of orthodoxy which has been used to stifle all original thought and hound out as traitors all honest dissenters. It is the rock upon which every restoration movement in history has run aground and been battered to pieces. The Campbells clearly understood this and labored to offset it in advance. They did this by two methods. First, they carefully defined the terms essential to entrance into the fellowship, showing what was involved in faith. In the second place they carefully pointed out that unanimity of opinion, interpretation or knowledge in doctrinal matters could never be made a proper foundation for unity.

With reference to the first Alexander Campbell wrote in The Christian System as follows:

But the grandeur, sublimity and beauty of the foundation of hope, and of ecclesiastical or social union, established by the author and founder of Christianity, consisted in this— that the belief of one fact . . . is all that is requisite, as far as faith goes to salvation. The belief of this one fact, and submission to one institution expressive of it, is all that is required of heaven to admission into the church.

That there may be no question as to what is meant by this language Campbell proceeds to explain further:

The one fact is expressed in a single proposition—that Jesus the Nazarene is the Messiah . . . The one institution is baptism into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. Every such person is a disciple in the fullest sense of the word, the moment he has believed this fact . . . and has submitted to the above-mentioned institution; and whether he believes the five points condemned, or the five points approved, by the Synod of Dort, is not so much as to be asked of him: whether he holds any of the views of the Calvinists or Arminians, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Methodists, Baptists, or Quakers, is never once to be asked of such persons, in order to admission into the Christian community called the church.

Having come to a realization through observation and study that fellowship in Christ can never be made contingent upon conformity in interpretation, Thomas Campbell expressed this idea in his “Declaration and Address.” The careful student will be amazed at the wisdom exhibited in his statement. It places reasoning and research in proper perspective. The right of every individual to go directly to the sacred writings for himself and the concomitant right to form conclusions based upon his personal investigation is asserted. It is conceded that when deductive reasoning is fairly done the concepts may be called the doctrine of God’s word. But it is asserted that these concepts are not formally binding upon the consciences of Christians except as they are grasped and understood to be truth.

I must confess that I studied this matter for years before I caught the significance of the word “formally.” Every man who sets to his seal that God is true thereby obligates himself to accept all truth as revealed by God. But the nature of man necessitated that revelation be given gradually and progressively — “line upon line, line upon line, here a little and there a little.” Revelation has been perfected but man has not. His knowledge and understanding of truth must also be gradual and progressive. He must “grow in grace and knowledge of the truth.” Every man in Christ sustains a moral obligation to the Creator to accept all truth as it is revealed to his consciousness to be truth. Because of his frailty and imperfection some things may appear to be truth in one stage of development which will need to be discarded in the brightness of greater light.

No two of us possess the same degree of mental aptitude. We are at various stages of growth and intellectual attainment. It would violate conscience to be forced to acknowledge as truth that which cannot be personally established as truth. To take the reasoning of one individual or group and bind that formally upon all others, even those who have not as yet been able to arrive at the same conclusions, is to do an injustice to the human spirit and is a violation of the Christian ethic. Such matters must not be made terms of fellowship but belong to the edification of the members of the body in love.

It would be as absurd to demand conformity of all to a higher degree of attainment in a system conditioned upon progression in knowledge as to demand it in a world requiring progression in revelation. In other words, one could as justifiably demand that Isaac and Jacob understand the epistle to the Romans in order to be saved as to demand that every person in the fellowship of Christ fully grasp all that is implied in chapter twenty of the Revelation letter to be saved. Every child of God is morally bound by his relationship to Jesus to accept all truth as he becomes aware of it but the relationship we sustain to each other does not convey the right to formally bind our interpretations upon each other. Any such coercion and compulsion of spirit must result in faith in the wisdom of men. All that we have thus stated is contained in a few simple sentences written by Thomas Campbell in these words:

That although inferences and deductions from Scripture premises, when fairly inferred, may be truly called the doctrine of God's holy word, yet they are not formally binding upon the conscience of Christians further than they perceive the connection, and evidently see that they are so, for their faith must not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power and veracity of God. Therefore no such deductions can be made terms of communion, but properly do belong to the after and progressive edification of the church. Hence it is evident that no such deductions or inferential truths ought to have any place in the church's confession.

It has been the fate of most religious reformations “conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men in Christ are created equal” to fall into the hands of ambitious men who manipulate them to the achievement of their own ends. Men desire the blessings of freedom without accepting the responsibilities associated therewith. It is easier to abdicate our share in the royal priesthood than to serve in our capacity. As any such movement grows its adherents moved by frantic fear for its survival come to depend more and more upon methods devised by human ingenuity and less and less upon the providential care of God.

Almost without exception every reformation inaugurated to free men from the dominance of a clergy has ended up with a clergy of its own. The clerical spirit thrives on the party spirit and is sustained by it. The clergymen become the authorized interpreters of the oracles of God. By subtle means the average man becomes convinced that he cannot understand the will of the Lord so he relegates this to professionals, trained specialists. By the same token the doctrinal interpretations of these must be accepted without question. To doubt the clergy is to disbelieve God. The Romish church set up an infallible interpreter. Most of the parties growing out of the Restoration Movement believe they have an infallible interpretation. The last is actually worse than the first for belief in an infallible interpreter will at least preserve unity. The Roman Catholic Church today is one of the most tightly knit organizations in the world. An infallible interpretation substitutes party dogmas for papal decrees and is productive of division every time someone discovers additional truth.

Perhaps it was a realization of the dangers inherent in dogmatism and orthodoxy that prompted Thomas Campbell to reject doctrinal knowledge and conformity as the basis for Christian fellowship. Of course he was also motivated by a clear conception of the foundation of communion as expressed by God. One reads with wonder and amazement the safeguards thrown about truth and his heart is saddened to see how his own brethren by deviating from these announced principles have not only failed the restoration movement but have become sectarian in doing so. Consider the following clear statement as found in the “Declaration and Address”:

That although doctrinal exhibitions of the great system of Divine truths and defensive testimonies, in opposition to prevailing errors, be highly expedient, and the more full and explicit they be for those purposes the better; yet, as these must be, in a great measure, the effect of human reasoning, and of course must contain many inferential truths, they ought not to be made terms of Christian communion, unless we suppose, what is contrary to fact, that none have a right to the communion of the church, but such as possess a very clear and decisive judgment, or are come to a very high degree of doctrinal information, whereas the church from the beginning did, and ever will, consist of little children and young men, as well as fathers.

There is no use denying that the heirs of the great project to “unite the Christians in all the sects” is now “in evil case.” The two errors in thought with which we have been dealing are not the only ones which foster the partisan spirit that has fragmentized and fractionalized us. We have referred to them in this treatise primarily because the first confuses the nature of the church of God while the second confuses the nature of the message of God. These are fundamental. It was because of these two grave errors in the religious world that the “Declaration and Address” was written. That document was clear upon these issues. It is a sad and tragic thing that we have now made a full circle and are once more involved in sectarianism of our own creation because we have lost the truths enunciated so many years ago.

Unless there is a reversal of attitude and a change of philosophy “the Churches of Christ” can only look forward to a grim future of strife, contention and division. These various parties contain within themselves the seeds of schism and they will “multiply and fill the earth after their kind.” There will be little of a constructive nature contributed to the distressed and distraught realm of Christendom.

Conclusion

Certain conditions existed in the early part of the nineteenth century which called for inauguration of a reformatory movement. Sincere men who loved the Lord could no longer continue to go deeper and deeper into the welter of sectarianism. Creeds and parties were multiplying. God’s children were separated and segregated from each other. They were enemies instead of friends. Alexander Campbell wrote thus:

Tired of new creeds and new parties in religion, and of the numerous abortive efforts to reform the reformation; convinced from the Holy Scriptures, from observation and experience, that the union of the disciples of Christ is essential to the conversion of the world, and that the correction and improvement of no creed or partisan establishment in Christendom, could ever become the basis of such a union, communion and cooperation, as would restore peace to a church militant against itself, or triumph to the common salvation; a few individuals, about the commencement of the present century, began to reflect upon the ways and means to restore primitive Christianity.”¹

The same situation now prevails among the heirs of the restoration movement. If that movement was the answer to the tragic state existing in the early part of the previous century is it not the answer to the same tragic state existing in the last half of the twentieth century? Is it not time once more that a few individuals begin to reflect upon ways and means? In short, is it not time to restore the spirit of restoration?

END NOTES

1. The Christian System, London (1843) p. iv.

A Great Abuse

Mission Messenger (August 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

The idea that each congregation of saints is to direct its own affairs and be responsible for its own business has been generally held by most of the more than two dozen factions that have grown out of the restoration movement. They have repeatedly affirmed an adherence to the principle of “the autonomy of the local church.” Autonomy is a combined form of auto, self, plus nomos, law. It refers to a state of self-government, independent of outside influence or control. It is our conviction that this was the system approved by the apostles as ambassadors of Jesus, and it is easy to see why divine wisdom would endorse congregational independence while at the same time upholding a universal monarchy embracing all of the subjects of the King.

But it is one thing to assert a governing principle and a wholly different thing to embrace it and become obedient to it. It is not a law on the lips of the subjects but that law enshrined in their hearts and translated into action which makes a people great. God declared, “This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth and honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me.” Perhaps in no other case is this condemnation more appropriate than in the one with which we are dealing. The history of our brethren demonstrates that they have been as lax in respecting congregational autonomy as they have been loud in proclaiming it. There are two things they cannot bear:

one is to hear the idea attacked, the other to see it put into practice.

Theoretically it is assumed that when a congregation of believers selects men who are then ordained as bishops it is free under God and the guidance of these brethren to arrange and dispose of its concerns, subject to no earthly synod, conference or brotherhood board of arbitration. Apparently the theory has never been taken seriously and it has been generally ignored for all practical (or impractical) purposes. It breaks down from one or the other of two sources. One is internal and the other external abuse of the principle. The first occurs when the bishops arrogate to themselves prerogatives which were not theirs by right of appointment; the second when preachers or others outside the congregation seek to interfere in decisions of the congregation, or when one congregation attempts to dictate the policy to be pursued by another congregation. The first violates the autonomy of the local church, the second that of the local church.

The right of government is resident in the congregation. No group of persons can bestow upon others that which they do not possess. Since it is a fact that no group or society can act in a corporate capacity except through properly recognized agents it is a wise provision which authorizes a plurality of bishops in the local congregation. The qualifications for such men are provided by the constitution, but the congregation must be the electorate and judiciary, interpreting and determining the meaning of these qualifications and selecting the men who meet them. These men cannot be appointed under constraint or duress but must indicate a willingness to serve. When appointed they superintend and guide through sufferance of the congregation and by their bestowal of the right to do so.

The bishops are slaves of Christ chosen by their fellow-slaves to fulfill a certain trust. They do not constitute the church, nor are they a church within the church. They are specifically enjoined against lording it over the heritage entrusted to their care. They cannot act arbitrarily against the wishes of the body. God has made no provision for government without consent of the governed. If a bishop presents a matter to the congregation and they reject it, he can either seek to convince them through love, withdraw the matter, or resign. He cannot force his fellow-slaves into a pattern contrary to their will. Unfortunately, many bishops become enamored of office and think more about authority than about a proper example to the flock. Such an attitude results in tyranny over God's people. It is a flagrant abuse of privilege.

An unbiased survey of the situation among the various factions designating themselves "The Church of Christ" will demonstrate that the expression "local autonomy" has become a mere catchword. Generally the power over each faction is exercised by a hierarchy of preachers, a top echelon of ecclesiastics, who hold the power of "life and death" over the congregations. Any decision of a local congregation which does not meet their approval must be reversed or a rigid boycott will be enforced with the intention of making the congregation "knuckle under." A local congregation cannot secure a man for a series of meetings who does not have the stamp of approval of those designated as "our main preachers." Government is not so much by local autonomy as by distant autocracy.

Obviously this hierarchy in most cases is composed of men who feel that because of their superior ability they are called of God to protect and safeguard "the brotherhood." This frequently goes to the extent of attempting to censor what the members read. They are not altogether to blame for they have inherited the system and often the position of prominence from predecessors in whose good graces they were able to remain. By now the congregations have become so beaten down and frustrated that they find it easier to conform than to complain. It is hard to kick against the pricks!

The problem is aggravated by another factor. Just about every faction has an official journal, a paper which represents the party platform. The editor through power of control over the propaganda dispensed can wield a sway over the party which often makes it spiritual suicide to resist. I grew up in a faction in which preachers and congregations were disciplined through the “loyal paper.” All the editor had to do was shut a man out of the columns and publish a scathing indictment of him and every door in “the brotherhood” was slammed against him. It made no difference if his home congregation still respected and recognized him, he was through, and so was the congregation if it could not be “whipped into line.” For want of a better term I have coined a word which represents this form of government—editorcracy!

I can recall a case of local discipline in a small congregation over which a few preachers disagreed. Before it was over with all the preachers (with few exceptions) had taken sides and congregations that did not even know where the original trouble spot was located on the map were forced to “take a position.” This they generally did on the basis of the stand taken by their favorite preacher. If local autonomy were adhered to, no trouble would ever affect more than one congregation!

I must confess (although I am now ashamed of it) that when I write about such partisan tactics I can do so from personal experience. I suspect that I was a “factionalist of the factionalists”! I recall when a couple of brethren many years ago printed a document which they thought would lead toward unity. There was a considerable furore over what was regarded as a “compromise” and as one of the rampant leaders of the opposition I actually helped to arrange for a conference in a central location to decide what steps “the brotherhood” should take. We demanded that all the preachers and congregations wishing to be regarded as “faithful” take a stand against the document. Those who did not were to be regarded as “disloyal.”

Congregations were divided, friendships disrupted and brethren alienated. Of course my action was stupid and childish but it is a good illustration of how far one will go when driven by the party spirit.

No congregation has a right to bind a decision on any other. No congregation has a right to interfere with or meddle in the internal affairs of another. No congregation can take disciplinary action against or “withdraw” from another. We might not like the way brethren in another congregation do some things. We need not do them that way, and we may exchange views in a friendly and brotherly fashion seeking to eliminate possible sources of friction, but no congregation has any authority over another. There is little use of opposing popery in Rome and endorsing it in America!

As an editor I can share my views with those brothers who wish to share in them. I cannot force others to view things as I do and I will not try to do that. If brethren agree with me I will try not to be puffed up with pride, if they do not I will not become arrogant toward them. I am resolved that I will love those brothers who disagree with me as much as I love those who agree. I will not try to rend, divide or separate them into warring camps. It is not necessary for brethren to subscribe to either this paper or my views for me to love and respect them in the Lord. It is my firm conviction that if we would really practice the autonomy of the local congregation as well as advocate it that we might go a long way toward eliminating some of our grave problems of human relationship in the one body. Let us all stay in our place!

False Teachers

Mission Messenger (August 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

The party spirit breeds exclusiveness and intolerance. These are symptoms of sectarianism. In order to maintain intact its structure every faction must develop a species of legalism. This becomes the criterion by which the worthiness of men is measured. It is of the essence of the party spirit that it places an interpretation upon the word of God, then substitutes the interpretation for that word. The next step is to exalt this interpretation to the place of divine revelation and demand obeisance to it as the will of heaven. Most of those who contend so freely for the authority of God's word in these days are really contending for a recognition of their views and opinions as authority. This is dogmatism and it is one of the worst foes of the freedom to which we have been called in Christ Jesus.

The Roman Catholics have an "infallible interpreter." Each of our factions has an "infallible interpretation." The first recognizes as authority the word of God and tradition; the second seeks to impose tradition upon the word of God as authority. The penalty for dissent in each case is the same excommunication. He who disagrees with either an infallible interpreter or an infallible interpretation must be branded as a "heretic" and driven forth. One must never question that which is infallible.

Those who are animated by the party spirit exhibit it in their attitude toward and treatment of those who by honest conscience disagree with them. In reality the party recognizes no room for honest difference of opinion. The scriptures are so plain and they have the explanations so detailed and pat that anyone who does not concur with the party presentation is dishonest and insincere. It is amazing to listen to preachers of "The Church of Christ" harangue the "sectarians" on how plain and simple is the word of God. To hear them one would think it would be impossible for anyone to have a single point of disagreement. But they seldom take time to explain how it happens that there are more than two dozen parties in the non-instrument branch of the Restoration alone. That movement is currently the most divided one on the American religious scene. They are split over everything from the method of carrying the Lord's Supper to the congregation to the method of carrying the gospel to the world!

There is no satisfaction in relating these sordid facts. One becomes nauseated at heart in his contemplation of them. But we must face up to reality. We will not better ourselves by developing an "ostrich complex." We would prefer that such matters relating to our sorry state could be kept concealed but that would be hypocritical. Let the truth be known and then we can start to remedy our present plight. We suggest that one way by which we may do so is to correct our spiritual vocabulary and bring it into line with fairness and justice. It is important to speak where the Bible speaks but it is just as important to speak as the Bible speaks. It is especially so when the opposite course will malign or stigmatize a brother.

Let me illustrate what I mean by referring to the expression "false teacher." This is a term of opprobrium hurled at every conscientious dissenter from the narrow party programs. Among those who believe in one container for the fruit of the vine every sincere person who expresses a contradictory view is a "false teacher." Among those who oppose Bible classes any person who voices an opinion in favor of them is a “false teacher.” All who do not oppose colleges, orphan homes, missionary societies, or instrumental music are “false teachers” as viewed by some. So mixed and muddled is the situation that every person in the disciple brotherhood is a false teacher as viewed by many of his other brethren.

We do not believe that the Holy Spirit employed this term in any such ridiculous fashion. A man can be wrong about a lot of things and not be a false teacher in the scriptural sense of that expression. No man who loves God and is earnestly seeking to serve Him to the full extent of present knowledge is a false teacher even though he is mistaken about some matters and expresses his views about them. The factional spirit with its arrogance and defiance prompts men to glibly hurl epithets at many whose spirit is better than that of their accusers.

I have recently read a document purporting to be on fellowship but which was actually written to justify and defend division. The author uses the term “false teacher” at least five times and this is just five times as often as it appears in the new covenant scriptures. The Greek pseudodidaskalos occurs only once, in 2 Peter 2:1. About a year ago I did extensive research on the implication of this term and this led to a complete revision of my application of it. I was startled at my previous factional usage of the expression and I realized that I had done much harm through my ignorance. I should like to share with you some of my conclusions.

The word pseudo carries with it the idea of deliberate and intentional falsehood. The teacher under consideration is not only lying but he is conscious of the fact that he is lying. He utters premeditated falsehood with the purpose of beguiling or deceiving unwary or unstable souls. He is frequently motivated by love for gain or prestige. This is brought out in the context where the term occurs. The following things are affirmed of the pseudodidaskalos: (1) They will secretly introduce destructive sects; (2) They will even deny the Lord that bought them; (3)

They will induce many to become licentious; (4) They will cause the very way of truth to be reviled; (5) In their greed they will exploit their hearers with false words.

To categorize every brother who does not see all things just as we do as a “false teacher” is an insult to the Father of spirits whose children we all are. For example, I am opposed to the use of instrumental music in the corporate worship of the community of saints. On this subject many brethren seriously and honestly disagree with my views. They sincerely feel that I am mistaken in my interpretation of the scriptures as related to this problem. But I do not brand them as “false teachers.” I think they are mistaken on this point just as I have been (and no doubt still am) mistaken on many points. None of us know all there is to know, but surely we are not all “false teachers.” So I love and respect these brethren who differ with me. I regard them as my brothers because our relationship was not established on the basis of a position as relates to instrumental music but by the new birth.

It is altogether possible that as God looks at it the renunciation of fellowship and denial of brotherhood constitutes one of our gravest sins. It strikes directly at the heart of the family and sets the children to warring with each other. Perhaps division has done more injury to the cause of the Lord than any of the innovations that have been introduced. It should not be forgotten that few divisions have been caused by those things which were credited with causing them. Family ties are severed by lack of genuine love. So long as fervent love exists not even a major problem will create schism. When love grows cold even a minor matter will create a split. We have been torn asunder because of “the will to divide.” We have willed to separate over every difference instead of to remain together in spite of them and to work out our difficulties in love.

It is lack of brotherly affection which prompts us to say and think the worst about a brother. We label and brand each other because by so doing we save our own personal pride, and inflate our ego. Behind all such manifestations is fear— blind, unreasoning fear— not fear of the other man, but fear of our own inward littleness, fear that what we have will not stand the acid test. By designating those humble souls who question and challenge us as “false teachers” we can be rid of the responsibility of facing them and of listening to what they say. We can exclude them, drive them forth, and turn a deaf ear to them. It was thus that the Sanhedrin acted toward Stephen just before they stoned him to death as a “false teacher.”

We are divided over more than a score of things. Regardless of how right we may be about those things we are wrong to be divided from our brethren. There is no authority in God’s word to separate from our brethren. Those who separate themselves are classed as “sensual, having not the Spirit.” Those who claim to recognize God’s word as authority should show that passage where God demands that we divide the body of believers. We have repeatedly practiced it! Where is the chapter and verse for brethren breaking up into warring and opposing camps? Every command is to live in harmony and to maintain unity.

It is as wrong to put away our brothers for every cause as it is for a man to put away his wife for every cause. The same God who decreed in the first creation that a man and wife should be one flesh, has decreed in the new creation that we all be one spirit. It is as sinful to rend the fabric of the spiritual family as to destroy that of the fleshly family. To maintain domestic union we must make allowances for each other, we must be patient and longsuffering. So long as love exists we do not separate regardless of how difficult our problems become. Should not the same conditions obtain in the Lord?

Background of Restoration

Mission Messenger (September 1961)

Volume 23

[Abstract]

The day after Easter Sunday in 1951 dawned cold and gray in North Ireland. A gusty wind sweeping in across Belfast Loch drove rain squalls before it and the city appeared drab through the mist. But there was sunshine in the souls of the sixty-five saints young and old, who gathered at the little meetinghouse on Berlin Street, off Shankill Road. A fervent prayer was voiced for the blessing and protection of heaven and the group filed out to board the chartered buses. It would be after dusk when they again arrived in the city after a day which would linger in their memory.

The immediate objective was the little village of Ahorey, some thirty-five miles away. This was the site of the Presbyterian Church to which Thomas Campbell had ministered until he sailed for America in 1807. Through the previous efforts of William Hendren and Joseph Hamilton of the Belfast congregation permission had been secured for me to speak in the Presbyterian meetinghouse. When we arrived at our destination the buses stopped just outside the stone fence enclosing the churchyard which had been the community burying ground for several centuries. From the gate there were but three houses visible in the community, low cottages, whitewashed and with thatched roofs. The blue smoke of peat fires burning on the grates threaded upward from soot-blackened chimneys.

We were welcomed at the door of the meetinghouse by Mr. T. S. Hoey, stated clerk of the Presbytery. Inside the door there is a bronze plaque sacred to the memory of Mr. Campbell who was the second minister to serve the congregation. The engraved plate designates him as “a prophet of union.” The members unlocked the gates leading to the pews and filed in quietly. I opened the little gate leading to the speaker’s platform and sat facing the audience. From this same platform Thomas Campbell had often surveyed the auditorium with its quaint balcony and paraffin lamps. In the second row of pews the youthful Alexander Campbell had often sat to listen to his father expound the tenets of Calvinism which he never fully renounced during his lifetime.

On this occasion the congregation stood to sing “The Lord’s My Shepherd” and William Hendren voiced a prayer for the unity of all believers in the Lord Jesus Christ throughout the world. I opened the large old pulpit Bible to the second chapter of Ephesians and read the impressive language of Paul. I spoke to those assembled about the sin of sectarianism and the need of restoring unity to the divided and strife-torn believers. It was pointed out that the restoration movement had not been completed and it remained for our generation to resume that task which others had so nobly begun. I concluded with the words from “In Flanders Fields” by Col. John McCrae:

Take up our quarrel with the foe;

To you from failing hands we throw

The torch; be yours to hold it high.

If ye break faith with us who die

We shall not sleep . . .

The audience filed silently from the meetinghouse. Officers of the congregation made us welcome. I was taken to see the manse which was newly remodeled and decorated for the arrival of the minister who would assume his role in a fortnight. It was an interesting house which this rural congregation provided for its pastor. There was a little fireplace in each room where peat dug from nearby bogs would supply the fuel. A quaint yard in the rear of the building would provide room for the meditative minister to stroll among the flowers. As for myself, I could have spent several days walking among the graves in the churchyard and reading the inscriptions on the ancient stones.

I did stop for some little time before the grave of the man who succeeded Thomas Campbell when the latter sailed for America in 1807. The lengthy tribute read as follows:

Sacred to the memory of the Revd. Samuel Beatty who departed this life March the 9th, 1834, aged 50 years. He performed the duties of the ministerial office in the congregation of Ahorey for 21 years with fidelity and zeal. Simple and unaffected in his manners and of a most obliging disposition, he lived in the hearts of his people, and being possessed of much medical skill, his sphere of usefulness was greatly enlarged. It would appear that he had a consciousness of the near approach of his dissolution from the subjects which he chose latterly for illustration. His last text was Philippians 1:23, 'For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is for me far better.' In grateful memory the congregation has placed this stone over his mortal remains. Readers, be ye also ready!

I wondered as I gazed down at the little mound how the reverend Mr. Beatty regarded the news about his predecessor which filtered back to North Ireland. How did the members of the congregation feel about the debates between Alexander Campbell and Presbyterians— John Walker, of Mount Pleasant, Ohio, in June, 1820; and W. L. Maccalla, at Washington, Kentucky, in October, 1823? Were the Campbells regarded as heretics and traitors by those among whom they had formerly lived? Did Mr. Beatty read "The Christian Baptist" which was first published on August 3, 1823? If so, did he use it as a text and warn the members against the teaching of their former pastor and his son? In any event no apparent change had been wrought in the Presbyterian Church at Ahorey.

My musings were interrupted by a message from a very gentle lady who lived in a typical Irish cottage close at hand and who extended an invitation to the "American visitor" to have tea with her. That invitation was enlarged to include several other brethren and their wives. The kettle was bubbling over the peat fire on the grate when we entered the small rural home. It is possible that Mr. Campbell had often visited those who dwelt in the little whitewashed house in his day. I am sure that the hewn beams supporting the thatch never looked down upon a more appreciative visitor.

Mr. Hoey graciously invited me to his home for the purpose of making a tape recording to be presented to the next session of the Presbytery. I spoke of our gratitude for the kindness shown in allowing us to address those who assembled in the meetinghouse. I explained why the work of Thomas and Alexander Campbell had made an impact upon our thinking in America and expressed the hope that others might arise among them who would plead for the union of Christians in all sects upon the basis of a "thus saith the Lord."

I was anxious to see the city of Armagh, realizing that it must have played a part in the life of the Campbell family. This ancient place dates its existence as a city from at least 300 B.C., and it was here that St. Patrick built his first cathedral in 445 A.D. Although the original structure is no longer in existence its site is occupied by another cathedral. Part of it was begun in the 8th century but the main part was erected in the 13th century. It is not difficult to imagine that the youthful Alexander Campbell would frequently visit this historic spot near which lie the bones of the first king of Ireland, Brian Boru, and his son Morrough, who were killed at Clontarf after defeating the Danes and Norsemen who invaded Ireland.

No doubt great interest was also shown by the young man in the astronomical observatory founded on “the Hill of Honey” in 1790. This renowned center for the study of the celestial bodies may have helped to kindle a reverence for the planetary system in the mind of the youthful Campbell. However, we suspect that it was the great library constructed in Armagh in 1771 by Primate Robinson which was the center of his attention. Over the doorway of the stately old stone building is the sign “Pseuches Iatreion”—Medicine Shop of the Soul. Within it are all the volumes of history and religion about which the true student dreams but is hardly ever able to look upon. It was with greatest reluctance I tore myself away from the storehouse of lore and wisdom. Even yet my heart turns longingly back in memory to this treasure trove of knowledge.

The gray clouds were darker as we boarded the buses for our return to Belfast. Soon we were engulfed in a swirling blizzard. The equinoctial storm pelted us in all of its fury. I stopped in at the home of one of the brethren for tea and sat a long time visiting with the family before the cheery fire on the grate. When I stepped into the snowy night for the two mile walk to my place I felt alone “a stranger in a strange land.” But it was a glorious occasion for meditation after a day filled with experiences of singular richness.

As I walked through the narrow streets my mind was reeling with questions. What forces operated in the life and thought of a humble Presbyterian preacher in a remote rural area to fill him with an inner compulsion to act as a champion of unity? What was there in the background, training and early life of such a man which impelled him toward the role for which destiny selected him? Was it the providence of God that ill health drove him to leave Ireland where his reasoning would have been smothered out by a well-entrenched clergy? What power directed his steps toward that area in Pennsylvania where the scattered forces of a divided Calvinism would arouse his compassion and kindle a desire for communion with all of the needy and spiritually hungry believers? What inner sense of kinship with all of the sinful suffering millions eventually makes itself felt in spite of the hardened layer of partisan indoctrination and transforms one from a narrow factionalist into a loving advocate of divine grace and peace?

By this time the thoughts were tripping through my heart like the snowflakes danced through the night air as they appeared out of the darkened upper void into the soft glow of the Belfast street lamps. Invigorated by the walk through the stormy night, it seemed as if the dusty cobwebs were swept away from the inner chambers of my mind. Thousands of miles away from the factional atmosphere in which I was reared, surrounded upon all sides by sleeping thousands in a great city, I realized how trivial and inconsequential were the things which had been allowed to rend and divide us. How local and parochial some of those things appear when projected against the universal need of suffering humanity. Suddenly there surged into my very soul the real meaning of that sentence incorporated in the "Declaration and Address" written by Thomas Campbell two years after his arrival in America.

The Church of Christ upon earth is essentially, intentionally, and constitutionally one; consisting of all those in every place that profess their faith in Christ and obedience to him in all things according to the Scriptures, and that manifest the same by their tempers and conduct; and of none else, as none else can be truly and properly called Christians.

When Mr. Campbell penned those words he was still a Presbyterian. Little did this gentle shepherd know where such an ideal as he expressed would lead him. Now in the same city which he had frequently visited as a young man I came to realize quite suddenly how we had forsaken that ideal. To those with whom I was associated the church of Christ on earth was not essentially one. It was not intentionally one. It was not constitutionally one. The church of Christ on earth was a party. It was the party to which each belonged, myself included. And there were as many “churches of Christ” in America as there were factions. Each party was its own “brotherhood.” Each had on its exclusive party banner— “Immanuel”— God with us! I recalled that this was also the motto adopted by Kaiser Wilhelm during the first world war.

What right had I to express the hope to a little Irish Presbyterian church that they would send us other men imbued with the spirit of unity and restoration? Had we not already smashed into hostile fragments a noble movement inaugurated to unite the Christians in all the sects? Were we not even now more narrow and intolerant than those about us whom we regarded as schismatics? I knew that at last my own life must be directed into additional fields of research. I wanted to know the history of this movement of which I was an heir and I also wanted to contribute my own feeble powers to restoring the spirit of restoration. I turned my face heavenward with the large flakes stinging my cheeks and earnestly prayed for the wisdom and courage to proclaim “peace on earth to men of good will.”

I am fully aware of the criticism of some who will look upon this issue of the paper as a total loss. Upon what grounds can we justify the expenditure of time and effort required in studying the restoration movement? I hold that there is much more to be gained than the mere gratification of personal curiosity. All of us are products of the various factors which have blended together to make us what we are. No one of us is an island. The labors of those whom we have not seen affect our lives in many ways. Jesus said, “Others have labored, and you have entered into their labor.” If we know why and how the others labored we can know better how to enter into their labor.

J. W. McGarvey wrote:

The natural and benevolent wish that posterity may profit by the experiences of the past, furnishes another, and perhaps a nobler motive, for making a permanent record of passing events. If history, as the sages have told us, teaches by example, the most effective of all kinds of teaching, the lover of his race and of the God who employs human instrumentalities to guide and govern the race must wish that all the good deeds of men shall be transmitted from age to age as helps to every rising generation.

It has long been to me an interesting field of thought that the religious life of a people is affected and moulded to an extent by the whole of their experiences in every domain of life. Thus certain cultures, times and areas are more conducive to the revival of the Christian way than are others. It appears that nature, political fortunes, scientific developments and many other social features work toward the day when men will rise up as reformers. Our spiritual life is colored by all of the diverse facets of our existence. That Alexander Campbell concurred in this view it is evident from a letter which he addressed to James Wallis of Nottingham, England on August 15, 1837.

There is no doubt, sir, by the association of ideas, or by some mysterious affinity, a peculiar sympathy exists between all the pursuits of men; and when changes, sometimes miscalled improvements, in society, become the order of the day, they ramify and extend through all the operations of the mind; and hence improvements in agriculture, in manufactures, in commerce; new discoveries in science or in the arts of life, mingle with our religious theories and conceptions.

The lives of men are formed and shaped by conditions existing about them. In turn, they condition and reform the culture of which they are a part. Thus we are heirs of all the great concepts of the generations past. We are both created and creative. The “Declaration and Address” which spurred the restoration movement was both fruit and seed. It was not written upon impulse. It was the crystallization of the ideas which had been clamoring for expression in a heart burning with eager desire to see those barriers removed which had long held God’s people aloof from each other. It is much easier to pluck the fruit than to grub in the soil and uncover the roots which made that fruit possible. But a true horticulturist will not be satisfied to merely eat fruit in utter ignorance of how it was produced, nor can the eager disciple content himself with “entering into the labor” of other men without learning as much as he can about their labors which made his own possible.

Northern Ireland undoubtedly formed the best background extant for encouragement of that individuality in thought which characterized the mind of Thomas Campbell. It was then, as it is now, one of the most rugged strongholds of aggressive Protestantism on earth. Not only are the people cheerful and industrious but they possess a mental ability which enables them to see the humorous side of life and to describe it in a fluent fashion and with telling phraseology. While the mass of the Irish people descended from the Celts they absorbed the early invaders of different races, but the English and Scots who settled in the northern part of the island were never assimilated. The sturdy independence and persistence of these inhabitants has produced some eminent students and researchists in every avenue of human endeavor.

Thomas Campbell was also fortunate in his selection of a companion. Jane Corneigle was of French Huguenot stock. As a result of the frightful murder of thirty thousand Protestants in Paris and its environs on St. Bartholomew’s Day, A.D. 1572, her ancestors fled to the mountainous regions of France. Life here proved so precarious that these Calvinists were eventually forced to make an exodus and find asylum in other countries. The Corneigles and Bonners settled in County Antrim, near Lough Neagh, a region where the Protestant faith was as strongly implanted as was Catholicism in their native country. Here Jane Corneigle met Thomas Campbell who had been born in County Down, in 1763, and when they were married they lived at first on the family estate about three miles from Ballymena. Here Alexander Campbell was born on September 12, 1788 when his father was twenty-five years of age. Years later this son wrote thus of his mother:

As a helpmeet of my father in the work of the Christian ministry, I think I never saw her superior, if I ever did her equal. He was frequently called from home on protracted tours in his public ministry of the Gospel; but though her cares and solitudes were always on such occasions more or less augmented, I never heard her complain; but rather to sympathize with him in his works of faith and in his labors of love. She, indeed, cheerfully endured the privations of his company, in the full assurance that his absence from home and labors in the gospel would ultimately redound more to the glory of God and to the happiness of man, than his confinement to any particular locality.

The lot of any reformer is always difficult. Man is resistant to change, preferring often to continue in familiar error than to embrace forgotten truth. He who attempts to awaken a sleeping world that does not wish to be aroused finds himself unpopular indeed. Frequently the stigma and reproach heaped upon such a man falls heaviest upon the hearts of his family. Forced to see the one whom they love suffering from the antagonism and misrepresentation of those who once were closest friends, there is ever the temptation to feel that it is not worth the struggle to attempt a rescue of those who do not sense their own plight. In this respect, Jane Campbell did not falter for her son wrote:

In all the trials and vicissitudes of her protracted life, and especially during the conflicts of her husband with the opposition, the enmity and the envy he had to encounter for duty and conscience sake, while endeavoring to effect a reformation in his own Synod and Presbyteries, both in the Old World and the New, she stood by him in faith, hope, and love, and most cheerfully became a partaker with him in all the trials and consequences incident to, and resulting from, his advocacy of primitive and apostolic Christianity, and its restoration to its beau ideal, as pictured and developed in the inspired writings of the apostles and evangelists of Jesus the Christ.

The youthful years of Thomas Campbell were marked by deep religious conviction and concern for salvation. Out of this feeling grew a sense of social consciousness, a fervent desire to serve God by serving humanity. Realizing that some of the area south of Lough Neagh did not have access to instruction he moved to one of the more unenlightened sections and opened an English Academy. A large number of pupils came under his influence and he devoted his energies to their intellectual, moral and religious development. After awhile he was called to preach under supervision of the Synod of Belfast and sometime during 1798 he was invited to become the minister at Ahorey which was under the jurisdiction of the Presbytery of Markethill. It is the personal opinion of the writer that divine providence which operates in the lives of devout men directed the steps of Mr. Campbell to this spot on the earth's surface to prepare him, or enable him to prepare himself, for the great task which he would prosecute in the New World thousands of miles from his then humble abode.

It would be impossible for me to detail all of the reasons entering into my conclusion and I can mention but a few. After years of research I am convinced that, so far as my knowledge extends, the first group of disciples of Jesus, after the Dark Ages, to sever all sectarian ties and resolve to be simply Christians with a view to restoring the primitive order, met at Dungannon, in County Tyrone. They had been meeting in a congregational capacity for a number of years when Thomas Campbell moved to a farm some eighteen miles away to continue his school instruction and fill the pastorate at Ahorey. It would hardly be possible for one of such wide knowledge and interest as Mr.

Campbell to be wholly unaware of a group whose action had long been a subject of more than local controversy.

Of even greater significance as a current contributing to his stream of thought was an Independent church which met at Richhill, close to Ahorey. When his schedule of duties allowed him to do so, Mr. Campbell visited the services of this congregation. There he met men like Rowland Hill who was born in Hawkestone in 1744 and was educated at Eton and Cambridge. Possessed of evangelistic fervor and of a desire to share the good news of Christ with the masses, he preached in barns, streets, fields, and by highways and hedges, wherever men would pause to listen. The clergy of the day deprecated his methods because he did not hesitate to tell a joke or make a witty remark to gain attention. One can only wonder what impression was made on the mind of Mr. Campbell as he listened to this man who spoke so freely and informally, but of whom it was written, "truths were always balanced in his mind; and his heart was established with grace. He always blended together doctrine, experience and grace. He fell into no errors. He embraced no whims."

Then there was James Alexander Haldane who with his brother Robert had seceded from the Church of Scotland. Being men of financial importance they had planned to go to India and propagate the gospel, but when the East India company thwarted their hopes they devoted their lives to promoting religious truth in the British Isles. They organized a society for the purpose and began publication of the Missionary Magazine. Of this journal, Greville Ewing, a dissatisfied minister of the Church of Scotland, became the editor. James Alexander Haldane was at the height of his power when Mr. Campbell met him. In 1805 he published his revolutionary work, "A View of the Social Worship and Ordinances Observed by the First Christians." It is difficult to read this volume without forming a conclusion that it planted the seed for much of what was later written by the Campbells. Our concepts always derive their strength and substance from many sources.

The divided state of the religious world at the time must have engendered a great deal of concern in the mind of the Presbyterian pastor at Ahorey as he neared his fortieth birthday anniversary. One describes the religious condition at that time in these words:

Sad as was the tyranny which caused the upheaval of the French Revolution, there was not less tyranny in the domain of religion. State establishments existed everywhere save in the Republic of the New World, and it had just reached the conception that governments had no right to fetter the consciences of men. There were in most countries protests against the State Church, but the Dissenters were deprived of equal rights, were often persecuted and had themselves imbibed the intolerant spirit from which they had suffered. Christendom was a medley of discordant and warring sects, without harmony, without friendship, at sword's points, each presenting to the other its shibboleth, and ready to cut off all who were unable or unwilling to pronounce it in the prescribed manner. The different sects were Ishmaelites, with hands against all beside. Everywhere the spirit of those apostles who forbade him who walked in Christ's name but walked not with them, prevailed.

Although one of Mr. Campbell's disposition would he greatly disturbed by the appalling state of division in the whole Protestant realm, he was much more affected by the strife within his own immediate communion. In 1732 more than forty ministers of the Church of Scotland presented a petition to the general assembly asking for a redress of grievances and specifying a number of deviations from the constitution of the church. At the same time another plea signed by several hundred elders and unofficial members was offered. The latter dealt primarily with what was called "patronage," a practice which denied local congregations the right to select their own ministers. Because of the controversy which ensued division resulted and those who left the established church were known as Seceders. These secessionists became quite numerous and set up three Presbyteries under one Synod.

The Seceders did not continue in undisturbed tranquillity. A dispute arose among them about the Burgess oath which was required of all who held local offices. It was required of such officials in a burgh, or borough (a corporate town) that they swear to protect and defend “the religion presently professed in this realm.” Those who thought such an oath could be taken in all good conscience were designated Burghers, those who revolted against it were called Anti-Burghers. The conflict became so keen that an open cleavage occurred in 1739. Mr. Campbell was connected with the Anti-Burgher branch of the Seceder division of the Presbyterian Church. He was fully aware of the strife and contention which had been carried on with intensity of feeling.

With a heart filled with concern Mr. Campbell appeared before the Synod of Ireland, convened in Belfast in 1804, to plead for the unity of the Burghers and Anti-Burghers in Ulster. Having read his speech made on that occasion I am convinced that he was formulating those concepts which would later lead to the inception of the restoration movement. He gave a scathing indictment of the evils resulting from religious schism. While we recognize that some of our readers might find a long quotation boring we cannot resist the impulse to have you read a part of his speech.

This, our unhappy division, appeared to us an evil of no small magnitude, whether abstractly considered as inconsistent with the genius and spirit of the Christian religion, which has union, unity, and communion in faith, hope, and love, for its grand object upon earth, or whether considered in its hurtful tendencies, as marring and embarrassing the cause which it was the grand object of the secession to promote. For has it not exposed the zealous contenders for a reformation, on both sides, to the contempt and jeers of the scorers, and filled the mouths of scoffers with reproach and obloquy? Has it not been fraught with the awful consequence of distracting, disturbing, and dividing the flock of the Lord's heritage, and of sowing discord among brethren? Has it not been productive of a party spirit, both among ministers and people, stirring up and promoting an unhappy disposition of evasion and reprisals upon the boundaries of their respective communities? Has it not had an awful tendency to relax discipline, or render it abortive, by opening a door of escape to the delinquent, or by its dissuasive influence upon ministers and sessions, for fear of losing the subject, in case he should take offence? Has it not had a very embarrassing tendency with respect to many of the serious and well-meaning, when they, seeing our division, upon enquiry find that the subject-matter of our difference is not to be found either in the Old or New Testament?

This plea was unavailing at the time, but in 1820, sixteen years later, and after Mr. Campbell had been in the United States for thirteen years, the unhappy situation was resolved and the two factions of Presbyterians in North Ireland again merged their efforts. In the interim the plea for unity had been carried to the new world on a wider scale.

Thomas Campbell had not been long in America until he saw even more clearly "the awful consequence of distracting, disturbing, and dividing the flock of the Lord's heritage." When he wrote the memorable "Declaration and Address" which he first read to the Washington Association in September, 1809, he hammered out that document on the forge of a heart that burned with zeal to rectify a condition which was intolerable to one who revered the name of Jesus. It was this pronouncement which struck a death blow at the sectarian spirit. Although in its inception it was "a cloud like a man's hand" it soon filled the land with "the sound of abundance of rain" and the parched hearts of men blighted by spiritual drouth again revived in hope.

It is time to restore the spirit of the restoration whose heirs now constitute one of the most divided religious movements in the world. What qualities are needed to pursue this objective? What forces in the lives of men can operate to pry the vehicle of reform out of “the slough of despond” and start it on its way again? To whom can we look for leadership amidst our tragic state? Let us examine the factors which contributed to the inception of the restoration movement and determine if it may be possible to recapture them for this generation.

